Frankly friends, I have a major problem with the fact that since I have arrived at school I have watched more owl tutorials then pornos. Basically, I sit in front of the computer for about four hours a day when I would rather sit in front of it for, I don't know, maybe zero, none, whatever you want to call it. I don't want to do it, is that simple enough?

The real crux of this issue is not that all of these systems have flaws, but rather that there's a million different flawed systems instead of just one. I am not asking that all of these systems be fixed, but rather streamlined into one.

Let's be honest, do we really need two kinds of remote response systems. Absolutely not! It's like when you go over someone's house and they have five TV remotes and you use the wrong one and mess up the volume and screw up the formatting and blow up the house when all you really wanted to do was watch a 'lil Laguna Beach or my personal favorite, Oprah.

You can't see their faces, but they are all crying.

Furthermore, I think my knees hurt for everyone as I beg for only one format of online quiz. At this point in my life I have ID numbers and names and passwords coming out my anal sphincter system (ass). Now, I am forced to wonder if instead of dropping thousands on a college education I'd be better of buying a bunch of television remotes and CD ROMs. Then I could devote everyday taking quizzes on my computer, changing the channel on my TV over and over again, and getting a great nervous twitch.

Adam Szajgin is a U Mass student

Something worth fighting for

Melissa Garber

Sound the church bells, wave the flags, and put up a shout of cheer: our own Jill Carroll is walking free! After nearly three months in captivity, the UMass graduate was released by her captors Thursday, and is now back in Massachusetts, reunited with her family. The news of Jill's release evoked joy from all of us here at the University of Massachusetts, where we have hoped and prayed for her release from the beginning.

David B. Lawrence

After hearing the news from the campus banner on Thursday, I shrugged off work and wandered campus in search of friends with whom to share the news. Of course, everyone I met had already heard.

Carroll was delighted to be released. After ensuring that a propaganda tape her captors forced her to make was being reported as that, and not as her real thoughts and opinions, she admitted to enjoying the benefits of free life again. "I finally feel like I am alive again. I feel so good," Carroll was quoted as saying in the Christian Science Monitor. "To be able to step outside anytime, to feel the sun directly on your face — to see the whole sky. These are luxuries that we just don't appreciate every day."

While Jill's kidnapping was the crime of militants, her release came amid an outpouring of support for Jill by the Iraqi people, whose ability to enjoy the benefits of freedom is what we are fighting for.

The luxuries Jill is once again enjoying are something we in America often take for granted – they are the benefits of freedom. As Jill said, although she was treated reasonably well, beneath the oppression of her captors she barely felt alive. This is the burden of oppression. In America we believe that every human being has an equal right to life, to freedom. Though it is something we often forget, Jill's experience serves as a reminder of the value of freedom, and of its price.

Jill's interpreter, Allan Enwiya, was murdered on the day of her capture. Since the elections in December, a few weeks before her kidnapping, 184 American troops have died in Iraq. Those are the prices we've paid, but not for our freedom or for Jill's freedom even, but for the freedom of the Iraqi people. Jill's experience as a captive in Iraq reminds us of the value of freedom, and of the importance of securing that freedom to the Iraqi people. While Jill's kidnapping was the crime of militants, her release came amid an outpouring of support for Jill by the Iraqi people, whose ability to enjoy the benefits of freedom is what we are fighting for.

In the mainstream media, we hear almost exclusively about the Iraqis who would oppress their fellow countrymen. These are the suicide bombers, the hostage takers, and the other militant villains who reject the notion of freedom for the Iraqi people. They would take their own lives rather than see others in Iraq enjoy the blessings of liberty. But there are the other Iraqi people. These are the policemen, the interpreters, like Enwiya, the Iraqi security forces, and the members of the coalition government. These are the Iraqi people who we are fighting for, who deserve the freedom that we take for granted. These are the Iraqi people who gave popular support to Jill Carroll's release.

These are the Iraqi people whom we cannot abandon. While the politics surrounding the onset of this conflict are questionable and even unsavory, its end need not be. With our troops on the ground being joined by Iraqi security forces, we have the power to continue turning this bitter political battle into a moment of great positive change in the life of the Iraqi people.

This is a moment of change in Iraq, but what kind of change is borne out will largely be up to the American people. Will we show the Iraqis the same support that they showed Jill? Will we continue to fight for their freedom – for their liberty? Or will our fortitude give way to retreat, leaving the country's fate up to villains such as her captors? It may be politically advantageous to criticize Bush for his handling of the war, but let us not do so at the expense of the Iraqi people; let us continue to fight for their release.

With the help of those Iraqi people, with innumerable hours of work by so many people, and with the thoughts and prayers of millions of Americans, Jill Carroll has been released. However we must temper our glee, for there are many more in Iraq who remain threatened by the chains of oppression. Amid so much violence this event gives us hope for the future there, but it reminds us that we cannot abandon the Iraqi people. The value of freedom is too great.

David B. Lawrence is a Collegian columnist

State of the world

There are approximately six billion people on Earth. The top five most densely populated countries are China, India, our own country, Indonesia and Brazil. Four out of those five countries are categorized as "less developed." Guess which country isn't. Out of the approximately six billion people on Earth about five billion of them are residing in a "developing" region. That means 83 percent of this world is living in a developing nation. The wealth of the first world is concentrated into 1.6 percent of the population (gapminve.com). So what does that mean to you?

I am a middle class American attending college. I am part of that lucky 1.6 percent of the world – we all are. How did this happen? How did the wealth become so unevenly distributed? More importantly, what can we do about it when the damage has already been done? It's hard to comprehend how so much of the globe is living in poverty.

This past summer ten cities around the world hosted Live 8, a benefit concert to raise awareness and to "make poverty history." The goal was to influence the members of the G8: the USA, Canada, Great Britain, France, Germany, Italy, Japan and Russia to make policy reformations to help lower debt and raise foreign aid in the most impoverished region of the world, Africa. The Live 8 concerts were all free, instead of raising money, the concerts were meant to raise awareness and to make a big enough impact through the voice of the masses for policy reform (live8live.com).

The Live 8 concerts were all headed by the big names in the music industry. The London show was the main venue and although it was "free," tickets had to be acquired to get into Hyde Park. I was in London this summer on July 2 when Live 8 was scheduled and I was lucky enough to get a ticket off a girl in my hostel who had an extra.

I can honestly say I felt like I was at a publicity stunt. There was a VIP section for all of the celebrities who were "doing their part" in helping the cause which made it near impossible for the "regular" people to get anywhere near the stage. The lineup was impressive but it felt kind of hypocritical to be at an event that was meant to abolish poverty while perpetuating the exact class system struggles that caused the problem in the first place. Needless to say I didn't stay for long. I had a train to catch.

I think that accepting that the problem exists and being informed enough to know the severity of the situation is the only place to start. If everyone knew that there was a problem then maybe something could change.

Live 8 was an attempted solution for poverty. But it certainly isn't going to solve the crisis. Appealing to the G8 isn't the best way to go about solving any problems. The G8 or the "Group of Eight," as they are officially called consists of the top ten wealthiest most powerful white males in the world. Once a year there is a G8 summit to discuss and verbalize the most prevalent and controversial concerns in the world. Then the leaders proceed to sign statements acknowledging the existence of these aforementioned concerns (wikipedia.com). Not exactly the most efficient process.

I asked my older brother what he thought of all of this and his only response was, "You care too much about people that you can't afford to help." Granted I am only one person and I can't afford to help out each individual person but I don't think it's possible to care too much. I think that accepting that the problem exists and being informed enough to know the severity of the situation is the only place to start. If everyone knew that there was a problem then maybe something could change.

The premise of Live 8 was a good one, but appealing to the public through music instead of information made the point almost disappear. But Live 8 could have raised money and awareness. It's hard to get anything done with out a flow of cash. I think that was one of its main flaws. It's a nice idea to think that problems can be solved with out money, but the reason why this particular problem exists in the first place is because of money.

I didn't know the amount of poverty in this world until I researched it. I can't even being to understand how bad it is. It's so easy to live in America, to go to college, party on the weekends and lead this seemingly normal life and to never even question what the other 83 percent of the human race is doing. What is normal? Certainly not the life we lead.

Melissa Garber is a Collegian columnist.

Poverty and what you can do about it

Mike Sances

It was more by chance, and in fact by virtue of being stood up, that I attended a talk titled "Economic Boom! For Whom?" last Tuesday, but I can safely say that what I took away from the experience is worth at least as much as the piece of paper they are going to hand me next month.

The talk was given by Felice Yeskel, co-author of Economic Apartheid in America, first published in 2000 and updated last year. Yeskel ran the Stonewall Center here at UMass for 20 years, and is currently involved in two separate but related organizations, Class Action and United for a Fair Economy. As you might have guessed, the subject of the talk was the penultimate American taboo: class – specifically the widening gap between rich and poor.

Speaking of that taboo, the speaker who introduced Yeskel recounted a scene from the popular television show "Sex and the City," as included in Yeskel's book. While our society has learned to talk openly about sex, she notes that it will probably be a long time yet before we see the debut of "Class and the City," even on cable. Indeed, in an episode of "Sex and the City" where the main characters ponder dating a man who earned less than them, one of the women immediately shots the topic down. It's bid taste to talk about money, she admonishes them. The exchange takes place while the women receive expensive manicures from Korean immigrants, who work literally down on their knees.

But if class is the penultimate taboo in this country, never to be spoken aloud in good company, then what to do to about getting rid of gross economic disparity is even more so, to the point of thought crime. This is probably why attendance at an event on the disgusting coincidence of misery and opulence was so low and even lower when you subtract non-students, or the handful of students who were required to attend for a class, in spite of the 13 academic sponsors. Who wants to hear about that on a Tuesday afternoon, especially when we all know there's nothing we can do about it?

While our society has learned to talk openly about sex, she notes that it will probably be a long time yet before we see the debut of "Class and the City," even on cable.

Yeskel was prepared for this, however. Her model of presentation–"What, so what, and now what?"–was straightforward, and left no room for the despair that so pervades this institution. First, to illustrate "what," Yeskel had ten volunteers come to the front of the room, where ten chairs sat facing the audience. Asked to sit down, each took one chair: ten people, ten chairs. Simple, right? But for some strange reason, Yeskel pointed out, it stops being simple when we start talking about wealth.

To demonstrate how wealth is actually distributed in this country required some shifting of seats, and in the end, nine people were left fighting over three chairs, representing the 90 percent of the population that owns 30 percent of the wealth. The tenth person, representing the top 10 percent of the economy, got seven chairs to himself, or 70 percent of the wealth. He got to pull all his chairs close to him and make something of a bed for himself, while his right leg, representing an even smaller sector of the population, got several chairs to itself.

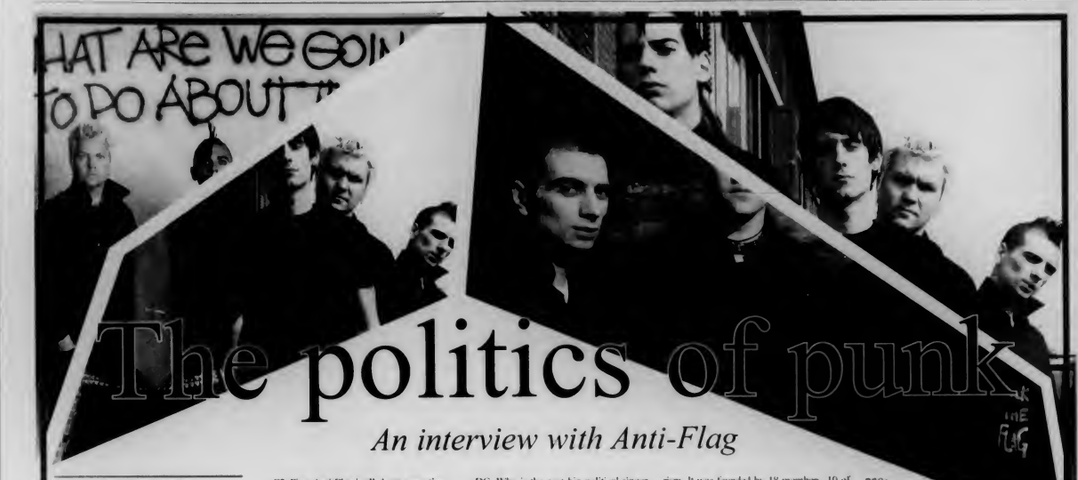
Meanwhile, on the other side of the room, nine people had somehow managed to pile onto three chairs. How did they feel? Yeskel asked them. Uncomfortable, they replied. Asked to identify the source of their discomfort, the people on the very bottom of the chair pointed to those sitting on top of them, the ones on top pointed to those they were sitting on, and some even pointed to themselves – anywhere except the young man lounging in the seven chairs across the room. He felt very comfortable, he said.

After the charade, Yeskel asked the audience how we were feeling. Desperate, depressed, angry, were some of the replies. Tentatively, I raised my hand and offered that I felt inspired. What a great way to illustrate the distribution of wealth! I was thinking.

I thought of my final Dean's Book class the day before, where we completed a course on the book "The Working Poor" with a discussion on "What we can do" about poverty. The prevailing view seemed to be that inequality had been with us forever, had always been as severe as it is today, and that there was really nothing we could do about it. It was suggested that perhaps one day, when we're in a position of power, like a corporate executive or a journalist at a powerful newspaper, we will be able to use that power to help those in need. No, we already are in a position of power, I was trying to explain.

Suffice it to say that the contrast with Felice Yeskel's talk was astounding. Yeskel doesn't ask what can be done — she answers by going out and doing it, and she urged us all to do the same. Because we can. Because it's the only way things have ever gotten better in this country, and it really would take some time to list all the things we enjoy today, because of the past struggles of everyday people, no more extraordinary than you or I. But it requires organizing with other people, regardless of your politics.

According to Yeskel, once you take the first step of getting involved with an organization that cares about the same issues you do, the rest will come naturally. If that sounds like faith, it is still a lot more grounded in reality than the institutionalized disempowerment that is the greatest and perhaps the only remaining barrier to progress in our time.



Mike Sances is a Collegian columnist.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

ARTS & LIVING

TUESDAY, APRIL 4, 2006

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

The politics of punk

An interview with Anti-Flag

By David Pessah
Collegian Staff

Our call reaches singer and bass player Chris # 2 (really, he doesn't have a real last name!) in Pittsburgh, home of the Super Bowl champs, Sen. John Kerry's wife Teresa and political punk rockers Anti-Flag. Chris and his three fellow activists/musicians have a have been together 12 years, attracting a loyal following while staying just below the mainstream radar. But the nation's increasing astuteness of the fact that things might not be going all that well in Washington (see John Stewart, Oscar host) opens the door for bands with something to say. And Anti-Flag certainly qualifies.

Armed with a new album, they've just begun a tour to spread their gospel. In an interview with the Collegian, Chris gave the early word on the tour.

Daily Collegian: True or false: George W. Bush is the best thing to happen to political rock groups in a long, long time.

Chris #2: True. And it's the only good thing he's done. He has inspired people into being political again. A lot of people say hating on Bush is a fad, but the social conscience is growing in the world again. We will talk about this the way our parents talk about the Vietnam War. There is a paradigm shift going on right now.

DC: What are the two things UMass students should know about Anti-Flag?

C2: First, Anti-Flag is all about respecting people. It amazes us that you can walk into Wal-Mart and buy a shirt with an American eagle on it with the words: USA #1. The idea of putting the rest of the world below us is just wrong. We want to get rid of the nationalist mentality. Second, we consider ourselves a gateway drug to activism. We want people to hear a song and feel inspired to do things — start a band, run for office, try to improve the world.

DC: Are you frustrated that more recording artists aren't more political?

C2: We don't really care. We have our agenda. It gets the pen moving on the paper.

DC: Do you feel Anti-Flag has an impact on the public debate?

C2: Yes and no. I feel like we have an impact on some people and that in turn helps get others involved. We use every opportunity we're given to do something, whether it's switching labels or touring or putting stuff up on the website.

DC: Who else should we be listening to?

C2: There different bands that take different roads. Propagandhi, Bruce Springsteen and Bob Dylan. I think we are akin to Dylan; he went after it any way you could. So do we.

DC: Who is the next big political singer or band?

C2: Well, Bright Eyes is the quintessential poetic activist. Some people in the Anti-Flag camp may dismiss his music as emo, but his demeanor and ways of going about distribution and promotion of his materials and his record label are completely punk. His overall ideals are the most punk rock out there. I think the fact that he got NBC to let him play "When the President Talks to God" on the airwaves is a testament to his character. He could have played one of his hit songs and sold more records, but instead he went for the message.

DC: Your new album "For Blood and Empire" hit the shelves recently. What do we need to know?

C2: Well, "The Project For a New American Century" is the song we've always tried to write and finally did. We also wanted to find a new way to play our songs, we experimented with different beats. Like on "1 Trillion Dollars," a song about our staggering deficit.

DC: Give us an idea of some of the political commentary we'll find on this album?

C2: Listen to "Project For a New American Century." This is about a group whose doctrine is U.S. world domination through militarism. It was founded by 18 members. 10 of them are now in the Bush White House. In "The Press Corpse" we sing about the apathy of press in reporting the truth, which leads to public apathy. The song "Exodus" is about the Darfur genocide, but connects with places such as Sudan and New Orleans, where poor people are overlooked.

DC: Are today's college students too apathetic?

C2: There are certainly people who think that bad things will never happen in their lifespan, so why worry, but as a whole college students are definitely not apathetic. Different college campuses are different and have different levels of intensity, but there is a definite anti-war, anti-globalization movement going on. This age bracket has the ability to shape the world.

DC: What's your advice to the college kid who wants to be more informed and involved?

C2: The big thing is to understand that all information has been tainted in some way. It isn't the truth. What Anti-Flag does is search out independent media and use songs and music to say, "Hey, there's another side of the story you're not being told on Fox, NBC, AOL." The goal is to get peo- ple to say, "I can have an impact," to create a snowball effect where more and more people get involved.

DC: What are the top five sites for students who want to get the real story?

C2: The five sites I would recommend are indymedia.org, democracynow.org, militaryfreezone.org, genocideintervention fund.net and undergroundactionalliance.org.

DC: What is the last thing you want to say to UMass?

C2: If you want to find out more information about Anti-Flag, and the state of the world, visit anti-flag.com. Go to forbloodandempire.com to check out the new album. But if you want to have any idea of what this all means come out to Anti-Flag show. Regardless of sexual preference, color of skin, age, gender. No matter what you look like, how you dress, what kind of music you listen to. Regardless of all that stuff you're more than welcome with open arms.

Anti-Flag will play the Wonderland Ballroom in Revere on Tuesday, April 11.

Kolot pleases crowds at Hillel

By Candace Letizia
Collegian Correspondent

It's 11 p.m. on Thursday, March 30. The sky is dark, the weather is warm and a small room in the Hillel House has been transformed into a coffeehouse and lounge. Crowded with students and family members, the room is softly illuminated with candles and fairy lights. Its comfortable, cozy and welcoming atmosphere is heightened by its smiling, laughing and chatting audience who are happily waiting for members of the a cappella group Kolot to take the stage.

The group, consisting of Stefan Boroda, Jackie Forman, Emilia Iacono-Zambrano, Ari Jacobson, Debbie Loomis, Alana Margolis, Rebecca Schoonover, Jen Tauner and Aviva Vincent, waits while the band preceding them performs popular songs, including a cover of Jack Johnson's "Flake." When it is time for Kolot to take the stage, they stand in formation and try to leave smiles behind. Although presenting a professional appearance, members cannot hide their happiness at performing in front of friends. Sitting in the back, amidst cheering fans, one can feel the warmth of the room and the people within it. It makes me wonder why I'd never heard of Kolot before.

Kolot, which means "voices" in Hebrew, is a coed a cappella group that performs both contemporary and traditional music in both English and Hebrew. The contemporary songs they pick — such as Jon Bon Jovi's "Livin' on a Prayer," Leonard Cohen's "Hallelujah" and Rascal Flatts' "Bless the Broken Road" — have spiritual elements that are easily relatable whatever one's personal religion may be.

The beautiful harmony of the voices in the background provides an excellent setup for the soloist and an even better opportunity for beat-box. A contrast between senior Ari Jacobson's drum-like beats and the soft harmony of soprano rhythms created a perfect stage for sophomore and group coordinator Jackie Forman during the song "Bless the Broken Road." The perfect timing of the different rhythms and sounds was both surprising and very professional.

All the songs that were performed were done so with just the right combination of enthusiasm, proficiency and cheer: the chorus set a wonderful rhythm and the soloists were clear, concise and complementary. Members of Kolot projected distinct moods and emotions with each song, fully captivating the audience that would alternate between cheering, clapping and listening intently in silence.

The five songs performed seemed to pass by much too quickly. The beautiful harmonies and powerful vocals of Kolot gave the lounge an inviting and captivating ambience. Although this was my first experience with Kolot, I hope to enjoy more in the future. In addition to performances at Hillel, they perform frequently off campus at nursing homes, Smith College and intercollegiate music festivals. Members encourage interested students to try out in the beginning of each semester, describing the a cappella group as fun, social and a good stress reliever. Students need not be of Jewish faith nor have formal training with singing: all one needs at try-outs is a piece to sing.

As a newcomer to the a cappella scene, I would heartily recommend attending a performance by Kolot. Their talent is complimented by the warmth of their audience, their enthusiasm and happiness in performing, and the richness of the songs they perform.

Upcoming performances and more information can be found at their website at umasshillel.org/kolot.

Ups and downs of Apple Records

By Jennifer Quinn
Associated Press

LONDON (AP) – Apple Corps Ltd. is like a doting parent when it comes to The Beatles, looking after their interests and promoting their recordings, but it also makes sure no one tries to mess with the band's legacy.

The company is in court again this week, fighting Apple Computer Inc. over the iTunes Music Store, the latest battle in a long-running dispute with the U.S. company over the apple logo.

"They regard the Beatles as their four boys — John, Paul, George and Ringo — so Apple Corps looks after their music," Keith Badman, a Beatles expert and author, said Friday.

"You don't get the Beatles' version of Penny Lane being used in a cheap advertisement," Badman said. "They make sure the Beatles' recorded music is not damaged, and that's a good thing."

Apple Corps – set up by the group in 1968 and still owned by Paul McCartney, Ringo Starr and the widows of John Lennon and George Harrison – is an ever-alert watchdog, growling whenever anyone approaches the Beatles' property. It is responsible for approving merchandising and licensing for the group, as well as protecting the company's valuable apple trademark.

In the lawsuit at London's High Court, Apple Corps is seeking to force Apple Computer to drop its logo from the iTunes store and pay unspecified damages. The California-based company has countered by saying a 1991 agreement between the two Apples allows them to distribute entertainment content.

Apple Corps has also battled with EMI Group, which releases the Beatles' recordings under the Apple label, over royalties. It is equally vigilant about protecting its territory in other spheres, filing lawsuits on everything from the Lab Four's images on postage stamps to the stage show "Beatlemania."

Who owns what is a complex issue. While EMI releases the Beatles' albums, the publishing rights to words and music of 251 Beatles songs are owned by Michael Jackson and Sony/ATV Music Publishing.

The company is also instrumental in continuing The Beatles' popularity. They were behind the release of the 2000 hit album "1", which featured hits as diverse as "She Loves You" and "Hey Jude." Sales of that album topped 24 million.

The Beatles set up Apple Corps to be a corporate utopia, said Peter Doggett, the author of several music books including one about John Lennon.

Founded in the flower-power days, the company was going to behave in a relaxed way where artists could pop into the offices and not be contronted by stuffy men in suits.

"It began as an ideal corporation," Doggett said, "which in Paul McCartney's words, was supposed to operate in a nice kind of western communism."

Operating out of offices in a tony central London neighborhood, Apple Corps keeps a low profile – at least on the Internet. Their Web site is just one page, with the company's name, e-mail address and telephone number. When a caller to the company is put on hold, the music keeping them occupied is, of course, The Beatles.

The company hasn't posted huge profits. For the year ended Jan. 1, 2005, Apple Corps claimed a loss of nearly $950,000. It noted in financial statements filed with Companies House, the official government register of British companies, that more than $2.2 million each was paid for the "promotional services" of McCartney, Starr, Yoko Ono and Olivia Harrison.

New Music Tuesdays

"I think the popular music has gone truly weird." - George Harrison

Week

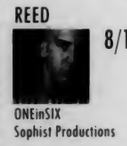
Flaming Lips

9/10

At War With The Mystics
Warner Bros Records

Shortly after passing their 20th anniversary as a band – the last 14 or so spent teetering on the brink of stardom – the Flaming Lips still sound young, vibrant and full of the same wild energy that has gotten them a massive cult following and serious critical acclaim.

On their 11th full-length, "At War With The Mystics," the Lips combine the dense, expansive sounds of 1999's highly praised "The Soft Bulletin" with the futuristic, marvelous experimentation of 2002's surprise commercial hit (relatively, of course) "Yoshimi Battles The Pink Robots." "Mystics," however, is far from a simple mashing of past glories – the Lips have again taken a fresh turn and created a whole new world for listeners to explore.



From the opener "The Yeah Yeah Yeah Song," filled with chattering vocal samples and a big chorus, it is clear that the Flaming Lips have a long, strange trip planned for the audience. Like "Yoshimi," "Mystics" is filled with supernatural, space-age and bizarre imagery — references to wizards and magic abound — while Wayne Coyne's whimsical vocals carry lyrics about life, death and everything in between. And while Coyne continues to wax poetic about the frailties and beauties of life, he manages more than a few hard lyrical blows. On "Mystics" Coyne is pissed in a way that he has rarely revealed before. Punches are thrown at suicide bombers (on the wonderful, funky and soulful "Free Radicals"), Britney Spears and Gwen Stefani (on the space-epic "The Sound Of Failure") and George Bush (who generally gets a whole lot of attitude thrown his way throughout the entire album). "The W.A.N.D.", with Coyne's battle cry, "we got the power now, motherfkers, it's where it belongs," sounds like it could be the soundtrack to revolution.

But Coyne doesn't just preach on this album; "My Cosmic Autumn Rebellion" — which sounds like the perfect follow up to "Yoshimi's" "It's Summertime" and "It Overtakes Me," with a simple vocal line that is both buoyant and catchy — is the perfect example of the futuristic funk that informs much of the album. "Mr. Ambulance Driver," a decidedly soulful life-and-death meditation, is the perfect example of how the Lips can construct a dark song with glimmers of hope shining through.

"Mystics" is, as the Lips have garnered a reputation for, a truly epic album. They have become masters of both songwriting and studio techniques that allow their songs to sound truly one-of-a-kind. And while, at album 11 and the height of their career, the band could've easily churned out "Yoshimi 2" and gone straight to the bank, thankfully the Flaming Lips have made a career out of doing the unexpected and pushing their own limits. "At War With The Mystics" is another highly psychedelic trip from one of the most exciting bands around. It's a wonder that 20-plus years in, the Lips can still sound as fresh and invigorated as ever. It's rare for a band's 11th album to be one of their very best, of course, the Flaming Lips are truly an exceptional band.

By Nick Romanow
Collegian Staff

REED

8/10

ONEinSIX
Sophist Productions

Typically, hip-hop is associated with big guns, fly girls, lots of green, more guns and nice rims. It tends to be about taking what one wants, screw the consequences. That is where REED breaks from the pack. His debut album, "ONEinSIX," is a testament to love, peace and understanding.

Now, hardcore rap fans are probably balking after reading that, thinking, "If he isn't a gangsta, he isn't a rappa." Well, that's a bit of misinfonnation. REED successfully raps in a non-violent, positive manner. The banner on the Sophist Productions Web site has the definition of a "sophist" as, "one who teaches eloquence, philosophy, politics, and the art of successful living." REED indeed does fulfill this mantra, as he is more likely to rhyme about marriage than a girl's rear end. He is more concerned with raising healthy children than smoking lots of weed.

Sophist Productions is the record label started by REED himself. It is based in New York City, and REED is the CEO and main artist. It is a very young company; its staff is mainly comprised of recent college graduates.

Now, back to "ONEinSIX." The album itself is quite strong, a melodious blend of hip hop, rap, reggae and R&B. One memorable track is "Plum Pum." This song is about how "Ricky" disregards the skin color of his women, saying "I don't discriminate, I participate." This track — although edited, which seems a little too politically correct — definitely can attract the young male crowd that tends to be key in hip-hop marketing. Teenage guys love songs about the female anatomy.

One thing "ONEinSIX" falls short on is that it tries to be too many things. Like many artists with long lists of influences, REED attempts to incorporate all the music that is important to him. In doing this, there are times during the album where the listener feels like the idea is forced. Not to say that it is bad, just that there are spots where REED should've chosen a genre or two and worked with that, instead of mixing five together. It gets mushy. Innovative, yes, but still mushy.

This album has real quality to it. It has the crossover appeal that Kanye West cashed in on, and it is easy to remember the words to REED's smooth rhymes. Given the opportunity, one should take the chance to see this artist when he's is in town. And keep in mind that this reporter is not a rap fan, but he still greatly enjoyed it.

By Pete Corbett
Collegian Correspondent

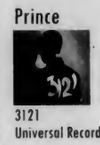
Sonata Arctica

7.5/10

For the Sake of Revenge
Nuclear Blast

Looking at the covers of Sonata Arctica's studio albums — which prominently feature sailing ships being chased by sea monsters and wizards in the act of casting spells — a casual observer would be forgiven for labeling them as a cheesy power metal band. Taking into account the cover of their latest live album, "For the Sake of Revenge," which shows an angry looking wolf pouncing in the snow, it would be hard not to think that. Which is fitting, because Sonata Arctica is a cheesy power metal band.

This isn't a bad thing, though. They manage to avoid many of the downfalls, the biggest of which is taking themselves entirely seriously. Most power metal bands probably recognize that they're just a bit ridiculous — it would be difficult to choose the name DragonForce without just a hint of irony — but Sonata Arctica goes the extra mile.



This disc begins with four songs with intimidating titles like "Prelude for Reckoning" and "Blinded No More," when lead singer Tony Kakko asks the audience, "Are you ready for some underwear music?" as the band breaks into "Victoria's Secret." Sure, the song is another power metal tune complete with flashy guitar solos and vocals that sound like a Finnish Geddy Lee, but it's good to have a sense of humor.

The real cusp of this album, though, is that Sonata Arctica is a really good live band. The songs on this album compare very favorably with studio versions. These guys really know how to play together — technical skill is definitely one of the genre's stereotypes that they lit. The album's production is very tasteful, too. Crowd noise is audible at certain points, and hints at the energy of their live show, but unlike a lot of live albums, it isn't ever-present. Sometimes you just want to hear the music, and the crowd noise is low enough in the mix that you actually can.

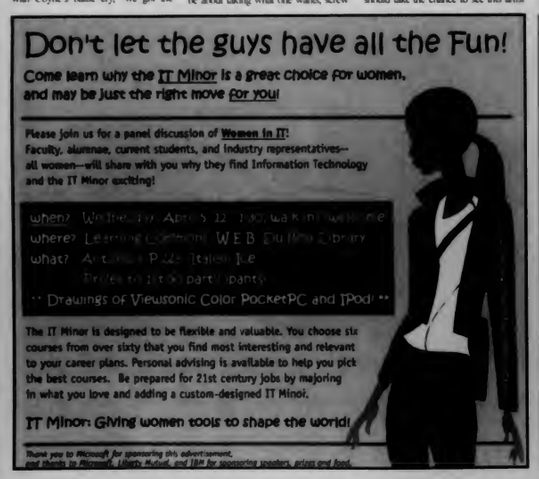
As with all live albums, this is something of a fans-only affair. Casual listeners and those new to the band can still certainly enjoy it, but it's usually a lot easier to get into a band's studio work. That said, the band is tight and clean all the way through. If one had to be introduced to a band through a live album, this would be a good choice. This is how a live album should sound.

By Ian Jones
Collegian Staff

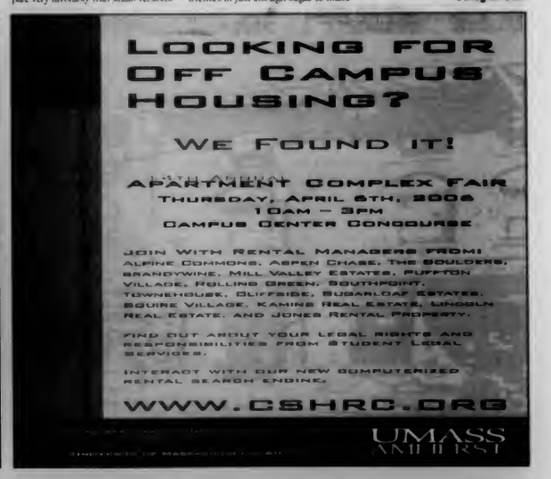
Prince

6/10

3121
Universal Records



In 2004 Prince achieved an unexpected – and very welcome – comeback with his "Musicology" album and subsequent tour. For the first time in a long while Prince was in both critical and commercial favor and he never seemed as invigorated. Fortunately "Musicology" was no fluke, proved by his latest album "3121." Returning to a major label after an extended foray into complete independence – risking a fall into obscurity – Prince doesn't sound like he is simply riding the comeback wave, rather it seems as if he is riding a peak, and it is a height that is draped in modern dance/pop technique, coating his funkedelic eccentricities in just enough sugar to make the whole world pay attention.



While it doesn't match his best work, "3121" sounds like an artist that is still bubbling over with ideas. From the space-age funk of the title track, to the dance-club fervor of the first single "Black Sweat" to the Marvin Gaye inspired bedroom soul of "Satisfied," Prince has loaded his latest album with a lot of great work. However, while there are a few great individual moments, the entire album doesn't find Prince pushing too many boundaries. Rather, "3121" functions almost as an extension of "Musicology" — though arguably a more successful and filled out version. Bouncing between throbbing club numbers, tripped-out funk, pop balladry and candle-light slow jams, "3121" seems like a sleek, futuristic tour of Prince's mind.

Of course, some of the lustier songs fall under the weight of the subject; "Incense and Candles" features Prince playing with an irritating vocoder and stale lyrics. "Love" isn't quite as straightforward as the title would indicate but it never quite hits the zenith that it hints at. However, Prince finds himself doing better on the ballads. "The Dance" features a grand, almost majestic, sound and "Te Amo Corazon," with its cinematic scope, revels in its shakers and pianos. Of course, it is isn't all romance and lust; closer "Get On The Boat" may have kind of cheesy, feel-good lyrics but it matches the made-for-party funk feel of the music.

"3121" doesn't feel like a mere rehash of Prince's best characteristics but it is not a very experimental album either. It seems more that Prince has taken some of his most well-known formulas and tinkered around with them, experimenting within pre-established confines. However, it works; "3121" is not one of Prince's best albums, but with its futuristic sounds and tight songwriting, it is certainly fit to stand among them.

By Nick Romanow
Collegian Staff

Congratulations Graduates

ALUMNI ASSOCIATION

from your Alumni Association!

Stop by Memorial Hall for your FREE graduation gift and your chance to win $1,000 CASH!

Join your Alumni Association and get...

- Alumni Career Services
- Kaplan Test Prep Discounts
- Alumni Networking Opportunities
- Student Loan Consolidation

...and more!

www.UMassAlumni.com You were. You are. UMASS.

Interviewing Strategies
Learn How to Get Noticed

Tuesday, April 4, 2006
4:00 p.m. • Memorial Hall
WITH ALUMNI GUEST SPEAKER
Sara Coady '02

Sara is senior recruiter for Keane, Inc., a Boston-based business and IT services firm that delivers strategy consulting, application, and business process services to clients globally. In her position as recruiter, she works with clients to qualify their hiring needs, and then conducts research to identify the best candidate nationally. She reviews resumes, conducts interviews and negotiates pay. She also coordinates on-campus recruiting, networking events and conferences. During her time on campus, she served as Senator and Governor of Orchard Hill and was a Residential Assistant.

FREE PIZZA • FREE SODA

To register for this FREE event, visit the Alumni Association website at www.UMassAlumni.com/students.

Campus Career PROGRAMS

For more information contact Melanie Corbeil, Associate Director for Student and Alumni Programs at 545-9705 or mcorbeil@admin.umass.edu

'Ghost' gives fans what they want

By Bridget Byrne
Associated Press

UNIVERSAL CITY, Calif. (AP) — There's a faint rustling on the set of "Ghost Whisperer." Could it be some troubled spirit trying to get medium Melinda Gordon's attention?

No. It's the frilly bodice of Jennifer Love Hewitt's dress. It seems that each time the actress emotes, it gives off a noise loud enough to worry the sound engineer, consequently requiring several extra takes.

Apparently some fans of the CBS series, in which Hewitt plays a young newlywed with the ability to contact spirits, tune in mainly to see what the winsome star is wearing. But it's the paranormal subject matter that seems to have connected with most viewers, earning the new drama an early pickup for next season.

"We really listen to our audience and they do want scary and low cut dresses," laughs series consultant and executive producer James Van Praagh. The well-known paranormal expert acknowledges some compromises have to be made in the name of entertainment, yet is essentially pleased the show is conveying his message that there's life after death.

"I think especially in a time of war people question beliefs, and I don't think people are going to religions as much for answers. They are going within and being responsible for their own lives and their own quest for understanding," says Van Praagh, who reports that many attending his recent lectures have said their interest was piqued by watching "Ghost Whisperer."

"I love the theme. I definitely feel we are not just our bodies, that we are beings and that we go on," says Anne Archer, who has joined the cast in the recurring role of Beth Gordon, Melinda's mother.

"So from that standpoint, it didn't seem weird to me at all," continues Archer. "I think it's interesting and obviously audiences do, too ... I think there is a sort of emptiness in our look at life in general lately, and think this is a way to explore that."

The episode filming this day at Universal Studios, titled "The Vanishing," airs Friday at 8 p.m EDT.

Hewitt's chest heaves and faux tears flow. It seems a head injury has caused her character, Melinda, to lose her gift for communicating with earthbound spirits and she's devastated. Her loving husband, Jim (David Conrad), is providing sympathy.

Meanwhile, mother Beth is happy. She possesses the same psychic gift as her daughter, but has always viewed it as a curse rather than a blessing. Now, for whatever reason, her gift has vanished, too, but she feels a burden has been lifted.

Archer says the whole story arc has given her something juicy to play beyond the usual standard mom fare often offered to actresses in their 50s.

"It was a whole character coming in with a big problem. I loved that, and then in this episode the gift goes away for both of us and I'm feeling liberated," says the actress as she waits in her dressing room for her scenes to begin. "It's great that they gave me something to act other than, 'Hi, dear, how are you doing?'"

Director and executive producer Ian Sander adds that Archer's good looks are also an attribute, "because the role of Beth demands flashbacks, and she looks utterly convincing playing nearly 20 years younger."

Van Praagh says it's not essential that actors on his show believe in its premise, "but it certainly helps if they are open-minded."

Hewitt said earlier that spending time with Van Praagh and researching for the show has made it hard not to believe.

"What's great and beautiful about this show is that it kind of makes you believe, if you don't already, that the people you love the most maybe don't actually leave you for good, that maybe they kind of look after you and are there to sort of see you through the rest of whatever your journey is."

Archer's thoughts echo that. "The show has charm because its characters are so likable. Even the ghosts are sympathetic. I think it (the show) hits these buttons in people that ... when you lose someone, very often you are left with these terrible feelings about what you didn't say to them," she says. "It's very honest, because it gets down to what we all wonder about."

T.I. shares tales of the South

Tip "T.I." Harris stars as Rashad Swann with Lauren London as Nes-Nes in the new film "ATL."

By Kelley L. Carter
Detroit Free Press

DETROIT — T.I. likes telling stories.

The Atlanta rapper wants to report what life is like in communities that might be unfamiliar to many people — street tales with a Southern twang.

He's doing it in two ways: He released a new album Tuesday and stars in his first film, which opened Friday.

Technically, the new album, "King," which boldly proclaims his status as the premier Southern rap artist, is his fourth. But it has the feel of a sophomore follow-up, because the first two releases did only a little to raise his commercial profile.

His second album, 2003's "Trap Muzik," sold more than 500,000 copies and featured the single "Rubber Band Man," a street anthem of sorts. He wasn't able to celebrate the success of that record for long; while he was on tour, he was charged with violating probation from a 1998 drug charge. He turned himself in, and was released early in 2004.

That's when things changed for the better for the 25-year-old rapper — real name Clifford Joseph Harris Jr.

In late 2004, T.I. dropped his third album, "Urban Legend," which produced the hot single "Bring 'Em Out." It debuted in the Top 10 and sealed T.I.'s status as a hip-hop heavyweight.

There's a lot pressure to sustain the success of that disc. And there's a lot riding on his new film, "ATL."

"I knew I had to make this the album of my career," he says from a hotel suite in downtown Detroit, in town on a promotional tour. "I was up for the challenge. I found out what people liked about me and I found out a way to give it to them better."

For the album, he worked with a variety of musicians — Just Blaze, Jamie Foxx, Mannie Fresh and Travis Barker of Blink-182. The success of the previous album was evident in the atmosphere of making the new one, T.I. says, drawling that "the money was better; the facilities were better."

He also was being handed screenplays and being courted for starring film roles. In "ATL," he plays Rashod, a high school senior in Atlanta who hangs with a crew at a local skating rink. It's a coming-of-age film with a hip-hop twist, which takes on the challenges of impending college, figuring out the future and simply doing the right thing. It's loosely based on the hang-out spot and activities of Atlantans, including Tionne Watkins (T-Boz) of TLC.

The story follows T.I.'s character, who works in the family custodial service business while trying to steer his younger brother away from selling drugs.

And though the rapper is already heading on the path to multi-layered success — he's already in on a successful Atlanta nightclub and an auto concierge service and has plans for a fall clothing line and a home-town restaurant — there's only one thing that will really indicate he's done his job well. T.I. hopes that this time next week, he'll be celebrating a No. 1 album and a No. 1 movie.

TV networks do spring cleaning

By Tom Jicha
South Florida Sun-Sentinel

CBS could make history next month. It could become the first network to stand pat from one season to the next when the fall lineups are rolled out in May for advertisers. CBS's prime-time lineup is that solid across the board.

The late-season successes of "The Unit," "Courting Alex" and "The New Adventures of Old Christine" have provided worthy candidates for the few weak spots that existed. Fact is, CBS has already announced 2006-07 renewals for the bulk of its schedule.

However, just because you can do something doesn't mean you should. CBS will find ways to make room for at least four or five newcomers. Schedules need to be refreshed each season so that the entire lineup doesn't get old together. It also would be bad form to allow your competitors to dominate media attention for their new series in the walk-up to the new season. "Same old, same old" is not a scintillating marketing slogan.

Ergo, a few series that would be automatic renewals on other networks will be pink-slipped by CBS. Almost certain to go is the Sunday movie, which has been in a death spiral since the arrival of "Desperate Housewives" and "Grey's Anatomy." This will mark the end of an era, as CBS is the last network to maintain a regular movie-of-the-week presence. There probably will be occasional "Hallmark Hall of Fame" films and a miniseries or two, but the regular weekly franchise is likely to fade into history.

Of the established series, "The King of Queens" is problematical because of increasing costs and declining ratings. Kevin James and Leah Remini are getting close to the million-dollar-an-episode mark, and the show's ratings don't justify that. "How I Met Your Mother" and "Christine" could be shuffled around. "Two and a Half Men" to create a safe harbor for a new comedy that would cost less than half as much as "King."

Noteworthy for its omission from CBS's early renewal roster is "Close to Home," but there's a logical reason. CBS was waiting to see how the mobile crime drama fares against NBC's relocated "Las Vegas." Early indications are "Close to Home" is doing just fine, so a renewal could come at any moment.

The fate of "Out of Practice" is less certain. If CBS has a couple of comedy pilots it likes, "Out of Practice" could be a goner. Absent that, the new Wednesday combo of "Out of Practice" and "Courting Alex" could be back.

While CBS is doing contortions to open a few holes, the other networks are struggling to find new series to fill all their troubled time periods.

There are still a handful of spring tryouts to premiere across the dial. However, generally shows whose premieres are held this late into the season are not considered hot prospects.

This spring an entire network is being canceled — actually two halves — as the WB and UPN will merge into one, the poorly christened CW, whose name is liable to change before its debut in September.

Major hits such as those in ABC's Sunday lineup and "Lost," NBC's three "Law & Orders," "Medium" and "ER" and Fox's "American Idol" and "24" have nothing to worry about. For many other series, spring is a nervous time.

Here's a look at the shows that figure to make the cut and those that won't. (If a show is currently off the schedule, it's probably road kill.)

ABC: SITCOMS AT RISK

The end of "Alias" has already been announced. "Commander in Chief" will return April 13 — not the previously announced April 18 — but it will take a miracle for the political drama starring Geena Davis as the first female president to win another term. Bringing it back in a death slot opposite "Without a Trace" and "ER" underlines this.

"In Justice," which got off to a promising start, has crashed and burned. Its star, Kyle MacLachlan, has been recruited for a recurring role on "Desperate Housewives," so the cancellation notice is just a formality.

"Invasion," now on a planned hiatus, could go either way. It's a positive sign that ABC is bringing it back for the May sweeps rather than running out its order in March and early April, when ratings are not as crucial.

Other exceptions to the rule that series now off the air won't be back are "Dancing With the Stars," a sure returnee, and "The Bachelor."

"American Inventor" has gotten off to a solid start — but that was with March Madness on CBS. ABC will be monitoring how the reality show fares now that "CSI: Crime Scene Investigation" is back in the picture.

Most of the network's sitcoms also are in jeopardy, although financial considerations could save some. "Hope & Faith," for example, is still a season short of the ideal number of episodes for syndication and the network owns the show. Also, ABC doesn't want to put Kelly Ripa, who would be universally courted if she became available, into play.

Another factor that could save some borderline series is the absence of Monday Night Football for the first time in more than 30 years. That opens another three hours in the fall.

NBC: PRIME PIGSKIN

Prime-time football, now to be on Sunday, liberates NBC from programming four hours. It couldn't have come at a better time, which is why NBC paid zillions to get back into the game. By removing Sunday from the mix and continuing to use Saturday as a dumping ground, NBC will have to program only 15 hours a week.

The reduced agenda might save the network from itself. The most promising thing to happen this spring is the breakthrough of "Deal or No Deal." However, having learned nothing from ABC's assassination through overexposure of "Who Wants To Be a Millionaire," NBC has extended the Howie Mandel game show to three nights a week. That won't be necessary come fall.

Still, there will be plenty of holes to fill. "The West Wing" and "Will & Grace" will slip into retirement and will have plenty of involuntary company. "Four Kings" is going to be dethroned and "Scrubs" looms as another cut. "E-Ring" and "Surface" are examples of shows whose absence is an indicator they won't be back. "Heist" was savaged by critics and opened poorly in the ratings, a deadly combination.

It's too soon to make a call on "Conviction" because Dick Wolf's latest crime drama played against basketball the past two weeks.

"The Apprentice" might be hyping its next season in Los Angeles, but it's not a certainty to make the air if ratings continue the steady free fall that began at the end of the first season. If "The Apprentice" does return, it could be after football at midseason, with only one edition for the season.

The good news is "My Name Is Earl" and "The Office" have officially been renewed.

FOX: WAIT TILL JANUARY

"Malcolm in the Middle" and "That '70s Show" went into this season knowing it would be their last. There has been no such announcement about "Bernie Mac" but it's an almost certain cancellation.

It's easier to note the series that will return than when they'll do so since Fox doesn't began playing his real until January, when "American Idol" changes the face of TV.

PARKING SERVICES
REGULATION REMINDER

Effective Monday, April 3, 2006, Parking Services is returning to regular hours of parking enforcement. These hours are from 7:00 a.m. to 5:00 p.m., Monday through Friday. Valid UMASS parking permits are required in all parking lots, with the exception of metered lots. Metered lots are enforced for payment from 9:00 a.m. to 5:00 p.m., Monday through Friday.

From 5:00 p.m. to 7:00 a.m., Monday through Friday, on weekends and on holidays, vehicles may park in any legal, non-reserved, non-restricted parking space or lot without displaying a permit. Reserved and restricted parking spaces or lots always require display of a proper permit. These spaces/lots include handicapped spaces, vendor spaces, state vehicle spaces and 24-hour restricted lots (specifically Lots 21, 22, 29, 35, 44, 47, 49, 50, 54, 64P, 67, North Village Apts. and Lincoln Apts.). Parking is never allowed in a tow zone or access lane. For more information, please visit our website http://parking.umass.edu or call Parking Services at 413-545-0065.

life. death. freedom.

Jesus questions Nietzsche

Greg Ganssle, PhD

Thursday April, 6th • 7pm
124 Hasbrouck

sponsered by campus crusade for christ, focus, intervarsity, mercyhouse, and navigators.

The VERITAS FORUM

www.umasscru.com www.veritas.org

Henry Rollins is a scream on IFC

By Marisa Guthrie
New York Daily News

Henry Rollins, the tattooed former frontman of raging punk band Black Flag, knows he scares people.

"People may have the wrong idea about me," he said, "because I go on stage and yell."

He just has an opinion, and he's not shy about sharing it, which is why executives at IFC decided to let him riff on anything he wanted when they brought him back for a second round on the network.

Last season's monthly movie-centric "Film Corner" morphed this year into weekly talker "The Henry Rollins Show," Saturdays at 10 p.m. EDT.

Last week's debut installment featured an interview with Oliver Stone. Future guests include Ozzy Osbourne, Chuck D and Werner Herzog. Regular features include "Teeing Off," a political rant that is Rollins's take on the opening monologue and the irreverent "Letters From Henry" feature, which essentially personalizes the political rant. Recipients include Laura Bush and Pat Robertson.

Outside of the IFC show, Rollins has been fronting his own band since 1986, which provides an in-your-face listening experience.

He also yells on stage during spoken-word shows — he won a Grammy in 1995 for his autobiographical album "Get in the Van." He's no less animated during his numerous speaking engagements.

"I'm not trying to intimidate," said Rollins.

A Charlie Rose for Generation X, Rollins is the rare pop culture hero who backs up the rhetoric with experience. He tours with the USO, entertaining American troops in Iraq. He has visited injured soldiers at Walter Reed and Bethesda Naval hospitals. He has traveled extensively in the Middle East and Asia. And he raises money for numerous home-grown charities and advocacy groups, including the Southern Poverty Law Center.

While he shrugs off the liberal label, he's not winning any friends in neocon circles.

"I'm not necessarily against Republicans and conservatives," he said. "I don't think they're bad people. And there are some ridiculously smart conservatives out there. But (the Bush) administration gets to me because they're so crass. That zero-message message of never apologizing, never giving ground. We're not seeking to fight that bigger war. And I think that's very dangerous."

Rollins's political inoculation started early. Born Henry Lawrence Garfield, Rollins was raised in Washington, D.C., by his mom, Iris. Her mission was public education, and she spent her career at multiple government outreach organizations. She also worked on Democrat Hubert Humphrey's presidential campaign.

But despite his obvious aptitude, Rollins has little interest in pursuing a traditional career in politics.

"I can do so much cool stuff by being an angry citizen," he explained, "where as even in the lowest levels of politics I see a lot of cooks in the kitchen and red tape and no opportunity to raise your voice, no opportunity for dissent and no opportunity to say, 'You know what, I am so going to ruin your day.'"

Former Black Flag frontman Henry Rollins, also known for his in-your-face spoken word performances, has been given a second season by IFC for "The Henry Rollins Show."

Jazz series targets new listeners

By Tara Burghart
Associated Press

CHICAGO (AP) — Ramsey Lewis wrote the tune, he's played it dozens of times, yet a huge grin still spreads across his face as he sits down at the piano to play a blues-tinged version with Robert Cray and Keb' Mo'.

On other days, Lewis backs jazz singers Al Jarreau and Kurt Elling, guitarists Pat Metheney and Jim Hall, or — in an episode of his new PBS show featuring winners of the 2006 National Endowment for the Arts Jazz Masters award — Tony Bennett, Chick Corea and the late Ray Barretto.

The artists are guests on "Legends of Jazz with Ramsey Lewis," a weekly program that began its run this weekend on public television (check local listings).

The show's creators say it is the first time jazz has been featured on a weekly basis on network television in 40 years. They hope their format will lure not just jazz aficionados, but people who perhaps have found jazz too intimidating to seek out in a club or record store.

"Our intention is to not only attract the hardcore jazz fan, but we're doing it in such a way that it will also be easy to take for those who are not necessarily steeped in the ways of jazz," said Lewis, a Grammy-winning composer and pianist who hosts a syndicated radio program with the same name as the TV show.

Each of the debut season's 13 episodes begins with Lewis introducing the show's theme — everything from "Brazilian Jazz" to "The American Songbook" — followed by a short video segment using archival footage to provide historical perspective.

The guests then join Lewis for an interview, although with the easygoing, assured Lewis, it's more like a conversation. The artists perform individually, then together, before Lewis joins them on piano to close out the 30-minute show.

All but one of the shows were recorded in WTTW's studio in Chicago, Lewis's hometown and where he hosts his radio show. There was an audience of about 50 at each show.

While the editing is not as jumpy as something a viewer would see on MTV, there are plenty of quick cuts, close-ups and dissolves, and it's filmed with numerous high-definition cameras — all elements that executive producer and creator Larry Rosen said he thought important for attracting viewers used to seeing music performances on television.

But those, he points out, often involve lip synching, while on "Legends of Jazz" the performances are all live and feature combinations of artists who in many cases have never performed together before.

As for the show's format, Rosen said he was looking for a combination of elements: a mini-version of Ken Burns's documentaries for the historical segments, the types of intimate, craft-centered discussions held on Bravo's "Inside the Actors Studio," and one-of-a-kind live performances.

"I think that we have been able to come up with great content in terms of conversation and information," Lewis said. "We're trying not to be a documentary, but have a more powerful conversation, and then an 'Oh, by the way, will you play?' sort of thing," Lewis said in an interview in his dressing room before taping the episode entitled "Roots: The Blues."

That show's guests are Cray and 'Mo, and its theme is how jazz and blues had similar origins but diverged into two genres, and how the two distinctly American forms of music have influenced each other over the years.

During their interview with Lewis, 'Mo jokes about how his first solo album, an R&B project, sold "dozens" of copies and relates how he ended up playing blues legend Robert Johnson in a 1997 film. Cray and 'Mo discuss the relation they see between jazz and the blues.

"In order to play jazz, you have to be able to play the blues," Cray tells Lewis.

"Blues informs you emotionally. Jazz is more intellectual," 'Mo adds.

Rosen called Lewis the key to the show's success, because his comfort in front of the camera combined with his knowledge of jazz sets his guests at ease, drawing out entertaining stories and personalities that Rosen believes will hook viewers.

Rosen said he's already planning the series' second season, although he won't reveal which artists are on his wish list. He said he believes the show will be a success, even if network television has shied away from jazz in the past few decades.

"I think (jazz) has a mass market appeal — it all depends on how you present it. If you choose a narrow format, with someone playing a solo in some abstract way that goes on for 30 minutes, yeah, that's not ready for prime time," he said.

"But, here, we have a careful balance. None of the songs last more than 3 1/2 minutes. Melodic things are played, not avant-garde," Rosen said. "It's palatable in format yet true to the musical form itself."

Rascal Flatts on verge of stardom

By John Gerome
Associated Press

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — The guys from Rascal Flatts are getting restless after a long day.

They slip on headphones to record yet another radio spot and bass player Jay DeMarcus has trouble hearing the cue.

"I can't hear anything. Hey, hey, hey," he repeats into the microphone, then breaking into song, "... Hey, Jude, I've seen you nude. Don't try to fake it, I've seen you nauke-ed."

The joke breaks up the monotony and, for the moment, the demands of being one of country's hottest acts.

County music's best-selling album last year didn't come from Kenny Chesney, Keith Urban, Toby Keith or Tim McGraw. It was Rascal Flatts' "Feels Like Today," yielding three No. 1 hits, including the Grammy-winning "Bless the Broken Road."

Their follow-up, "Me and My Gang," comes out Tuesday and should push them into country music's top tier. "We're so confident of that that we have a billboard campaign with Kenny Chesney, Martina McBride, Keith Urban and Toby Keith and we just did a new version with Rascal Flatts," said Ken Boesen, program director at WPOC in Baltimore. "Three-story high Rascal Flatts' faces are going up all over Baltimore right now."

The first single, "What Hurts the Most," reached No. 1 in 11 weeks — the fastest-moving song of their career.

The group, which also includes singer Gary LeVox and guitarist Joe Don Rooney, kicked off a new tour in February.

"This is what we've strived to do over the last six years, become a headline act," said Rooney, 30. "Now we've arrived and it feels good."

That success has got to be extra sweet for Rascal Flatts. Early on they were derided as a manufactured, boy-pop-for-country boy band — country's version of the Backstreet Boys.

While country purists may still scoff, the group has answered doubts about their talent. They've written some of their own songs (including the No. 1 "Fast Cars and Freedom"), played their own instruments, co-produced their new album and collected industry awards. DeMarcus recently produced and performed on the new album by pop-rock stalwarts Chicago.

They defend their sound, saying the core of what they do is still country music and their pop leanings help expand the genre.

"We've contributed a little to bringing people from the hip-hop world, the R&B world and the straight-up rock world into country music. It's win-win for everybody," LeVox said. "I think country music people are too hard on saying what's country and what's not country."

Rascal Flatts singer Gary LeVox, whose group has amassed considerable popularity, performs at the Civic Center in Columbus, Ga.

LeVox, 35, and DeMarcus, 34, are second cousins who grew up playing music together in Columbus, Ohio.

DeMarcus moved to Nashville in 1992 and earned his first record deal as part of a Christian group called East to West. He persuaded his cousin to quit his job with the Ohio Department of Mental Retardation and join him in Nashville five years later.

The two linked up with Oklahoma native Rooney when their regular guitarist couldn't make a gig. Their 1999 debut on Disney's Lyric Street Records produced four top 10 hits, including the No. 1 "I'm Movin' On."

Their follow-up album "Melt" sold more than 2 million copies and "Feels Like Today" 4 million.

The new record continues the pop hooks and lush three-part harmonies.

Many of the tracks are ballads, but there's also the reggae-flavored "Yes I Do" and the roadhouse romp "Backwards." Rooney rocks out on the title track with the talk box guitar that Joe Walsh and Peter Frampton popularized in the 1970s.

The most poignant moment may be "Ellsworth," a ballad about a woman with Alzheimer's disease.

"Tomorrow she won't remember what she did today," LeVox sings over piano and steel guitar, but ask her about Ellsworth, Kan., 1948, and she can recall details about her husband-to-be.

The tight, soaring harmonies echo a tradition in country music that's rooted in duos like the Delmore Brothers, Louvin Brothers and Everly Brothers.

"When we first got together, we didn't talk about who was going to sing what," LeVox said. "We did 'Church on Cumberland Road' and it was undeniable when we hit that first chorus. We felt like we had to do it. We felt like it was ordained."

With the group's success, others may be feeling the same way.

Do you live on campus?

Registered to vote in Amherst?

Your vote counts

Today

Amherst Town Election

If you live on campus and are registed to vote in Amherst, you can vote at the Cape Cod Lounge in the Student Union. Vote between 7 a.m. to 8 p.m.

Off campus and don't know where to vote? Contact the Amherst Town Clerk at 413-259-3035 for more information.

Paid for by the Student Government Association, University of Massachusetts, Elvis Méndez, President

Student Government Association
420 Student Union Building
University of Massachusetts,
Amherst

STUDENTS COUNT

Have you taken College Writing?
Registration for Fall 2006

To register for College Writing, you must take the Writing Program Placement Test

This test is offered as a walk-in basis through the end of the spring semester

Tuesdays - Thursdays
9:00 am - 2:00 pm
In Bartlett Hall 305

This test is a pre-requisite for enrollment in Englwrit 112, College Writing.

This test may be taken only once.

Call 545 - 0610 to schedule a date to take the test

Barkley heads Hall selections

By Michael Marot
Associated Press

INDIANAPOLIS Charles Barkley and Dominique Wilkins grew up in the deep South, played in the Southeastern Conference and spent more than a decade as two of the NBA's greatest forwards.

Now the men with the familiar nicknames and the formidable highlight reels will go into the Basketball Hall of Fame, fittingly, together.

Barkley and Wilkins each got the required 18 votes from the honors committee and will join former Detroit Pistons guard Joe Dumars, Connecticut women's coach Geno Auriemma, Italian coach Sandro Gamba and longtime contributor Dave Gavitt at September's induction in Springfield, Mass.

"Charles and I go back since college," Wilkins said Monday after the announcement was made. "None of us thought this would happen, we just wanted to play basketball. This is the highest honor that can ever be paid, and it's mind-blowing."

Barkley, Auriemma and Gavitt were first-ballot selections. Gavitt's nomination was delayed because he had to wait two years after finishing his term chairman of the Hall of Fame board in 2003, a rule Gavitt helped craft.

Dumars played on the Detroit Pistons championship teams in 1989 and 1990, then helped the Pistons win another NBA title in 2004 as team president of basketball operations. Auriemma has already collected five national championship trophies with the Huskies and is closing in on winning his 600th career game next season.

As coach at Providence, Gavitt had eight straight 20-win seasons. Later, he helped establish the Big East Conference, while also expanding the NCAA tournament to 64 teams and increasing network television coverage of the three-week event.

Among those that failed to get enough votes were former players Ralph Sampson and Adrian Dantley, former coaches Gene Keady and Don Nelson and ESPN analyst Dick Vitale.

But those who were elected, notably Barkley and Wilkins, had a memorable impact on the game.

Wilkins' flamboyant dunks led to the nickname "The Human Highlight Film."

Barkley was an undersized power forward who muscled and mouthed his way into the hearts of fans.

"Rick Pitino let me know I was a superstar," Barkley said. "We played the Knicks one night and after the game, he said 'Everyone talks about [Larry] Bird and Magic [Johnson] and Michael [Jordan], and everyone's trying to put Charles with them.' He said, 'He's not knocking on the door, he's kicking it down.' When I woke up the next day, my confidence was through the roof and that gave me the confidence I needed."

Off the court, Barkley was so outspoken he was sometimes called "The Mouth of the South." He once said he shouldn't have to be a role model for kids.

On the court, though, he was a fierce competitor best known as "The Round Mound of Rebound" and "Sir Charles." He averaged 22.1 points and nearly 12 points in a 16-year career that included stops in Philadelphia, Phoenix and Houston. He was the league's MVP in 1993, and he won gold at the '92 Barcelona Olympics as part of the original U.S. Dream Team.

"I think basketball has given me every single thing in life," he said. "Hey, I'm 43 and I've never had a real job, and I hope I never do."

Wilkins relied more on style points, playing at Georgia and with five NBA teams over a 17-year career, most with the Atlanta Hawks.

He was a nine-time All-Star, a two-time Slam Dunk champion and is one of three Hawks with his jersey retired. Unlike Barkley, though, Wilkins was left off the NBA's 50th anniversary team, an omission that seems all but forgotten now.

"The 50 greatest players don't matter when you're in the Hall of Fame," Wilkins said. "We all know that I was not one of the 50 greatest. I was one of the 25 greatest — in my mind."

Dumars emerged as a key defender for the Pistons, teaming with Isiah Thomas to lead Detroit to two NBA titles. He was MVP of the 1989 Finals and was a four-time, first-team all-defense selection.

Dumars added a third championship ring in 2004 by putting together the components for another title run as Detroit's president of basketball operations, but his memories are more about the tough battles.

"I could hear him before the game one time," Dumars said of Barkley, laughing. "All I know is that there was a lot of talking going on early, like in the first two or three minutes."

Auriemma has established himself as one of America's premier women's coaches but was surprisingly quiet after the announcement.

"For someone who spends a lot of time talking, I can't express in words what this means," he whispered to the crowd in a barely audible voice.

Gavitt had a different reaction. He seemed relieved with the election after hearing from friends and colleagues for years that he should be in the Hall of Fame.

It was worth the wait.

"I started preparing myself for what to do if I wasn't elected," he said. "So when I got that call, I was thrilled. It was very special."

Gamba was the only inductee not in attendance. He's coached European basketball for more than three decades, including four consecutive Italian Olympic teams from 1980-92. He earned a silver medal at the Moscow Olympics and won gold at the 1983 European Championships.

Connecticut women's basketball coach Geno Auriemma will be inducted in the Basketball Hall of Fame in September.

Charles Barkley was a first-ballot selection for the Basketball Hall of Fame. Barkley played 16 years for Philadelphia, Phoenix and Houston.

Maryland and Duke set to battle in Boston

By Jimmy Golen
Associated Press

BOSTON During Maryland's last visit to this city, for a regular-season game against Boston College, coach Brenda Frese took her team on a surprise bus trip.

The destination was undisclosed.

The players were puzzled.

But when they unloaded at the new Boston Garden, the site of the NCAA women's Final Four, the message was clear.

"If you want to come back here, the next time will be for the Final Four," Maryland guard Shay Doron recalled on Monday, a day before the Terrapins play Duke for the NCAA title. "That feeling was unbelievable. You just want to get back here no matter what."

Maryland (33-4) reached the title game by beating top-ranked North Carolina in the semifinals Sunday — its second victory this year over the Tar Heels, a team no one else beat even once. But the groundwork was laid much earlier, when Frese took over the once-proud program in 2002.

The original power in the Atlantic Coast Conference and a charter member of the NCAA Final Four, 25 years ago, Maryland won five of the ACC's first six tournaments but hadn't broken .500 in the conference in five years before Frese arrived.

"First, it is my job to keep reminding people of history, because we feel like it's pretty special at Maryland," Frese said. "I think people forget, since it was in the 1980s, that Maryland still owns the most ACC titles and has done some pretty special things."

So Frese didn't talk about making baby steps back to greatness.

"From Day 1, it's always been about an ACC championship, the NCAA championship," Doron said. "I think it was just making us believe that we can be a part of something different that nobody in the country can say they've ever done — going from a 10-18 team to three years later playing in the Final Four.

"I love bursting people's expectations and proving them wrong and this team does it day-in, and day-out, every single year I've been here."

After going 10-18 (4-12 ACC) in her first season, Maryland won 18, 22 and a school-record 33 games this season under Frese. And when the Terrapins visited the TD Banknorth Garden before their Jan. 5 game against BC, it wasn't too improbable that they would be back.

"None of us knew where we were going," center Crystal Langhorne said. "We were coming from practice and I'm like, 'This isn't the way back to the hotel.'"

Inside the building, even though it was suited out for hockey, players stretched out in the seats and let the atmosphere soak in.

"When we were here, it was kind of like, 'Ah, let's enjoy this moment,'" forward Laura Harper said, leaning back in her chair and putting her hands behind her head.

"I think it was a powerful move. It was very inspirational. To be able to sit and look out on the court, it was awesome. Everyone who has [instant messaging] has been putting 'Boston' in their messages since the beginning of the season. Just 'Boston' that's it.

"It's kind of like a dream and now this dream's come true."

Well, not yet.

First comes another No. 1 seed Duke (31-3), which is trying to earn its first national championship in its fourth trip to the Final Four since 1999. The Blue Devils also visited Boston College's Chestnut Hill campus this season, but coach Gail Goestenkors opted not to make a special trip to see the championship site.

"I've done that in the past several years and I felt like that put more pressure on my kids, honestly," she said.

"I guess I've let that pressure go. I've let that worry go about winning the national title. I feel like we're going to win it at some point. I know we're going to win it at some point. So that's given me great freedom, great confidence.

"I think in the past perhaps I wanted it so badly for the team that I tried to force it to happen, and I found out that that's not really possible."

Instead, Coach G will rely on frontcourt stars Alison Bales and Mistie Williams to take back what ever advantage Maryland has with its speed. The ACC rivals already have played three times this year, and Maryland has improved each time — losing by 18, losing by 10 and then winning by eight in the semifinals of the ACC tournament.

"I could tell you what each of them ate for breakfast this morning," Doron said. "Both teams know each other very well.

"In the past, they were just better, honestly. And now they're not better, we're at equal strength and that's why our games have been so close this year."

FRUSTRATED?
PUZZLED?
DO YOU HAVE:

A grade dispute?

Teacher, roomate or job concerns?

Billing problems?

...or any other University related problems?

THE OMBUDS OFFICE CAN HELP
(confidentially, of course)

students, faculty, and staff are all welcome

823 Campus Center
Office Hours: 8:00 a.m. - 5:00 p.m.
Telephone: 413 - 545 - 0867
fax: 413 - 545 - 9720
e-mail: ombuds@ombuds.umass.edu

GREAT Reasons to use UHS Eye Care Services

1. Savings on eyeglasses from the on-site Optical Services at UHS
2. A great place to get contact lenses
3. Convenient hours and location
4. FREE eyeglass adjustments and one year warranty on frames
5. Savings on routine eye exams for students at UMass

SPECIAL OFFER: 10 PERCENT "STUDENT DISCOUNT" ON ALL FRAMES AND EYEGLASS LENSES*

"I invite you to use the Eye Care Services"

* Cannot be combined with other insurance discounts

For appointments or questions, call 577-5383

Frederick H. Bloom, O.D.
Director, UHS Eye Care Services

UHS EYE CARE SERVICES

$500 cash bonus

Special offer for college and trade school students, recent grads and graduate students

May be combined with most other publicly available Ford Motor Company national incentives at the time of purchase or lease on the model you select. Limit one offer per customer. See your local Ford or Lincoln Mercury Dealer for details. Visit our Web site for official Program rules.

DEFINE yourself

2006 Ford F-150

Log on to www.YourTicket2Drive.com for a chance to win:

- $ $500 cash
- A trip to the 2006 mtvU Woodie Awards in New York City
- A brand new 2007 Ford Fusion!

o6 college student purchase program
www.fordcollegehq.com

Ford LINCOLN MERCURY

NO PURCHASE NECESSARY. Open to legal residents of the [illegible] who are currently enrolled as full-time undergraduate, graduate, or vocational students at time of entry. VOID IN AK, KS, KY, LA, MO, NH, NJ, NM, WI, VT, OR, PR, WA, WV, WY, OR WHERE PROHIBITED OR RESTRICTED BY LAW. Entries for the Grand Prize Sweepstakes must be received by 11:59 p.m. (EST) on 10/1/06 and entries for the Monthly Sweepstakes drawings must be received by 11:59 p.m. (EST) on the 27th day of each calendar month during the Sweepstakes Period. Subject to the Official Rules. Visit YourTicket2Drive.com control. In his 14.1 innings of work he has walked 11 batters, which is the third most on the team. He also leads UMass in wild pitches (eight) and hit batters (five). This could pose a problem today as most of the Holy Cross regulars have at least four walks to their credit this season.

UM faces Holy Cross

BASEBALL from page 14

"They need to get their feet wet and pitch in some big games," Stone said of his freshman hurlers. "Success will come with experience. They need to make some adjustments in certain situations and be in an aggressive frame of mind."

In their 1-2 series with Richmond this weekend the pitfalls for the Minutemen came on the mound. Last week against SHU and Hartford they came at the plate. UMass has yet to put together a healthy balance of pitching and hitting, with no better example than their past five games.

Against the Pioneers and Hawks they posted just nine hits and were only able to plate three runs. However this weekend they broke out with 24 runs against the Spiders including 10 on Friday alone. The only problem was the Richmond line up was also on fire. They posted double-digit run totals in all three games.

Last week the UMass pitching was steadier allowing six runs each to SHU and the Hawks. Stone says putting together a good balance is important and sometimes depends on who you're playing.

"Last week we faced better pitching, this weekend it was a tougher lineup," he said. "Richmond had fewer guys you could pitch around. We just need to focus on ourselves. If we do that we can be successful."

Sox start season on right foot

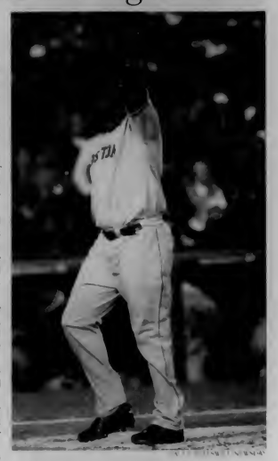
SOX from page 14

with Philadelphia.

Millwood, who had a 2.86 ERA last season in Cleveland, gave up five runs on seven hits while throwing 89 pitches in five innings. That was longer than the right-hander threw in any game this spring.

That wasn't exactly what a record home crowd of 51,541 had hoped to see in Texas' first season opener at home since 2000.

Among those in the crowd was seven-time Cy Young winner Roger Clemens, who was a guest of Rangers owner Tom Hicks. The Rocket sat in the owner's field-level box by the Rangers dugout for the first half of the game.



The Red Sox, Rangers, New York Yankees and Houston Astros — the hometown team Clemens helped lead to their first World Series last season — are all interested in signing Clemens if he decides to pitch this season. Clemens, who said before the game that he's leaning toward retirement, began his career in Boston.

Ortiz homered down the right field line in the fifth to make it 5-0. Ortiz stood at home plate, leaning to see where the ball was going until it finally ricocheted high off the foul pole. The announced estimated distance was 425 feet.

Mark Loretta, the 12th different second baseman for the Red Sox in the last 13 openers, had an RBI double and scored in front of Ortiz.

After striking out Manny Ramirez for the second out in the fourth, Millwood walked Trot Nixon and Varitek doubled into the right-center gap.

Blalock homered in the sixth inning, marking the fourth straight home opener in which he has hit a home run.

Red Sox designated hitter David Ortiz went 3-for-5 with a home run in a 7-3 win over Texas yesterday.

Ruth's curse not broken after all

By Ann Killion
Associated Press

Babe Ruth casts one mean curse, doesn't he?

If you thought the Curse of the Bambino was broken when the Boston Red Sox won the World Series in 2004, think again. The curse is still in existence. Just look at Barry Bonds.

This baseball season already is a mess for Bonds — and the first pitch hasn't even been thrown. He is at the epicenter of an investigation by baseball. He is the subject of national scorn. He is a punch line for late-night comics.

This is the second time in history that someone will try to pass Ruth's spot in history. Will try to hit 715 home runs, one more than the Babe.

And both attempts to break Ruth's record have been miserable, controversial experiences.

Henry Aaron's journey 32 years ago was painful. What should have been a proud, historic moment was almost overwhelmed by hatred, bigotry and fear. Aaron received box loads of hate mail and death threats. He didn't know if he would survive the record-breaking moment. He didn't even receive strong support in his home ballpark.

It's different for Bonds, of course. Though the charge of racism has been on the periphery of this story, the controversy surrounding the Giants left fielder isn't a result of the color of his skin, but what he has put on or beneath his skin. He has become the poster boy for steroids, not because he's African-American and not because he's the only user, but because his alleged cheating has pushed him — and only him — into baseball's stratosphere.

Right up there with Ruth and Aaron.

His achievement, assuming he does pass Ruth sometime in the next month, will be viewed as a sad, false milestone that will stand — if it stands at all — as a testament to the bloated, cheating steroid era.

Bonds & Steroids is now a part of our national culture. A swollen Bonds caricature graces the cover of the New Yorker. Bonds is making regular appearances in David Letterman's top 10.

Bonds has always coveted more recognition. Now he's getting it.

After Aaron passed Ruth on that rainy night of April 8, 1974, he stepped to a microphone and said, "Thank God that's over." Bonds probably won't be able to utter the same words. Because it won't be over. Not with a pending baseball investigation. Not as long as he stays in the game.

The investigation announced by Commissioner Bud "Oh, Am I Late?" Selig was discomfiting on several levels.

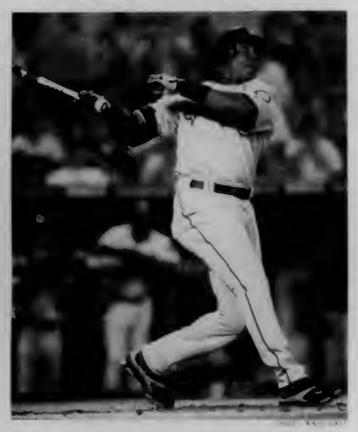
Selig specifically mentioned the book by two San Francisco Chronicle reporters, "Game of Shadows," as the impetus for the investigation. Did he not look at any newspapers over the past three years as the Balco investigation was unfolding? Didn't one of his minions ever say, "Hey, boss, put down 'Garfield' for a minute and read this story about your sport?"

The investigating committee is rife with conflicts of interest. George Mitchell, its leader, is a director with the Red Sox — a team that, I suppose, has stayed clean of steroids despite those eye-popping batting averages. Mitchell is also chairman of the board at the Walt Disney Co., which owns ESPN, which has a broadcast contract with Major League Baseball and runs a reality show about Bonds. Disney profits when ratings for baseball games are good and fans are happy.

Of course, none of this is likely to bother Selig, who had no problem acting as the commissioner of baseball while also owning the Milwaukee Brewers. He never met a conflict of interest he didn't embrace.

Will the investigation examine the inherent conflicts of interest in this story? Will it probe how the owners, the union and the commissioner looked the other way while players and their statistics blew up to grotesquely out-of-proportion sizes?

Meanwhile, Bonds, unlike Aaron, will have plenty of support in his home ballpark. People will cheer him. They will scold the media for not doing their job the past decade (forgetting that we don't have subpoena power and that this story unfolded not because of fabulous investigative journalism but as the direct result of a government investigation).



They will applaud Bonds for his unbelievable ability to focus on the task at hand and not be distracted by the bad news (ignoring that such a trait is also the sign of a sociopath, and no one was applauding Scott Peterson or O.J. Simpson for their ability to compartmentalize).

Seventy-one seasons ago, in a game in Pittsburgh, Babe Ruth hit three home runs. He tipped his cap to the fans as he rounded the bases. They were the last homers of his career, setting a barrier that has been neither easy nor satisfying to break.

"I didn't feel a wild sense of joy," Aaron wrote in his autobiography, "I Had a Hammer." "I didn't feel like celebrating."

Few will feel like celebrating when Bonds hits No.715. It's going to be an ugly season. That is, if the whole thing doesn't get rained out.

Somewhere, the Babe is probably laughing.

Giants left fielder Barry Bonds ties six home runs shy of Babe Ruth's career total of 714. A new book has intensified steroid allegations against Bonds.

Bush throws first pitch 'slow ball'

By Nedra Pickler
Associated Press

CINCINNATI — Perhaps it was the pitching practice he got over the weekend or inspiration from the new baseball bat that outfielder Ken Griffey Jr. gave him. President Bush had lots of oomph in his arm to throw out a strong first pitch for the Cincinnati Reds' home opener.

Bush became the first sitting president to throw a ceremonial pitch in Cincinnati as the Reds took on the Chicago Cubs. The ball to catcher Jason LaRue was high and off the plate, but Bush called it "my best pitch, which was kind of a slow ball."

"Give me some tips," the president asked Reds pitcher David Weathers during a pregame visit to the clubhouse.

Bush received a loud standing ovation when he took the mound in this Republican-leaning city. He was accompanied by two injured soldiers and a father who lost his son in Afghanistan.

Little American flags were distributed to the crowd of 42,000 before the game. Fans waved them excitedly as Bush was introduced and drowned out the few scattered protesters, like the family sitting a few rows behind home plate wearing matching red-and-white T-shirts that said "11-04-08" — the date of the next presidential election.

Bush, the former Texas Rangers owner, told Fox Sports Network in a gametime interview that he has been a baseball fan since birth.

"I was born when my dad was in college, and he was the first baseman for the Yale Bulldogs, and mother used to take me to the games," Bush said. "So it was like immersion from a young age.

"I've got the dish at home at the White House, and so, when I'm doing my work, I keep a game on. And there's nothing better than opening day," the president said.

But he balked when asked if he would return to baseball after leaving the White House.

"I don't know," Bush said skeptically. "You know, I've got too much to do right now. ... But you know, I think I'll just always be a fan."

Bush shook hands with players from both teams before they took the field. In the Reds' clubhouse, Griffey gave him a black bat, and pitcher Ken Mercker showed he was a loyal Bush supporter.

"I wanted to wear another hat but it didn't match," Mercker said, holding up a blue Bush-Cheney hat from his locker that said "Delivered" on the back.

In the Cubs' clubhouse, Bush walked in and announced, "This is the year." He went straight to manager Dusty Baker, grabbed his hand, and turned him to the cameras. "Smile," Bush said, shaking Baker's hand with a broad grin. Baker did as instructed, saying, "I'll do what I got to do."

President Bush (seen here) throwing the first pitch in St. Louis in 2004) threw out the opening pitch before the Reds-Cubs game yesterday in Cincinnati.

STUDENT LEGAL SERVICES OFFICE
UMASS, AMHERST
HELPING STUDENTS PROTECT THEIR RIGHTS FOR 30 YEARS
Free Legal Advice Referrals; Representation and Counseling for UMASS Students
Student & Workers Rights, Family & Criminal Law, Landlord/Tenant & Consumer Disputes
CALL 545-1995
or stop in at 922 Campus Center

AASA
-proudly presents-
23rd Annual Asian Night
"Celebrating Diversity"
Special Guest Speaker
Saturday April 8, 2006
Fine Arts Center Concert Hall
Doors open 6:30 PM
Show Starts at 7:00 PM
Free Admission!
Solo Artist Natalise
Sponsored by the Student Affairs Cultural Enrichment Fund & the Fine Arts Council

WRITE FOR SPORTS!

BEACH CLUB TANNING STUDIOS
BUY 1 GET 1 free
PACKAGES LOTIONS ACCESSORIES
APRIL 6, 7, 8
U CONN
WESTFIELD
U MASS

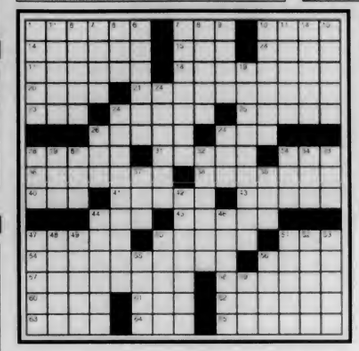
LABRAT By Richard Martelly

ELSIE HOOPER By Robert D. Kryzkowski

JACK DOGG By Xavier Rhodes

THE FAMILY MONSTER By Josh Shalek

THE ZOO By Gabe Strine



Quote of the Day

"You've heard of the golden rule, haven't you? Whoever has the gold makes the rules."
—Aladdin

Find today's answers online
www.dailycollegian.com

THE HARP
NEW!! Wireless Internet
OCMP & All Credit Cards accepted
Irish Pub
APRIL SPECIAL!
Honey Brown, Molson
$2.00 a pint / $6.50 a pitcher
TONIGHT - Trivia Night!
Trivia Night!
Trivia Night!
WED - Cold Duck Complex
"Come Party Like You're Irish!"
413-548-6900 www.theharp.net
163 Sunderland Rd. - N. Amherst
Just north of the apartments

Submit your comic!
e-mail
collegiancomics@yahoo.com

HOROSCOPES

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
Your feet are going to be very cold for most of the day.

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
Puppies really like you. You should adopt one.

aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
No one can take you seriously when you look so goofy all the time.

taurus Apr. 20-May 20
You should track down some pineapple juice for lunch.

gemini May 21-Jun. 21
No one should ever be forced to listen to you sing.

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
Your favorite socks now have huge holes in them.

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
You will have a lot of time today to take a nice long nap.

virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
You procastinate more than anyone else in the entire world.

libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22
You should start studying for all those tests now.

scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
You would have been better off if you had braces as a child.

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Don't ever have children. Seriously. Ever.

capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
You could use some more pens. Your current supply doesn't offer enough colors.

★ Submit your comic ★
e-mail
collegiancomics@yahoo.com

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

ACTIVITIES

Amherst Golf Club 256 6894 Play golf Monday Friday $20 all day rate March & April 2006.

ANNOUNCEMENTS

THE WORLD HAS HAD ENOUGH of hunger, injustice and war. An extraordinary, enlightened World Teacher is here to help. Learn more: 888-242-8272 *Share-International.org

Can you lead? Prove it with Army ROTC FREE MONEY For school Because we can! www.umass.edu/armyrotc

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Belchertown 2BR available 3rd week of April or June-1 lease until July $350/month Jen 857-526-1716

2 bedroom $1100 3 bedroom $1400 4 bedroom $2150 Now Accepting Applications 253-7377 millvalleyestates@wilmco.com

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing. 1 & 2 bedroom apts. Leases begin June, July, Aug or Sep. First come, first serve. Get them while they last. www.brandywine-apts.com stop by or call 549-0600

Center of Town 1, 2, 3 bedrooms, hardwood floors. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

EMPLOYMENT

Summer Job June 5-August 25, 2006 Teaching English and obtaining academic credits. Fees: $900 including tickets, travels and accommodations. Contact Ron Song at 203-407-0506 bvrd interco@aol.com

Full time summer employment at the Housing Assignment Office. $8.50/hour. Visit the HAO at 235 Whitmore to pick up application.

EMPLOYMENT

ABC Program, Amherst Nonprofit educational organization seeks Resident Director, beginning July 2006. "A Better Chance" (ABC), residential program for talented students of color, provides opportunity to attend ARHS and live in structured and supportive environment. Excellent record placing graduates in top colleges. Opportunity to provide leadership and role model for motivated young men. B.A. and experience in education desirable. In lieu of salary and benefits, position provides private apartment and board within students' Amherst residence. Applicants with families are encouraged. Send resume and 3 letters of reference by April 7 to: Search Committee, Amherst, ABC, Box 1922, Station 2, Amherst, MA 01002. Email: mail@amherstabetterchance.org

EMPLOYMENT

Fall 2006 Internships with the Student Legal Services Office. Get hands on experience in the legal field. Work directly with attorneys and clients. Earn 12 undergraduate credits. No experience necessary and training provided. Stop by the Student Legal Services Office at 922 Campus Center or call 545-1995

Bicycle Mechanic/ Sales Person needed in Northampton. Please call 584-1727. Ask for Bill.

Bartending $300/Day potential. No experience necessary. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 x162

Instructors/Performers P.T. for fun after-school programs, parties, and more. Experience managing groups of children. Love of kids, availability some afternoons. Theatrical experience helpful. Car required (413) 584-7243

EMPLOYMENT

Northampton Retail Store. Applications for full-time, part-time and summer employment now being accepted. Prior retail experience a plus, but not necessary. Must be reliable, energetic and have good math and social skills. Depending upon position available, weekend and/or evening work may be involved. Generous employee discount. Call 413-052-2164 between 8:00am and 9:00pm

Counter Help part time year round position must be fast, friendly, and extremely reliable. Apply in person at the Woodstar Cafe 60 Masonic St. North Hampton

Summer Lifeguards, Managers, Camp Counselors, and Director positions open! Greenfield Recreation, 25 min. from Amherst. Apply now. Call (413) 772-1553.

EMPLOYMENT

Rent us your Ears! Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language. Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu Voicemail: 545-0837

HOUSE FOR RENT

Hadley, close to UMass 5 Bedroom home large yard. Oil heat. Sept occupancy 549-4270

SERVICES

PREGNANCY TESTING, HIV TESTING, Birth control, and Emergency Contraception. STI Screening and Treatment. Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992

Pentium Color laptops $99 We type term papers, resumes, cover letters. 413-584-8857

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS TUESDAY

TUESDAY, APRIL 4, 2006 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Counting on the young guns

By JON PELLAND
COLLEGIAN STAFF

After a disappointing 2005 season in which the Massachusetts baseball team relied heavily on just a few pitchers, UMass coach Mike Stone believed it was time to revamp his staff. In hopes of adding depth and balance, Stone brought in five freshman hurlers in time for the 2006 campaign.

Today against Holy Cross (9-11-1, 0-4 Patriot League), Stone will be sending one of those young guns, freshman Ryan Walczak, to the mound to take on the Crusaders. The game is the last in the Minutemen's 17-game road trip and the first pitch is scheduled for 3 p.m. in Worcester.

All five rookies have been contributing thus far this season with four of them appearing in at least one game for the Minutemen (3-13, 1-5 Atlantic 10); Mitchell Eilenberg is the low man with just one appearance.

The young guns have combined to pitch 46.1 innings this spring, many of those coming in relief. Including Walczak's start today, just he and Tom Cote (two games started) have begun games on the mound for UMass.

Stone's main man out of the bullpen has been Mike Dicato. The rookie has quickly become the primary middle reliever for the Maroon and White. Not only is his 1.88 ERA the best among his classmates, but it is good for tops on the club.

"Dicato has given us some good innings," Stone said. His team-high seven appearances have led to his 14.1 innings, second most among the freshman. Dicato has also given up just three earned runs this season. That number ties him for the second fewest on the team with along with fellow freshman Al Jardine.

When he toes the rubber today it will be the first time Walczak has started a collegiate game. So far Stone has used him primarily in relief, making five appearances out of the bullpen. His last appearance came a week ago when he pitched five innings against Sacred Heart. Over that span he only surrendered two runs to the Pioneers.

Walczak's 'Achilles' heel this season has been suspect

JEFF KNIGHT/MASS MEDIA ASSOCIATES

Senior outfielder Derrick Durepo has scored seven runs and driven in six runs this season. The Minutemen travel to Worcester to play Holy Cross today at 3 p.m.

See BASEBALL on page 12

Minutewomen easily take down Temple

By JOSHUA M. FRIEDMAN
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

The Massachusetts tennis team (7-6, 2-0 Atlantic 10) easily handled its second straight league opponent on Sunday, beating Temple by a score of 6-1. The beautiful weather afforded the Minutewomen a rare opportunity to play at home, albeit on the courts at Mt. Holyoke College.

Before Sunday's match, it had been over a month since the Minutewomen faced an opponent in a home contest. The match proved to be much more eventful than the lopsided score indicates. Between a forfeited doubles match by Temple, a "super tie-breaker" and numerous scoring disputes, the final victory was anything but routine.

After the forfeited doubles match by Temple, which was due to not having enough players, the Minutewomen only needed to win one out of the remaining two matches to capture the doubles point.

Junior Michele Spiess and sophomore Masha Pozar won a hard-fought 8-6 victory at court No. 1. After opening up a 3-0 lead, Temple came back with four straight points to pull ahead 4-3. Trailing 6-5 and in danger of losing the crucial doubles point, Spiess and Pozar swept the rest of the points to seal the 8-6 victory, and improve to 13-0 as doubles partners.

In the singles matches, senior Susan Johnson and Spiess both won in straight sets. Johnson won her match at third singles quickly, dispatching her opponent 6-1, 6-1. At second singles, Spiess put the Minutewomen up 3-0 on the day, defeating her opponent 6-2, 6-0, and improving to a team-best 18-3 on the season.

After a scoring dispute between players and a subsequent replayed point at court No. 4, senior Dorothy Iwanowicz rebounded from a first set loss to win a grueling two-hour long match with a "super tie-breaker" win.

In their first two Atlantic-10 matches the Minutewomen have gone 2-0, winning by a combined score of 13-1. They will look to continue their winning ways when the travel to the Bronx to face the Fordham Rams today where their record is 8-1 all-time. Fordham is 6-2 on the season and has started the spring schedule a perfect 4-0. Fordham is coming off of a sound and convincing victory at Fairfield University on Sunday.

Led by freshman standout Dominique Liguori and sophomore Ellenoira Featherston, Fordham blanked Fairfield 7-0, winning all six singles matches in straight sets. Liguori was previously awarded the Atlantic-10 Women's Tennis Rookie of the Week, and advanced to the ITA Quarterfinals in October.

UMass off to a running start

By DOMINIC POLI
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Massachusetts track and field teams got the 2006 outdoor season got off to a running start at the Southern Connecticut Invitational on Saturday. The men placed eighth out of 13 scoring teams, while the Minutewomen finished sixth out of 11.

Though UMass coach Ken O'Brien said the men's team had plenty of fine performances, the only event-winner was junior Erik Hoagland in the long jump.

Hoagland recorded a mark of 23 feet, 2.75 inches to beat the runner-up, freshman Arman Dixon of Sacred Heart, by over a foot. The win gave UMass 10 points.

With the exception of situations where two people tie for a spot, athletes are awarded a fixed amount of points depending on where they place in the top six – the winner gets 10, second place gets eight, third place receives six, fourth wins four, fifth takes two and sixth receives one point.

UMass' other scorer was freshmen Steve Gerome, who claimed fourth place with a jump of 21 feet, 6.25 inches.

O'Brien mentioned that freshman Dan Moriarty did a fine job in his first collegiate race in the 5,000 meters. Moriarty finished in 11th place with a time of 15:45.19.

"That was a real nice performance for a freshman in his first college outdoor race," O'Brien said.

Sophomore Mark Kenwood was the Maroon and White's other competitor in the 5,000 meters. He placed 14th with a time of 16:01.99.

O'Brien also paid homage to freshmen Kevin Ianetta, who placed ninth in the 110-meter hurdles, and sophomore Brandon London who took fourth in the high jump with a leap of 6 feet, 3.25 inches. London claimed four points for the Minutemen due to a tie for second place.

Sophomore shot-putter Sean Calicchio stayed home from the meet, nursing what O'Brien called a slight aggravation of his calf muscle.

While the Minutewomen lacked any event-winners, they still produced some fine performances.

Sophomore Christina DeRosa placed second in the 5,000 meters with a time of 17:40.25. She finished less than ten seconds behind her best time during the indoor season, which was 17:30.36.

Freshmen shot-putter Jordan Veney, who broke the UMass indoor record three times during the indoor season, took third in the shot put and the discus with tosses of 42 feet, 2.25 inches and 135 feet, 11 inches, respectively.

Another third place finisher was senior Elisabeth Budd in the 400-meter hurdles. Budd posted a time of 1:06.63.

Other finishers for the women's team were sophomore Kendra Leighton, junior Troyanah Evans, and freshman Christine MacMonegle Ukness.

Leighton came in eighth in the 400-meter dash with a time of 1:00.73.

Evans also took eighth place. She ran the 200-meter dash in 27.80 seconds. Evans also managed to walk away with a tenth place finish in the 100-meter dash, with a time of 13.48.

Ukness, in the first competition of her collegiate career, finished eighth out of twelve qualifiers with a throw of 100 feet, 1.0 inch.

UM crew team begins strong

By JOEY WHITE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Massachusetts women's rowing team won the Yankee Cup Saturday, beating three other New England state universities. With 29 points, the Minutewomen defeated Connecticut (19 points), New Hampshire (15) and Atlantic 10 foe Rhode Island (14).

"It was really encouraging," UMass coach Jim Dietz said. "[It was a] good day to start off racing season."

The Maroon and White won three out of the four events, which were the first varsity eight, the second varsity eight, the varsity four and the novice eight. Sophomore coxswain Dana Pulda led the first varsity eight boat to victory, almost four seconds ahead of second-place UConn with a time of 6:34.60. The Minutewomen also won the second varsity eight and the novice eight.

"All the crews did pretty well – looked strong," Dietz said.

After suffering a collision with the boat from UConn, the varsity four placed second just one second behind UNH with a time of 7:57.00.

"The girls in the boat came off feeling good about the race," Dietz said of the varsity four boat that included coxswain Molly Morgan and rowers Kristen Boyce, Jaime Dicke, Sara Weinstock and Karalyn Walk.

In the non-scoring events, UMass won the quad and finished second in the lightweight four, the second novice eight, the lightweight eight and the novice four races.

"We got to take home the hardware," Dietz said.

There was no points trophy handed out Sunday at Glen Island Park in Pelham, N.Y. where the Minutewomen finished only behind Columbia for a second-place finish out of four teams.

The Maroon and White raced for second-place in four races and a third-place finish in the other Colgate finished third on the day and Holy Cross was fourth. Columbia swept all five races with the closest race of the day being in the first varsity eight competition where Columbia, with a time of 6:45.8, beat UMass by only 1.2 seconds.

"It was a very exciting race in the [first] varsity eight," Dietz said. Dietz noted that his crew didn't get a good start and lost the race in the first ten strokes.

According to the most recent collegiate rowing polls (Mar. 29), Columbia ranks No. 20 among NCAA Division I Varsity Eights.

"For us to be that close feel like we'll have a pretty good season," Dietz said.

The Minutewomen also finished second in the varsity four, first in the novice eight and second in the novice eight. Their only third-place finish of the day was in the second varsity eight race behind Columbia and Colgate.

"This early in the year we're not rowing that high," Dietz said. "We have a lot of upside, potentially. As we sort things out for the A-10s we're looking stronger in preparing for the races."

Dietz added that after this weekend he feels more comfortable about his team's chances this year of winning its 11th straight Atlantic 10 title, as he compared George Washington's outcomes to his squad's times. Dietz considers GW the toughest competition for the league crown.

"Rutgers beat GW last week by a second," Dietz said. "Rutgers was beaten by Columbia by 16 seconds. So on paper we're better than GW, so overall it looks pretty good."

The Minutewomen will return to the water Saturday and Sunday in Camden, N.J. for the Knecht Cup, which they have won two years in a row.

Vintage Schilling in opener

By STEPHEN HAWKINS
ASSOCIATED PRESS

ARLINGTON, Texas – Curt Schilling looked a lot like his old self in his first opening day start in seven years. The debut of new Texas ace Kevin Millwood was a bust.

David Ortiz went 3-for-5 with a towering two-run home run and Boston captain Jason Varitek had a two-run double in the Red Sox's 7-3 victory over the Rangers yesterday. Boston won on opening day for the first time since 2000.

While the Red Sox had six different players in the starting lineup from opening day in 2005, they still used the same formula that has worked so well for them in recent years: big hits and solid pitching.

The Red Sox scored six runs with two outs. They got the first five runs off Millwood, the AL ERA champion who signed a $60 million, five-year deal with Texas after also being pursued by the Red Sox over the winter.

New Boston third baseman Mike Lowell led off the eighth with a home run. He had a career-low eight homers last season in Florida, and the Marlins made him and his $9 million salary part of a multiplayer deal that sent he and right-hander Josh Beckett to Boston.

New Red Sox center fielder Coco Crisp didn't take long to make a good impression either, with a nice running catch at the wall of Laynce Nix's sacrifice fly in the ninth. Crisp replaced the popular Johnny Damon, who left for the New York Yankees.

JEFF KNIGHT/MASS MEDIA ASSOCIATES

Red Sox pitcher Curt Schilling returned to form yesterday, allowing just two runs in a 7-3 opening day win over Texas on opening day.

Schilling struck out five and allowed two runs over seven innings, a 117-pitch outing. He walked one and allowed only one extra-base hit, a two-run homer by Hank Blalock in the sixth.

Schilling began last season the disabled list after surgery to repair a tendon in his right ankle. (Remember the bloody sock in the 2004 World Series?) Schilling bruised that ankle after coming back and went on the DL another two and a half months before returning as a closer. He went 8-8 with nine saves and a 5.69 ERA – more than two runs above his career mark.

While saying all spring that he felt good, Schilling knew he had to prove it on the mound. He got off to a good start, pitching a season opener for the first time since 1999 when he was

See SOX on page 12

Clemens meets with Sox brass

By STEPHEN HAWKINS
ASSOCIATED PRESS

ARLINGTON, Texas – Roger Clemens made it to opening day – as a spectator – and the seven-time Cy Young Award winner said he still is leaning toward retirement.

"That's where I am right now," Clemens said Monday before watching the Texas Rangers play the Boston Red Sox. "Obviously, it's opening day and I'm about to put a golf visor on and I'm going to enjoy a ballgame."

Wearing jeans and gray cowboy boots, Clemens attended as a guest of Rangers owner Tom Hicks, a fellow University of Texas alumnus. The Longhorns' national football championship was honored at the game.

Before the start, the 43-year-old Rocket spoke with to general manager Theo Epstein and other officials from the Red Sox, the team he started his career with. Clemens said they just told him the door was open if he wanted to return to Boston.

The Red Sox, Rangers, New York Yankees and Houston Astros – the hometown team Clemens helped lead to their first World Series last season – are all interested in signing Clemens if he decides to pitch this season.

"There's really nothing to talk about until Roger decides if he wants to play, and if so what team does he want to play for," said Clemens' agent, Randy Hendricks. "All four teams have a keen interest. No question they want to sign Roger."

Houston can't re-sign Clemens before May 1. It seems unlikely that the Clemens would pitch for anybody before that time any way.

Clemens pitched last month for the United States in the World Baseball Classic.

"The process was long and hard on me," Clemens said. "When everybody was out having a good time, I'm running trying to get my body ready."

Rangers general manager Jon Daniels called last week to inquire if Clemens was ready to pitch now. Adam Eaton, the No. 2 starter in Texas behind Kevin Millwood, strained a tendon in the middle finger of his pitching hand and is out up to three months.

Hicks planned to talk to Clemens during the game.

"I'm going to tell him I think our fans would really embrace him, tell him that I think he could take us deep in the playoffs and maybe to our first World Series ... come June, July, whenever he's ready to pitch," Hicks said.

Clemens plans to be in Houston on Tuesday night when the Astros honor the last year's NL championship team.

JEFF KNIGHT/MASS MEDIA ASSOCIATES

Roger Clemens met with Red Sox general manager Theo Epstein and other officials before the team's season opener yesterday in Texas.

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY · EST. 1890

The Daily Collegian

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 5, 2006 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM VOLUME CXVI ISSUE: 108

University Health Services given four-star award

By ANNA DOLIANITIS
COLLEGIAN STAFF

University Health Services (UHS) at the University of Massachusetts was declared a four-star health care institution by the Massachusetts Health Quality Partners (MHQP) in a survey released last month.

MHQP is an organization whose stated mission is to "provide reliable information to help physicians improve the quality of care they provide their patients and help consumers take an active role in making informed decisions about their healthcare."

"The MHQP survey sampled patients from 497 adult and pediatric practices with at least three physicians in the practice and at least 50 eligible patients. UHS was included because our organization met these criteria," said Bernette Melby, Executive Director of UHS. UMass Health Services was ranked above at least 85 percent of doctors' offices in the survey, according to last month's press release.

Some students are surprised by these results, as UHS has developed a reputation in recent years for having long wait times and providing hasty diagnoses. "I have recently heard of them misdiagnosing and endangering people by looking for a quick fix," said freshman Joshua Furst.

The survey addressed nine aspects of care, grouped into three categories: quality of doctor/patient interaction, organizational and structural features of care, and global rating. UHS received a four-star rating for its physicians and staff, three stars for continuity of care, and two stars for its wait times and appointment scheduling.

Sophomore Jenny Babino takes particular issue with these results, recalling an experience that she had with UHS during her freshman year. "I went to Health Services extremely ill and they sent me home with nothing, telling me that I just had a viral infection. I went home that weekend and ended up in the emergency room with full-fledged pneumonia."

Furst added, "I was impressed by their willingness to do blood tests so quickly, and I was a little appalled by how willing they were to give out painkillers so freely."

JEFF KNIGHT/MASS MEDIA ASSOCIATES

University of Massachusetts Health Services.

Melby responded to the claims that UHS is too crowded, too likely to look for quick solutions and too prone to immediately ordering blood work and prescribing medicine simply by saying, "Patients gave four-star ratings to the provider-related measures, indicating a very high level of satisfaction with the care they receive from UHS clinicians. These measures – communication, knowledge of the patient, integration of care and health promotion – are among the most important predictors of a positive experience with an organization."

Other students remember positive experiences at Health Services, and are not at all surprised by the findings of the MHQP survey. Sophomore Sean O'Connell said, "I have had some negative experiences there as far as long waits and vague diagnoses, but they were positive in that most doctors and staff were pretty helpful and at least try to be caring."

Babino, however, said of the staff, "They always seemed rushed and in a hurry, which makes me nervous when they are supposedly diagnosing me with something."

Sophomore Alicia Maher experienced long wait times also, and said, "There were usually a lot of people there and a huge wait, but they took me in as fast as they could."

UHS, which serves UMass students, faculty and staff, is open 24 hours a day, seven days a week. This past year, UHS logged 65,000 medical visits, 11,500 mental health visits and 71,000 tests, according to Melby. In order to avoid the long wait times that students often complain about, Melby said, "We encourage patients to make appointments for routine care by calling 577-5101," which usually ensures an appointment to be scheduled within four days. "Urgent Care treats people in the order they arrive, unless someone with a life-threatening condi-

See HEALTH on page 2

Transfers at UMass: The land of the lost

By NICOLE LEETE
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

Danielle Clark of Springfield stared in bewilderment at the resident assistant. She took the key to her new dorm room in Crampton Hall and walked away slowly; her heart was beating out of her chest. He had just told her she'd be living in a dorm that had 23 hours of mandatory quiet — she wasn't supposed to speak above a whisper.

Clark felt a slight feeling of deja vu from the year before when she had been a freshman moving into her dorm at the University of Massachusetts Dartmouth. Except now as a sophomore, she was expected to know what she was doing. And she was absolutely terrified.

Transfer students face many obstacles coming to the University of Massachusetts Amherst. Social, housing and transfer credit problems are exacerbated — some say by lack of guidance on the part of the University. One-third of all incoming students each year — well over 1,000 — are transfers, including a large number of heavily recruited community college students. Though they are a large percentage, many transfers get lost in the oversized labyrinth that is UMass.

Clark requested to live in Southwest two months prior to moving in, not because she was late — but because transfers get last pick, even after freshmen. Due to a housing crunch, her new home was a graduate dorm with 23 hours of mandatory quiet.

"I was scared enough moving in that day, starting all over," Clark said. "I was upset because I knew as a transfer it would be hard enough meeting people, let alone in a dorm that you can't even talk above a whisper."

Clark eventually did make friends – fellow transfers – in the dorm. As a result of living in Crampton, her friends are almost all transfer students.

"I've found that freshman year is the year you make the majority of your friends," Clark said. "That's how it was at UMass Dartmouth. So when I came here sophomore year, I felt out of the loop."

Many transfers from smaller schools are overwhelmed by the 300-person lecture halls, long lines at the Bursar's office and the confusing, frustrating SPIRE registration system. They learn the hard way that there is no one there to hold their hands.

Lindsay Buffoli, 20, a transfer from Monmouth University in New Jersey, said that whenever she ran into problems with her transcripts or bills that had to be paid, she hit a lot of dead ends. She would be sent one direction only to be directed to another building or office.

"I wouldn't know I had to do something, like once I had to talk to someone about a bill," she said. "It would be such a hassle and I'd think, no one told me to do that."

Buffoli was used to her old school of 4,000 students, with counselors who were always available.

Hassles are common with all students at such a large university, but one problem in particular that transfer students face is transferring credits from their previous schools.

Courtney Proctor, 21, from Lunenberg, was biology major at Clark University in Worcester. After her freshman year, she decided to pursue nursing. One problem: Clark didn't have nursing.

Proctor applied to UMass because it was cheaper to pay in-state tuition and she heard they had a good nursing program. She got into the University, but not the nursing program.

"They told me I had to fulfill all these general requirements, regardless of my credits from Clark," Proctor said. "Many of them wouldn't transfer over."

The transfer credit office determined that the course descriptions from Clark did not match those of similar classes at UMass, therefore she would not receive credit for some general education requirements.

"I'm going to be here an extra year," Proctor said. "That's more money my family really didn't expect to pay."

Transfers from community colleges can transfer credits over more easily than those from private institutions.

Hayley Nickerson, 21, earned her associate's degree at Cape Cod Community College (CCCC) through the UMass Joint Admissions Program. Nickerson was finished with her general education requirements (a process that traditional students sometimes don't complete until their senior year). All of her credits transferred over.

Participants in the Joint Admissions Program get top priority in the admissions process, according to the Office of Undergraduate Admissions. Of the 1,067 transfer students that enrolled in fall of 2005, 281 came from the Joint Admissions Program, according to an annual report from the Office of Institutional Research at UMass.

"All I had to do was basically pick a major ... it was really easy," Nickerson said. "I saved the equivalent of a semester at UMass, because at CCCC it was only $2,000 a semester."

UMass doesn't only happily accept community college transfers – they recruit them. The main recruiter for transfer students at UMass is Terri Labine, the senior assistant director of undergraduate admissions.

"I do my recruiting mainly in February, March, and half of April," Labine said. "I'm never in my

See TRANSFER on page 5

Johnston's defense enters insanity plea

By BRENDAN HALL
COLLEGIAN STAFF

NORTHAMPTON – From the moment he was seated at 9 a.m. until the judge called it a day at roughly 4:30 p.m., the look on Bryan Johnston's face remained the same, reflecting the weather looming outside of Hampshire Superior Court — cold, blank and lifeless.

After weeks of delay, the trial for Johnston, 24, the Westfield man accused of murdering a University of Massachusetts student in December of 2004, finally got underway yesterday morning, starting with opening statements and the prosecution presenting its first set of witness testimonies.

Johnston entered an insanity plea in the accused murder of former high school classmate and friend David "Sully" Sullivan during a court hearing on March 6. He is also being charged with two counts of possession of a large capacity firearm and one count of armed robbery. The two were both seniors in college — Johnston at Westfield State College, Sullivan at UMass — whom friends say went in opposite paths following graduation from Wahconah Regional High School in 2000.

The state of Johnston's mental health was the focus of defense attorney Alexander Nappan's opening statement.

"Did Bryan Johnston kill David Sullivan? That's no surprise, yes he did," an emphatic Nappan told a 16-member jury yesterday morning. "Twenty-six bullets in an assault rifle, shot the man six times at point-blank range, there's no question. My suggestion is to find out why. Why, is what we are going to decide over the next two weeks. You are going to learn just what mental illness is. Mental illness is like a hand that squeezes the mind — not the brain, but the mind. When your mind is squeezed hard enough, people notice because you begin to say and do bizarre things."

Nappan cited a change in Johnston's mental health once he enrolled at the University of Hawaii, where he "began to hear voices coming out of the walls," he said. The voices, he went on to say, had a threatening tone to them, and continued to evolve until one day it became so unbearable that he took the first flight from Honolulu back to Hartford.

Johnston then went on to take up an "arsenal" of guns, using his Firearms Identification Card, out of thoughts of feeling "threatened." It was also during this time that the friendship between Johnston and Sullivan began to turn sour, culminating with a physical confrontation at a wedding in the summer of 2004.

His feelings of paranoia came to a crash and burn when he arrived at Sullivan's unlocked apartment at 105 Meadow Street in Amherst and shot him six times with a .223 assault rifle while at his desk, in his bedroom, killing him. Allegedly, Johnston became angry when Sullivan ignored a cell phone call from him around 10:30 p.m., asking if he wanted to go out and have a few drinks.

"It wasn't rejection that pushed him to pick up the assault rifle," Nappan said, "but the fear that if he tried to make peace, he wouldn't be able to make that peace."

The speculation that Johnston may have been going through "steroid withdrawals" at the time of the murder was not addressed by either Nappan or prosecutor Renee Sleese.

Sleese's opening statement, however, was more cut and dry. She explained the series of events leading up to the murder of Sullivan and the moments afterward. Roughly 18 minutes after the murder, Johnston's Lincoln Continental was found stuck on a log used to barricade the parking lot of Aqua Vitae, an Italian restaurant on Route 9 in Hadley, with traces of blood on his clothes and in the interior of his

See TRIAL on page 3

Iran says it can handle invasion

By ALI AKBAR DAREINI
ASSOCIATED PRESS

TEHRAN, Iran – A top Iranian military official said Tuesday the country can now defend itself against any invasion originating from outside the region – a clear reference to the United States — as it tested a second new radar-avoiding missile.

The new surface-to-sea missile is equipped with remote-control and searching systems, state-run television reported. It said the new missile, called Kowsar after the name of a river in paradise, was a medium-range weapon that Iran had the capability to mass-produce.

It also asserted that the Kowsar's guidance system could not be scrambled, and it had been designed to sink ships.

Shortly after the test, the chief of the elite Revolutionary Guards, Gen. Yahya Rahim Safavi, warned that Iran was now able to "confront any extra-regional invasion," referring to the United States without mentioning it by name.

"The missile command of the Guards' naval force ... via positioning various types of surface-to-sea missiles, is able, while defending the coastlines and islands, to confront any extra-territorial invasion," the official Islamic Republic News Agency quoted Safavi as saying.

Safavi also called for foreign forces to leave the region. The U.S. 5th Fleet is based in Bahrain, from where it patrols the Gulf.

"Iran wants durable peace in the Persian Gulf and it can't be achieved without foreign forces and those which invaded Iraq leaving [the region]," IRNA quoted Safavi as saying.

On Friday, the country tested the Fajr-3, a missile that it said can avoid radars and hit several targets simultaneously using multiple warheads. Iran also has tested what it calls two new torpedoes.

See IRAN on page 2

French protestors clash with police in Paris

By CHRISTINA BARON
COLLEGIAN STAFF

PARIS – Hundreds of thousands of strikers marched through Paris today in continued protest of the CPE (First Employment Contract).

Groups from French high schools and universities and their supporters marched from Place de la Republique to Place d'Italie carrying signs that called for the appeal of a labor contract for new employees that was signed into law Sunday by President Chirac.

The protestors chanted, "Resistance" and "Ni CPE Ni CNE" ("No CPE, No CNE [the most recent version of the labor law]").

Strikers also waved signs and passed out flyers that read "Chirac, Villepin [the Prime Minister], and Sarkozy [the Interior Minister], your time is up."

According to French newspaper Le Monde, over 3 million people throughout the country mobilized for today's general strike. The Interior Ministry counted 84,000 people in the streets of Paris, about 10,000 less than last Tuesday's strike.

The demonstrators left Place de la Rebulique around 2:30 p.m. and arrived in Place d'Italie at 4:30 p.m. without any serious incidents, said Le Monde.

Public transportation functioned with few interruptions. According to RATP (Paris Transport Company) officials, 90 percent of the metro lines were working without problems and all bus lines were running, but with fewer buses.

However, many main boulevards, including Boulevard du Temple, Place de la Bastille and Place d'Italie, were shut down, interfering with two major train stations in Paris: Gare de Lyon and Gare d'Austerlitz.

The U.S. embassy issued a warning yesterday to all travelers abroad to "avoid areas where unrest has occurred, move quickly away from any concentrations

See PARIS on page 4

Youths stand behind a fire after a demonstration in Rennes, western France, Tuesday, April 4. Hundreds of thousands of protestors marched through cities around France to demand the repeal of the job law, CPE.

ARTS & LIVING

"WHY WE FIGHT"

Jareckí's documentary turns political heads.

PAGE 8

EDITORIAL/OPINION

INTERNET AND NETWORK JUNKIES

Myspace and Facebook continue to control our lives.

PAGE 6

WEATHER

TODAY
High 41
Rain/snow showers

TONIGHT
Low 29
Partly cloudy

TOMORROW
High 52
Low 38
Partly cloudy windy

SPORTS

'BILLY THE KID' HITS STRIDE

Donovan enters field of elite coaches.

PAGE 14

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3469 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Michael A. Busack
MANAGING EDITOR Eric Athas
BUSINESS MANAGER Nathan Chomsky
PRODUCTION MANAGER Nicholas Belanger
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Kate Huston
ADVERTISING MANAGER Kerrys O'Grady
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Lauren Egavian
EDITORIAL PRODUCTION Amanda Allen
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Ian Jones
COMICS EDITOR Amanda Allen
EDITORIAL EDITOR Kristen LaCasse
NEWS EDITOR Dan O'Brien
SPORTS EDITOR Jeff Howe
CIRCULATION MANAGER Thomas Hecht
DISTRIBUTION MANAGER Nick Gleason
FINANCE MANAGER Daniel Gwin
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Caren Tortorici
ASSISTANT BUSINESS Phil Smoller
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Morgan-Ann Rousseau
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Alex Butler
ASSISTANT NEWS Megan Daley
ASSISTANT NEWS Matt Bellveau
ASSISTANT SPORTS Dan Duggan
ASSISTANT SPORTS Rob Greenfield
ASSISTANT EDITORIAL Tucker Merrick

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS AGGIE LIFE, BECAME THE COLLEGE SPIRAL IN 1901, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914 AND THE TRI-WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1936. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967, THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN BROADSHEET SINCE JANUARY 1994. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL WEEKDAYS BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 3:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Ian Jones

COPY EDITOR
Meghan Murphy

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Ginny Nielsen

PRODUCTION STAFF
Chris Martin, Sean Duram

Analysts say missiles were Russian-built

IRAN from page 1

The second torpedo, unveiled Monday, was tested in the Straits of Hormuz, the narrow entrance to the Gulf that is a vital corridor for oil supplies. That seemed to be a clear warning to the United States that Iran believes it has the capability to disable oil tankers moving through the Gulf.

The Revolutionary Guards, the elite branch of Iran's military, have been holding their maneuvers — code-named the "Great Prophet" — since Friday, touting what they call domestically built technological advances in their armed forces.

But some military analysts in Moscow said it appears the high-speed torpedoes likely were Russian-built weapons that may have been acquired from China or the former Soviet republic of Kyrgyzstan.

Others have questioned just how radar-evading the missiles are. Iran's radars are not as advanced as those of Israel, for example — meaning that perhaps the new weapons can avoid Iran's radar but not more advanced types.

The United States said Monday after the second torpedo test — that while Iran may have made "some strides" in its military, it likely is exaggerating its capabilities.

"We know that the Iranians are always trying to improve their weapons system by both foreign and indigenous measures," Pentagon spokesman Bryan Whitman said in Washington. "It's possible that they are increasing their capability and making strides in radar-absorbing materials and technology."

But "the Iranians have also been known to boast and exaggerate their statements about greater technical and tactical capabilities," he said.

It has not been possible to verify Iran's claims for the new armaments. But the country has made clear it aims to send a message of strength to the United States amid heightened tensions over its nuclear program.

The U.N. Security Council has demanded Iran give up uranium enrichment, a crucial part of the nuclear process. Washington is pressing for sanctions if Tehran continues its refusal to do so, though U.S. officials have not ruled out military action as an eventual option, insisting they will not allow Iran to gain a nuclear arsenal.

In Russia, a Kremlin-allied lawmaker on Tuesday criticized the recent torpedo and missile tests as a counterproductive show of might at a time when it should be trying to allay fears that it is trying to build a nuclear weapon.

"It is clear that Iran is demonstrating its muscle in order to forestall any discussions of a possible operation using force against Iran," Konstantin Kosachev, the head of the parliamentary foreign affairs committee, was quoted as saying according to the RIA Novosti news agency.

Students voice their concern over private insurance plans

HEALTH from page 1

tion comes in." The longest waits are in the afternoon and evenings before noon, waits are usually shorter, she added.

Babino commented on the superiority of her visits for which she made appointments as opposed to her visits to Urgent Care, and said, "I have had good experiences when I have had an appointment, caring doctors, not having to wait ... it's much better than the quick care where you have to wait an hour in the waiting room, then you finally get a room and you wait there for another 45 minutes. Then the doctor finally comes in and the visit lasts 10 minutes tops ... not too efficient."

Students also complain that UHS is not supportive in regard to accepting private insurance plans. "Even after they got my insurance information, I received a bill for over 150 dollars, while at my primary care doctor it would have been a 15 dollar co-pay," Furst said.

"Even before the survey data was released, UHS was pilot-testing changes to improve provider availability," said Melby, "Patient experiences are one of the most important tools we have to measure quality of care."

New England ranks lowest in national job growth, say feds

By Mark Jewell
AP Business Writer

BOSTON — New England gained jobs at a slower pace than any region in the nation in the fourth quarter of 2005, the federal government's insurer of bank deposits said Tuesday.

New England fared better by some other measures, with rankings near the middle of the pack in unemployment and home price growth, according to a report by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp.

But the region's slide from eighth place to the ninth and final slot in jobs growth illustrated the slow pace of New England's recovery from the 2001 recession.

"It's certainly been a very slow recovery for New England over the last several years, and this new data is certainly consistent with that," said Michael Goodman, a University of Massachusetts economist and president of the New England Economic Partnership, a nonprofit forecasting organization.

The FDIC said New England posted job growth at a rate of .54 percent in the final three months of 2005, compared with .59 percent for the next-slowest region, East North Central, encompassing Illinois, Indiana, Michigan, Ohio and Wisconsin.

The nation's job growth rate was 1.44 percent, with the Mountain region posting the strongest performance at 4.08 percent.

New England fell to the bottom ranking in the fourth quarter, even though it gained jobs at a slightly faster rate than it had in the previous quarter. But the East North Central region showed stronger fourth-quarter improvement to move ahead of New England.

Ross Gittell, the New England Economic Partnership's regional forecast manager and a University of New Hampshire economist, attributed New England's poor fourth-quarter performance in part to heavy October rainfall that hurt fall foliage tourism, kept shoppers away from stores and hampered construction projects.

Over the longer term, regional job growth has remained slow because southern New England's high-technology employers are adding few jobs despite recent earnings gains and improving productivity, Goodman said.

Manufacturing job losses continue to hurt northern New England, he said, and all of New England has been hurt by slow population growth, or population declines in the cases of Massachusetts and Rhode Island.

Each of the region's six states ranked near the bottom nationally in job growth during the October-December period, with New Hampshire faring best at 40th, followed by Vermont (41), Connecticut (42), Rhode Island (44), Massachusetts (45) and Maine (48).

New England had the sixth-lowest unemployment in the fourth quarter among nine regions nationwide, with a regional average rate of 4.67 percent, compared with 4.93 percent for the nation. Rhode Island had the region's highest jobless rate at 5.1 percent, and New Hampshire the lowest at 3.5 percent.

Higher Education Act passes U.S. House with revisions

By Jamie VanGheest
Minnesota Daily (U. Minnesota)

MINNEAPOLIS — With a vote of 221 to 199, the U.S. House of Representatives voted Thursday to renew the Higher Education Act. This is the first time since 1998 there has been a large push from the government to renew the Higher Education Act, which is supposed to be renewed every five years, said John Engelen, director of federal relations for the University of Minnesota.

"The Higher Education Act is overdue and people are concerned about trying to get something passed," said Kris Wright, the university's financial aid director.

Some of the key provisions in the bill that passed through the House include providing year-round Pell Grants to low-income students and shortening the availability of the Pell Grant to 18 semesters.

The bill also would provide extra Pell Grant aid to high-achieving first- and second-year college students.

One of the changes made to the bill as it passed through the House included taking out a provision that would have required the U.S. Department of Education to be involved in the way public universities manage their finances.

Now universities will be able to continue to manage their finances within their respective states.

If the provision had not been taken out, it would have required the university to set up internal task forces and file reports to the U.S. Department of Education about financial dealings.

Engelen said the provision would have disrupted the relationship between the university and the Board of Regents, the Legislature and the governor.

One example Engelen gave was the recent proposal of a land-sale deal in Rosemount, Minn., that would cut the estimated student-stadium fee increase for an on-campus stadium from $50 per semester to $25 per semester.

If the provision had been left as part of the Higher Education Act, the university would have had to check with the Department of Education before the deal could have gone through, he said.

"It puts the federal government in the middle of a relationship we already have," Engelen said.

Another provision taken out that could have negatively affected the university was a proposal to change the formula for calculating financial aid, he said.

If the provision had passed, Minnesota would have received $11 million to $12 million less in financial aid, Engelen said.

"I don't see this as a positive bill for students," Wright said.

One issue in the Higher Education Act that Wright said was of concern is the call for an evening of statuses between universities.

"It undermines the integrity to the financial aid program" by blurring the distinction between trade schools and colleges, Wright said.

U.S. Rep. Betty McCollum, D-Minnesota, and a member of the House Committee on Education, said in a letter to the Daily, "We don't need to change the role the federal government plays in supporting higher education, but it should be enhanced and expanded."

Engelen said the bill is a hit-and-miss bill for students, but he sees more misses than hits in the bill's provisions, especially for the university.

life. death. freedom.

Jesus questions Nietzsche

Greg Ganssle, PhD

Thursday April, 6th • 7pm
124 Hasbrouck

sponsered by campus crusade for christ, focus, intervarsity, mercyhouse, and navigators.

The VERITAS FORUM

www.umasscru.com www.veritas.org

Relix Magazine's
"ARTISTS ON THE VERGE"

out of NYC

TURBINE

www.turbinemusic.com

free

EVERY THURSDAY at THE HARP

Happy March!

Delivery:
413.549.0077
Telephone:
413.256.8923
413.256.8924
Fax:
413.253.1173

Panda East
Fine Chinese & Japanese Cuisine

Featuring:
• Vegetarian Options
• Lunch Specials
• Sushi Bar
• "Light and Healthy" entrees

~We bring China Town to you~

Monday - Thursday: 11:30am - 10:00pm
Friday & Saturday: 11:00am - 11:00pm
Sunday: 12:00pm - 10:00pm

Visit us at: www.pandaeastamherst.com
103 North Pleasant Street Amherst, MA

Prosecution plays 911 tape following murder

TRIAL from page 1

car. He falsely told police he was a "special police officer" at Bay State Medical Center when they arrived, and later on was picked up by friend Gareth Mello. Allegedly, Johnston waved a gun and exclaimed how lucky he was that the police did not search him.

"You will hear evidence of Johnston's conduct, his state of mind, his potential motives," Steese told the jury. "It is critically important to consider the source, motives, biases ... against the other information you have.

"At the end of this trial I will come before you again and ask that you find him guilty of first degree murder. Please listen carefully. Thank you."

Following a quick recess, Stephen Kubicki, Sullivan's roommate at the time and the first to discover his dead body, was the first to take the stand. Kubicki said that he knew Johnston as a child from being on the same baseball team. After retiring to his room to watch the end of a Monday Night Football game, he said in cross-examination that he did not hear a car pull up or anyone come up the stairs to the second floor, where all three residents' rooms were located. Kubicki additionally reported that the gunshots sounded "like firecrackers" at first, and did not take notice until he smelled gun powder.

By then, Johnston had fled the scene, and Kubicki dialed 911.

Amherst Police Sergeant Jerry Millar was next to the stand. The audio recording of Kubicki's emotional 911 call was played in court during this time. Following the conclusion of the tape, Millar guided the prosecution through the steps of his clearing through the apartment, where he detected an "overwhelming" odor of gun powder in addition to a "two or three-foot smoke cloud."

A videotape of the crime scene, which fully displayed the body of Sullivan as it lay, was next shown during the questioning of Millar, followed by photographs outlining the dimensions of the apartment. There was no cross-examination of Millar.

Randy Baker, a snow plow driver who first found Johnston's Continental stuck and tried to help, was then called to the stand. He said Johnston claimed to have been drinking, and worried that he would be arrested by police for driving under the influence of alcohol.

Charles Thompson, the long-time owner of College Street Motors who towed the Continental, testified that Johnston insisted on being towed to Thompson's establishment rather than the Hadley Police Department — even though College Street Motors was further away.

Both Baker and Thompson noted that Johnston was polite but aggravated at what happened to his car, and that he didn't smell like alcohol.

Ron Condino, a security supervisor at Bay State Medical Center — where Johnston was a security guard — was the last to testify. Condino said Johnston was well-liked among everybody at the hospital, and was very reliable. But upon hearing that Johnston had been drinking and driving, and claiming a false position at Bay State, Condino said he yelled at him over cell phone repeatedly. Johnston, he said, was very apologetic, and asked him, "Can I come over and give you a hug?" to which Condino replied "No. Go to bed," and abruptly hung up.

According to the Hampshire Superior Court Clerk's Office, the jury is expected to take a tour of the crime scene at 105 Meadow St. this morning. Afterwards, testimony is expected to continue in the courtroom. The trial could last up to three weeks.

Study: children, men are getting fatter more often

By Mike Stobbe
Associated Press

More American children are getting fat, with more than one-third now overweight. More of their dads are getting heavy, too. But the percentage of women who are overweight seems to have peaked, leading some experts to wonder if the U.S. obesity epidemic may soon be leveling off.

Overall, larger proportions of the U.S. public are overweight than ever before, according to the government's most accurate recent check of the nation's girth. But women — who as a group are more obese — seem to be holding steady.

The study didn't examine why more men and children are getting fatter and women aren't. But some experts think the leveling off in women could signal a turning point in the nation's obesity epidemic.

"Women have always been more responsible about health than the general population," said Dr. William Dietz, of the U.S. Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, which reported the new data.

"I'd like to think this shows women are leading the way in recognizing obesity as a health threat," said Dietz, director of the CDC's Division of Nutrition and Physical Activity.

Another piece of research also suggests a turn. The NPD Group, a New York-based market research firm, found the percentage of overweight adults has held steady from 2002 to 2005.

"I would say it has leveled off. The bad news is we haven't found a way to lose weight," said Harry Balzer, vice president of NPD, which each year tracks what thousands of people eat and their self-reported height and weight.

The CDC report is being published in this week's Journal of the American Medical Association.

The findings come from the CDC's National Health and Nutrition Examination Survey, which collects data on a sample of about 5,000 people each year. The researchers clustered years together, presenting calculations for 1999-2000, 2001-2002 and 2003-2004.

The survey is considered the gold standard for obesity data — it's done through in-person examinations that include actual height and weight measurements.

That beats telephone surveys, in which men tend to overstate their height and heavy people underestimate weight, throwing off obesity calculations, said Cynthia Ogden, the study's lead author.

The study found the percentage of men who are overweight rose to 71 percent in 2003-2004, from 67 percent in 1999-2000. The obese percentage rose to 31 percent, from 27.5 percent.

For women, both the overweight and obese percentages held steady, at about 62 percent and 33 percent, respectively.

Why women held steady is not clear, but Balzer said it may have to do with a leveling of employment rates for women since the late 1990s. He also noted a leveling of the percentage of Americans who eat meals at home — home portions are considered healthier than what is eaten in restaurants.

For children, the percentage of boys, ages two to 19, who were seriously overweight, or obese, rose to more than 18 percent in 2003-2004, from 14 percent four years earlier. For girls, the percentage rose to 16 percent, from about 14 percent.

Stay up late and watch odd time

By Seth Borenstein
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Call it a coincidental sign of our digital times or a reason to stay up late and stare at the clock. Either way, early Wednesday morning the time and date will be 01-02-03-04-05-06.

At 1:02 a.m. and three seconds on Wednesday, April 5, 2006, it will be the first hour of the day, the second minute of the hour, the third second of that precious minute in the fourth month and the fifth day of ... uh oh. It's not really the sixth year.

It's actually 2006 — only in our shorthand is it '06.

"It just happens to be a chronological oddity," said Geoff Chester, spokesman for the U.S. Naval Observatory, an official world atomic clock timekeeper. "If you were to use the full year, that would screw things up completely. You do have to bend it a little if you want to make it work. That's what you call Triangle's Law of Bend It a."

Even numerologists, such as Rob Raguzzine, who runs the SimplyNumbers.com web site, dismiss the 1-2-3-4-5-6 moment as merely "a neat coincidence" because of that pesky 2006 thing.

"People are interested in numbers," said Jack Horkheimer, 67-year-old host of the Star Gazer public television show and executive director of the Miami Space Transit Planetarium. "Would I stay up all night waiting for it? Ten years ago, I would have had a party. Now, I will probably be deep in the arms of sleep."

There are less bleary-eyed alternatives. There's 1:02 p.m., but Horkheimer said that's really 13:02 p.m. and doesn't really count.

Chester recommends celebrating universal time, the standard scientific time, which is four hours ahead of eastern daylight time. So 01-02-03-04-05-06 can be celebrated at 9:02 p.m. EDT by calling up the U.S. Naval Observatory's "master clock" then and waiting for the universal time pronouncement, he said. That number is 202-762-1401.

The clock is also on the Web at http://tycho.usno.navy.mil/what1.html.

Online posts offer sex for room

By Dan Goodin
Associated Press

SAN FRANCISCO — In Atlanta, an online ad offers a room in exchange for "sex and light office duty." In Los Angeles, a one-bedroom pool house is free "to a girl that is skilled and willing." And in New York City, a $700-a-month room is available at a discount to a fit female willing to provide sex.

On the widely used Web site Craigslist.org, some landlords and apartment dwellers looking for roommates are offering to accept sex in lieu of rent.

"They have to be attractive. I don't let just anybody come into my house," said Mike, a man who answered the phone at the New York City listing but declined to give his last name — and refused to say whether he has, in fact, collected the rent under the sheets.

The offering of shelter for sex is older than, well, real estate itself.

But the online come-ons are franker than anything you might see in the newspaper classifieds, because they are not edited by Craigslist, and perhaps also because the anonymity of the Internet often causes people to shed their inhibitions.

Trading housing for sex is a form of prostitution. But the police aren't kicking down doors.

Paul J. Browne, a deputy police commissioner in New York, said investigators have found that the Craigslist ads are frequently "little more than a form of voyeurism that didn't result in an actual exchange of sex for rent."

Craigslist provides mostly free classifieds for apartments, used cars and just about everything else in more than 200 cities in 35 countries.

"I usually rent the room for 600, but if you are really ticklish and willing to trade being tickled for the extra rent then we have a deal," writes a gay man offering a $350-a-month room in the San Francisco Bay area.

An ad for a townhouse near Bradenton, Fla., seeks a "female that likes to be nude. Nothing more expected."

It is unclear how much success people have had with their rent-for-sex ads.

One man said he became friends with a bisexual man who answered his ad but did not end up taking the room. The same user said a man visiting from Russia answered his ad and they shared dinner and a bottle of wine, but that was it.

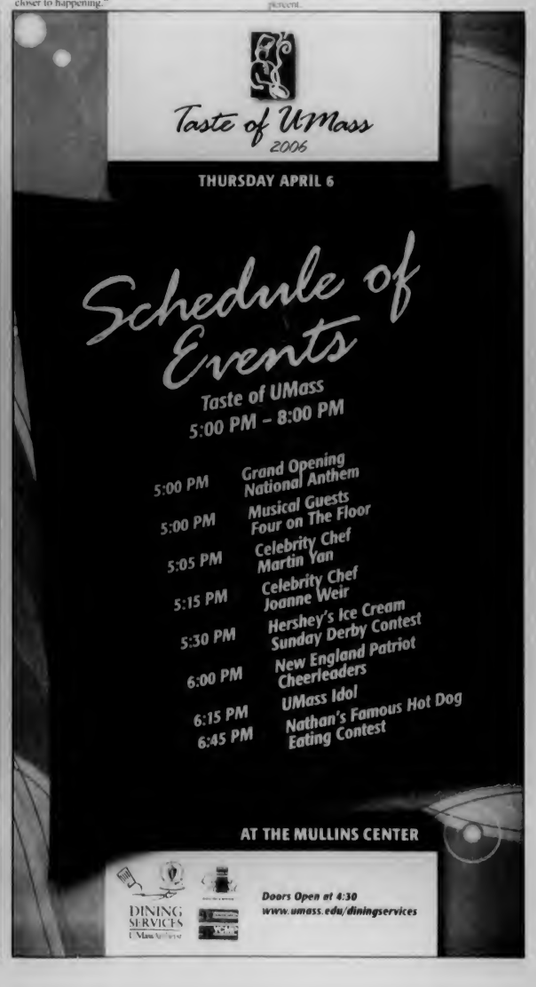
"This is only a silly sideline adventure of mine," the man, who would not give his name, wrote in an e-mail. "I feel a little embarrassed about it."

The Associated Press e-mailed more than two-dozen other people who placed ads, but most declined to be interviewed.

Jim Buckmaster, chief executive of San Francisco-based Craigslist, said the company forbids ads that break the law, but his staff of 19 could not possibly police all postings. Craigslist instead relies on users to flag ads they find offensive. If enough people agree, the ad is removed.

Tens of millions of users are a much more powerful force in examining the more than 3 million classified ads per month than any staff could be," Buckmaster said.

Mike, who offered the room in New York, said his ads are frequently flagged and removed, resulting in a cat-and-mouse game in which he puts them back up.



Tenants rights groups have accused Craigslist of skirting fair housing requirements. In February, a group called the Chicago Lawyers' Committee for Civil Rights Under Law sued the Web site for publishing housing ads that excluded people based on their race, religion and sex.

But legal experts say Craigslist is shielded by a 1996 federal law that protects online service providers that merely pass along unedited information provided by someone else.

And in most states, prostitution laws apply only if the ads are followed by e-mails, phone conversations or other acts that advance the proposition.

"The mere posting itself is absolutely not illegal," said Anthony Lowenstein, a defense lawyer in San Francisco, "unless the guy who posts it or the person who answers it does something that makes it a little closer to happening."

UMass students in the middle of Paris protests

PARIS from page 1

of demonstrators or police they may encounter, and exercise particular caution during evening and nighttime hours."

There are currently about 30 University of Massachusetts Amherst and University of Massachusetts Boston students studying in Paris. Their program director and the U.S. embassy is keeping them informed of the current situation and what areas to avoid and when.

Parisian students are entering a sixth week of strikes and protests and demonstrations are getting more violent. Many Parisian universities, including the prestigious Sorbonne, have not held classes since the end of February due to physical blockades at the universities and student strikers.

Some professors are optimistic that the strikes will end soon. Others fear that the semester will have to be cancelled and worry about future interaction between students for and against the CPE in their classes.

Chirac addressed the CPE crisis Friday night. In his national address, he validated the CPE, which allows patrons to fire new employees without explanation in their first year of employment. However, he also said that the law must be further discussed before it is formally implemented into policy.

On April 2, Chirac signed a revised version of the CPE into law.

The CPE was first proposed by Prime Minister Dominique de Villepin in mid-January as a way to stimulate hiring in order to ease the high unemployment rates in France that are becoming more of a concern.

In Le Journal du Dimanche, a weekly French newspaper, de Villepin said that he "profoundly regrets" not explaining the law to the public before pushing it through Parliament.

There have also been counter-demonstrations throughout Paris over the weekend, calling for an end to the student strikes and a return to normal daily life.

French protestors rally in hopes of a repeal of the new job law, CPE, Tuesday, April 4.

Schools adopt new lockdown drills

By Brian Bakst
Associated Press

BLOOMINGTON, Minn. — Melissa Galarneault's fourth-grade class at Indian Mounds Elementary had just started a math quiz when the alert came over the loudspeaker: "Attention staff, this is a lockdown."

The 20 children instantly dropped their pencils, sprang from their desks, scrambled to the front of the classroom and sat silently on the floor. Galarneault rushed to the doorway, dimmed the lights, scanned the hall for stragglers and pulled the locked door shut. She checked to make sure the blinds were drawn, and then joined the huddled youngsters until a coded, all-clear message was sounded over the intercom.

The entire episode lasted four minutes. This time, it was only a drill.

Across the country, many schools hold lockdown drills because of terrorism fears and school shootings like the Columbine High bloodbath in Colorado in 1999 that left 15 people dead. But Minnesota could apparently become the first state to require such exercises.

A proposal before the Minnesota Legislature would mandate at least five lockdown drills a year. To free up time, the number of required fire drills would be reduced from nine to five.

"There haven't been any kids killed in school fires in Minnesota because we've done a good job with fire safety equipment, with fire drills and so on," said Democratic state Sen. John Marty, a sponsor of the bill. "Unfortunately, times have changed in such a way that we have lots of other threats."

Last month offered a fresh reminder of the danger, with the first anniversary of a rampage at Red Lake High School in Minnesota that left a teacher, a security guard and six students dead, including the teenage gunman.

Lockdown drills are this generation's version of the duck-and-cover exercises held during the Cold War 1950s and '60s. Some states, including Arkansas and Connecticut, have laws encouraging — but not requiring — drills in case of a terrorist attack or other threat.

Backers of the Minnesota bill and groups that track education trends say they are not aware of any state laws that require lockdown drills.

Legislatures in Kentucky, Michigan, Ohio and South Dakota are among those weighing laws that would require schools to update safety plans periodically and practice them regularly.

Kenneth Trump, president of the Ohio-based National School Safety and Security Services, said he wishes all schools would be nearly as conscientious about mock lockdowns as they are about fire drills.

He said the exercises teach students and staff to respond instinctively to emergencies without panicking, and they allow the staff to identify weaknesses in the preparations.

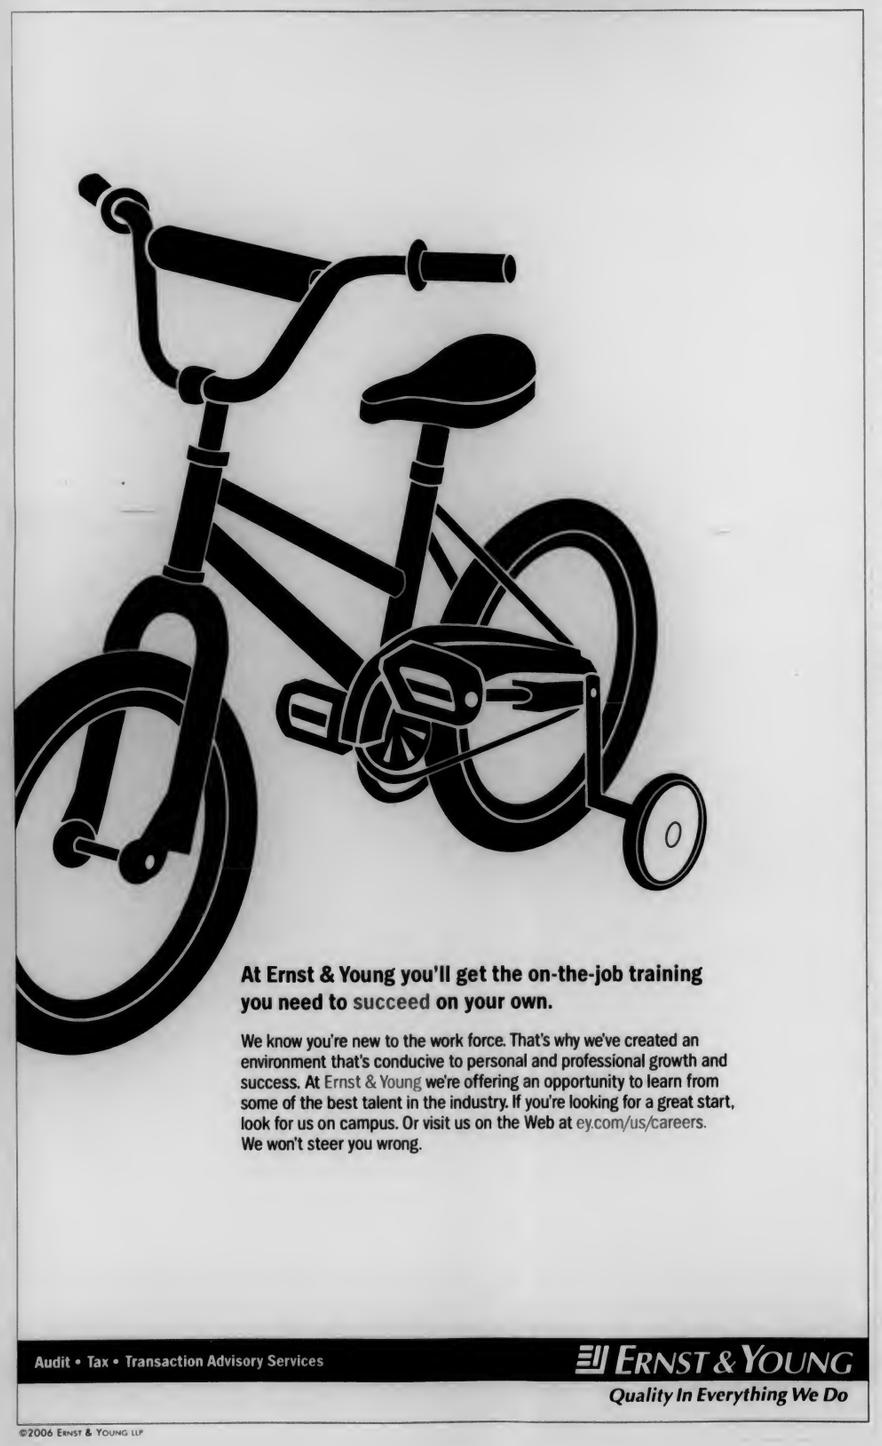
"The bottom line is that a plan that's sitting on a shelf in a fancy notebook collecting dust is worth little more than the paper it's printed on if it's not practiced," Trump said.

Deadly violence in the nation's schools is actually less prevalent now than in the 1990s, according to a 2005 government report. In the 1990s, the number of homicides per year was two dozen to three dozen; from 2000 and 2002, the number has been in the low to middle teens.

The Minnesota legislation has advanced through committees without protest. While observing the Red Lake anniversary, Gov. Tim Pawlenty threw his support behind it. The state fire marshal is neutral despite the reduction in fire drills.

In Michigan, fire agencies have come out against a lockdown drill plan because it allows schools to cut back on fire drills. The state's Association of Secondary School Principals has concerns of its own.

"You are actually teaching the robbers how to rob the bank," said executive director Jim Ballard. "Most violent crime within schools has been student against student. If you're teaching those students what you are going to do in your lockdown procedures, they basically know what's going to happen."



Minnesota state Republican Rep. Dean Urdahl said there are not many secrets to give away: "The plan is to lock the rooms."

Child development experts are split over whether the lockdown exercises subject children unnecessarily to stress and fear.

Ted Feinberg, assistant executive director of the National Association of School Psychologists, said he is not convinced the drills are harmful. But he said teachers and parents should discuss with children why they are done.

"We have to empower our children to not feel frightened about life but be prepared for it," Feinberg said.

In Bloomington, school leaders rehearse the plan monthly. The elementary school called a real lockdown last year when teachers heard gunfire outside. The commotion turned out to be a military ceremony at a senior center.

At Ernst & Young you'll get the on-the-job training you need to succeed on your own.

We know you're new to the work force. That's why we've created an environment that's conducive to personal and professional growth and success. At Ernst & Young we're offering an opportunity to learn from some of the best talent in the industry. If you're looking for a great start, look for us on campus. Or visit us on the Web at ey.com/us/careers. We won't steer you wrong.

Audit • Tax • Transaction Advisory Services

ERNST & YOUNG
Quality In Everything We Do

©2006 Ernst & Young LLP

Saddam accused of genocide in new charges

By Sameer N. Yacoub
Associated Press

BAGHDAD, Iraq — The Iraqi tribunal announced new criminal charges against Saddam Hussein and six others Tuesday, accusing them of genocide and crimes against humanity stemming from a 1980s crackdown against Kurds.

The move, tantamount to an indictment under the Iraqi legal system, paves the way for a second trial of the ousted ruler. Saddam already is being tried in the killings of more than 140 Shiites in a town north of Baghdad. Under Iraqi law, the second trial could begin anytime after 45 days.

Investigative judge Raid Juhi said the charges against Saddam and the others had been filed with another judge, who will review the evidence and order a trial date.

The new case involves Saddam's role in Operation Anfal, a three-phase move against Kurds in northern Iraq during the war with Iran in the late 1980s. Anfal included the March 16 gas attack on the village of Halabja in which 5,000 people, including women and children, died.

Human rights groups consider the Halabja attack one of the gravest atrocities allegedly committed by Saddam's regime.

However, Juhi told The Associated Press that the Halabja gas attack would be prosecuted separately and was not considered part of the charges filed Tuesday.

"These people were subjected to forced displacement and illegal detention involving thousands of civilians," Juhi said. "They were placed in different detention centers. The villages were destroyed and burned. Homes and houses of worshippers and buildings of civilians were leveled without reason or a military requirement."

Others accused in the Anfal case include Saddam's cousin, Ali Hassan Majid, or "Chemical Ali"; former Defense Minister Sultan Hashim Ahmad; former intelligence chief Saber Abdul Aziz al-Douri; former Republican Guard commander Hussein al-Tikriti; former Nineveh provincial Gov. Taher Tafwiq al-Ani; and former top military commander Farhan Mutlaq al-Jubouri.

Saddam and seven others have been on trial since Oct. 19 for the deaths of Shiite Muslims following a 1982 assassination attempt against him in the town of Dujail. Iraqi authorities chose to try Saddam separately for various alleged crimes rather than lump all the cases together.

The Dujail trial was the first of what Iraqi authorities say could be up to a dozen proceedings. Saddam could face death by hanging if convicted in the Dujail case.

It is unclear whether the sentence would be carried out while other trials were in progress.

In December, a Dutch court sentenced chemicals merchant Frans van Anraat to 15 years in prison for selling Saddam's regime the chemicals used in the gas attacks. The ruling, the first ever dealing with atrocities under Saddam, concluded that the attacks constituted genocide.

The court had no jurisdiction to try Saddam, but prosecutors named Saddam and "Chemical Ali" as co-conspirators. The Iraqi tribunal has access to several weeks of testimony and evidence presented in that trial.

One document was a government decree said to have been signed by Saddam on June 20, 1987, ordering "special artillery bombs to kill as many people as possible" in the Kurdish area. Special artillery, Dutch prosecutors said, meant chemical weapons.

"Chemical Ali" was heard in an April 21, 1988, audio clip ordering that people caught in Kurdish areas "have to be destroyed ... must have their heads shot off." In another radio fragment, he said: "I will attack them with chemical weapons and kill them all."

Former Iraqi President Saddam Hussein speaks at his trial in Baghdad. The Iraqi tribunal announced new criminal charges against Hussein and six other in a 1980s crackdown against the Kurds.

Congressmen still spend, despite issues

By Andrew Miga
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Massachusetts congressmen may lack serious challengers this election season, but they're finding plenty of ways to spend their campaign cash.

The lawmakers tapped their congressional re-election accounts for everything from flowers, ties and helicopter flights to meals and lodging at some of the nation's premier hotels and restaurants, according to their 2005 campaign spending reports.

Sen. Edward Kennedy, D-Mass., ran up a $4,190 tab at the Capitol's Senate Dining Room for various meetings and meals that he billed to his campaign. Kennedy has an $8.5 million war chest and no major opponent.

Running late for a campaign event in his district last fall, U.S. Rep. Martin Meehan hopped aboard a helicopter at Boston's Logan Airport. He billed his campaign $968 for the flight to Lowell.

"I was in a hurry to get back on a night when I was running late," Meehan said. "People were waiting for me to show up."

It's safe to say the cost of the flight barely made a dent in the Lowell Democrat's $4.9 million campaign war chest, the largest among the House's 435 members.

U.S. Rep. Stephen Lynch, D-South Boston, used campaign funds for his family's $343 stay at one of the poshest hotels in Washington, the Hay-Adams across from the White House.

Lynch's wife, daughter and niece were in town for a congressional family retreat. Lynch's studio apartment on Capitol Hill is "far too small to fit him and his family when they come to town," said Lynch spokesman Matt Ferraguto.

Lynch's campaign also paid $8,262 to lease an SUV, a GMC Envoy.

The lack of major challengers gives Massachusetts incumbents wider latitude in how they spend their campaign money. Four of the state's 10 House members had more than $1 million in cash on hand at year's end.

Federal laws on how candidates can spend their campaign cash are broadly written.

"In essence, anything campaign-related, they can spend their money on," said Kelly Huff, a Federal Election Commission spokeswoman. "Anything personal, they cannot. It is very broad."

Several Bay State congressmen bought gifts for supporters.

U.S. Rep. Richard Neal, D-Springfield, spent $6,875 on calendars at the U.S. Capitol Historical Society and another $567 for gifts at the House gift shop. Neal spokesman William Tranghese says he buys Christmas gifts each year for supporters and friends.

U.S. Rep. William Delahunt, whose district includes Cape Cod, is known for wearing ties emblazoned with Cape-shaped designs that he likes to give as gifts.

Delahunt, D-Quincy, billed his campaign $2,129 for the ties from Puritan of Cape Cod, a clothing store.

Flowers are popular with some lawmakers.

Lynch spent more than $5,000 on floral arrangements, much of it for Gold Star mothers and wives, Ferraguto said.

U.S. Rep. Michael Capuano, D-Somerville, billed his campaign $1,660 for funeral baskets.

U.S. Rep. James McGovern, D-Worcester, had a $2,479 tab at Frank's Flower Shop in Worcester.

Students complain of lack of guidence in transfer

TRANSFER from page 1

office."

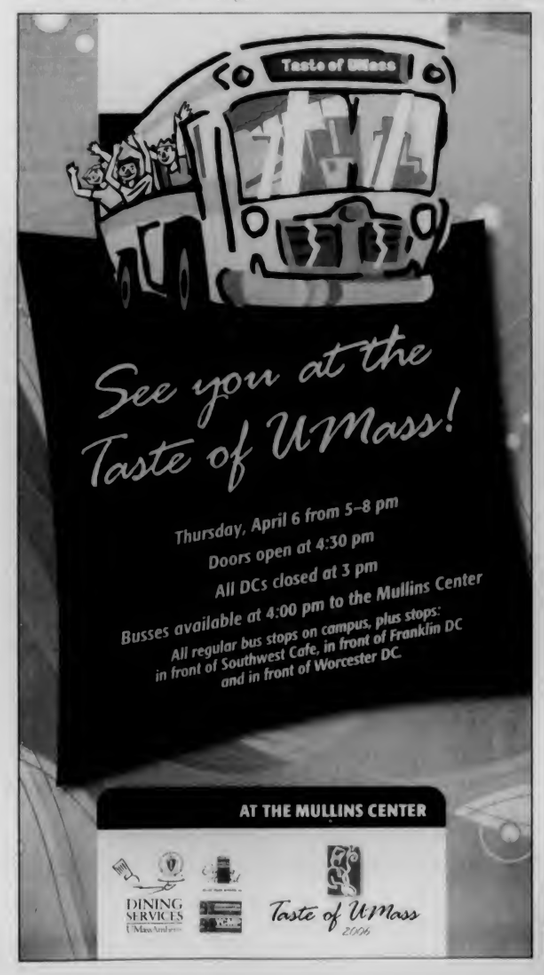
Labine travels to schools such as Holyoke Community College, Berkshire Community College and CCCC informing prospective transfers of programs like the Joint Admissions Program.

In March, UMass held a Community College Day to recruit women and minorities to the College of Engineering to diversify the campus. These efforts differ greatly from private, more selective universities.

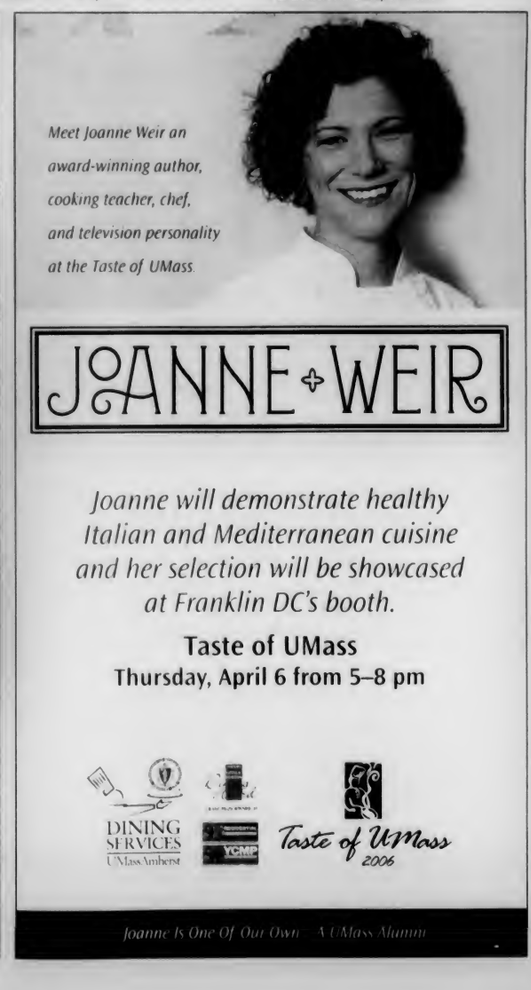
A Department of Education report by Clifford Adelman in the Chronicle of Higher Education said that selective colleges tend to overlook this pool of transfer applicants. They regard community college applicants as unsuccessful or too lazy to attend harder schools, not taking into account students who wanted to be close to home, pay less money and have smaller class sizes.

Melissa Govoni, 26, of West Springfield, attended Holyoke Community College for those very reasons. It was less money and closer to home. A bad car accident forced her to leave school, but she returned to UMass three years later in fall of 2005 through the Joint Admissions Program.

Govoni didn't have the smooth transition that Nickerson had from CCCC. She learned too late that if she had completed six more credits at HCC, she could have saved herself a whole semester at UMass. She blames bad advice — and lack of any advice at all — from counselors after she was accepted.



"My biggest issue is that there is no guidance in the transfer process," said Govoni. "They just tell you to sit down in front of a computer and make your schedule. It was tough figuring out what classes to take."



Govoni was told to take a certain level philosophy class for her minor, only to find out after she took it that she didn't need it.

Transfers from both private institutions to community colleges, all go through feelings of fear, frustration and anxiety. And despite the recruiting efforts to get some students to transfer, once they do, they're plopped on UMass's doorstep like abandoned children.

Govoni sits slightly hunched in her chair and smiles weakly. She looks as if she just figured something out.

"You know what?" she asked. "I actually finally feel like I'm getting into my groove here at this school. And you know what really sucks? I only have two months left."

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

EDITORIAL OPINION

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 5, 2006

"I may not agree with what you say but I will defend to the death your right to say it." -Voltaire

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

An addict finally comes clean

Nick Belanger

It was getting late and I was desperately trying to finish a paper for one of my 100-level Gen-Eds, and as a-backwards as this is, it's by far my hardest class. Anyway, there I am sitting in front of my computer reading through countless articles, meanwhile typing some horrible report, when all of a sudden, I find myself browsing for people who also like the movie "Groundhog Day."

I don't know how it happened. In fact, I believe I may have been in the middle of a sentence when I stopped typing and logged onto that Mecca of Internet insanity we all know as Facebook. Before long, I was writing on friends' walls, browsing photo albums and adding new friends.

I had no concept of time or space. I was trapped in a vortex of social networking with virtually no escape. With my paper due in only a few hours I began to panic, but I still couldn't stop. That's when the sweats began; to be specific, it was a cold sweat accompanied by a case of the chills.

Meanwhile, without restraint, I started to poke. Just as I began to break out in hysterical shakes, I passed out. The next thing I remember is waking up on the floor under my desk curled up in a little ball. I had hit rock-bottom and I knew I had to get help.

It turns out my Facebook addiction isn't that uncommon. In fact, millions of users nationwide are getting hooked on social networking. While Facebook consumes my Internet existence, even more poor souls are already lost to MySpace.

For those who are unfamiliar with online social networking, allow me to give a brief description. Users create profiles, upload photos, list information, provide detailed descriptions of their fears and weaknesses ... whatever; it's a huge index of personal information. Basically, these social networking sites are idiot-proof ways to stalk, but for those of us who aren't creepy old men, Facebook and MySpace are just another way to procrastinate while that research paper sits on the back burner.

Probably the most fun aspect of either of these sites is the photos. Users can upload unlimited numbers of pictures that go virtually uncensored, which is good. So now everyone can see how wicked hot you are. Now, I know I'm not saying anything new here, but I think the following really needs to be stressed.

You know that hot girl that just added you as a friend? Chances are she's not a 19-year-old undergrad at USC. She's probably your friend's 14-year-old sister. Gross, huh?

Guys, there is no better way to look like a massive douche bag than having an album full of shirtless pictures of yourself. Yup, congratulations on being buff, buddy, but no one cares. For the love of God, put your Polo shirt on, pop your collar and go back to being a regular douche bag. Oh, and don't forget to spike your hair.

Ladies, the eight million photos of you and your best girlfriends having a dorm party lead me to believe that the only thing that happens at your parties is constant photo taking. How in the course of a couple of hours can you possibly take that many pictures?

Maybe the only thing worse than your wine and cheese party pics are the shots of girls that should have the caption, "Oops my clothes fell off; don't I look sexy?" Those are the same pics that creepy old men are downloading all over the world. Congrats on being eye candy, ladies, and fulfilling Joe-no-shirt's dream.

Now as ridiculous as the Facebook photos have become, MySpace still takes the cake in terms of "wtf" pictures. At least Facebook is limited to the college community, but MySpace is a different beast altogether. You know that hot girl who just added you as a friend? Chances are she's not a 19-year-old undergrad at USC. She's probably your friend's 14-year-old sister. Gross, huh?

As ridiculous as Facebook and MySpace are, I still love them. I guess the first step to recovery is admitting to having a problem, and I can safely say I am an addict. In fact, I can no longer open an Internet browser without jumping right on Facebook.

I can't wait until the day I can get Facebook on my cell phone so I can poke fellow lovers of "partying and the Red Sox" on the go. Meanwhile I'll continue to wind up Facebooking (which is my new favorite verb) when my homework is lingering somewhere in the background.

Nick Belanger is a Collegian staff member

The problem of sexual disorientation

Chris Reardon

Straight people have no idea how hard it is to be gay. Normally a column starting like this would be all about how gay people have been oppressed over the years, and how even now they're struggling to be able to do something as simple as marrying the person they're in love with, but I'll leave that to my more politically, socially and culturally savvy counterparts. What I'm talking about is how hard it is for gay people to date.

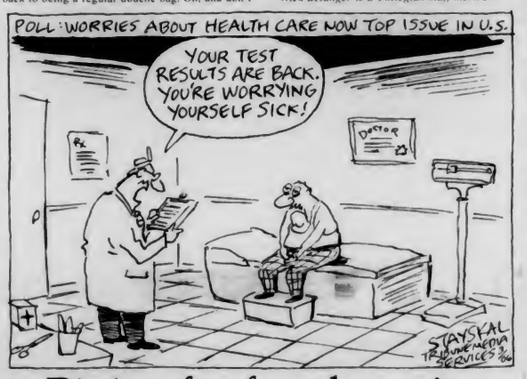
Homosexuals make up a small portion of the world to begin with, which automatically makes the dating process excruciatingly difficult. Now that straight men have taken up with this metrosexual fad, it's even more complicated; now it's so hard to tell between straight men and gay men that, in order to be noticed, some people feel like they have to act extra flamboyant.

Not every gay man is that effeminate, though. Some like sports, wearing neutral colors and comfortable jeans. The problem is that gay men who don't try extra hard to act gay may have trouble finding each other in the sea of straight men who don't try extra hard to act straight.

A metrosexual, as defined by wordspy.com, is "an urban male with a strong aesthetic sense who spends a great deal of time and money on his appearance and lifestyle." Or, in the cheekier terms put forth by Alexa Hackbarth of The Washington Post, a metrosexual "is a straight man who styles his hair using three different products (and actually calls them 'products'), loves clothes and the very act of shopping for them, and describes himself as sensitive and romantic. In other words, he is a man who seems stereotypically gay except when it comes to sexual orientation."

The movement, perpetuated by fashion marketing and media like "Queer Eye for the Straight Guy," has caused some trouble in the gay dating world. As Greg Tessitore, a University of Massachusetts freshman and admitted metrosexual, put it, "Guys talk to me more than women ... I feel like I'm throwing them off." Most of the men that Tessitore was referring to didn't know at the time of flirtation that he was straight, but there have been times when even his gay friends that know he's straight put the moves on him. According to Tessitore, those men must be thinking "I'm going to turn this guy gay."

With trends toward a world where all men, regardless of orientation, look and act as feminine as possible, what will become of the dating world?



This certainly could cause problems in a less tolerant straight man's life, but it definitely causes problems in the life of the average gay man. The fact is that metrosexual men make it harder for gay men to distinguish each other. Plus, they raise the standards of the gay population — leading some gay men to think that life among metros is a competition of style and beauty. That kind of competition would be OK if gays and metros were after the same thing, but of course they're not.

Gay men are interested in men; that's why they're gay. With trends toward a world where all men, regardless of orientation, look and act as feminine as possible, what will become of the dating world? Even women will be affected. "Being female, I feel that men should be burly, have hair and wear clothes that make them look manly, not like myself or my girlfriends," said 23-year-old Barrie Westreich, a UMass alumna. "I think it is important for men to be able to get in touch with their feminine side when with a woman, or for a woman's sake, but not on a daily basis in order to maintain looks. That's just weird."

Now, I'm not the kind of person who thinks there's anything wrong with caring about how you look, regardless of gender or sexual orientation, but when you take vanity too far, it becomes absurd and useless. Just take a look at Paris Hilton for proof of that.

The fact of the matter is that the metrosexual epidemic is affecting everyone, and it's time to put a stop to it. Otherwise, gay men are going to continue confusing the orientation of straight men, which is always an awkward situation. So straight guys, this is to you: if you don't want me hitting on you, then tone your flamboyance down a notch or two.

Chris Reardon is a Collegian columnist.

Pining for female parity

Bonnie Solomon

What does it mean to be a woman on campus? There are two general assumptions about women at the University of Massachusetts — they are either sluts who are in need of being laid, or they are smart, educated women who have a lot of potential at succeeding in life. I would like to dispel the former notion. Yes, on the UMass campus, there are many of these types of girls, but we only notice them so much because they are so omnipresent. But I would like to describe the ones that don't get so much attention. Those women are the ones who are our future.

She is the girl who always goes to class, is classy and studies. Though this sounds geeky, this is what college is all about. Is a girl a geek just because she cares about her classes and her future? Is she a geek or a social deviant just because she doesn't party every weekend? We have these notions in our head that a female college student can only be one or the other. Why do we believe this? The only way that women will achieve something in life is if we put a lot of effort in. Aren't we all at college to get an education? Why waste your parents' (and your own) money? We can be hot and still be smart.

Since we strive for far more than just being the hottest girl or being able to make out with the most guys, we'll make it farther in life. And we're hot.

This is a man's world, and even though this is also changing, there are more setbacks for women than there are for men. In the workforce, women have to work harder to achieve higher positions. Therefore, we have to work harder in college. I am one of these women. There are so many things I want to achieve in life, and as a woman, I know that I will have to work very hard to be at the top. The woman is always one step below the man, especially in the workforce.

There are so many women on campus whom if you ask them what they want to do with their lives, they will give some of the most amazing answers. They want to be artists, doctors, lawyers, politicians, CEOs, writers, teachers or even the president of the United States. The list goes on. These are the women that we should strive to be. One who actually achieves something in this world and changes the world for the better. This is not just a romantic view of the world, but it can be an actuality. These goals of ours might make you call us geeks because we actually do our work, but where are we geeks going to be in 10 years?

According to her biography on the White House Web site, Hillary Clinton was in the National Honor Society, went to Wellesley College and then went to Yale Law School. The only way that a woman can achieve all this is by working hard and striving for more than just mediocrity. Now Hillary Clinton is a candidate for the 2008 presidential election, and may just be the first female president of the United States.

I'm not saying that all the dumb Southwest types will not achieve something in life. I just want to support all those who the partiers view as geeky or antisocial. Since we strive for far more than just being the hottest girl or being able to make out with the most guys, we'll make it farther in life. And we're hot.

My next topic, sexism, is one that is highly debatable, but needs to be addressed. Why do men guys get more options in life? Why is it OK for them to be that jerky head of a company? Why do they get better salaries? Why do they have to sit with their legs open all the time and pick at their crotch?

Sorry to distract you; that was not my point. My point is, why do women get fewer opportunities in life? Are we expected to be sexy all the time and be submissive to men? Think about it. The first jobs for women were secretarial jobs because their voices worked better than men's when speaking on the phone. Why did employers fail to realize that women were good for these jobs because of their brains, not the tone of their voices?

Our civilization is now so advanced in technology and in our ways of living. How do we still have outdated notions for the roles of men and women? Why must women be Southwest blondes and not intelligent equals to men? I feel that if we realize that women are just as smart, and often smarter, than men, then the world would be a better place. Women could bring their wisdom and intellect to society and would come without an ego. So dispel others' notions of what a woman is. Image isn't everything, so take the current situation into your own hands.

Bonnie Solomon is a Collegian columnist.

Table of peace and justice

Kevin Dooley

This column is my first as an official Collegian editorial columnist. Please hold your applause until the end of the article. Since it is my first article as a columnist, though, it naturally meant I had nothing to write about. Of course I could always dive into the trusty bag of editorial topics. I could write a Bush-bashing article, but I figured there will be plenty of other opportunities do so in the near future. I have to say that writing about someone who can't walk in a straight line and chew a pretzel at the same time is quite depressing.

Maybe I could write about how everyone wastes their time watching reality television and reading the tabloids, but I suppose that's not a good idea, as I am watching Andrea Lowell from "Surreal Life" jump into a pool naked. It looked as though inspiration wouldn't be coming from our president or even Andrea Lowell. Instead, I would like for those who already haven't met her to meet Dade Singapuri.

I first met Dade when I was casually walking out of the bathroom in the Campus Center. That's where her table is located, right near the bathroom. Every Wednesday afternoon, Dade sets up her table, which has enough newspaper articles to last anyone a lifetime. She must have won a lifetime pass to the photocopy machine.

All kidding aside, however, the articles she has displayed on her table are reading material I don't have access to on a regular basis as I live my busy, everyday life, which includes pulling my hair out trying to figure out z-scores in statistics or the Doppler Effect in astronomy class. For about a month now, I've been visiting Dade and discussing everything from politics to just life in general. Most of our conversations begin with what's on my mind, and it usually starts with me telling her I have no idea for a column. I'm sure she gets tired of me telling her that after a while.

Dade provides an invaluable service for the University of Massachusetts. She doesn't have to be here every week. When you think of someone in their mid-70s (sorry Dade), you usually think of that person staying at home and being enthralled with a soap opera plotline or fantasizing about a heavy hook-up session with Bob Barker from "The Price is Right."

Not Dade, though, and even if she wanted to, she couldn't, since she hasn't turned her television on since 1982. I'll let the shock of that news sink in for about an hour and then you can proceed to read on. This article should have had a disclaimer about that.

Without a television, Dade is able to provide those who stop by her table with newspaper articles that report news that you won't find in the mainstream media. The articles cover political, social, economic and environmental issues that Dade feels we as students should be aware of.

When you think of someone in their mid-70s (sorry Dade), you usually think of that person staying at home and being enthralled with a soap opera plot line or fantasizing about a heavy hook-up session with Bob Barker form "The Price is Right."

I feel it would serve no purpose to make a laundry list of Dade's viewpoints. I'll leave you guessing and keep your curiosity piqued. The reason I do this is because of Dade's feelings on the table of "peace and justice," as she calls it. Dade welcomes everyone, those who agree with her and even those who don't, because Dade is not about hearing herself talk. That makes her the complete opposite of Bill O' Reilly, who wouldn't let his mom have the last word on her deathbed.

One of the unique things about Dade is her genuine interest in hearing what the students on campus have to think about everything going on in our world. Her time here is not to hear what she has to say, but instead gather what we students have to say. I must say that I don't agree with everything she has to say, but what I admire most about her is that she encourages discussion, thinking outside the box and looking at things from a different perspective than you normally would. She can be very opinionated about how she feels on certain issues, but it is only because she feels so strongly about them.

What is also so unique about Dade's table is the fact that she's not trying to sell you anything. Walk in the Campus Center and it seems like everyone wants money you don't have, from the jewelry tables, the iPod table and, of course, the University Store. Dade, however, is selling a wealth of knowledge and compassion for people.

One thing Dade does believe in is that society as a whole is too isolated from one another; therefore she encourages debate among people who come to her table. I don't want to divulge too much more into what Dade believes in because I think it would somehow lessen the experience of meeting and getting to know her. I'd like your experience with her to be as new and refreshing as it was for me the first time I met her. You'll be a better person for stopping by. I know I am.

Kevin Dooley is a Collegian columnist.

Ever thought about being a Collegian columnist?

We need you! Apply today! Send an e-mail to:

editorial@dailycollegian.com

Free higher education for all

Mishy Lieblum

This spring, Maxwell DeMilner — a 19-year-old from Maine — plans to ride his unicycle across New England. The reason? DeMilner attended Chester College during the 2004-2005 school year, but was forced to drop out due to the costs. In order to return to school, DeMilner hopes to raise funds by riding across the region on his unicycle.

Many of us have found other alternatives to pay our tuition and fees; two good friends of mine recently got married so they can file as independents and collect increased financial aid. Another friend quit his $6.75 an hour on-campus job to become a stripper out of financial need. Many of our parents simply take on two jobs to cover the college bills, while many of us take out more and more loans every year. We all know the stories.

These individual stopgap solutions are not enough. The crisis in college affordability is a political problem that requires a collective political response. In order to mount such a response, we need to understand where this crisis came from.

As public funds for higher education have been slashed, a corporate mentality of profitability has come to dominate the realm of public higher education. As a result, college chancellors have indifferently passed on the financial burden to students, while privileging moneymaking initiatives over the priorities of students, faculty and staff.

Without stable and sustainable funding sources for public higher education, the quality of our education is plummeting. University services are being corporatized, our fees are steadily rising and individual and campus-by-campus solutions to this financial crunch are becoming less and less effective.

Our predicament looks dire, and the prospects bleak. The options? We can acquiesce and take the hits alone, or — realizing we've got nothing to lose — we can put our best demand forward: make higher education free for all who qualify. No strings attached, no mounds of paperwork, no more FAFSAs. Just have the federal government put forth the resources necessary to provide a free, quality higher education to all qualified applicants.

What would it take to make public higher education free? The economics of it are surprisingly reasonable: According to the Labor Party's Free Higher Education Brochure, in 2001,

Will creating this sort of a movement be easy? Hell no. But at some point, we have to decide that making a public stink about the declining affordability of college beats working 80 hours a week, getting married for money at 19 or riding a unicycle across New England.

the cost of all tuition and fees for students in two- and four-year degree granting public institutes totaled $32 billion. If you take into account the increases in enrollment and costs over the past five years, let's assume it would cost roughly $70 billion today.

Compared to the $270 billion spent in Iraq so far, the $170 billion we've lost through corporate tax breaks in the first years of Bush's regime or the $50 million we'd lose through Bush's proposed rollback of the estate tax, $70 billion starts to look like a very manageable figure.

Call me an idealist, but increasing federal funding for higher education seems like the only true alternative to increasing the share of out-of-pocket and corporate funding.

Currently, most public funding for public higher education comes from state budgets, which fluctuate on a year-to-year basis with the whirlwind of market forces. In times of economic recession, states look toward education as one of their largest areas of expendable spending, and public schools' budgets get cut.

Yet federal funding sources are far more stable than state sources; while states have to balance their budgets on a yearly cycle, the feds can borrow money against their own ability to print more.

While federal spending currently accounts for less than 10 percent of all spending on education, if the continued vitality of our defense budget is any indicator of the comparative stability of federal funds over state funds, an increased federal investment in education seems long overdue.

Will this sort of an investment happen over night? Hell no; it will take a massive upheaval of angry parents, students and community members. Will creating this sort of a movement be easy? Hell no. But at some point, we have to decide that making a public stink about the declining affordability of college beats working 80 hours a week, getting married for money at 19 or riding a unicycle across New England.

We may not have a lot of options, but we do have at least two: we can let the public disinvestment in higher education slide by, or we can demand that the federal government make a significant investment in our nation's public colleges and universities. We can do this by calling for free higher education for all.

So this budget season, let's not let Massachusetts off the hook — let's get all the state funding we can get for UMass and for other public schools in Massachusetts. But let's also have the foresight to call for free public higher education, and let's take it to the next level. As they say, the best defense is a good offense.

Mishy Lieblum is a Collegian columnist.

Write letters to the editor!

Send them to: editorial@dailycollegian.com

Appreciate opportunity

Sanam Hakim

I am an Iranian Bahá'í woman attending an institute of higher education. Here in America, this is just a really dull way to start a column. Let's face it, at the end of the day, who cares? I'm just another face in a colorful crowd of American citizens.

Recently, the Special Rapporteur on Freedom of Religion or Belief, Asma Jahangir, expressed great concern for Iranian Bahá'ís in a press release posted last week by the United Nations. She reported that a letter was sent on Oct. 29, 2005 by the Chairman of the Command Headquarters of the Armed Forces in Iran to the Ministry of Information, the Revolutionary Guard and the Police Force, giving instructions from Supreme Leader Ayatollah Seyed Ali Khamenei to identify Iranian Bahá'ís and monitor their activities in a highly confidential manner.

Sadly, however, this is merely the most recent of over a century of persecution and oppression of the Bahá'ís in Iran.

The Bahá'í Faith is a religion founded on the principal of unity, delivering a message of peace. It is the second most widespread religion in the world, and there are approximately 300,000 Bahá'ís in Iran, making it the biggest religious minority in the country. Since its appearance in 1844, the Iranian government has done everything in its power to not only cripple the spread of the Bahá'í Faith, but to erase its practice and followers from history, beginning with its founders.

The Bahá'í Faith was originally introduced by the Báb (translated from Farsi as "the gate") in 1844, who announced that He was the Herald of a Messenger of God much greater than Himself. He was arrested, beaten, imprisoned and executed on July 9, 1850 by a firing squad of 750 rifles in Tabriz.

In 1853, Bahá'u'lláh, a follower of the Báb, proclaimed that He was the fulfillment of the Báb's prophecy and the prophet-founder of the Bahá'í Faith. Bahá'u'lláh was born into a wealthy and prestigious Iranian family, but spent most of His life imprisoned, tortured and in exile, and later died of natural causes on May 29, 1892.

Since that time, Bahá'ís have been systematically oppressed and persecuted by the fundamentalist Muslim clergy of Iran.

In the fall of 1982, Islamic Revolutionary authorities in Shiraz imprisoned hundreds of Bahá'ís, including women and teenage girls, because of their faith. For months, these prisoners were abused, interrogated and tortured as an attempt to force them to deny their religion. All of them refused.

Included in the prisoners were 10 female Bahá'í children's class teachers, who were sentenced to death by hanging on June 18, 1983. Mona Mahmudnizhad, the youngest of the 10, was only 16 years old. She was arrested at the same time as her father, who was killed for his faith only a few months before her.

On July 6, 1997, Shahram Reza'i, a young Bahá'í man serving as a conscript in the army near the city of Rasht, was shot in the head by his weapons training officer and died the following day. The officer was released after a few days and was ordered to pay only the cost of the three bullets.

In September of 1998, the Iranian government attempted to cease the activities of the university by arresting at least 30 of the most prominent teachers and staff and damaging and stealing from the 500 homes that were used as classrooms.

A 50-year-old salesman in 1998 converted a woman to the Bahá'í Faith. He was labeled an infidel and hanged in a public square in Mashad on July 21.

Since 1980, Bahá'ís have been banned from higher education in Iran. In response to the ban, the Bahá'í community created the Bahá'í Institute of Higher Education in 1987. More than 900 students were enrolled in this school and attended classes in the private homes of Bahá'ís throughout Iran. They received their degrees by mail through the University of Michigan.

In September of 1998, the Iranian government attempted to cease the activities of the university by arresting at least 30 of the most prominent teachers and staff and damaging and stealing from the 500 homes that were used as classrooms. These actions were in response to an Iranian government memorandum discovered and published by the United Nations in 1993.

This document (from The Bahá'í Question Web site, http://question.bahai.org) says: "The Government's dealings with them, the Bahá'ís, must be in such a way that their progress and development are blocked. ... They must be expelled from universities, either in the admission process or during the course of their studies, once it becomes know that they are Bahá'ís. ... A plan must be devised to confront and destroy their cultural roots outside the country." It was ruled that in addition, Bahá'í children must be placed in heavily influential Islamic schools at a young age.

My mother's father was the general manager of the only Bahá'í hospital in Iran. He was arrested because he was a Bahá'í in the 1980s. His belongings and the four-story condominium he owned were confiscated. He was put in jail and as a result, about a year later, he passed away because of a brain stroke, right before my youngest brother was born. He was in prison during my mother's wedding. I never got the chance to meet him.

After his death, the Iranian government generously told my grandmother that she could live on one of the floors for free until she dies, and the other three floors were sold to my mother's cousins. They bought my grandfather's house from the Iranian government.

I am an Iranian Bahá'í woman attending an institute of higher education. It's something I take for granted every day. It's something I even dislike sometimes, but at the end of the day, behind all the shallow and mindless reporting of celebrity sightings and the fight for cheaper parking spaces, are the stories of, oppression and prosecution in so many different countries of the world. These stories are merely background noise to our fast-paced American lives; the stories we only think about if we read a sad book or see a detailed photo.

We just need to remember that sometimes these stories are closer to home than we expected. Sometimes it's our own family that we're reading about in the history books, but even worse, sometimes it's our own family that we're reading about in today's newspapers and press releases. We may feel sad for a moment, but we'll soon forget ... when we realize it's chicken nugget day at the Dining Commons. Maybe that's the saddest part of all.

Sanam Hakim is a Collegian columnist.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

BACK TO THE PAST

Among college campuses across the country, cell phones, Instant Messenger and of course Facebook have become all the rage, and for good reason. These incredible little gadgets give you the power to reach anyone at any time, and easily meet some of the thousands of different undergrads at school, which is especially helpful at the University of Massachusetts.

I love convenience just as much as the next lazy college student, and do my fair share of technology delivering, no question about that. Too lazy to go meet them? Call them up on a cell phone. Too lazy to call? Just go online and talk to them there. At first I thought this was the greatest system ever. Thank you, gods of technology.

I am living in the most fast-paced yet impersonal manner ever created. Suddenly, it dawned on me. If I live on a campus with thousands of people all around me, why bother sitting on a computer having virtual conversations with people, or worse yet, virtual friends on Facebook?

Back in the '60s, college campuses didn't enjoy the luxury of cell phones or Facebook, but there is no debating that they raged it harder than we could this Friday night or any night. Mind expansion, free love and incredible live music are what they will be remembered for.

When people look back at UMass students from 2006, they'll remember us for being obsessed with Facebook — the biggest stalker Web site ever in existence — and for being politically apathetic and having a cliquey campus. Where have we gone wrong? With all this technology and power, we are becoming socially stagnant despite being surrounded by our peers.

Maybe instead of sitting around gazing our eyes over at a computer screen, waiting for another friend request, we could go down the hall and chill with real, actual people all around us. Yes, that's right, actual human contact. Sweet.

There are tons of things to do in real life with actual people right next to you. Go running, go up to the hill and play some Frisbee, have a deep conversation on something you know. People got along at UMass just swimmingly back in the day before technology. Yet now practically everyone lives and dies by those important calls in between class at the pond.

It's just not worth risking brain cancer to tell someone you heard your favorite song being played by that guy walking around with the stereo system backpack, Broseph. Let's just relax and try to live in the moment, for the past's sake.

Joshua H. Wilder
UMass student

GOSH, I'M NOT NAPOLEON

Well played, enemy. I appreciated your article in the Collegian on Monday. The beginning and some of the usage of Dynamite-isms were funny. You finally gave me attention — and a lot of it — which is what you know I wanted all along.

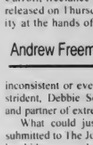
You also, in so doing, gave a personal acknowledgement to me of your bungling coverage on me. However, you all hate me, and thus dismissed me as Napoleon Dynamite.

Unfortunately, I get that a lot, so the joke is both unoriginal and played out. The article would have been funnier if you had left out the Napoleon bit.

Ahh, well, can't expect a bunch of newspaper writers to get something as delicate as humor right, can we? I fully anticipate both a lack of coverage and skewed coverage of me in next year's newspaper. I'm still a Collegian hater.

Eoin Moore
UMass student

VULGAR ISSUE NOT SO FUNNY



For some reason I was under the impression that The Massachusetts Daily Collegian was interested in representing this University with a little dignity. The April Fool's Day edition, crudely titled "The Morning Wood," has successfully killed any hope of that.

It's not that I can't take a joke, but it helps if the joke is actually funny. I might have enjoyed reading the mock articles about Wal-Mart purchasing UMass or picturing Napoleon Dynamite as SGA president, if not for the glaringly tactless invitation to "Play with our Balls" emblazoned on the back cover.

I think I once read something that clever on the wall of my high school bathroom. This blatantly inappropriate and insulting edition of "New England's Largest College Erection" can serve only as a discredit to The Daily Collegian and to the student body it claims to represent.

Sarah Tourjee
UMass student

Call for good news

Andrew Freeman

Last week out of Iraq came one of the few pieces of genuinely good news in a long while. Jill Carroll, freelance reporter and UMass alumna, was released on Thursday from her three-month captivity at the hands of Iraqi insurgents.

Of course, not everyone hails this as good news. Some conservative bloggers have attacked her as being inconsistent or even anti-American. One of the most strident, Debbie Schlussel, declared Carroll a "tool and partner of extremists and terrorists."

What could justify such toxic rhetoric? Carroll submitted to The Jordan Times, which, in an appeal to her kidnappers, characterized her as a "true believer in Arab causes" and someone "critical of U.S. policies" in the Middle East. Because The Jordan Times and other organizations that lobbied for her release have expressed anti-American and anti-Israeli views, in Schlussel's warped reality, she must share their beliefs.

This ignores the international pressure that was placed on Arab allies and Muslims to push for Carroll's freedom. Schlussel is attempting to show guilt by association, rather than working from any knowledge of Carroll's views. Some of those who called for Carroll's release are surely opposed to American interests and favor the insurgency in Iraq, but that does not condemn her — it reflects their desire for publicity or ingratiating themselves to the United States.

Despite such voices, Carroll's release, for most of us, is a rare uplifting story to come out of Iraq. There have been several of these — the rescue of Jessica Lynch, the capture of Saddam Hussein, the first elections — but the overall tenure of the news, after the elation subsides, returns to its grinding march of campaigns, failures and casualties. We can explain this in one of two ways: either the media is too negative, or the situation is too horrendous for good news to linger.

Many conservatives declare that there is a great deal of good news that goes unreported. Children going back to school, pensions being paid again, new hands for people mutilated under Saddam Hussein, the list goes on and on. By the end of such an article, you'd almost believe that we're winning in Iraq.

But we are not winning. Three years after the invasion, with 2,329 American soldiers dead, not to mention many more Coalition and Iraqi deaths, no end is in sight, no progress has been made. Defense Secretary Donald Rumsfeld, speaking to students at the Army War College, gave a grade of "D or D-plus" to the U.S. effort in countering the message of terrorists and insurgents. Our message comes through clearly in the insensitivity we show towards Iraqis and Arabs, through the torture we commit, the security we cannot bring and the amenities we cannot restore.

Iraq, it seems, was liberated more to engorge favored companies than to fight the war on terrorism, let alone spread democracy.

Reconstruction is a mess. Those who think this war is about seizing Iraq's oil not have followed the course of reconstruction contracts. Many projects were awarded without competitive bidding and classified as cost-plus, meaning that companies did not have to offer the lowest price to our government and could charge us what it cost, rather than how much they promise.

As Massachusetts learned with the Big Dig, costs will skyrocket if companies are allowed to keep charging more. The result of this process has been brazen inefficiency and overcharging of the government. Recently, construction firm Parsons has spent all of the $200 million appropriated for building 142 medical centers and finished only six, and plans to complete only 14 more. Halliburton, Dick Cheney's company, overcharged the army by over $200 million in fuel costs, and the Pentagon overruled its own auditors and accepted the cost. Iraq, it seems, was liberated more to engorge favored companies than to fight the war on terrorism, let alone spread democracy.

We want good news. We yearn for good news, but good news that does not incorporate the larger picture is a distraction. Much of the so-called news we read is already distractions, from the sports page to comics to entertainment stories.

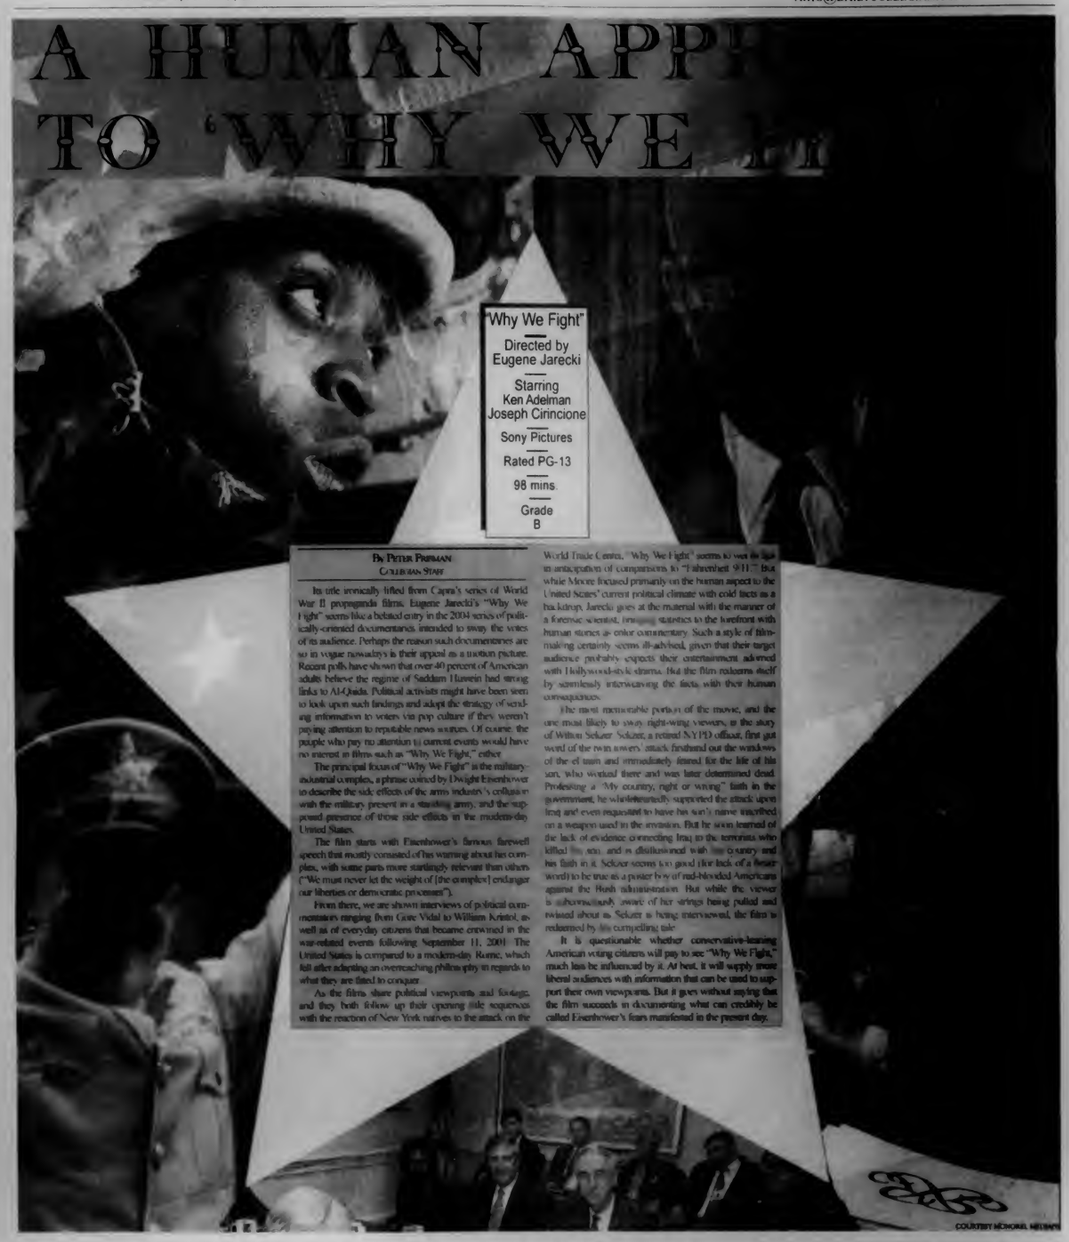
When we read these, we generally recognize that they are distractions, that they do not tell us anything significant about the world, nation or our lives. Feel-good stories about Iraq are much more dangerous because they distract us from the chaos and corruption, both financial and moral, occurring there.

I am overjoyed that Jill Carroll has been released, as many undoubtedly are. However, our elation at her release should not obscure the many other tragedies that are affecting, on a daily basis, the soldiers, journalists, aid workers and civilians in Iraq. Too many of them will not survive this conflict, especially if we, through distraction or apathy, allow it to continue.

Andrew Freeman is a Collegian columnist.

ARE YOU A SENIOR?

WRITE A SUBMISSION FOR THE GRADUATION GUIDE!



LEAVE YOUR LEGACY BEHIND!

SEND THEM TO: COLLEGIANEDITORIAL@YAHOO.COM

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

ARTS & LIVING

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 5, 2006 ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

COURTESY MICHAEL MOORE

By Peter Pirsman
Collegian Staff

Its title ironically lifted from Capra's series of World War II propaganda films, Eugene Jarecki's "Why We Fight" seems like a belated entry in the 2004 series of politically-oriented documentaries intended to sway the votes of its audience. Perhaps the reason such documentaries are so in vogue nowadays is their appeal as a motion picture. Recent polls have shown that over 40 percent of American adults believe the regime of Saddam Hussein had strong links to Al-Qaida. Political activists might have been seen to look upon such findings and adopt the strategy of sending information to voters via pop culture if they weren't paying attention to reputable news sources. Of course, the people who pay no attention to current events would have no interest in films such as "Why We Fight," either.

The principal focus of "Why We Fight" is the military-industrial complex, a phrase coined by Dwight Eisenhower to describe the sick effects of the arms industry's collusion with the military present in a standing army, and the supposed presence of those side effects in the modern-day United States.

The film starts with Eisenhower's famous farewell speech that mostly consisted of his warning about his complex, with some parts more startlingly relevant than others ("We must never let the weight of [the complex] endanger our liberties or democratic processes").

From there, we are shown interviews of political commentators ranging from Gore Vidal to William Kristol, as well as of everyday citizens that became enwrined in the war-related events following September 11, 2001. The United States is compared to a modern-day Rome, which fell after adopting an overreaching philosophy in regards to what they are fated to conquer.

As the films share political viewpoints and footage, and they both follow up their opening title sequences with the reaction of New York natives to the attack on the World Trade Center, "Why We Fight" seems to vow to live in anticipation of comparisons to "Fahrenheit 9/11." But while Moore focused primarily on the human aspect to the United States' current political climate with cold facts as a backdrop, Jarecki goes at the material with the manner of a forensic scientist, bringing statistics to the forefront with human stories as color commentary. Such a style of filmmaking certainly seems ill-advised, given that their target audience probably expects their entertainment adorned with Hollywood-style drama. But the film redeems itself by seamlessly interweaving the facts, with their human consequences.

The most memorable portion of the movie, and the one most likely to sway right-wing viewers, is the story of Wilton Sekzer. Sekzer, a retired NYPD officer, first got word of the twin towers' attack firsthand out the windows of the el train and immediately feared for the life of his son, who worked there and was later determined dead. Professing a "My country, right or wrong" faith in the government, he wholeheartedly supported the attack upon Iraq and even requested to have his son's name inscribed on a weapon used in the invasion. But he soon learned of the lack of evidence connecting Iraq to the terrorists who killed his son, and is disillusioned with Iraq's usury and his faith in it. Sekzer seems to a good jibe back of a broadsword to be true as a poster boy of red-blooded Americans against the Bush administration. But while the viewer is subconsciously aware of her strings being pulled and twisted about as Sekzer is being interviewed, the films is redeemed by his compelling tale.

It is questionable whether conservative-leaning American voting citizens will pay to see "Why We Fight," much less be influenced by it. At best, it will supply more liberal audiences with information that can be used to support their own viewpoints. But it goes without saying that the film succeeds in documenting what can credibly be called Eisenhower's fears manifested in the present day.

No more Romance for Gerard Way's trite, cheap new record

By Matt Embry
Michigan Daily (U. Michigan)

ANN ARBOR, Mich. — When My Chemical Romance released "Three Cheers for Sweet Revenge" in 2004, the New Jersey quintet leaped to instant pop-punk stardom. Appearances on MTV, AOL Sessions and a tour with The Used solidified the band's position as a commercial angst powerhouse. Now, two years later, MCR returns with an album packed full of live performances and extras from their half-decade together.

The problem is, no matter how many times you repackage crap, it still smells.

"Life on the Murder Scene" is essentially a greatest-hits box set, encompassing the band's entire catalog — a whopping two albums' worth. The record is also packed with material: More than four hours of footage via two DVDs, which include a video diary, live concert shots, music videos, the making of the music videos and special studio sessions. Also included is a CD with live tracks from MTV performances, special demos and a previously unreleased track.

The disc highlights MCR's tried and true live acts as well as hit songs from their first two records. MTV favorites "Helena" and "I'm Not Okay (I Promise)" are presented live, while demos of "I Never Told You What I Do for a Living" and "Bury Me in Black" are also included.

The sheer bleakness of the album is overwhelming. The DVD menu screens show more death, blood, morgues and bullets than a studio horror movie. Even the packaging creates a game to play with your friends: Guess how many ways a wedding couple can be bloodied and stained.

The video diary delves deep into the lives of the group members, chronicling the early stages of the group. It reads like a VH1 "Behind the Music," highlighting front man Gerard Way's battle with alcohol and drugs. The band also discusses their unique sense of fashion, explaining how they try to go for the "dead look." They play for cameras while straightening their hair, blackening their eyes and creating fake, bloodied wounds before shows. Look for flak jackets at your local Hot Topic soon.

The diary also describes the band's divinity. Numerous fans claim that MCR has saved their lives. The bandmates also join the fun, stating that the group kept them away from depression and the hateful outside world. After all, isn't punk rock all about saving lives?

The second DVD is a two-hour concoction of live performances, TV appearances, online sessions and music videos. But don't expect to find many new, groundbreaking performances. "I'm Not Okay (I Promise)" is the same song whether it's performed on Conan, on AOL or in a large concert hall. The lack of improvisation in their live shows hurts the cause even more; MCR is more robotic onstage than Tommy Lee's drum-riser. You're not OK, great, we get it.

"Life on the Murder Scene" feels like a recap of any failing band's 20-year spiral into hell. My Chemical Romance makes the journey in just four dismal years. Maybe they know their demise is ahead. Hard to believe, though, when so many more lives need to be saved.

COURTESY MCR/CHRYS CUBA

Lead singer Gerard Way of My Chemical Romance pauses to acknowledge guitarist Ray Toro onstage.

Ghostface's latest is so good it's spooky

By Mikey Goralnik
Tufts Daily (Tufts U.)

MEDFORD, Mass. — For anyone with more than a passing interest in pop music, it is incredibly difficult to like hip-hop. So much of the genre seems dominated by repetitive, uninspired, homophobic, misogynistic half-wits whose primary interest in making music is making dollars. For many, these qualities make it difficult to reconcile their appreciation for mainstream rap with their appreciation for good music. As a result, serious music fans who also are interested in hip-hop are forced to listen to a tiny group of creatively acceptable, "underground" rappers that too frequently sound stilted, boring and, worst of all, alike. Caught between maintaining their credibility as fans and satisfying their need for beats and rhymes, serious music aficionados who explore hip-hop often end up unfulfilled.

Thank God for Ghostface Killah. With an inimitable flow, lucid lyrics and an innate storytelling ability, the Wu-Tang Clansman has the integrity and artistic ability of the underground, but with his street cred and utterly unique style, avoids their bookish inaccessibility. Nowhere does Ghost show off his sub-genre transcendence better than his latest release, the cocaine-themed "Fishscale," an album that sounds as good at a frat party as it does in your headphones. By toeing the line between head-nodding commercial rap and the elitist, music nerd underground, Ghostface Killah dares you to peg him as either one. In doing so, he has created the first outstanding hip-hop album of the last six months.

"Fishscale," Ghost's latest album in his 10-year solo career, follows the simple blueprint he established on 1996's "Ironman": take rusty soul samples, and rap over them like someone is chasing you with a bat. But it's not GFK's speed that is his delivery's most important asset; it's the urgency. On the opening "Shakey Dog," nearly three chorus-less minutes of Ghost's brilliantly vivid coke-rap narrative, his words comfortably and regularly fill the measures, but his voice is so stressed that he sounds like he thinks he's in danger, like he is looking over his shoulder in the studio. In the past, this urgency was quirky: you'd hear a Ghostface song and think, "Oh Ghost, you so crazy."

On "Fishscale," mainly an unapologetic chronicle of the life and times of a coke dealer, it is an effective storytelling technique, adding another level to Ghost's description of what this writer can only assume is a chaotic and unstable profession.

In the end though, it's his lyrics that provide the most engaging and insightful discussion. Though rappers like Clipse and Young Jeezy penned lyrics about selling cocaine before GFK, they lack the allure, personality and depth of his manic free-associating rhymes. On the marathon "Shakey Dog," Ghost nervously recollects every minor aspect of a trip to a fateful drug deal, bouncing from detail to meticulous detail and putting the listener in the car with him as he spits "Whips smellin' like fish from 1-2-fifth/Throwin' ketchup on my fries/Hittin' baseball spliffs/Backseat with my leg all stiff."

On "Big Girl," a Ghost-produced lamentation on beautiful women who get hooked on blow and spiral out of control set on top of The Stylistics 1971 classic "You're a Big Girl Now," Ghost crafts a keenly analytical character sketch with an exhaustive detail that evokes beat poet troubadour Tom Waits. Throughout, GFK provides the listener with endearingly tragic details about the song's addict players, like that they're "college girls" or they "hide behind their glasses," emotionally connecting the listener with them in less than two minutes.

As The Stylistics' mournful song peaks, Ghost gushes to his wayward women, "All I ask in life's for you to be careful/Stay focused, take care of your health/Have kids and marry your prince/Good luck and happiness," and by that point, so do you. With vocals as good as Ghost's, beats are more of an afterthought, but after one reads the production credits, it's clear that GFK wanted the best beats drug money can buy. Just Blaze does his part with his fiery electric guitars on rollicking "The Champ," and MF Doom comes through with a slightly disappointing but satisfying quartet of cartoonish head-nodders, but the recently deceased J Dilla wins for the lonesome, nostalgic "Whip You with a Strap" about Ghost being punished by his mom as a kid.

But while "Fishscale" follows GFK's road map to success, it likewise suffers from the same problems as his past solo albums. Most noticeably, the skits are stupid, all 7.5 of them ("Beauty Jackson" isn't listed as a skit, but it is), and chip away at "Fishscale"'s solidarity. Moreover, though it is difficult to find any guests who can hold a candle to their host, what the hell is R&B chart-topper Ne-Yo doing on "Fishscale"? Or anonymous vocalist Megan Rochell? Or hype-man Trife? By teaming up with musicians so noticeably below him, GFK waters down an otherwise vocal and lyrical masterpiece.

And having just released his latest near-masterpiece, it's time for Ghostface to get treated like a master. On "Fishscale," the emcee demonstrates his eye-popping abilities as a writer, wordsmith and entertainer, and deploys his peerless talents to discuss a wholly street-credible topic. Perhaps never has an emcee been so able to blend elements of the hardcore-rap cash-cow with the literacy and skill of the underground as expertly as Ghostface Killah, but he's often not even considered in the top 10 of his home city. If there is any justice, this will be righted, but in the meantime, I am going to keep putting some ketchup on my fries to hold it down for the Ghost.

Theory of a Deadman to rock Pearl Street

By Jeremy Fowler
Collegian Correspondent

Originally discovered by Chad Kroeger, lead singer of Nickelback, Theory of a Deadman will undoubtedly draw close comparisons to its Canadian counterparts. However, the differences are evident when you listen to the tracks on the band's self-titled freshman release, even though Kroeger produced the album. Heartfelt break-ups and the difficulty of growing up without a mother dominate much of singer Tyler Connolly's writing. It does not become tiresome, however, as the strong guitar arrangements keep the listener interested as much as they feel the connection to Tyler's writing, since it can easily be connected to any loss he or she may have felt in life.

Tracks such as the epic "Last Song" and radio-friendly rock ballad "Make up your Mind" showcase the group's talent. Their single "Invisible Man" also gained popularity after being included on the first Spiderman movie's soundtrack, perhaps not by coincidence, considering Chad Kroeger's single "Hero," also from the soundtrack, became a Top 40 smash.

With the release of "Gasoline," Theory is starting to pull away from the supporting act title and make a run for headliner. Their first single, "No Surprise," was a Top 10 smash in Canada, gaining them much-deserved recognition with their home country audience. It also garnered a lot of air play on the Boston-based WAAF station, which gave the band a notch here on the East Coast.

"Gasoline" is another triumph for the guys in Theory. Connolly's vocals shine on tracks such as "No Surprise," a break-up anthem, as well as the ballad "Santa Monica," which suits Tyler's raspy voice to a T. Other tracks that stand out are "Quiver" and "In the Middle," which is a change of tune for Connolly, as it seems as though he might have gotten past a break-up and found someone he can truly love.

With Connolly on vocals and guitar, Dean Back on bass, David Brenner on guitar and the newly added Brent Fritz on drums, Theory of a Deadman is ready to make its claim as superstars. They have all the elements that have made similar bands like Nickelback and 3 Doors Down platinum selling artists. It's only a matter of time before they are selling out the biggest venues at bigger ticket prices, so catch these guys at Pearl Street while you can.

Hinder will also be playing with Theory after the success of their first single, "Get Stoned," which was released originally as a "free song of the week" on iTunes, showing the importance that the digital music age is having on upcoming artists. Their sound is similar to a cross between Nickelback and Mudvayne. A strange combination, given the differences, but it works well for Hinder and gives them a unique sound in a very common genre. Their freshman release, "Extreme Behavior," is out now in all major record stores.

Touring their third single "Santa Monica" off the album "Gasoline," Theory of a Deadman will play Northampton's Pearl Street this Thursday with Hinder Faktion will support as all three are set to play some good, old fashioned rock 'n' roll, which should have everyone in attendance jumping. It's sure to have you leaving with the ringing in your ears only a screaming guitar can give. Doors open at 7:30 p.m.; show starts at 8:30 p.m.

Katie the cure-ic for 'CBS Evening News'?

By Marisa Guthrie
New York Daily News

Getting Katie Couric may make TV history, but it won't make the "CBS Evening News" No. 1 anytime soon.

TV observers expect Couric's arrival as the face of CBS News will give the third-place newscast a quick ratings bump, but little more.

"I just think it's going to be a ratings disaster," said said Bill McLaughlin, a 25-year veteran of CBS News who now teaches at Quinnipiac University. "They will inevitably pick up viewers in the beginning because of the curiosity factor. But I can't see that sustaining."

Paul Levinson, chairman of Fordham University's communications and media studies department, agreed. "I think in the long run it's not going to make much difference for CBS," he said.

Once the deal is announced — insiders at CBS and NBC say it could come in the next week or so — Couric will make history as the first female solo anchor of a network evening newscast.

However, Couric also brings a lot of baggage. She has been a lightning rod for criticism while on "Today," largely because of her willingness to be goofy and sexy on one hand while being serious on the other.

"The day Katie Couric begins as evening news anchor on CBS is the day that I permanently scratch CBS from my viewing list," reader John Root said in an e-mail to the New York Daily News yesterday.

Couric will replace Bob Schieffer, who has anchored the newscast since Dan Rather stepped down a year ago last month.

Under Schieffer, ratings have grown, putting CBS in its best position to surpass second-place ABC in years. That could change, of course, if viewers respond negatively to Couric.

"Since Schieffer took over, I've been watching him more and more [over Brian Williams and ABC]," wrote reader Vincent Lupiano. "For my money, I want someone behind the desk with 'street cred,' someone who comes across as an experienced, weathered newsperson, rather than someone who's gifted at applying hair spray."

That said, after 15 years on "Today," Couric also has a lot of goodwill with viewers, some of whom could follow her to CBS.

Unknown is what the newscast will look like with Couric in the chair. When Schieffer took over for Rather, there were immediate changes to the show, including more exchanges between Schieffer and the correspondents, a move that has been praised by critics.

Sweet life of Ralph Lauren's daughter

By Karen Heller
Knight Ridder Newspapers

Imagine growing up, literally, in a Ralph Lauren world, a gilded atmosphere of hushed sophistication, pitch-perfect elegance, and so much saddle leather and cashmere.

Dylan Lauren, the designer's youngest child and only daughter, was raised in this environment, where everything in all those houses was like a movie set — from the 1920s-'30s-'40s, take your pick — and just so, beyond perfect, as if in a photograph.

Would she get in trouble if anything was moved out of place?

"I'm very messy, and my room was a mess," said Lauren, founder of Dylan's Candy Bar, a 10,000-square-foot confectionery palace in Manhattan, and three smaller shops in Houston, Orlando, Fla., and Long Island, selling 5,000 kinds of sweets, including nostalgic brands (Charleston Chews, Skybars) and dentist-attracting gift baskets, some priced as high as $400.

"As a teenager, I decorated my room with all these bright colors, and the apartment is solid white. My favorite color is turquoise," she said, confessing to aesthetic rebellion on a massive scale — not quite polyester, but close. "And my father only likes turquoise as a small accent." Equally alarming is that she has little interest in clothing, though on this day, like so many others, she is swathed in Lauren, being a kid in the proverbial Polo cashmere store.

Lauren, 30, tours occasionally to promote her stores and Web site (www.dylanscandybar.com). Viewing candy as a visual as much as a gastronomic treat, the former event planner prefers Christmas and the dazzling spring bouquet of Easter.

In another stunning announcement, she also admitted being "not that into chocolate." Her preference is for licorice.

The 4-year-old Dylan's Candy Bar, at 60th Street and Third Avenue, is the polar opposite — or, in this case, Polo opposite — of her father's wood-paneled baronial flagship store less than a mile away in the former Rhinelander Mansion.

Dylan's Candy Bar is a jarring concoction of loud colors, dizzying graphics, noise and emphatic fun, peppermint-candy shoots, and translucent steps studded with Swedish Fish and all things gummy. Her father, she admits, was put off by all the color, "but then we won all these design awards," Lauren said. "He gets my vision."

She is an advocate for candy. "It's not bad for you in moderation," Lauren said, though there is nothing in moderation about her business. It's sugar shock. Business is up 16 percent over last year.

"My entire family is very artistic, my father with his business and my mother, Ricky, is into photography," Lauren said, equipped like any woman in overdrive with a cell phone and BlackBerry, and no handbag — and her father makes so many nice ones. Forbes lists Ralph Lauren as the nation's 67th richest individual, worth $3.3 billion. Her brother David is the only child to go into the family business, supervising marketing, advertising and publicity for Polo Ralph Lauren Corp. Andrew Lauren is an executive producer of the movie "The Squid and the Whale."

"I always knew I would do something entrepreneurial, and I always loved candy," said the confectionery princess, who is lovely to look at, like so many objects sporting the Lauren label. She is slim, virtually hipless, despite the love of candy, an avid athlete who runs an hour daily plus works out regularly with a trainer. "Right now, we're going for long and lean," said Lauren, who continuously played with her waterfall of chestnut-highlighted hair.

Dylan's Candy Bar is projected to have 10 large stores with 10,000 square feet, like the main store, which includes a cafe, party room, a full clothing line and spa products (chocolate shake bubble bath, buttercream frosting body butter). There also are seven additional smaller stores planned, roughly half that size, and greater development of the Web site.

Lauren is the principal owner, having split with former partner Jeff Rubin. Forty people work in corporate, about 200 in the stores. The company had $5 million in projected annual sales, according to a 2002 article in the trade publication Professional Candy Buyer. The company has teamed up with W Hotels and other firms to provide minibar snacks.

Lauren plans to open in Las Vegas, Los Angeles, Hong Kong and London, the latter home of her beloved Cadbury Creme Eggs, which she eats by cutting in half, then scooping out the cream. "It's ridiculous that you can't get them here outside of Easter," Lauren said.

The New York store is routinely rented out for parties, for children and aging children, as well as assisting in offsite events, including goody bags, decorative table displays and a three-tiered chocolate fountain, rented for the January wedding of hip-hop artists Nas and Kelis.

¡BARRIO BUCKS!
VERACRUZANA
Great Mexican Food on both sides of the river!
NORTHAMPTON • 586-7181
AMHERST • 253-9900
ONE COUPON PER GUEST PER VISIT
$1.00 OFF ANY Burrito!
Not valid with any other coupon • Offer expires 5-15-06 • BY46JFM

Have you taken College Writing?
Registration for Fall 2006
To register for College Writing, you must take the Writing Program Placement Test
This test is offered as a walk-in basis through the end of the spring semester
Tuesdays - Thursdays
9:00 am - 2:00 pm
In Bartlett Hall 305
This test is a pre-requisite for enrollment in Englwrit 112, College Writing.
This test may be taken only once.
Call 545 - 0610 to schedule a date to take the test

UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS BOSTON
Looking for summer learning?
You're getting warm.
Your search for the perfect summer learning destination is heating up, and all signs point to UMass Boston!
• Over 500 undergraduate and graduate courses offered days, evenings, and online
• Travel-to-learn programs in fascinating places like China, Amsterdam, and Puerto Rico
• Our sunny, breezy Boston Harbor campus is an ideal location for summer study
• Small classes, dedicated faculty & affordable cost make UMass Boston a great value
Registration starts April 3
find out more:
summer.umb.edu
617.287.7900
UMASS BOSTON

LOOKING FOR A PLACE TO LIVE?
KAMINS
SPECIALIZING IN HOUSE AND APARTMENT RENTALS
PRESIDENTIAL APTS
COLONIAL VILLAGE APTS
PERRY APTS
177 N. PLEASANT ST.
COLLEGE INN APTS
LANTERN COURT APTS
MILL HOLLOW
CRESTVIEW APTS.
55 S. PLEASANT ST. 253-2515 AMHERST
LARGEST SELECTION OF APARTMENTS IN TOWN

BEACH CLUB TANNING STUDIOS
BUY 1 GET 1 free
PACKAGES LOTIONS ACCESSORIES
APRIL 6, 7, 8
U-CONN
1244 STORRS RD STORRS, CT 06268
PH:(800) 487-8011 (48081)
WESTFIELD
420 EAST MAIN ST WESTFIELD MASS
PH:(413) 564-8288 (56288)
U-MASS
93 UNIVERSITY DR AMHERST, MA 01002
PH:(413) 549-8011 (54981)

To watch or to read?

By Jordan Capobianco
The Oracle (U. South Florida)

TAMPA, Fla. — It is popular belief that movies based on novels are generally garbage.

This point of view has some merit. Sometimes, a movie will simply miss the point of the novel it was taken from, as with 1994's "Frankenstein."

Other times, a movie will boil down the novel to such an extent that it comes across as manipulative tripe ("The Horse Whisperer," "Beloved"). Of course, there are also the unfortunate movies that were taken from novels that were no good in the first place ("Patriot Games"). Aspersions aside, not every movie taken from a novel is unworthy of accolades. These classic titles serve as reminders that film can sometimes reproduce fiction with remarkable acuity.

"The Remains of the Day"

Anthony Hopkins plays Stevens, the butler of Lord Darlington (James Fox), in the Britain of the 1930s. Stevens is committed to the appearance of beauty and order that surround him, so vividly brought to life by magnificent views inside Darlington Hall, Lord Darlington's estate and the rolling greenery that surrounds it. In his devotion, Stevens misses on more than one opportunity for love with Miss Kenton (Emma Thompson) by being unable to distinguish himself from the house he serves.

Even the death of his father (Peter Vaughan) does not diminish his loyalty. When Lord Darlington chooses to "work with" a Germany that's on a decline toward Nazism, the house Stevens devoted his life to turns to shambles.

Kazuo Ishiguro won the Booker Prize for Fiction for this, his third novel. The movie was no less successful, congratulated by eight Oscar nominations and even a mention on "The Sopranos."

"The Graduate"

This classic film was originally a novel by Charles Webb. In the movie, Benjamin Braddock (Dustin Hoffman) is a college graduate without direction. His parents feel he should go to graduate school and then onto a good career, but Braddock is not so sure. In true 1960s style, Braddock chooses first a sordid love affair with Mrs. Robinson (Anne Bancroft) and then pursues Mrs. Robinson's daughter, Elaine (Katherine Ross), over the expectations of the "plastic fantastic" his parents wish to impart upon him. All the while, he allows his career goals to flounder.

Like much art that arose from the counter-culture of the '60s, Braddock can be seen as anything from a spoiled brat to a social revolutionary.

No matter what one's political views, "The Graduate" is a fascinating look at the way sexual epiphanies can transform a shy boy into a man.

"Ordinary People"

Conrad Jarrett (Timothy Hutton) is another young boy with problems.

Jarrett's problem is not sexual, however. It's suicide. Having already attempted suicide once, Conrad's father, Calvin (Donald Sutherland), is naturally worried. After Conrad gets out of the home in which he was placed, he begins therapy with Dr. Tyrone C. Berger (Judd Hirsch). Through their discussions together, Conrad identifies that much of his problem surrounds the accidental drowning of Conrad's brother, Buck, and how Conrad's mother, Beth (Mary Tyler Moore), has reacted to it.

What this film does, besides bringing the novel by Judith Guest to the big screen, is bring to light the roles that people sometimes take on in the face of tragedy. From Moore's portrayal of a sterile housewife in denial to Sutherland's flawless portrayal of the concerned father, "Ordinary People" delves into emotional issues in a more empathic way than many of its counterparts. There are no true antagonists here, much as there rarely are in real life. These are merely ordinary people in a miasma of emotion that needs to be dealt with.

"The Godfather"

There were several "big name" movies that could have appeared in this slot. "Schindler's List" was originally a novel by Thomas Keneally. "The Caine Mutiny" was originally a novel by Herman Wouk, and even "A Clockwork Orange" was based on a novel by Anthony Burgess. However, "The Godfather," based on a novel by Mario Puzo, cannot be overlooked.

The aging patriarch of the Corleone crime family is granting requests on the day of his daughter's wedding. There are only two requirements to have the assistance of Don Vito Corleone (Marlon Brando).

The first requirement is that he must be addressed as Godfather, with all of the respect and religiosity that title entails. The second requirement is that you must promise to do him "a service" at some point in the future. You must agree that you are in his debt.

From the wedding scene, in which Don Corleone dances with his daughter, to the scene in which an attempt is made on Corleone's life, it is sufficient to say that every scene in "The Godfather" is infamous in some way. In this case, an average book brought about extraordinary cinema.

Sesame Street sparks controversy on video

By David Crary
AP National Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — The creators of "Sesame Street" are releasing a new line of videos Tuesday targeted for children as young as six months, outraging some child-development experts who feel no form of TV or video is suitable for kids under two.

The DVDs — part of a series called "Sesame Beginnings" — are intended to be watched by parents along with their small children. Sesame Workshop developed the shows with help of experts from Zero to Three, a well-regarded nonprofit advocacy group.

Despite that prestigious partnership, the project has drawn fire from other experts who note that the American Academy of Pediatrics advises against TV viewing for children under two. They fear the Sesame brand and Zero to Three's endorsement will convince many parents their infants would benefit from watching videos.

"There is no evidence that screen media is beneficial for babies and growing evidence shows it may be harmful," said the Boston-based Campaign for a Commercial-Free Childhood. "'Sesame Beginnings' will encourage babies' devotion to TV characters that have been licensed to promote hundreds of other products."

There already is a huge market for videos aimed at infants: "Teletubbies" has been on the air for nearly a decade, sometimes drawing similar criticism, and The Walt Disney Co.'s Baby Einstein products are very lucrative.

Sesame Workshop had stayed out of this field, but says it now has found an effective way to promote interaction between parents and children under two — something its executives say other shows don't do well.

"We didn't go into this in an impulsive way," said Rosemarie Truglio, Sesame Workshop's vice president of education and research. "We wanted to invite the parent into the viewing situation, to give the adult information about child development."

Working toward that goal, the videos show characters such as Baby Elmo and Baby Big Bird with their parents or caregivers, going through daily routines like feeding and bedtime.

Truglio contends there is no scientific research justifying the "extreme recommendation" from the pediatrics academy to keep the youngest children away from TV.

"The reality is there's TV in 98 percent of all homes, and parents feel comfortable with it," she said. "We have to stop blaming parents, and create responsible content for them. ... The key is moderation. We're not advocating just plopping kids in front of a TV screen."

Psychologist Susan Linn, a co-founder of the Campaign for a Commercial-Free Childhood, said she was disappointed but not surprised that Sesame Workshop had developed the DVDs.

"They're a media company in the business of promoting their brand," she said. "They've done some good things for kids and they sell a lot of junk for kids."

Linn and her colleagues are even more upset by Zero to Three's role, saying the project has damaged its credibility.

"It's a shame to see a prominent public health organization get involved," Linn said. "People trust Sesame Workshop so much. To have the combination of that and Zero to Three — I think it's very likely that parents who have been hesitant will jump right in."

Zero to Three's executive director, Matthew Melmed, said he had no second thoughts about the partnership and accused Linn's group of misrepresenting the new DVDs.

"These are not 'baby videos' — these are DVDs designed to promote healthy parent-child interactions," he said. "Once people understand what this product is designed to do, the response has been favorable."

More than two-thirds of parents with kids under two already let them watch an average of two hours of TV a day, Melmed said. "What we're trying to do is meet parents in their daily reality, to help them do a better job in what is really the hardest job any person has," he said.

Dr. Kyle Pruett, a child development expert at Yale University and member of Zero to Three's board, initially was skeptical of the new videos but said his views changed as he thought of how to improve options for parents who already had decided to expose their small children to videos.

Pink proves herself as colorful as ever

By Jim Farber
New York Daily News

Pink has had news for feminists: She thinks the movement failed.

"In the '50s, women were supposed to just smile and stay in the kitchen," the singer says. "Now, we're supposed to just smile and run around and look sexy. The big difference is, instead of men telling us to do this, we're telling it to ourselves."

If all this sounds like a teaser for an "Oprah" episode on women's self-esteem, welcome to the new world of Pink. The always outspoken star (who hardly shies away from wearing sexy duds herself) has gone from singing about her own issues on her first three albums to addressing what she sees as our screwed up society on album No. 4, "I'm Not Dead," which comes out this week.

"I'm just more aware," says the 26-year-old who was born Alecia Moore. "There's so much happening in the world, so many reasons to take the blinders off."

Which explains why her album includes an acoustic protest song called "Dear Mr. President," which critiques not just Bush's war in Iraq, the homeless, gay people and abortion rights.

Of course the song that has gotten the most attention so far is the single "Stupid Girls," which addresses what Pink calls "the porno paparazzi girls" — those ditzy dames who shop at Fred Segal in L.A. for T-shirts barely big enough to drape a baby, drop star names and dance to 50 Cent videos instead of doing something meaningful with their lives. It's impossible to hear this ditty without thinking of folks whose names include Paris, Lindsay and Mary-Kate — especially since they're directly lampooned in the song's video. Still, Pink asserts that "it's only the media who've gotten caught up in [which celebrities the song is about]. The public got the message."

Namely, that it's considered cool to be dumb these days. "There's just not a lot of smart, sexy women out there," she says. "I don't even think these girls I'm talking about are stupid. I think they act that way because that's how to make money."

It only seems to prove the song's point that it hasn't struck as deep a commercial chord as Pink may have wished. It only got to No. 13 on Billboard's Hot 100 Song list. This week it dips to 31. That's representative of Pink's career at this point. She needs to pull off a comeback with this album, a reality she cheekily alludes to with her "I'm Not Dead" title. Her previous album, "Try This," sold a tepid 700,000 copies. It's predecessor, "Miss Undaztood," moved 5 million.

Pink claims not to be fazed. "I had my goals for ['Try This']," the singer states. "It was respected critically. I got my Grammy and I got a break as well. I got to go home and see my dogs instead of being on tour."

In the time between, Pink also had the chance to mature. She married her boyfriend, motocross champion Carey Hart. She says the relationship is going "perfectly. I've only seen him three times since the honeymoon."

"That's the way it's been for us for the whole four or five years we've been together," the singer says. "We meet in hotel rooms. How fun is that?"

Pink pronounces that last line with a cackle, her most common punctuation. For all her new seriousness, it seems, Pink has thankfully not turned into preach-queen Madonna. In both conversation and music, she still seems to be having a blast. Most of "I'm Not Dead" boasts the catchy pop rock that fired her previous CDs. And she's as lyrically sassy as ever, evidenced in the kiss-off to a guy, "I and Ur Hand," or the song "I Leave Me Alone," in which Pink sings about bristling under any lover who crowds her space.

Better, the album offers yet another showcase for her powerhouse voice. Combined with her "in your face" character, that quality made Pink a good choice to play Janis Joplin in a proposed movie about the legend. Right now, the film's fate is up in the air. "I believe Janis is up in the sky pulling the strings," Pink thinks. "If she wants it made, it will be."

In the meantime, the singer took a part in the horror flick "Catacombs" (from the same sadists who brought you "Saw"). Pink hasn't seen the final flick. "Too scared," she says, though it's not clear if that statement refers to the content or to her own performance.

Either way, Pink says she feels encouraged to do more acting, given some of the films gaining acclaim these days, like "Transamerica" and "Good Night, and Good Luck."

With such works resonating in the culture, Pink says she isn't ready to give up on her generation just yet — no matter how much goofiness and apathy she sees around her. "There still are a lot of smart, [angry] kids out there who are not taking this crap," she says. "So there's hope."

Mill Valley ESTATES

HUGE
INSANELY
STUPID
APARTMENT DEALS

Housing Fair Only
April 6, 2006
Campus Center 10-3

AASA
-proudly presents-
23rd Annual Asian Night
"Celebrating Diversity"
Special Guest Speaker
Solo Artist Natalise
Saturday April 8, 2006
Fine Arts Center Concert Hall
Doors open 6:30 PM
Show Starts at 7:00 PM
Free Admission!
Sponsored by the Student Affairs Cultural Enrichment Fund & the Fine Arts Council

Employment Announcement
UNIVERSITY OF SOUTH CAROLINA
Career Center
H. William Close Building, 6th Floor
Columbia, SC 29208
Fax (803) 777-7886
Phone (803) 777-7290
Email career@sc.edu
www.sc.edu/career
Company Name
Address
City State Zip
Industry/Business Type
Contact Email
Title Website
Phone Fax
Type of Employment (please check all that apply)
Full Time
Part Time
Internship
Cooperative Education
Graduate Assistantship
Summer Season
Method of Communication (please check all that apply)
Please forward resumes (Not available for part time and graduate assistantships)
Post on Internet*
*positions posted for 30 days. To remove after 30 days, please resubmit this form to the Career Center.
Position Description and Requirements
Position Title
Duties
Academic Major
Degree Bachelor's Master's PhD GPA Graduation Date
Classification Freshman Sophomore Junior Senior Skills
Location of Position
Compensation/Salary
Days Per Week Hours
Application Procedure
Application Deadline Apply in Person Telephone for Appointment Email/Fax Resume
Citizenship Requirements US Citizen Non-US Authorized to work in US
Declaration of Equal Opportunity (Required to post position or receive resumes)
Company/Organization is an Equal Opportunity Employer and operates in adherence with all applicable state and federal wage employment laws/regulations
Signature Date
Printed Name Title

Donovan finds niche in UF

FLORIDA from page 14

Miller took the Gators to their first-ever Final Four in 2000, but left for the pros after his sophomore year. Donnell Harvey lasted one year. Kwame Brown signed a letter of intent to play for Florida, but hot-footed it to the NBA straight from high school.

Florida coach Billy Donovan has taken the Gators to the championship game twice since the 2000 season.

Recruiting McDonald's All-Americans brought Donovan plenty of attention and envy, but decidedly mixed results. With only so much continuity, Florida got bounced out of the NCAAs in the first or second round each of the past five years.

In the midst of all those tough tournament losses, "Billy The Kid" made some very grown-up decisions. He quit recruiting the talented short-timers and found kids who were going to be around long enough to mold. He quit playing only one style — the up-tempo, helter-skelter system he played under Pitino — and began adapting game plans to what his players did best, or what his opponents couldn't do at all. In short, as his 40th birthday approached, he became a coach in the best sense of the word.

It was no coincidence that Florida started four sophomores and only one junior, or that they sneaked up on just about everyone. Most experts rated the Gators outside the top-50, and as low as fifth in their own league. After all, a senior and two juniors from last year's team left to chase their NBA dreams and took 60 percent of the scoring with them.

Donovan responded with his best coaching job, really saving the best for last.

For years, he had been saying that tournament success would come if he gave himself enough chances, and for all the early-round disappointments, on his 10th consecutive appearance he was right. Only six men have played and coached in a Final Four, and like two of them, Bobby Knight and Dean Smith, Donovan figures to get back there a few more times.

Pitino wouldn't say he saw this win coming — "I was hopeful," he said Monday night — but last May, at a 40th birthday party for his prized pupil, he pulled Donovan over. He told him how much he admired the way Donovan had built a program for the long haul.

"He always calls me up and says, it's 'Billy The Kid,'" Pitino said. "He's going to have to say it's 'Billy The Coach' now."

Hall of Famers visit Boston's statehouse

By Glen Johnson
Associated Press

BOSTON — Joe Dumars, Charles Barkley, Dominique Wilkins and Geno Auriemma walked around the Statehouse like kings on Tuesday, an unlikely occurrence given that all have given Massachusetts sports fans their share of heartache over the years.

This time, they weren't members of dreaded sports rivals, but representatives of the latest class of the Basketball Hall of Fame. Each was feted by lawmakers with a ceremony in the Senate, a reception outside the House of Representatives and a news conference at the foot of the building's Grand Staircase.

It was a victory lap one day after their induction was announced, a nod to Springfield as the birthplace of basketball, and to Boston as the host of the 25th anniversary NCAA Women's Final Four championship. The announcement was made Monday in Indianapolis before the NCAA men's basketball championship. The induction ceremony will occur Sept. 8-9 in Springfield.

"Most of us for different reasons — Joe with the [Detroit] Pistons and Charles with the [Philadelphia] Sixers and Dominique when he was with [the] Atlanta [Hawks] — every time we've come to the Boston area, it's not been under friendly conditions," said Auriemma, who has won five national championships and nearly 600 games as coach of the University of Connecticut's women's basketball team. "We've got to let Dave speak for us."

Auriemma referred to Dave Gavitt, considered the father of Big East basketball and a former executive with the Boston Celtics. He was also in the class of inductees, along with Italian coach Sandro Gamba.

The normally outspoken Barkley, now a TV basketball analyst, was subdued during the Senate ceremony, where each inductee was recognized with speeches and presented a proclamation commemorating their achievement.

Woods takes on Augusta National and father's illness

By Doug Ferguson
Associated Press

AUGUSTA, Ga. — The first tee shot of a crisp Tuesday morning sailed against a sunlit sky and disappeared into a bunker.

Tiger Woods' next effort wasn't much better.

He hit a pull-hook that took one hop before smacking into the trunk of a Georgia pine and landing in the second cut of rough. It was more of the same on the second hole, one drive clattering into the trees on the left, another drive sailing into the woods on the right.

Augusta National is tougher than ever, and it has Woods' attention.

Leaving the golf course can be even more taxing.

For all the changes this year at the Masters, perhaps the biggest facing Woods is that his father is not here for the first time.

Earl Woods is too weak to travel. The cancer that returned in 2004 and spread throughout his body has taken such a toll that Woods flew across the country to California the day before The Players Championship to check on his father. Woods returned to Sawgrass and tied for 22nd, although that was more a result of poor iron play and substandard putting.

One trait he inherited from his father is a strong mind.

"I've been dealing with it for years, so nothing has changed," Woods said of his father's health. "It is what it is, and you just deal with it. Everyone who has had a family member who lived that long, you're going to deal with it sometime. Unfortunately, it's our time now. But as far as being a distraction, no. I had plenty of time to focus on each and every shot. I just hit poor shots and putted terrible."

Even so, the Masters has always been a family affair.

Earl Woods had heart bypass surgery during the '96 Tour Championship and nearly died before doctors revived him. There were complications from surgery, and he wasn't supposed to travel that next April to Augusta for his son's professional debut in a major.

But the father was at the Masters in 1997, and even gave Woods a putting lesson.

"I putted great," Woods said with a smile.

Woods didn't have a three-putt that week, shattered scoring records to win by 12 shots in a watershed moment in golf, then walked off the 18th green and into the arms of his father, melting in tears.

"This has been a very special week for us as a family," Woods said.

Last year, Earl Woods managed to travel to Augusta, but was in no shape to go to the golf course. He watched on television as his son chipped in for birdie on the 16th, went bogey-bogey to blow a two-shot lead, then regrouped with his best two shots of the week to set up a 15-foot birdie for the victory.

And then he broke down on the 18th green, noting that "Pops" was unable to see him win.

No one will really know how heavy this weighs on Woods as he plays the first major of the year. He has been mediocre his last two starts at Bay Hill and Sawgrass, but he won at Torrey Pines and Doral.

Asked to describe his father's condition, Woods replied, "Fighting."

"When you're away from the course, obviously things are a little bit different," Woods said. "But when you're at the course, you're playing, you're grinding. Today, I'm preparing. I have enough on my mind out there trying to place my shots, and what angles I need to have, or where I need to be for certain pins, and stuff like that."

He knows that he likely will remove a head cover before taking on the par-3 fourth, one of the six changes to Augusta National, and one that is getting a lot of attention this week. Woods hit a 5-wood during practice Tuesday that covered the flag and stopped about 12 feet behind the hole. The other day, with wind in his face, he hit a 3-wood.

Phil Mickelson has a new weapon — two of them, actually — planning to keep two drivers in his bag, just as he did last week at the BellSouth Classic when he won by 13 shots.

Colin Montgomerie had a typical reaction to the lengthening at No. 11, a 505-yard hole that plays as a par 4.

"Holes that start with 5 and it says par 4 are generally the problem," he said.

And then there's two-time U.S. Open champion Retief Goosen, who dismissed any criticism or hysteria with an adage that works anywhere in golf.

"There's a few mixed feelings out there," he said. "But at the end of the day, everybody is playing the same course."

Still, some players might have an easier time than others based on length alone.

Jack Nicklaus is among those who believe only a dozen or so players have a realistic chance of contending on a course that now measures 7,445 yards, making it the second-longest in a major championship behind Whistling Straits (7,514 yards) in the 2004 PGA Championship. And considering only 91 players are in the field — including Gary Player and Charles Coody — the odds are even better than at most majors.

Chris DiMarco has played in the final group the last two years, a hard-luck loser to Woods in the playoff. He has good vibes at the Masters, and described the course as one that fits his eye.

"Although it's getting harder to see," he added, "as far as the pins are getting away from me."

Tiger Woods will not be accompanied by his father on his trip to Augusta for the first time in his career, due to Earl Woods' cancer remission which has made him too weak to travel.

LOOKING FOR OFF CAMPUS HOUSING?
WE FOUND IT!
14TH ANNUAL
APARTMENT COMPLEX FAIR
THURSDAY, APRIL 6TH, 2006
10AM – 3PM
CAMPUS CENTER CONCOURSE
JOIN WITH RENTAL MANAGERS FROM: ALPINE COMMONS, ASPEN CHASE, THE BOULDERS, BRANDYWINE, MILL VALLEY ESTATES, PUFFTON VILLAGE, ROLLING GREEN, SOUTHPOINT, TOWNEHOUSE, CLIFFSIDE, SUGARLOAF ESTATES, SQUIRE VILLAGE, KAMINS REAL ESTATE, LINCOLN REAL ESTATE, AND JONES RENTAL PROPERTY.
FIND OUT ABOUT YOUR LEGAL RIGHTS AND RESPONSIBILITIES FROM STUDENT LEGAL SERVICES.
INTERACT WITH OUR NEW COMPUTERIZED RENTAL SEARCH ENGINE.
WWW.CSHRC.ORG
UMASS AMHERST

The UMass Amherst Office of Jewish Affairs is proud to present...
MICHAEL LERNER
Editor of Tikkun magazine
"the most prophetic intellectual and spiritual leader of our generation"
—Cornel West
The Left Hand of GOD
TAKING BACK OUR COUNTRY from the RELIGIOUS RIGHT
Thursday, April 6, 7:30PM
School of Management Room 137
UMass Amherst
Free and open to the public
For more information visit www.umass.edu/jewish
UMASS AMHERST
Presented by the Office of Jewish Affairs and cosponsored by the Political Economy Research Institute, History Department, Judaic & Near Eastern Studies, Center for Student Development, Student Affairs and Campus Life, Western Massachusetts Interfaith Coalition for Peace and Justice, SAGE, and the American Friends Service Committee

Barkley inducted into hoop Hall of Fame

Charles Barkley was drafted by the Philadelphia 76ers in 1984 and went on to an illustrious career in professional basketball. He played for the 76ers, the Phoenix Suns and the Houston Rockets during his tenure in the NBA, and won the Finals MVP Award in 1993, despite losing to Michael Jordan and the Chicago Bulls in six games. After his playing days, Barkley joined the TNT broadcasting team of Kenny Smith and Ernie Johnson as an NBA analyst.

By Michael Marot
Associated Press

INDIANAPOLIS — Charles Barkley earned his reputation as one of the NBA's best forwards — and biggest talkers. But he always had the body and stats to back up his quick wit.

Next up: Planning one of the most unique induction speeches ever.

On Monday, Barkley was elected to the Basketball Hall of Fame, along with five other coaches and former players, two of whom he played against many times.

"The first thing you do when you get that phone call is let out a little scream," Barkley said Monday after the announcement.

Barkley's reaction may bring a wince to two of his new Hall-of-Fame colleagues — Joe Dumars and Dominique Wilkins, who heard plenty of Barkley's rants on and off the court during the 1980s and 1990s.

The other inductees are Connecticut women's coach Geno Auriemma, Italian coach Sandro Gamba and longtime contributor Dave Gavitt. All six will be inducted in Springfield, Mass., in September.

The selection of Wilkins and Barkley together seemed especially fitting given that both grew up in the deep South, played college basketball in the Southeastern Conference, had catchy nicknames and then battled more than a decade in the NBA as two of the game's top forwards.

Dumars made it after helping lead the Detroit Pistons to NBA championships in 1989 and 1990 and constructed another title winner in 2004 as the team's president of basketball operations.

But seven years after retiring, Dumars still vividly remembers Barkley's chatty nature which helped him get dubbed "The Mouth of the South."

"I could hear him before the game one time," Dumars said of Barkley, laughing. "All I know is that there was a lot of talking going on early, like in the first two or three minutes."

Wilkins was one of the flashiest players in college history at Georgia, then showed the NBA world why he was nicknamed "The Human Highlight Film" with an array of flamboyant dunks. He made nine All-Star teams, won two Slam Dunk titles and after a 17-year career, most in Atlanta, became the third Hawks player to have his number retired. Unlike Barkley, though, Wilkins was left off the NBA's 50th anniversary team, an omission that seems all but forgotten now.

"The 50 greatest players don't matter when you're in the Hall of Fame," Wilkins said. "We all know that I was not one of the 50 greatest, I was one of the 25 greatest — in my mind ... I have to thank Charles greatly because he was one of my biggest fans."

Auriemma, like Barkley and Gavitt, was selected in his first year on the ballot.

In 21 seasons at Connecticut, he has elevated the Huskies to elite status by winning nearly 600 games, winning five national championships and going to eight Final Fours. Auriemma was so emotional, he was left, uncharacteristically, speechless.

"To stand there and look around, I don't even know how to describe it," he said. "I don't want to say anything wrong, I don't want to do anything wrong, I just want to do it right. It's hard."

Gavitt had to wait two years after his term expired as chairman of the Hall of Fame board before he was eligible, then spent much of the past few months hearing from friends and colleagues that he was certain to be picked.

Not only did he help craft the rule that forced him to wait, but he helped establish the Big East Conference and produced eight 20-win seasons at Providence.

It proved worth the wait.

"I started preparing myself for what to do if I wasn't elected," he said. "So when I got that call, I was thrilled. It was very special."

As usual, Barkley had a little more to say.

The undersized power forward who muscled and mouthed his way into the hearts of fans despite making sometimes contentious comments like not being a role model for children.

On the court, he was a fierce competitor who earned the nicknames "The Round Mound of Rebound" and "Sir Charles." He averaged 22.1 points and nearly 12 rebounds in a 16-year career that included stops in Philadelphia, Phoenix and Houston. He was the league's MVP in 1993, and he won gold at the '92 Barcelona Olympics as part of the original U.S. Dream Team.

Perhaps the strangest part was that his greatest achievement came in the same state he endured his greatest failure more than two decades earlier — being cut from the 1984 U.S. Olympic team.

"That didn't bother me that much because I respected Bob Knight," Barkley said. "He treated me with dignity and respect, and I think it hurt him more than it hurt me. But to this day, I still don't know why I got cut."

Gamba was the only inductee not in attendance. He's coached European basketball for more than three decades, including four consecutive Italian Olympic teams from 1980-92. He earned a silver medal at the Moscow Olympics and won gold at the 1983 European Championships.

Among those who failed to get enough votes were former players Ralph Sampson and Adrian Dantley, former coaches Gene Keady and Don Nelson and ESPN analyst Dick Vitale.

But Barkley couldn't help himself from a few more outspoken comments Monday, by saying it wasn't until later in his career that fans were fools and that he didn't like today's NBA.

"There are only two good teams in the NBA and the rest are mediocre," he said. "I want the fans to watch great basketball."

Should make for an interesting induction speech.

Culpepper cleared of charges from Vikings boat-party scandal

By Doug Glass
Associated Press

MINNEAPOLIS—Quarterback Daunte Culpepper was cleared Tuesday of misdemeanor charges stemming from a boat-party sex scandal.

A judge ruled there wasn't probable cause to determine a crime was committed by Culpepper, one of four Minnesota Vikings accused of misdemeanor lewd conduct during the cruise last fall on a suburban lake. Culpepper has since been traded to the Miami Dolphins.

Hennepin County Judge Kevin Burke denied a motion to dismiss charges against running back Moe Williams. His trial is scheduled for April 18.

The other two players charged, cornerback Fred Smoot and tackle Bryant McKinnie, weren't part of Tuesday's ruling. Their next hearings are Thursday.

Culpepper's attorney, Earl Gray, said, "I'm happy about it. I'm sure Culpepper is, and his family. It vindicates him from being involved in any sexual misconduct on the boat."

The quarterback didn't immediately respond to an e-mail.

Williams' attorney, Joe Friedberg, was disappointed with the judge's decision.

"I disagree with him, but that's what makes horse racing," Friedberg said.

Culpepper and Williams had denied any improper conduct in a hearing before Burke last month. Culpepper, who was accused of touching a dancer's buttocks, testified that he spent the cruise on Lake Minnetonka playing a dice game in the back of a boat and rejected offers from several women.

Williams, accused of touching a dancer's breast, testified that a woman danced near him but he never touched her.

In explaining his ruling, Burke wrote Culpepper's version of events would clear him if true, and since the prosecutor offered nothing to rebut it, he found no probable cause. The difference with Williams, the judge wrote, was that his story wouldn't necessarily exonerate him.

Both players also contended race played a factor in prosecutor Steve Tallen's decision to charge them. They pointed out that two white men, including the captain of one of the boats, weren't charged even though investigators found evidence the men both kissed a stripper's exposed nipple.

Burke said the claim was understandable, but the prosecutor had discretion on who was charged.

Tallen denied at last month's hearing that race was a factor, saying the case against the white men was shaky. He was in court Tuesday and didn't immediately return a phone message.

The boat-party scandal was the lowest point in a dismal season for the Vikings, who lost Culpepper to a serious knee injury soon afterward. After his relationship with the team and new head coach Brad Childress soured in the offseason, he was traded to Miami last month for a second-round pick.

All four players faced identical charges of indecent conduct, disorderly conduct and lewd or lascivious conduct. Conviction on a single misdemeanor charge is punishable by up to 90 days in jail and/or a $1,000 fine.

New Miami Dolphins quarterback Dante Culpepper is mired in controversy, unable to shake allegations of sexual harassment.

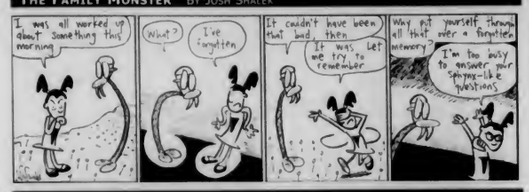
FRUSTRATED? PUZZLED? DO YOU HAVE:
A grade dispute?
Teacher, roomate or job concerns?
Billing problems?
...or any other University related problems?
THE OMBUDS OFFICE CAN HELP
(confidentially, of course)
students, faculty, and staff are all welcome
823 Campus Center
Office Hours: 8:00 a.m. - 5:00 p.m.
Telephone: 413 - 545 - 0867
fax: 413 - 545 - 9720
e-mail: ombuds@ombuds.umass.edu

school's OUT IN for SUMMER
600 courses 7,000 students. Unlimited possibilities
DISCOVER THE POWER OF SUMMER
BOSTON UNIVERSITY SUMMER TERM
617-353-5124 | www.bu.edu/summer

Don't let the guys have all the Fun!
Come learn why the IT Minor is a great choice for women, and may be just the right move for you!
Please join us for a panel discussion of Women in IT!
Faculty, alumnae, current students, and industry representatives--all women--will share with you why they find Information Technology and the IT Minor exciting!
when? Wednesday, April 5, 12 - 1:30, walk-ins welcome!
where? Learning Commons, W.E.B Du Bois Library
what? Antonio's Pizza, Italian Ice!
Prizes to 1st 50 participants!
 Drawings of Viewsonic Color PocketPC and IPod! **
The IT Minor is designed to be flexible and valuable. You choose six courses from over sixty that you find most interesting and relevant to your career plans. Personal advising is available to help you pick the best courses. Be prepared for 21st century jobs by majoring in what you love and adding a custom-designed IT Minor.
IT Minor: Giving women tools to shape the world!
Thank you to Microsoft for sponsoring this advertisement, and thanks to Microsoft, Liberty Mutual, and IBM for sponsoring speakers, prizes and food.
Free Tshirts! umass.edu/isenglish

STUDENT LEGAL SERVICES OFFICE UMASS, AMHERST
HELPING STUDENTS PROTECT THEIR RIGHTS FOR 30 YEARS
Free Legal Advice, Referrals, Representation and Counseling for UMASS Students
Student & Workers Rights, Family & Criminal Law, Landlord Tenant & Consumer Disputes
CALL 545-1995
or stop in at 922 Campus Center

LABRAT By Richard Martelly



ELSIE HOOPER By Robert D. Kryzkowski

JEFF, GOTE & GOAT By Grant Cerulo and Sean Mahan

THE FAMILY MONSTER By Josh Shalek

TWO DUDES By Aaron Warner

Quote of the Day

"Maybe you have to let go of who you were to become who you will be."

—Sex and the City

ACROSS
1 Hole in one
4 Sentence breaker
9 Mysterious by another name
14 East coast cape
15 Studio sign
16 Leek cousin
17 ___ tai cocktail
18 Poet's product
19 Broad necktie
20 Outer limits
22 Confessions of Isaiah
23 Gershwin and Levitt
24 Stay out of sight
25 Blanch
28 Marchers' beats
32 Despised
33 Pearl pursuer
34 Uncooked
35 War god
36 Procrastinator's word
37 Wise men
38 NASA vehicle
39 Gobbled up
40 Spelunker's environs
41 Paths
43 Charlatans
44 Places of refuge
45 Uncommon
46 Colorful tropical fish
49 Military runaway
53 Beside
54 City in Montana
55 Cafe dry
56 Turn to mush
57 E exotic
58 Question
59 Racers on runners
60 Secluded valleys
61 Whiskey type

DOWN
1 Summit
2 Cajole
3 Improve on a draft
4 Pioneers' type of wagon
5 Type of band
6 Stable denizens
7 Wide shot
8 Exist
9 Lodger
10 Hidden
11 School in Houston
12 Type of music?
13 Food for aardvarks
21 Ceremonies
22 Apple drink
24 Refuge
25 Moby Dick, for one
26 Rabbit relatives
27 News pieces
28 Issues a ticket to 29 Desire urgently
30 Avid
31 Zurich native
33 Sees socially
36 Doesn't have
37 Creator
39 Intruders
40 Barks into the wind
42 Deserved
43 Make secure
45 Fix a loose ribbon
46 Bugler's farewell
47 Hebrew month
48 Rushed
49 Overcast
50 Skier's ride
51 Kind of chair
52 Leaf collector
54 Pocketbook

Find today's answers online
www.dailycollegian.com

THE HARP
NEW!! Wireless Internet
OCMP & All Credit Cards accepted
Irish Pub
APRIL SPECIAL!
Honey Brown, Molson
$2.00 a pint / $6.50 a pitcher
TONIGHT: · Cold Duck Complex
THURS: · Turbine
FRI: · Irish Seisiun
SAT: · Hi-8-Us
"Come Party Like You're Irish!"
413-548-6900 | www.theharp.net
163 Sunderland Rd. - N. Amherst
just north of the apartments

Submit your comic!
e-mail collegiatecomics@yahoo.com

HOROSCOPES

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
It's okay if you don't graduate for six more years. Van Wilder turned out okay.

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
It's okay to splurge on a new pair of shoes every now and then.

aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
No one should ever eat that many cucumbers in one sitting.

taurus Apr. 20-May 20
That shirt is not high fashion. It's just ugly.

gemini May 21-Jun. 21
Stay away from revolving doors for a while.

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
You don't even know what month it is, do you?

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
Don't go anywhere ever without a calculator.

virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Never assume that you will do any homework on the weekend.

libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22
You, along with 85 percent of campus, are addicted to Facebook.

scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
Just because it's your favorite color doesn't mean it looks good on you.

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Do not attempt to write on unlined paper.

capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
Never let your friends cut your hair. Especially if you aren't nice to them.

Amherst Brewing Company
THE PATIO IS OPENING SOON!
Jukebox Downstairs & Upstairs!
Get more info about our hand-crafted beers, food menu & event calendar at amherstbrewing.com

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

ACTIVITIES

Amherst Golf Club 256-6894 Play golf Monday-Friday $20 all day rate. March & April 2006.

ANNOUNCEMENTS

THE WORLD HAS HAD ENOUGH of hunger, injustice and war. An extraordinary, enlightened World Teacher is here to help. Learn more: 888-242-8272 *Share International.org

Can you lead? Prove it with Army ROTC FREE MONEY For school. Because we can! www.umassedu/armyrotc

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Belchertown 2BR available 3rd week of April or June 1. lease until July $350/month Jen 857-526-1716

2 bedroom $1100 3 bedroom $1400 4 bedroom $2150 Now Accepting Applications 253-7377 millvalleyestates@winnco.com

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing, 1& 2 bedroom apts. Leases begin June, July, Aug or Sep. First come, first serve. Get them while they last. www.brandywine-apts.com stop by or call 549-0600

Hobart Condos 3 bedroom, hardwood floors, study area in basement. Cable, telephone (internet access) in all bedrooms and study. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

EMPLOYMENT

Fall 2006 Internships with the Student Legal Services Office. Get hands on experience in the legal field. Work directly with attorneys and clients. Earn 12 undergraduate credits. No experience necessary and training provided. Stop by the Student Legal Services Office at 922 Campus Center or call 545-1995

EMPLOYMENT

Northampton Retail Store. Applications for full-time, part-time and summer employment now being accepted. Prior retail experience a plus, but not necessary. Must be reliable, energetic and have good math and social skills. Depending upon position available, weekend and/or evening work may be involved. Generous employee discount. Call 413-652-2164 between 8:00am and 9:00pm.

Summer Job June5-August 25, 2006 Teaching English and obtaining academic credits. Fees $900 including tickets, travels and accommodations. Contact Ron Song at 203-407-0566 bvrdinterco@aol.com

Instructors/Performers P-T for fun after-school programs, parties, and more. Experience managing groups of children. Love of kids, availability some afternoons. Theatrical experience helpful. Car required. (413) 584-7243

EMPLOYMENT

Bicycle Mechanic/ Sales Person needed in Northampton. Please call 584-1727 Ask for Bill

ABC Program, Amherst Nonprofit educational organization seeks Resident Director, beginning July 2006 "A Better Chance" (ABC), residential program for talented students of color, provides opportunity to attend ARHS and live in structured and supportive environment. Excellent record placing graduates in top colleges. Opportunity to provide leadership and role model for motivated young men. B.A. and experience in education desirable. In lieu of salary and benefits, position provides private apartment and board within students' Amherst residence. Applicants with families are encouraged. Send resume and 3 letters of reference by April 7 to: Search Committee, Amherst ABC, Box 1922, Station 2, Amherst, MA 01002. Email: mail@amherstabetterchance.org

EMPLOYMENT

Counter Help part time year round position must be fast, friendly, and extremely reliable. Apply in person at the Woodstar Cafe 60 Masonic St North Hampton

Full time summer employment at the Housing Assignment Office $8.50/hour. Visit the HAO at 235 Whitmore to pick up application.

Summer Lifeguards, Managers, Camp Counselors, and Director positions open! Greenfield Recreation, 25 min. from Amherst. Apply now. Call (413) 772-1553.

Rent us your Ears! Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu Voicemail 545-6837

Bartending $300/Day potential. No experience nessesary. Training provided 1-800-965-6520 x162

HOUSE FOR RENT

Hadley, close to UMass 5 Bedroom home, large yard, Oil heat, Sept occupancy 549-4270

SERVICES

PREGNANCY TESTING, HIV TESTING, Birth-control, and Emergency Contraception. STI Screening and Treatment. Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992

Pentium Color laptops $99 We type term papers, resumes, cover letters. 413-584-5857

WANTED

Egg Donors Wanted. Established Donor Program seeks loving, healthy women, 21-33, to donate eggs to infertile couples. Non-smokers only. Generous compensation! 1-888-363-9457 www.reproductivelawyer.com

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS WEDNESDAY

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 5, 2006 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Billy the Kid hits stride

Despite criticism, Donovan finds place among elite coaches

By Jim Litke
Associated Press

INDIANAPOLIS — This one was not about a torch being passed, though some people will assume it was handed off to Billy Donovan by Rick Pitino, just like they believe Pitino handed Donovan almost everything else.

No, this story is about a coach building a bonfire entirely on his own.

Florida burned UCLA about as thoroughly as a team can while still holding the final score down to 73-57. The Gators were quicker, fiercer, better prepared and — in a development that surely caused UCLA coach Ben Howland heartburn — they even played tougher defense.

Oh, and they were much, much better coached.

And all of that was apparent in the first five minutes.

"He coached a perfect game tonight, offense and defense," said Pitino, wearing an orange tie and spending his 30th wedding anniversary sitting with his wife, Joanne, in the first row of the Florida cheering section. "It was one of the best coached games I've seen in some time."

Donovan did it with only so much help.

"Our faculty rep said to me before the game that when you start with something from scratch and you build it up to win a championship, that's something special," he recalled.

Donovan was barely two months on the job and plodding along with a 7-5 mark in January, 1997, when Florida won its first-ever national championship in football. Passion for that game runs so deep in the Swamp, the Gators' stadium, that when Lon Kruger left the job to go to Illinois en route to the NBA, Pitino counseled his disciple to stay as far away from the place as possible.

"I said, 'Billy, they don't have any players. If the [athletic director] isn't patient, it'll be a death trap for you," Pitino recalled. "The AD called me five minutes later and said, 'Can you guarantee me that in two or three years, Billy will be one of the best coaches in the country?'"

"I said, 'You're 100 percent right.' He said, 'Then why wouldn't I suffer for two or three years if I have one of the best coaches in the country?'"

Pitino, though, was still skeptical that Florida would ever commit enough money and resources to grow basketball at what was a football school through and through — and Lord knows he had been right about everything else.

On Pitino's advice, Donovan transformed himself from a chubby kid into a lean 3-point specialist and the two of them led tiny Providence College on an improbable Final Four run in 1987. On his advice, Donovan became an assistant on Pitino's staff at Kentucky, and after a five-year apprenticeship, took a head-coaching job at Marshall that Pitino helped arrange.

And when Donovan left the Herd behind after two seasons for Florida against Pitino's advice, plenty of his peers still saw his patron's fingerprints everywhere.

Billy Donovan won his first national championship with the Florida Gators on Monday night in a 63-47 route of the UCLA Bruins.

Donovan's nickname, "Billy The Kid," was a holdover from his sharpshooting days at Providence. But it was spit out sarcastically, on occasion, by jealous members of the coaching fraternity who felt Donovan had been handed too much too soon.

Some of them didn't stop there.

North Carolina's Roy Williams, who was coaching Kansas at the time, was furious about the methods Donovan used to pluck a recruit named Mike Miller out of Williams' backyard. Former South Carolina coach Eddie Fogler used the Southeastern Conference preseason media session one year to rip Donovan for shoddy recruiting practices. The strange thing is that whatever Donovan was doing to collect players, it was only doing him so much good.

See FLORIDA on page 11

Fan base in danger of losing its team

Rob Greenfield

I have to be honest. The Red Sox aren't as interesting as they used to be.

Readers of this column would point to the 2004 championship season as the culprit. The first World Series championship since 1918 ended the mystery and magic of the dreaded curse, and Boston fans were able to come out from underneath the umbrella of self-pity.

For me, the national media blitz during the championship run overexposed the Red Sox. From generalizations to cliches to ridiculous movies like "Fever Pitch" (which painted Red Sox fans as garrulous, obnoxious baseball aficionados with no lives), television channeled the sights and sounds of a Boston mystique that few really understood.

Now, the bandwagon fans have hopped on board. Pink Red Sox shirts and hats are sold in abundance. You have to get a program to remember who is playing in the infield. Red Sox memorabilia is seen anywhere and everywhere. Uninformed and unscarred baseball fans from all over America took the Red Sox as their own without enduring the agony of second-place finishes and almosts.

It's aggravating. Call me an elitist, but there is nothing worse than middle-aged Californians who were born and raised on the West Coast claiming ownership of New England's beloved Red Sox.

It doesn't work like that. If you hail from the Hub, and you like baseball (let's not take that for granted nowadays with lacrosse occupying the other half of the spring sports fandom), your appreciation for baseball is sewn into the fiber of your being — the ongoing Red Sox saga of frustration and, sometimes, a petty annoyance on top of the everyday grind.

However, Red Sox Nation has no borders now. With the touch-of-a-button technology and satellite TV packages that can televise Sox games from anywhere on earth, the uniqueness and regional identity of the Olde Towne Team has disappeared.

Globalization is the new, revenue-generating policy, a financial ploy to inflate bank accounts to lure the high-price free agents. There are no restrictions to who dons Sox uniforms and who bleeds red.

It is cheapening Red Sox fans. Wearing the "B" doesn't hold the same weight that it used to. It is a part of pop culture now, fading into the fog of cheap thrills and overexposed trends and fashions. Being a Sox fan is the cool thing to do — definitely not what the real Red Sox fans envisioned as the aftermath of their first world title in 86 years.

Boston is a place for hard athletes. Bill Russell and Larry Bird were tough men who took substance over style. Ted Williams, Dave Cowens, Tony C — these individuals were not made for the national pallet.

But those days are long gone. Manny couldn't care less about Boston. Most players live in different cities during the off-season. Ortiz jerseys are worn throughout the western hemisphere. Money is the new motivator. Holdouts and lockouts are a constant threat to the integrity of the game. Free agency has destroyed many regional sports identities.

Boston is not safe from the ubiquity of television and the corruption of money. Ticket prices are through the roof. The average family can seldom afford to take a trip to Fenway without some serious financial planning. Yawkey Way has turned into corporate heaven. The new Red Sox management is extremely image-conscious, the perfect fit for the new-world baseball order.

While Red Sox finances soar, the connection with its home city is weakening. Some might say that anyone who wants to be a Red Sox fan can be a Red Sox fan.

But there is something that they are missing, an intangible connection that can only be felt through years of family hand-me-downs and traditions, the feeling for Boston baseball fans when they first feel the warm air of spring.

It's not like anything you can find on the planet. But Boston is at risk of losing its team. Corporate America is putting the full-court press on the Boston Red Sox. Globalization could ruin the you-can't-find-this-anywhere-else feeling. The Red Sox could turn into that pop song you hear on the radio over and over and over again.

For me, it's already happened. I'm a lost cause, a Red Sox fan that (along with objecting to Sox fans' selective blindness towards off-the-field behavior) lost the connection with the Fenway Nine.

Maybe growing older has taken away the Boston mystique, or maybe it's the thousands of screaming Sox "fans" at Fenway who couldn't tell you who was pitching that day.

Exposure is insidious. And the Red Sox are swimming in its wake. Maybe the national madness will disappear and the misunderstanding will end. Then we can go back to the way it used to be, when Boston Red Sox fans were an indigenous group — not square-eyed internet watchers, staring at a computer screen from a continent away, pretending that they know what it's like to be in the Hub.

Rob Greenfield is a Collegian Columnist. He can be reached at rgreenfi@student.umass.edu.

Schilling happy with first day

By Jaime Aron
Associated Press

ARLINGTON, Texas — Early in his career, when Curt Schilling was more an unharnessed thrower than a refined pitcher, he needed several innings to settle down to the point where he could work the strike zone.

Now 39 and coming off two injury-marred seasons, Schilling is amazed that the opposite seems to be happening — he starts games in total control, then gets stronger and wilder once he gets loosened up.

The trend began in spring training and continued Monday when Schilling threw seven strong innings to lead Boston to a 7-3 victory over the Texas Rangers.

"This is what I was like in 2002," said Schilling, who won a career-best 23 games and was the runner-up in AL Cy Young Award voting that season.

Schilling came out dazzling, striking out the first two batters swinging and retiring the first eight. Then, when he came out for the fourth inning, his fastball had a little more oomph and he struggled to put it where he wanted.

"I don't have an explanation for it," Schilling said. "I just know the first three innings, I was pitching. We had a game plan and I was moving the ball, making my pitches. Then all of a sudden, I could feel it. When I threw a couple pitches in the fourth inning, I knew I had something extra on them."

Schilling pitched around singles in the fourth and fifth innings. In the sixth, another single was followed by a home run.

Although he was coming off a rough inning, the bullpen was obviously fresh and the Red Sox were up 6-1, manager Terry Francona still decided to send out Schilling for the seventh. His faith was rewarded with a 1-2-3 inning, including another strikeout.

"I thought he could get them out," Francona said. "He had a lot left. He was fine."

Schilling allowed two runs, five hits, struck out five and walked one in a whopping 117 pitches. Very few of them were his split-fingered fastball.

"He worked both sides of the plate and spotted his fastball well," said reigning AL batting champ Michael Young, who went 0-for-4, the first three outs against Schilling. "We had some aggressive outs against him, but he did a good job and kept us off balance. He is always tough and is very competitive."

Schilling's pitch count was beefed up by his mid-inning struggles. It bothered him because it cost him a chance for a complete game.

Schilling was the one who noted the strange turnaround in his pitching dilemma, how now his "command feels exceptional, then the velocity shows up," a flip-flop from his younger days.

He also smiled when he said it.

"A little better combo, I think," he said. "Sometimes velocity is a double-edged sword. The more I do it, the better I'll get at it. If I can take that command and focus into the fifth, sixth, seventh inning, my pitch count will go down."

Francona also sees it as a good problem to have.

"It's nice that he has that left in the tank because that's the guy I remember," Francona said. "He could reach back and get more when he needed it."

The Red Sox are counting on more of these kinds of performances. So is Schilling, who feels he needs to live up to his status as the opening-day starter.

"I take a lot of pride in where I sit in the rotation," he said. "After opening day is over, it's over. But there's something to it for me and I want to be at the top of this rotation. I want to help lead this rotation and that comes with performance."

Jason Varitek got the Red Sox going with a two-run double off new Texas ace Kevin Millwood in the fourth inning. Boston broke the game open in the fifth, getting an RBI double from newcomer Mark Loretta and a sky-high two-run homer from David Ortiz, who went 3-for-5.

Millwood, pursued by Boston before signing a $60 million, five-year deal with the Rangers, gave up five runs and seven hits in five innings. It was quite a disappointment for the largest crowd in stadium history and the team's first season opener at home since 2000.

"I had all my pitches working and felt like I had good velocity," Millwood said. "I just didn't put all my pitches where I wanted to."

Curt Schilling began the season with a solid start, allowing five hits, striking out five and yielding two earned runs.

UMass schedule interrupted, resumes with Dukes on Friday

The Massachusetts men's baseball game against Holy Cross yesterday, and this afternoon's scheduled matchup with the Maine Black Bears, were both cancelled due to bad weather forecasts.

This afternoon's game would have been the home opener for the 2006 Minutemen, but they will have to wait until Friday when the Duquesne Dukes come to Amherst for a three-game weekend series.

The Dukes fell to 6-17 with a 2-4 record in the Atlantic 10 after Saint Louis, the newest addition to the A-10 conference, swept them in a two-game series last week. The Dukes travel to Kent State on Wednesday in an out-of-conference match-up before Friday's battle.

Derek Mechling leads the Dukes with a .360 batting average, a .667 slugging percentage and a .454 on-base percentage.

Dukes' hurler Scott Chisholm leads the pitching staff with a 3.97 ERA in two starts.

UMass picked up its third win of the season on Saturday in an 11-9 win against the Richmond Spiders on the road. Junior Bryan Adamski led the way for the Minutemen, going 2-for-6 on the day with a run scored and two RBIs. The multi-dimensional Adamski also took the hill for the Minutemen in the eighth inning. He struggled through the first two innings but pitched a scoreless bottom of the 10th to seal the Minutemen's third win of the year.

With the score tied 9-9 after nine innings, the Minutemen gave Adamski some breathing room with a two-run top half of the 10th. Five consecutive hitters reached base for UMass; junior Lou Proietti scored the go-ahead run on a Richmond throwing error, and Joe Cotone plated Adamski with a well-placed sacrifice bunt.

Adamski leads the Minutemen with a batting average over just over .300; he also leads UMass in walks, home runs, on-base percentage and slugging percentage. Adamski's one win comprises 1/3 of the UMass wins this season, and he had provided invaluable innings for a young pitching staff in need of some veteran leadership.

Rob Greenfield

New England's Largest College Daily • Est. 1890

The Daily Collegian

Thursday, April 6, 2006 www.dailycollegian.com Volume CXVI Issue 109

Family of Carroll's translator speaks out

BOSTON (AP) — The family of a translator killed when American reporter Jill Carroll was kidnapped in Iraq said in an interview aired on CNN's "Anderson Cooper 360" Tuesday night they told her they do not blame her for his death.

The wife and father of Alan Enwiya were being interviewed by a CNN reporter at their home in Amman, Jordan, when Carroll called them. It was the family's first contact with Carroll since she was kidnapped Jan. 7, according to CNN, which did not give a date for the conversation.

The Christian Science Monitor reporter returned to Boston last weekend after being unexpectedly released March 30. She has been in seclusion with her family this week except for a visit to the newspapers's Boston newsroom on Monday.

Enwiya's father, Raymond Enwiya, said he would not let Carroll take responsibility for his son's death.

"I said no, it's not your fault," he told CNN through a translator.

The morning he was killed, Alan Enwiya and Carroll were headed for an interview with a prominent Sunni Arab politician.

Enwiya's wife said she knew he would have tried to save Carroll. "He used to tell his friends, the day that anything happens to Jill, like what happened to her ... naturally he would never allow himself to leave her," she said.

Alan Enwiya was shot when he tried to prevent Carroll's kidnapping.

His father said Carroll told them what they already suspected, that Enwiya could have fled, but he tried to save her from the kidnappers, even though he was unarmed.

"They were just like brother and sister," Raymond Enwiya told CNN.

"I told her ... that ... instead of Alan, you are my daughter now," he said. "She said 'I am your daughter.'"

Associated Press

New SGA president announces his plans

Elvis Mendez calls for better relations between SGA and student body

By Matt Belliveau
Collegian Staff

In his first speech to the senate as president of the Student Government Association of the University of Massachusetts, Elvis Mendez announced his intentions to create a new cabinet specifically to improve the relationship between the student body and senate.

Mendez intends to appoint the current secretary of registry, Jaimie Corliss, the current secretary of finance Chinedu Okongwu, and Gigi Arguello, who sits on the public policy and relations committee, to this cabinet.

"I hope that these are seen as the first steps in a process to rework the power dynamic in the SGA and make sure students are placed first," said Mendez.

Mendez's speech, which he said was addressed to the student body, stressed the importance of the SGA in inspiring students and helping them understand how their school functions. He also talked about the role students play in shaping policy and the direction in which their school is headed.

"I'm here to make sure that students are engaged and are involved in the decision-making process on policies that affect them. It's about time their concerns more directly influence both SGA and administrative policy," said Mendez. "The power of students lies in the numbers, not in economical figures per se, but in the number of people that we can amass, and in the number of people that we can inspire and awaken to the reality of student life."

Mendez encouraged the SGA to become more inclusive by listening to people other than senators.

"I said this at the beginning of this senate year and I will say it again; we need to stop taking ourselves so seriously and start taking the issues more seriously," said Mendez. "You are responsible and accountable for at least 250 people and they are your superiors, they are who should be seen as important.

"We cannot blame the student body for being apathetic if our work ethic is

See SGA on page 2

Presiding over the senate for the first time, SGA President Elvis Mendez discusses his intention to appoint a cabinet with the sole purpose of bridging the gap between the student body and the SGA.

Romney to sign revolutionary health care bill

By Steve LeBlanc
Associated Press

BOSTON — A bill that would make Massachusetts the first state to require that all of its citizens have some form of health insurance is on Gov. Mitt Romney's desk awaiting his signature.

Romney spokesman Eric Fehrnstrom said late Tuesday that Romney, a potential Republican candidate for president in 2008, will sign the bill next week.

Lawmakers overwhelmingly approved the bill Tuesday. The plan — hailed as a national model — would dramatically expand access to health care over the next three years.

If all goes as the supporters hope, those already insured will see a modest drop in their premiums, lower-income residents will be offered new, more affordable plans and subsidies to help them pay for coverage, and those who can afford insurance but refuse will face increasing tax penalties until they obtain coverage.

The House approved the bill on a 154-2 vote. The Senate endorsed it 37-0.

"It's only fitting that Massachusetts would set forward and produce the most comprehensive, all-encompassing health care reform bill in the country," said House Speaker Salvatore DiMasi, D-Boston. "Do we know whether this is perfect or not? No, because it's never been done before."

The cost of the bill will rise from an estimated $316 million in the first year to more than a $1 billion in the third year, with much of that money coming from federal reimbursements and existing state spending. About $125 million in new money will come from the state's general fund during each of the three years.

The measure does not call for new taxes, but would require businesses that do not offer insurance to pay a $295 annual fee per employee.

The only other state to come close to the Massachusetts plan is Maine, which passed a law in 2003 also designed to dramatically expand health care coverage. That plan relies largely on voluntary compliance.

The Massachusetts plan is unique in requiring both employers and citizens to contribute to a system to cover nearly all of the state's 500,000 uninsured.

"What Massachusetts is doing, who they are covering, how they're crafting it, especially the individual requirement, that's all unique," said Laura Tobler, a health policy analyst for the National Conference of State Legislatures.

The plan hinges in part on two key sections: the $295-per-employee business assessment and a se-

See HEALTH on page 2

Governor Mitt Romney will sign a bill next week that requires every person in Massachusetts to have some form of health insurance.

Construction accident raises safety questions

By Ken Maguire
Associated Press

BOSTON — Court rulings have left state inspectors powerless to enforce safety standards at construction sites like the one where three people died Monday in a scaffolding accident, forcing Massachusetts to rely on a voluntary safety consultation program, state officials said on Tuesday.

The contractors at the 14-story Boylston Street site where the Monday's accident occurred opted not to participate, said Robert Prezioso, commissioner of the Division of Occupational Safety, noting that his agency's 600 inspectors per year nearly always find hazards.

"How many ships does a lighthouse save? You can never say," Prezioso said. "You can't point to a number. Every hazard we find, I like to think, prevents injuries."

Safety and oversight questions were raised after a 10-ton construction platform collapsed and crashed 13 stories onto the street below, killing two construction workers and a man whose car was crushed. The site is the future home of an Emerson College dormitory.

Killed were Robert F. Beane, 41, and 27-year-old Romildo Silva — both employees of subcontractor Bostonian Masonry — and motorist Michael Ivan Ly, 28, a Boston doctor.

See COLLAPSE on page 2

Controversy continues over immigration bill

By Suzanne Gamboa
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Conservative Republicans tweaked their alternative to a bipartisan guest worker proposal for illegal immigrants Wednesday as Democrats pressed for a vote that would put most of those in the U.S. illegally on a path to citizenship. President Bush urged swift action.

The latest counterproposal to a bill by Sens. John McCain, R-Ariz., and Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., would base the chance of citizenship for the estimated 11 million illegal immigrants in the U.S. largely on whether or not they were here before a cutoff date. That date has not yet been determined.

Those in the U.S. before the cutoff date, an overwhelming majority, could apply for green cards if they pay fines and back taxes and learn English. Among that group, those who had spent five years in the U.S. would get an easier path to citizenship, with newer arrivals facing more obstacles.

Those who arrived illegally after the cutoff date would be viewed as living here illegally and unlikely to qualify for citizenship while in the country.

"There has to be some cutoff date. They would not have a status," said Sen. Sam Brownback, R-Kan.

Kennedy's and McCain's measure would put immigrants here before Jan. 7, 2004, on a path toward citizenship if they maintain jobs and meet the other conditions.

Bush said the immigration bill should include a guest worker provision that allows illegal immigrants to remain in the United States to perform jobs that, he said, Americans will not perform. But he said the legislation should not include an amnesty provision that provides automatic citizenship.

He called on the Senate "to come to a conclusion as quickly as possible and pass a comprehensive bill."

The McCain-Kennedy bill has heavy Democratic backing and some Republican support. But enough Republicans consider it amnesty that they could block a vote on it.

Demonstrators gather on the West Front of the U.S. Capitol to protest legislation that cracks down on illegal immigration.

Three arrested during baby shower brawl

SPRINGFIELD (AP) — A dispute among guests at a baby shower erupted into a fight during which one man was shot and several other people, including the guest of honor who was seven months pregnant, were struck with a large stick, police say.

Three people were arrested on charges related to the Saturday brawl at a home in Springfield that police have called a "baby shower gone bad."

Police say the shooting victim, Aristotle Garcia, 26, got into a fight with a man who is dating his ex-girlfriend over whether the woman let their 5-year-old daughter drink beer.

The argument between Garcia and Antonio Santiago escalated and drew in Jazz Rivas and Juan Velazquez, police say.

When the shower's hostess tried to intervene, Rivas began hitting some of the guests, including the 22-year-old mother-to-be, with a large stick, police said.

Velazquez fired a gun in the air, then fired it into the crowd, hitting Garcia in the stomach, police said. Garcia is in stable condition at Baystate Medical Center. The mother-to-be was treated and released.

Velazquez, 19, was arrested Tuesday and charged with assault and battery with a dangerous weapon, armed assault with intent to murder. He was scheduled to be arraigned Wednesday.

Santiago, 25, pleaded innocent to similar charges on Tuesday, and was ordered held on $50,000 bail.

Rivas, 22, pleaded innocent to three counts of assault and battery with a dangerous weapon and one count of assault and battery on a pregnant female and ordered held on $10,000 bail.

Associated Press

ARTS & LIVING

THREE CHEERS FOR 'THREE BURIALS'

"Three Burials of Melquiades Estrada" nears flawless.

PAGE 5

EDITORIAL/OPINION

INCREASE PVTA

Don's let UMass students drink and drive.

PAGE 4

WEATHER

TODAY
High 53
Partly Cloudy

TONIGHT
Low 32
Partly Cloudy

TOMORROW
High 52
Low 38
Showers

SPORTS

FORECAST: RED STORM

Minutemen to take on Saint John's in Saturday's match-up.

PAGE 10

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3689 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Michael Busack
MANAGING EDITOR Eric Athas
BUSINESS MANAGER Nathan Chomalis
PRODUCTION MANAGER Nicholas Belanger
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Katie Huston
ADVERTISING MANAGER Kerrys O'Grady
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Lauren Egavian
EDITORIAL PRODUCTION Amanda Allen
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Ian Jones
COMICS EDITOR Amanda Allen
EDITORIAL EDITOR Kristen LaCasse
NEWS EDITOR Dan O'Brien
SPORTS EDITOR Jeff Howe
CIRCULATION MANAGER Thomas Hecht
DISTRIBUTION MANAGER Nick Gleason
FINANCE MANAGER Daniel Conti
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Caren Tortorici
ASSISTANT BUSINESS Phil Smoller
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Morgan-Ann Rousseau
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Alex Butler
ASSISTANT NEWS Megan Dales
ASSISTANT NEWS Matt Belliveau
ASSISTANT SPORTS Dan Duggan
ASSISTANT SPORTS Rob Greenfield
ASSISTANT EDITORIAL Tucker Merrick

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY OWNED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS ALMA LUX. BECAME THE COLLEGE SPOON IN 1901, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1904 AND THE DAILY COLLEGIAN IN 1936. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967. THE COLLEGIAN WAS AWARDED ALL-NEW ENGLAND IN 1994. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL WEEKDAYS BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 5:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Nick Belanger

COPY EDITOR
Meghan Murphy

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Amanda Allen

PRODUCTION STAFF
Tiffany Van Langen, Chris Martin

If you see news happening, call us at 545-1809 and snap a photo with your cell phone, then send it to news@dailycollegian.com

Construction safety examined after fatal accident

COLLAPSE from page 1

Under the state's free voluntary program, a company invites state inspectors on site and agrees to fix any hazards that are discovered.

Otherwise, spot inspections are left to the federal Occupational Safety and Health Administration, but critics say that can be infrequent.

The Emerson building — a combined dorm and campus center — has been under construction for nearly two years, but federal inspectors said Tuesday they had not conducted spot checks before the accident.

"The recent inspections of those companies are not at that site," OSHA regional spokesman John Chavez said of general contractor Macomber Builders and subcontractor Bostonian Masonry.

On Tuesday, the city's Inspectional Services Department issued a "site safety" violation to Macomber Builders and demanded an explanation about what happened within 24 hours. ISD Commissioner William J. Good III said.

He said the city department's role is to enforce building codes. Before Monday's accident, city inspectors had not found building code violations at the site.

"The piece of equipment that fell is not regulated by the state building code," Good said. "The general responsibility for that piece of equipment lies with OSHA."

Macomber's building permit is suspended until city inspectors approve its plan to ensure the public is not at risk.

The platform and scaffolding, which had been used to install a stone facade, were being dismantled around the 13th story when the collapse happened, fire officials said.

John Macomber, president and CEO of Boston-based Macomber Builders, did not return a call on Tuesday. He said Monday that the procedure was a "typically very, safe way to work" and that there was an "extensive safety program inside the company."

Bostonian Masonry co-owners John Iopalis and Gerry McDonough, in a statement Tuesday, said safety is their "top priority. ... And while it is the case that we have been cited for a limited number of violations of safety regulations in the past, this would be true of any company that is actively engaged in construction."

Walpole-based Bostonian Masonry would not respond to questions about employee training.

The accident has prompted calls for better oversight. Cambridge Senator Jarrett Barrios, chairman of the Public Safety Committee, scheduled a hearing for next week to explore oversight options.

A spokesman for Boston Mayor Thomas Menino called on the state to find a way to restore its inspection program.

Prezioso said a 1992 Supreme Court ruling said state inspection orders are unenforceable because OSHA has oversight, Prezioso said. The state continued inspections, however, until its jurisdiction was successfully challenged two years later in a case decided by the state Supreme Judicial Court, he said.

If invited by employers, state inspectors conduct a "comprehensive investigation" and typically locate hazards, Prezioso said. The program is funded by OSHA and has been in existence for more than 30 years.

Chavez said federal law allows states to take over jurisdiction from OSHA, but that Vermont is the only New England state that has done that. California also conducts its own enforcement, he said.

"It's the employers responsibility to make sure when using this kind of equipment, that they observe all the safety standards related to this equipment," Chavez said. "They have to make sure all the employees are trained for putting these things up, dismantling them"

One of Emerson College's buildings on Boylston St. was the site of the fatal construction accident that killed three Bostonians and has since raised questions about the overall safety of construction sites.

He disputed the allegation that OSHA only arrives after a workplace injury. "Any workplace in the country is subject to OSHA inspection at any time," he said, adding that he did not have data showing the rates of pre-emptive inspections.

Chavez said 55 percent of OSHA inspections nationwide last year were spot checks. In OSHA's annual top 10 categories of violations, scaffolding violations comprised the top spot, with 8,891 violations in fiscal 2005.

Macomber Builders has been cited by OSHA more than 10 times since 2004 including more than five citations for "serious" scaffolding or fall protection violations. OSHA defines a violation as serious if "there is substantial probability that death or serious physical harm could result, and the employer knew or should have known of the hazard." Bostonian Masonry also has a history of OSHA citations.

SGA discusses plans for future campaigns simply pathetic," said Mendez.

SGA from page 1

MassPIRG, along with the National Student Campaign Against Hunger and Homelessness, will be having the 22nd-annual Hunger Cleanup this Saturday, April 8, on the Amherst Green. The campaign aims to address the most immediate needs of the homeless and to create a society that demands making an end to hunger and homelessness a national priority.

The campaign also supports operations to construct latrines, provide clean drinking water and food, and offer medical supplies and treatment for thousands of refugees living in camps in Darfur, Sudan and countries ravaged by civil war.

Speaker Sean Bliss was excited to announce yesterday's launch of UMass' new, free music downloading Web site, Ruckus.network.com, at that over 1,100 students had already registered.

"It's a project we've been working on all year, so we're happy to see it come to fruition," said Bliss. "The site gives access to a wide range of quick, virus free music downloads, and we're excited to see that so many students are already using it."

Bliss added that the SGA is also planning to hold a promotional concert for the site in late April.

Massachusetts first state to require health insurance called "individual mandate," requiring every citizen who can afford it to obtain health insurance or face increasing tax penalties.

HEALTH from page 1

Liberals typically support employer mandates, while conservatives generally back individual responsibility.

"The novelty of what's happened in this building is that instead of saying 'let's do neither,' leaders are saying 'let's do both,'" said John McDonough of Health Care for All. "This will have a ripple effect across the country."

The bill is intended to alter the state's health care landscape in large and small ways.

The state's poorest are the biggest winners. Single adults making $9,500 or less a year will have access to health coverage with no premiums or deductibles.

Those living at up to 300 percent of the federal poverty level, about $48,000 for a family of three, are also big winners. Under the bill, they will be able to get health coverage on a sliding scale also with no deductibles.

The vast majority of Massachusetts residents who are already insured could see a modest easing of their premiums.

Not everyone may be thrilled with the changes. Individuals deemed able but unwilling to purchase health care could face fines of more than $1,000 a year by the state if they don't get insurance.

To help people find insurance, the bill creates something called a health care "connector" which encourages private health insurers to provide affordable policies to small businesses and individuals.

Romney, who pushed vigorously for the individual mandate, called the legislation "something historic, truly landmark, a once in a generation opportunity."

The $295-per-employee assessment is expected to get extra scrutiny from Romney who is opposed to new taxes and has the ability to veto individual portions of the bill. Romney said the assessment wasn't a "broad-based tax."

Fehrnstrom said the Romney will sign the bill, but will recommend changes.

"We look forward to signing it sometime next week. As with any appropriations bill, the governor will use his powers to make some modifications and adjustments, but they won't affect the main purpose of the bill," Fehrnstrom said.

Another goal of the bill is to protect $385 million pledged by the federal government over each of the next two years if the state can show it is on a path to reducing its number of uninsured. The U.S. Department of Health and Human Services has threatened to withhold the money if the state does not have a plan up and running by July 1.

If You've Got a Plan We've Got a Van!
POTTERS AUTO & TRUCK RENTAL
Insurance Replacement Rates
FREE PICK-UP
• Direct Billing to Insurance Company
• Locally Owned & Operated
• 7 & 15 Passenger Vans
• UMass Purchase Orders, MHEC Rates
North Amherst Motors
78 Sunderland Rd., North Amherst, MA
(413) 549-RENT (7368)
www.northamherstmotors.com
(One mile North of UMass - on bus route)
Collision Repairs & Glass Replacement

Tired of the Dorms?
IT'S NEVER TOO EARLY TO LOOK FOR AN APARTMENT WITH LINCOLN REAL ESTATE
Lincoln Real Estate
25 N. Pleasant St.
253-7879
www.amherstlincolnrealty.com
Now accepting applications for June 2006

Walk to Campus!
Townehouse of Amherst Condominiums
Hurry contact us now!
50 Meadow St. Amherst, MA
Tel: 413.549.0839
Fax: 413.549.8487

VERACRUZANA
Great Mexican Food - on both sides of the river!
$1.00 OFF ANY Burrito!
Not valid with any other coupon • Offer expires 5-15-06 • BY46JFM
NORTHAMPTON • 586-7181
AMHERST • 253-9000
¡BARRIO BUCKS!

ASIAN ARTS & CULTURE PROGRAM
ETHOS &
Indian Music Masters
Tuesday, April 11
Bowker Auditorium at 8PM
Marimba, Chinese Gongs, Rig, Djembe, Tibetan Prayer Bowls—all tools of the trade for this quartet of musicians who have thrilled audiences around the world. Ethos has championed works by John Cage, Steve Reich, Simon Shaheen, Glen Velez and Masters of Indian Music. They have appeared at Lincoln Center, the Kennedy Center, the Bermuda Festival and London's Wigmore Hall. Ethos will collaborate with Indian tabla player Samir Chatterjee and sarangi maestro Ramesh Misra in a mesmerizing and hypnotic evening of music and rhythms of the East and the West.
$15, $10; Students $7, $5; Subscription discount applies
FINE ARTS CENTER
UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS
1-800-999-UMAS 545 2511 www.fineartscenter.com/asian walk this way

Zanna has what you want. Converse, Steve Madden, Frye, Tribeca, Vans, Dansko, Chinese Laundry, Mia, Ugg, Unlisted, Teva
ZANNA
women's clothing, shoes and accessories
downtown Amherst

Lawmakers consider raising minimum wage in Mass.

By Rob Silverblatt
Tufts Daily (U. Tufts)

MEDFORD — "It's virtually impossible to live with any measure of decency at our current minimum wage of $6.75 an hour," said State Representative J. James Marzilli, Jr.

To combat this problem, Marzilli, a Democrat representing Arlington and Medford, has sponsored a bill that will gradually raise the minimum wage to $8.25 per hour. The legislation calls for an initial raise from the current $6.75 to $7.50, and then to $8.25 a year later.

The bill also calls for indexing for inflation for every year after the minimum wage is raised to $8.25.

For every subsequent year after the established raise level is reached, the wage would be increased at the same rate as inflation rises that year.

"Inflation has eaten away at the purchasing power of the minimum wage," said Marzilli, explaining his support for inflation indexing.

Representative and Tufts graduate Carl Sciortino, Jr. (LA '00), a fellow Democrat and co-sponsor of the bill, agrees.

"I believe indexing is the only way to ensure that we continue to protect working families from poverty and to ensure that they get a fair share," said Sciortino, who represents Medford and Somerville.

According to supporters of the bill, the raise is particularly important given the comparatively high cost of living in Massachusetts.

Vermont, for example, has a higher minimum wage than Massachusetts, but a lower cost of living, according to Marzilli.

"Vermont is nowhere near as expensive [to live in] as Massachusetts," he said.

The bill, however, has met with small setbacks and larger controversies. Although the legislation was filed in December 2004, it only recently received a hearing before the Joint Committee on Labor and Workforce Development.

According to Sciortino, this delay is not unusual. "This is the natural progression for most bills in a committee process," he said.

Last month's recommendations of the Committee, however, were less than desirable for its sponsors. The Committee supported a raise to $7.75 per hour — without indexing for inflation.

According to Marzilli, however, the recommendation is a start. "I take the recommendation to be an official acknowledgment that we will raise the minimum wage by at least that much," he said.

Marzilli added that he will still pursue his initial recommendation. "The low wage workers are losing purchasing power every year because of inflation, and a dollar an hour [raise] is inadequate," he said.

Sciortino agreed, and also said he will support the original plan to raise the minimum wage to $8.25 and index for inflation. "We'll file amendments on the floor of the House," he said.

Outside of Beacon Hill, the legislation has caused a great deal of controversy. Many corporate interests are particularly opposed to the plan.

"We believe that it's tough to do business in Massachusetts right now, and this will only add to the burden," said Erin Trabucco, general counsel for the Retailers Association of Massachusetts.

Trabucco said that the raise would cause many businesses to notch up their prices, which would be bad for the economy.

"They have a very small profit margin, and the consumer will end up paying for that in the end," she said.

Trabucco also said that such increases would make it harder for minimum wage workers to obtain and retain jobs.

"Employers still need to remain competitive in order to get good employees," she said. "By increasing the minimum wage, we're stifling job growth. It will make it more difficult for entry-level employees to enter the job sector."

According to Christopher McHugh, an economics lecturer at Tufts, this representation is not entirely accurate.

"I don't think you're going to see any pervasive increases in prices. Hamburgers aren't going to go up at McDonald's," he said.

Though McHugh does believe in indexing for inflation, he does not support an increase in the minimum wage.

"As an economist, it's pretty tough to believe in constraints on a market," he said, adding that he thinks that the market will correct itself.

If wages are too low, people will move away, and then employers will have to offer incentives, he said. "They'll have to raise the rates they pay [their employees] anyway," he said of such a case.

The proposal has created some disagreement on campus, with most coming down along partisan lines.

According to Jordan Greene, vice president of the Tufts Republicans, the raise would create unemployment among those workers least able to find other jobs.

Greene said that the solution is to do away with the minimum wage, allowing the actual rate of pay to be a negotiation between the employer and the employee.

Such measures, he said, would not result in a return to unfairly low wages.

"That requires believing that without a minimum wage, people would still be making 75 cents an hour," he said.

He added that Democrats' push to raise minimum wage is only exacerbating the current problem.

"A higher percentage of the able-bodied workforce ends up on welfare," he said. "Democrats see these statistics not as indication of failed policy but as justification for reflexively demanding an even higher minimum wage."

Aaron Banks, president of the Tufts Democrats, said that the increase will actually have the opposite effect.

"Workers who are able to provide for their families, afford basic health care and work fewer jobs will be more productive and place less strain on the welfare and social services systems," he said.

According to Banks, the policy will not hurt the local economy because the workers will spend their money to promote it.

"The working poor spend everything they make on necessities such as housing, food, clothing and health care," he said.

"The increase in wages will go right back into the local economy in the form of consumer spending," he added.

The last time Beacon Hill approved a raise in the minimum wage was in 1999, increasing the wage from $5.15 to $6.00 in 2000 and then to the current $6.75 in 2001.

Marzilli and Sciortino are unsure of when the proposals in this bill, if passed, would take effect because the exact date for its debate has not been scheduled.

Authorities testify that husband paid bartender to shoot man

James Brescia (left) and Scott Foxworth are on trial for the murder of a Newton man. Prosecutors say Brescia hired Foxworth to kill the man he thought was having an affair with his wife.

By Andrew Ryan
Associated Press

NEWTON — A jealous husband paid $10,000 to a bartender to fatally shoot a man who was dating his estranged wife, prosecutors said Wednesday.

The body of Edward Schiller, 39, was found Jan. 13 slumped behind the wheel of his car in a private parking garage near his office at Aronson Insurance Co. He had told friends he feared for his safety and knew he was being followed, court records show.

Authorities say James Brescia, 46, of Waltham, hired Scott Foxworth, 52, of Dracut, to shoot Schiller in the head because Schiller was having a relationship with his wife, Stacey. The Brescias, who had been living separately, have three children, ages 4, 6, and 8.

Foxworth, who served four years in prison for a 1978 murder, was ordered held without bail Wednesday after pleading not guilty to charges of first-degree murder and conspiracy.

Brescia, who had no prior criminal record, also was held without bail after pleading not guilty to the same charges. Authorities say he ordered the hit after his wife served him with divorce papers.

"My brother is a beautiful person who is missed by many people, and those spineless cowards stole him from us without a second thought," Schiller's brother, Carl Schiller, said after the arraignments in Newton District Court. "We are confident that justice will be served in this case and those cowards will spend the remainder of their lives in prison."

Court records show Brescia met Foxworth through a co-worker at Raytheon and originally discussed beating Schiller.

Middlesex District Attorney Martha Coakley said Foxworth, a bartender at the Dracut American Legion, stalked Schiller, learned his daily patterns and waited in the parking garage to kill him, Coakley said.

"It seemed to be well-planned. It seemed to be a professional execution," Middlesex District Attorney Martha Coakley said.

Schiller sensed he was in danger, according to friends who talked to police. He told them "if [he] end[ed] up with a bullet in his head, [they would] know who did it," according to a police report.

Unnamed witnesses interviewed by police say Brescia told them it Schiller kept up his relationship with his wife, "it would not be good for his health," the report says.

Schiller was unmarried and had no children.

Telephone records were used to build the case against the men, Coakley said.

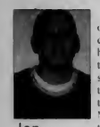
Authorities say they're still looking for the gun. A single 9mm shell casing was found near Schiller's body.

The killing shocked some in Newton, a mostly affluent suburb of 80,000 people located just west of Boston. It had recently been named the safest city in America for the second straight year by Morgan Quitno Press, which publishes the annual "City Crime Rankings."

Taste of UMass 2006
THURSDAY APRIL 6
Schedule of Events
Taste of UMass
5:00 PM – 8:00 PM
5:00 PM Grand Opening National Anthem
5:00 PM Musical Guests Four on The Floor
5:05 PM Celebrity Chef Martin Yan
5:15 PM Celebrity Chef Joanne Weir
5:30 PM Hershey's Ice Cream Sunday Derby Contest
6:00 PM New England Patriot Cheerleaders
6:15 PM UMass Idol
6:45 PM Nathan's Famous Hot Dog Eating Contest
AT THE MULLINS CENTER
DINING SERVICES UMassAmherst
Doors Open at 4:30
www.umass.edu/dioingservices

Taste of UMass
See you at the Taste of UMass!
Thursday, April 6 from 5–8 pm
Doors open at 4:30 pm
All DCs closed at 3 pm
Busses available at 4:00 pm to the Mullins Center
All regular bus stops on campus, plus stops in front of Southwest Cafe, in front of Franklin DC and in front of Worcester DC.
AT THE MULLINS CENTER
DINING SERVICES
Taste of UMass 2006

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian



EDITORIAL OPINION

THURSDAY, APRIL 6, 2006

"I may not agree with what you say but I will defend to the death your right to say it." Voltaire

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

More public drunk transportation

Jon Brandt

On a typical Friday or Saturday night, it can be expected that hundreds or even thousands of UMass students will be riding the buses. Whether they are heading into Northampton, down to Pufflon or to the Townhouses, everyone is just trying to get away from campus for a while and have some fun. There are often many obstacles in getting to where you want to be, and one of the biggest of these is the bus system itself. It's great that the PVTA is free for students and runs daily, but the transit system is infrequent and unreliable at best.

How many times have you or a friend had to wait around for a bus that is late or never even shows up? Missing a bus you planned on getting can seriously throw off your plans for the night, especially if you plan on taking the bus back. It just doesn't make sense why the bus system runs so infrequently on weekends and stops running shortly after 1:00 a.m.

People don't just stop having fun and go to bed at that time. All that does is force drunk people to go back to the dorms, where they continue their drinking and end up trashing the halls. Everyone is always complaining about how the dorms get messed up every weekend and what a bunch of animals we are.

Time for a reality check. Anyone who has ever been drunk can tell you that after a certain point you just don't have much control over your actions. Even a decent person is prone to acting like an idiot once they have a few too many. It is well known that many of our students are fond of alcohol. Everyone in the administration knows this, and as much as they try to curb the problem, they are only skirting the real issues.

If you want people to stop acting like morons in the dorms, get them out of there. There would be far fewer incidents in the dorms if people could guarantee that they would have a place to go and be able to get back. Having only a few buses running from 10 p.m.–1 a.m. on weekends is a huge mistake.

If you want people to stop acting like morons in the dorms, get them out of there. There would be far less incidents in the dorms if people could guarantee that they would have a place to go and be able to get back.

It wouldn't take more than two weeks to see the patterns of how students work on the weekends, and the PVTA has been doing this for years. They know that weekends are crazy here, and masses of students migrate to the bus stops late in the night.

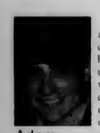
Why are we still forced to cram 100 people onto a bus designed for no more than 50? This is not just an inconvenience, it isn't safe. A sudden short stop could cause injuries to dozens of people clinging to poles or leaning on windows.

Is it really that difficult to have two buses come at the same time, or at least five minutes apart?

I understand that there are budget issues and the need for drivers, but how much will the lawsuits cost when someone finally gets trampled on or there is an accident and 80 kids have broken bones and concussions?

Anyone who has ever sat at a bus stop for an hour on a Saturday night, watching their evening float away as honking cars drive by, knows my pain. When you only have an hour or two to go out and have some fun before you need to head back, you will most likely drink as much as possible in the shortest amount of time to maximize your good time.

I thought this school was supposed to be against binge drinking. Sounds more like they are encouraging it. I understand that there needs to be a cutoff point, and it isn't fair to keep the bus drivers out all night, but would keeping the buses running until 2 or 3 a.m. be that much worse? It would make life a little easier on them, as they wouldn't have to deal with 100 drunks screaming and causing mayhem on their buses the whole night.



The weather is nicer and everyone is going out after being cooped up all winter. This is no surprise to anyone, but for some reason the PVTA acts like they are completely oblivious. This is not a complicated subject to understand. If you get people out of the dorms and give them enough time to do what they need to do, everyone comes back with the partying out of their systems and ready to relax or go to bed.

I'm not saying destruction would end in the dorms, because there are still plenty of idiots out there. However, I believe that it would drastically cut down on petty incidents and write-ups occurring in the dorms, as well as the childish vandalism that takes place every weekend.

There are thousands of students on this campus, and the fact that the bus system runs like it was serving 500 is pathetic. You should be able to plan your night out and work the buses into it, not plan your night around the buses. That's bush league, and we deserve better.

Jon Brandt is a Collegian columnist.

All-you-can-eat sickness

Adam McGillen

Mad Cow disease, the Avian Bird Flu, and the infamous snuffles, these are all dangerous diseases that most Americans have come to fear. It is hard to remain unaware of their outbreaks; they so overwhelm media outlets whenever a new case is discovered. But, the focus on these diseases draws away from the awareness of a silent killer that plagues this very campus: the Itis (eye-tis).

From such an ominous name, I won't blame anyone for deciding to stop reading right now. For those of you courageous enough to brave the turbulent words ahead, I commend you, and will offer to you some information that may just save your life.

With such very little media coverage of the Itis, many are dangerously ignorant of the symptoms: extreme fatigue, narcoleptic behavior, poor performance, and in the worst cases, flights to the bathroom for wall-clinging, porcelain shattering, mind-bending out of body experiences.

The disease is defined as when you fall asleep immediately after you eat a considerably large meal (answers.com), but also has some major compound effects. The most devastating aspect of this disease is that it specifically targets the hardworking college student who frequents the all-you-can-eat buffet of the dining commons.

What is the cause? Overeating combined with overexertion. Overexertion is quite vague though, and so I will define it as doing anything more than sitting down in the company of a PlayStation 2 (only because the PS3 is currently being constructed out of lesser consoles and spare parts from the Space Station).

For some, the symptoms are subtle; for many, it makes life a challenge. The Itis itself is not deadly, but when combined with other aspects of daily living, or when the symptoms interact with other serious diseases, the results can be fatal.

For instance, operating machinery while under the influence of the Itis has proven to be highly dangerous, vis-à-vis, the increased number of pedestrian injuries on campus. In almost all cases, the accidents are believed to be the result of an inability to focus on the road or a temporary loss of consciousness in the driver due to being full.

Taco Bell has made a joke of fullness in their most recent advertisement campaign, but I assure you fullness is no laughing matter when we are dealing with the Itis and its devastating repercussions.

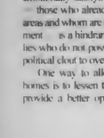
Vehicular homicide is just the Itis at its worst. More commonly, the Itis targets the mind. It manifests itself most often in narcoleptic behavior. Students find it incredibly hard to study, frequently waking up in a puddle of their own saliva, only to discover that they haven't read a single word in the past three hours and they have managed to ruin their book. This less deadly occurrence is nonetheless extremely frustrating, especially for students already overwhelmed by their workload.

DRAWN BY CHRISTOPHER TAK

How do we stop this maleficent disease? Unlike most diseases, antibiotics, radioactive treatment, holistic healing and even Flintstones vitamins just won't do the trick. Some people might say the solution is easy; just don't eat as much, but when confronted with an all-you-can-eat buffet every night, people find it impossible to eat any less than their physical limit.

The most promising solution is placing small doses of real food in DC food, and offering breakfast sandwiches on a regular basis so students can start their day off right and not be prone to fatigue-inducing Itis.

A cure is yet to be discovered, but several theories are being developed. The most promising solution is placing small doses of real food in DC food, and offering breakfast sandwiches on a regular basis so students can start their day off right and not be prone to fatigue-inducing Itis.



Self-proclaimed Itis expert Gregory Joseph Klecziak states, "The Itis can be combated with one simple method. Inject the food with horse steroids. Steroids promote activeness and well-being. Look at Barry Bonds; he is always on the move during the game. You never see him asleep on the field. A guy his size just has to eat big meals, which is the known cause of the Itis."

Perhaps the greatest weapon against this ninja of disease is simple awareness. Using the symptoms described above, it should be possible to recognize the Itis when you have it, and take the necessary precautions of climbing into bed or resting a sweatshirt on your desk to prevent head injuries from sudden states of comatose. Also, inform your friends about the dangers of the Itis, so that they can help combat this disease as well.

Remember to eat healthy. An apple a day keeps the Itis away.

Adam McGillen is a Collegian columnist.

Money minded insights

Greg Collins

Too often, at the University of Massachusetts and at other public and private universities, professors express to students a narrow-minded way of thinking about how America's economy operates. Only when varying views are exposed can individuals make educated decisions and formulate rational opinions about whether regulated or deregulated economies work best.

The term progressive is thrown around loosely nowadays to convey the political attitudes of Democrats, yet this is an inaccurate way to describe the party's prevailing sentiments about government's role in the economy. Many policies that Democrats, as well as Republicans in low-income communities such as Appalachia, currently support restrict the economic capacity of businesses to produce goods and services, which benefit people of all socioeconomic backgrounds.

For instance, open space laws, in which land is preserved in order to safeguard the environment, drive up housing prices by preventing developers from using the restricted land for construction. What is politically and emotionally satisfying for one group of people — those who already live in the surrounding areas and whom are referred to as pro-environment — is a hindrance to lower income families who do not possess either the financial or political clout to overcome these restrictions.

One way to alleviate the high costs for homes is to lessen these restrictions, so as to provide a better opportunity for families to establish a permanent residence.

Additionally, governmental regulations that provide a framework for how businesses should operate, such as establishing minimum wage laws, guaranteeing jobs and enforcing health regulations, are a form of counterproductive coercion.

For instance, say that a state board of health required that workers at a sub shop needed to use a new set of gloves after every making of a sub, so as not to transfer food particles to the next sandwich (to ensure that customers with specific dietary restrictions would not be consuming undesired food). However, it would be nearly impossible to serve every potential customer during a hectic lunch hour if the employees took the time to stop and switch gloves.

Whether or not the owners were racist did not change the fact that they would be losing many customers if they enforced segregation, and thus would not be creating as much profit.

The extended time period would have discouraged customers from waiting in line and would have reduced the opportunities of the business to generate revenue. This is a form of restricting freedom and rights that are not discussed as often as they should be at many universities around the country.

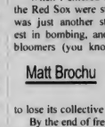
Government intervention does not necessarily promote social progress because many times, regulations have the effect of preserving the existing conditions rather than allowing for increased productivity and efficiency. While guaranteeing jobs for incumbent employees provides job security, it also denies future workers, some of whom may not even be born yet, the opportunity to be hired to work for these jobs.

It is assumed that major Democratic legislators help the poor or the powerless, but only in the case of how they define these amorphous and vague terms. Who are more powerless than these unborn employees?

Minimum wage laws also have the opposite effect of what many progressives espouse. These laws place an objective standard, a set wage within a field, economics, in which subjectivity plays an important role in the allocation of limited resources with different uses.

For instance, while some person may want to earn more than $6.75 an hour, the current minimum wage in Massachusetts, there is another person who, due to his specific and subjective needs in his life, such as needing money quickly to pay for school textbooks, would work for less than this wage. If the minimum wage law was $25 an hour, why would an employer hire someone who was worth less to the company than this wage?

This is one reason economists, the overwhelming majority of whom do not support minimum wage laws, emphasize to explain why such laws increase unemployment rates.



It should be noted that institutional racism is more prone to occur in command and control economies than deregulated ones. No employer in his right mind would hire a white man over a black woman if the black woman were more valuable to the firm for the same price.

Streetcar segregation occurred in the late 19th century, not because of the inherent racial attitudes of streetcar owners but because of government mandates. Whether or not the owners were racist did not change the fact that they would be losing many customers if they enforced segregation, and thus would not be creating as much profit.

Curbing business growth limits the accessibility of products that we take for granted, like televisions and cars, and products that we will soon take for granted, like DVD players and iPods. Keep in mind that when many people describe themselves as being progressive or liberal-minded nowadays, they are in fact conservative when it comes to initiatives, which give more businesses freedom to build houses and make products, which benefit individuals of all socioeconomic, racial and ethnic backgrounds. Unfortunately this point is not raised at colleges around the country often enough.

Greg Collins is a Collegian columnist.

MTV and Sin City

Matt Brochu

When I entered the college world 5 1/2 years ago, the Red Sox were still loveable losers, 8th and Ocean was just another street corner that I had no interest in bombing, and with the exception of the early bloomers (you know, the dude who served as the "Designated 'Playboy' Bringer" at every sleepover and rocked a mustache simply because he could) the class of 2009 had yet to lose its collective virginity.

By the end of freshmen orientation, not only was I a little too excited for college life (that summer served as a 90-day Christmas Eve), but I had become aware that this luxury Sedan of an investment would present me with several priceless opportunities along the way:

1) The chance to earn a bachelor's degree that meant virtually nothing without the proper networking connections to secure an initial job.

2) The chance to make an absolute a of myself, in frame-by-frame fashion, on the Antonio's campus cam.

3) The chance to watch roughly 12 reruns of "Saved by the Bell" on four different networks before my first class of the day, and…

4) The chance to realize a lifelong dream of going away for Spring Break.

Granted, this final goal of mine wouldn't have been a goal at all if not for the existence of the network formerly known as Music Television. As soon as I was old enough to sing along with Kriss Kross, MTV began bombarding my fragile little psyche with a week's worth of gratuitous Spring Break coverage year after year.

Like most middle school-aged boys, the five-show rotation had me glued to the television like a toddler watching "Blue's Clues." I just couldn't fathom how MTV had created this alternate universe where 300 people could hang out in a single pool without anyone realizing that, "Hey, chances are that someone is definitely peeing right now."

I eventually came to the realization that Jenny McCarthy and Bill Bellamy weren't alone in making these college kids do ridiculous things for cheap T-shirts. They had an ally by the name of alcohol on their side. In spite of the fact that beer meant more to MTV's Spring Break than the 25-point basket meant to Rock n' Jock Basketball, it's become difficult to ignore the network's increasing influence on the entire over-hyped Spring Break experience.

Besides, if they had me, a pale fifth grader years away from discovering the glory that is Bud Light, sold on Panama City Beach (the Hampton Beach of the South), then clearly they were doing something right.

Like most middle school-aged boys, the five-show rotation had me glued to the television like a toddler watching "Blue's Clues."

Unfortunately, college has a natural progression that tends to put Spring Break on the backburner for a while. When it comes to freshman year, the week off in March is all about going home and devoting the following percentages of time to these respective activities:

30 percent hanging out with friends you probably won't talk to in five years, 30 percent wishing so-and-so's Spring Break coincided with yours so you two could hook up for old time's sake, 30 percent talking to friends from school on Instant Messenger about why you can't wait to come back, 10 percent asking parents for money, and 0 percent doing assigned homework.

Add to this the fact that we college students (at least those of us who aren't drug dealers) have a net yearly income of negative $426, and it's easy to see why the Spring Break opportunity usually doesn't present itself until junior or senior year. Unless, of course, you're me, in which case you wait until your second year of graduate school to take the trip of a lifetime. So if you ever decide to do a tour of the Southwestern United States (L.A., San Diego, Tijuana, Las Vegas), here are a few things to remember.

Everything you've heard about Tijuana is true. Taking the trolley across the border is like a successful trip to the gym. You go there, do what you have to do, enjoy yourself to a certain extent, and when you get home you have an uncontrollable urge to shower … with bleach.

Also, do not ask a cab driver to take you "somewhere fun" after midnight, otherwise there's a 75 percent chance you'll be forced to use your Spanish minor for the first time in three years to come up with the proper phrase for, "Excuse me prostitute, would you please get off my roommate's lap. He's wearing my pants." And keep in mind that if you've been to Tijuana, it doesn't mean you've been to Mexico. Just like if you've been to Worcester, it doesn't mean you've been to Massachusetts.

When it comes to Las Vegas, everyone knows about the casinos, the impersonators, the Bellagio Fountains, and the illegal immigrants silently handing out XXX fliers to no one in particular. But the real beauty of Vegas lies in the people you meet along the way.

Talk to the couple from Spokane at your roulette table to find out why they only bet on numbers relevant to Nascar. Have a conversation with a five o'clock-shadowed dude who's clearly on a huge losing streak at a casino sports book. If you play your cards right, you might just meet a racist Israeli cab driver, who not only is a proponent of women's rights, but was also fired from his previous job because everyone else is a racist. I know I did, and I wouldn't trade the experience for the world.

Matt Brochu is a Collegian columnist.

Apply to be a columnist, or submit a column for our Graduation Guide!

Deadline is April 23rd

email: editorial@dailycollegian.com

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

ARTS & LIVING

THURSDAY, APRIL 6, 2006

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Three Cheers for 'Three Burials'

Jones directs with guns blazing

By Peter Frisman
Collegian Staff

Perhaps it's written somewhere that westerns are by definition period pieces set in the 19th to early-20th centuries, but it's a good thing Tommy Lee Jones and Guillermo Arriaga never came across such a text. "The Three Burials of Melquiades Estrada," written by Arriaga and directed by Jones, is a modern-day western, and one that manages to keep the ideals of the genre intact.

A couple from Cincinnati, violence-prone Mike Norton (Barry Pepper) and his blasé wife (January Jones) move to Texas for Mike's new job as a border patrolman. Mike soon ends on the wrong side of peers and decides to bury the body of a Mexican he accidentally shot rather than face the consequences. The body is found and ranch foreman Pete Perkins (Tommy Lee Jones) realizes it is of his friend Melquiades (Julio Cedillo). After the racist local law enforcement (Dwight Yoakam) proves to be of little help in solving the homicide, Perkins solves it himself and forces Mike at gunpoint to exhume Estrada's corpse once again and bury it in his hometown as per the deceased's wishes. Spanning the film are flashbacks to Perkins introducing his Mexican friend to the joys of America, in keeping with Arriaga's trademark nonlinear style.

At first, Perkins seems the quintessential western hero, willing to risk death to avenge his friends and take the law into his own hands if need be. Soon, however, elements of father and holy fool begin to surface in his character. Not quite Quixote, he is fully aware of the realities surrounding him, and fights a constant battle not to let himself feel discouraged by his inability to change them.

Much of his persona is made evident during the journey to Estrada's hometown, his captive Norton in tow. Perkin's relationship towards Norton gradually evolves from enemy to judge to disciplinarian. Perkins tries to see through his anger at what has occurred and makes an effort to help Norton see the error of his ways, less like a social worker helping a troubled youth than a father sending his son to the time-out chair. Meanwhile, Perkins reexamines his own misdeeds and questions his right to pass judgment.

Interestingly, "Three Burials," with its story of everyday people driven to seek justice for others, its rural setting, and its level of closure concerning its main character, bears a sharp resemblance to "The Pledge," a sadly overlooked film directed by another person known primarily as a skilled actor. But while Jack Nicholson's character strived for justice because his immortal soul indirectly hung in the balance, Pete Perkins is motivated by the wellbeing of his conscience and sense of duty to his friend. Whether such motivations are less selfish is up for debate.

However, aside from the characters' motivations and relationships, I doubt any further analysis of "The Three Burials of Melquiades Estrada" would be very beneficial, much less necessary. The elegance of this film is in its simplicity; a story of honor, justice, and redemption. As one would be ill-advised to look deeper into a confession of having eaten the plums that were being saved for breakfast, the film is best enjoyed simply watched and absorbed. "Three Burials" may not fit the strictest definition of a western, but it's likely that this film is in no need of a genre identifier to affirm its intentions.

'The Three Burials of Melquiades Estrada'
Directed by Tommy Lee Jones
Starring Tommy Lee Jones, Julio Cedillo
Sony Pictures Classics
Rated R
121 mins.
Grade A

Not holding back: Musicians take aim at Bush administration

By Dan DeLuca
Knight-Ridder Newspapers

With the war in Iraq in its fourth year and President Bush's approval ratings at record lows, protesting pop stars are cocksure enough to aim their roundhouses directly at Dubya's chin. When mainstream country acts like Tim McGraw and Faith Hill — who called out Bush over his handling of the Hurricane Katrina cleanup last month — are taking shots at you, you know there's erosion in your Red State fan base.

Further cases in point:

Flaming Lips leader Wayne Coyne usually comes off as the quintessence of post-punk positivity — keenly aware of the horrors of modern life, yet blissful. And he's fond of surrounding himself on stage with grown men in bunny suits.

But on the Lips' terrific new album, "At War With the Mystics," he's in a scrappy mood. The lead track, "Yeah Yeah Yeah Song," which does not appear to have anything to do with Karen O of the Yeah Yeah Yeahs, is a pointed tale about absolute power's tendency to corrupt absolutely, on a personal and political level. And on "Haven't Got a Clue," a typically wacky, snappy Lips arrangement frames fighting words about the Prez: "Every time you state your case," Coyne sings, "It makes me want to punch your face."

Former Smiths leader Morrissey, who was introduced at the South by Southwest Music Festival last month as "The World's Greatest Living Englishman," also has an excellent new album. Its title, "Ringleader of the Tormentors," may or may not refer to the American chief executive he's never minced words about. In 2004, Morrissey was interrogated by the FBI after he told an audience that "Bush should have died, not Reagan." On Ringleader's first cut, "I Will See You in Far Off Places," he promises he will one day meet up with his beloved, but only "if God bestows protection upon you/And if the U.S.A. doesn't bomb you."

The Dixie Chicks' new album, "Taking the Long Way" — intriguingly, produced by Johnny Cash and Red Hot Chili Peppers collaborator Rick Rubin — doesn't come out until May 23. But the country trio has sent out a proactive message that they're not planning on shrinking from the controversy created when, in the March 2003 run-up to the war, singer Natalie Maines told a London audience: "Just so you know, we're ashamed the president of the United States is from Texas."

The album's first single, "Not Ready to Make Nice," was released to radio stations last week, and though it's not commercially available, it can be heard at www.dixiechicks.com.

The song is unapologetic: "It's too late to make it right/Don't know if I would if I could/'Cause I'm mad as hell/Can't bring myself to do what it is you think I should."

Not the most elegant lyric, but we get the idea: with the president stumbling, oppositional pop singers are eager — and unafraid — to hit him hard.

It was a bad week for country music with the deaths, within days, of Buck Owens and Cindy Walker, two classic songwriters.

In "Lookin' Out My Back Door," John Fogerty made "listenin' to Buck Owens" sound like one of life's sublime pleasures. Owens, who was 76, was a giant. The corporate television show "Hee Haw" — though nothing to be ashamed of — obscures his achievement. As does this detail dropped into the first paragraph of his obituary: His song "Act Naturally" was turned into a hit by the Beatles.

All well and good, but it was Owens' invention of the electrified Bakersfield sound — and his run of 15 straight No. 1 hits in the '60s with the Buckaroos, featuring guitarist and fiddler Don Rich that cut through the string-laden Nashville dross of his era. Rhino's 1992 "The Buck Owens Collection" is the place for the essential hits, from "Above and Beyond" to "Waitin' in Your Welfare Line." His original albums are out on the Sundazed label, along with a couple of excellent Christmas collections.

Still writing at the time of her death, at 87, Walker had been around long enough to have her songs covered by Bing Crosby, Elvis Presley and Roy Orbison ("Dream Baby (How Long Must I Dream)"), as well as having written dozens for Western swing king Bob Wills. The best known, a hit for Eddy Arnold, Ray Charles and Mickey Gilley, is also the title song of Willie Nelson's new "You Don't Know Me: The Songs of Cindy Walker." It's both Nelson's best album in quite a while, and a well-timed tribute to the woman who, alongside Dolly Parton, stands as the greatest of female country songwriters.

Flaming Lips leader Wayne Coyne along with various other musicians are addressing politics with biting lyrics to spark change for the future.

Coffee overload: Heart attack risk

By Lisa Roberts
The Orlando Sentinel

There's a lot of buzz lately about caffeine, from studies about how it affects health to new super-octane beverages that pledge to give you a morning boost, improve your athletic performance and help you lose weight. Caffeine has even made the leap to soap (it's absorbed through the skin, according to its manufacturer), gum and pancake syrup.

As products proliferate and the caffeine gauge edges higher, a question begs to be answered: How much caffeine can we take?

Caffeine is a central-nervous-system stimulant that occurs naturally in at least 63 plants. When ingested, it blocks adenosine, a chemical that slows brain activity. That results in alertness and heightened concentration. The effect peaks in 30 to 60 minutes, then tapers off.

Published data shows the per-capita consumption level of caffeine for the average adult is approximately 200 milligrams daily. The average child consumes much less caffeine — only one-quarter of the caffeine consumed by adults.

Most health-care professionals consider about 250 to 300 milligrams to be a moderate daily dose. Go beyond that, and you may feel shaky, jittery or anxious and have trouble concentrating or sleeping, says Cynthia Sass, a registered dietitian in Tampa, Fla. You also could temporarily suffer from elevated blood pressure or an irregular heartbeat.

There's probably no reason for alarm if you consume moderate amounts of caffeine, though. "Luckily, research shows that the danger and risks [of caffeine] seem to be very minimal, even when consumed in large amounts," says Dr. George Everett, who practices internal medicine at Orlando Regional Healthcare. "Generally speaking, it's pretty innocuous." Those with heart disease and high blood pressure, though, should watch their intake.

Caffeine is one of the most-studied ingredients in the United States, according to the Food and Drug Administration, which declared it generally safe in 1958. While science has cleared it of contributing to things such as bone loss, birth defects and chronic hypertension, use of the substance still may have ramifications. For instance, a study released this month suggested that a genetic trait that slows the metabolism of caffeine might increase the risk of heart attacks.

Reaction to caffeine usually is dictated by such factors as an individual's size and how much he or she regularly consumes, Everett says. Larger people can tolerate more caffeine than smaller ones, and an infrequent caffeine user is more likely to react strongly than one who uses it daily. Quitting caffeine suddenly can lead to painful withdrawal, with symptoms including a migraine-like headache, inability to concentrate, nausea and irritability.

During the last decade, the popularity of caffeinated energy drinks — such as Jolt, Vault, SoBe Adrenaline Rush and Full Throttle — has increased dramatically. According to MarketResearch.com, this market segment grew 700 percent between 2000 and 2005.

Jolene Guichard, who works at a 7-Eleven in downtown Orlando, Fla., has a 16-ounce Monster energy drink on weekdays to help propel her through her busy life, which includes attending classes at Mid-Florida Tech, Orlando, and keeping up with her three children, ages 3 to 7.

"It gives me a nice big boost, like drinking three or four cups of coffee in an hour, but it lasts for eight hours," she says. She used to drink coffee, "but this tastes better."

The energy drinks' actual caffeine content is usually lower than a weak cup of coffee, which has about 85 milligrams. Coca-Cola's Full Throttle, for instance, has 72 milligrams per 8 ounces. Energy-drink manufacturers, however, usually pair the ingredient with things such as sugar, herbal stimulants (guarana and ginseng), and taurine, an amino acid that enhances the effect of caffeine.

"When you put in these multiple things, they have a synergistic affect," says Cynthia Sass, a registered dietitian who teaches at the University of South Florida. Some of her students who have consumed the drinks during all-night drives or studying marathons report having felt shaky, with rubbery legs and pounding hearts, she says.

Though some energy drinks are marketed to athletes, "I really don't think most active, fit adults need the extra calories" they deliver, says Christine Gerbstadt, a doctor and an American Dietetic Association spokeswoman. "Most people are not active enough to burn off the excess ingredients." As for additives such as taurine, "you'd be better off eating a hard-cooked egg or a handful of nuts and getting a better-balanced protein."

That's not to say caffeine can't enhance performance. Small doses, taken along with sugar, "do give you improved performance," she says.

Too much caffeine, though, can lead to a loss of the focus and concentration that is essential to performance, says Gerbstadt, a marathon runner who uses it with glucose during races.

How much is in 1 cup?

Because caffeine has no nutritional value, the FDA doesn't require that it be listed on product labels. And if the stimulant occurs naturally in a product — as it does, say, in a coffee bean — it doesn't have to be listed as an ingredient.

The FDA recommends calling a product's manufacturer to learn its caffeine content. Some Web sites also can help you tally your intake. The Mayo Clinic's Web site (mayoclinic.com), for instance, provides the caffeine content of popular energy and soft drinks.

Caffeine content is harder to determine in a cup of coffee. In a study released in 2003, University of Florida scientists measured the substance in 16-ounce cups of coffee purchased over six days from Starbucks outlets and found it was from 250 milligrams to 564 milligrams. Chris Gimbl, a Starbucks spokeswoman, says a 16-ounce cup of the company's coffee has about 260 milligrams, though it may vary with the variety of coffee, where it is grown, and how it is roasted, brewed and ground.

Jazz giant Jackie McLean dies

By Mark Stryker
Detroit Free Press

There was nothing in jazz like the sugar-free sound of alto saxophonist Jackie McLean, who died last week at his home in Hartford, Conn., at age 74.

McLean produced a searing, anguished wail that rode the sharp side of the pitch like a cowboy trying to tame a wild steer. Even those of us who worship McLean recognize that his acidic tone and slippery tuning are not to everyone's taste. But for true believers, McLean's bittersweet sound remains one of the most soulful cries in American music, and the hot-blooded intensity of his style manifests the same urgent quest for self-expression that made us fall in love with jazz in the first place.

McLean's music was rarely pretty by conventional standards, but it was profoundly honest. In a society that rewards prepackaged stars and false emotion, McLean was the real deal: a beacon for truth, justice, individuality and the blues.

McLean was also a cultural warrior who inspired cult devotion. Acolytes packed his performances, their mouths agape at the gale force of his attack. I once drove hundreds of miles to hear him in Chicago, where I happened to meet Detroit pianist Kenn Cox outside the club. I was first in line; Cox was second.

Part of McLean's allure was his pedigree. He was one of the last direct links to the mid-20th century bebop innovators, his mentors defining geniuses of the age — alto saxophonist Charlie Parker, pianists Bud Powell and Thelonious Monk, and trumpeter Miles Davis. Harlem-born, McLean was given an alto for his 15th birthday. Soon he was studying with Powell, working small jobs with Monk and sharing the bandstand with Parker. At age 20 he was working and recording with Davis.

In the mid '50s there were stints with bassist Charles Mingus and drummer Art Blakey, though McLean was still so enthralled with Parker's style that Mingus often challenged him: "Jackie, you have your own sound. Now why don't you look for your own ideas."

McLean soon found them, absorbing Parker's rhythmic phrasing and fervor into his own angular phrasing and tart melodic vocabulary. A stirring of Blue Note LPs starting in 1959 document his early maturity — "Jackie's Bag," "Swing, Swang, Swingin'," "A Fickle Sonance" and "Bluesnik."

Then the story takes a surprising twist. While many of his contemporaries turned a cold shoulder to the avant-garde in the '60s, McLean, in a firm act of artistic bravery, embraced it. He reinvented himself, grafting expressionistic, modal forms onto his bop roots, expanding his compositional palette and forming bands around young vanguard musicians.

"The new breed has inspired me all over again," McLean wrote in 1962. The titles of his LPs reflect the exploratory spirit of the space age and the heat of the civil rights era: "Let Freedom Ring," "One Step Beyond," "Destination Out," "It's Time," "Right Now."

That McLean was able to reshape his destiny is remarkable given that he was still struggling with heroin addiction, which he had picked up as a teenager. McLean eventually kicked his habit and in 1970 began a long teaching career at the University of Hartford. He and his wife, Dollie, became community leaders, founding the Artists Collective, a Hartford cultural center for city youth.

When McLean resumed performing in earnest around 1990, his playing had progressed again — his technique was suppler, his sound richer and the sweep of his conception registered a new found majesty. You can hear it on the brilliant "Dynasty" (Triloka), which includes an impassioned reading of "A House is Not a Home," a saccharine Burt Bacharach ballad McLean transforms into a transcendent anthem.

If there is a lot of hurt still in McLean's sound, there is an equal amount of triumph. His solo is about overcoming adversity. The struggle is audible. Stuttering phrases explode in delirious bursts of lyricism. McLean was never sentimental, but he was a romantic.

McLean's sound hit me like a bolt of lightning when I was a kid studying the alto. Just as he once wanted to be Charlie Parker, I wanted to be Jackie McLean. My bands played his tunes, a fact that delighted McLean when I met him that night in Chicago when I was first in line. I spoke with him several times over the years, and his warmth, integrity and humanity always moved me.

Like most McLean freaks, I have a hard time relating to those who don't get him. Years ago a saxophonist told me someone said his sound resembled McLean. He didn't know McLean's music, so he borrowed a record from the library. Turned out he didn't dig it.

All I could say was, "I'm sorry."

Seen here with his alto saxophone, Jackie McLean was known for his hot-blooded intensity and presence.

Masters field tested; Woods fights adversity

A longer Masters track draws criticism: bigger hitters have advantage

By Doug Ferguson
Associated Press

AUGUSTA, Ga. — One by one, players trudged up the hill leading to the clubhouse at Augusta National, then paused and gazed back at a course that by now they should know all too well.

But this Masters seems to contain more mystery than ever.

Part of that is the sheer length. The tees were pushed back on six holes, stretching the course to 7,445 yards, the second-longest course in major championship history behind Whistling Straits (7,514 yards) two years ago at the PGA Championship.

The par-3 fourth hole now is 240 yards, requiring most players to hit fairway metal, and some players to hit a driver. The par-4 11th is 505 yards, with trees to the right of the landing area and a pond to the left of the green ready to swallow up any mistake.

Masters chairman Hootie Johnson vigorously defended the changes Wednesday, especially at No. 11, pointing out that Bobby Jones intended the second shot to be played with a 3-iron or more.

"He [Jones] probably was hitting into a green that ran at 2 on the Stimpmeter," said Retief Goosen. "The condition of the greens now are different than they were in the 1900s. You hit a 3-iron on the front of that green, it rolls off into the water."

And then there's the weather.

Azaleas and dogwoods are blazing even brighter under a warm sun. The tightly mown grass beneath the feet is firm, not slippery. Not since 2001 has the Masters been contested over four days in relatively dry, fast conditions. That's a significant date, because serious expansion at Augusta National didn't start until the next year.

"We haven't really played many Masters with dry conditions yet," Ernie Els said. "We might find out this week."

The final day of practice revealed some potential problems, with wedge shots bouncing hard off the green, then crawling endlessly until they were off the putting surface. And it doesn't take much to make a mistake around here.

Then again, Goosen said some of the longer holes were playing shorter than recent years because of the firm ground that allowed tee shots to roll. He cited No. 9, where he hit a big drive and a sand wedge, compared with a driver and a 7-iron last year in soft conditions. What will it take to win?

"I don't see anyone in double figures," Goosen said, adding that he would take 4 under par and like his chances.

This is the 40-year anniversary of Jack Nicklaus winning the Masters at even-par 288, the last champion who wasn't under par.

That's a possibility this week.

This also is the 20-year anniversary of Nicklaus shooting 30 on the back nine to win his sixth green jacket.

On this course, that seems unlikely.

Nicklaus returned to play in the Par 3 contest. He met with the press Wednesday morning, took his customary seat and pretended to go over his round, as he had done for so many years.

"First hole, I hit a driver, 3-wood and a 7-iron," Nicklaus said as the room broke out in laughter.

Johnson said the reason for the change was to keep the course current with modern equipment and the modern player. His hope is that players will be using roughly the same clubs as Arnold Palmer, Nicklaus and Tom Watson during their prime.

As far as Gary Player is concerned, it's working.

"I'm using exactly the same clubs, other than No. 4," said Player, at 70 the oldest player in the 91-man field. "I was brainwashed into believing it would be abnormal with all the changes. But we're hitting the same club Jack Nicklaus did. I remember Jack hitting 5-iron on No. 11. The greens weren't as fast, but the fairways were lousy."

Answers should start arriving Thursday when the 70th Masters gets under way.

"I think everybody wants to see what will happen, what the winning score will be," Weir said. "I think single digits, for sure. On Monday, I said 8 under would win. But I forgot how much the course changes day to day. Now, I'm thinking 5 or 6 under."

If the Masters wants to go back in time, some fear it has lost a little of the character that set it apart from other majors.

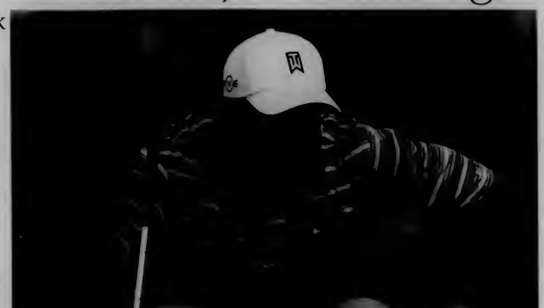
Perhaps no other course is such an endless source of theater, whether it was the back-nine charge of Nicklaus, the implosion of Greg Norman in the final round 10 years ago when he lost a six-shot lead, or spectacular duels like Phil Mickelson and Ernie Els two years ago.

"The drama never ceases," Palmer said. "For one thing or another, it rattles the cages of everybody."

The cages are rattled, all right, and this before a shot has been struck.

Suddenly, par doesn't seem like such a bad score.

"It used to be a fun week. Now it's a grinding week," Goosen said. "The Masters is now like the U.S. Open — even tougher on the mind than the U.S. Open."



The final mystery is who emerges as the winner.

All eyes are on Woods, as usual, who will try to become the first player to twice went back-to-back titles. He already has won three times this year (once on the European tour), although some question whether he will be distracted by his cancer-stricken father who did not make the trip to Augusta for the first time.

No one paid much attention to Mickelson, winless the first three months of the season for only the third time in his career. That was before winning by 13 shots last week at the BellSouth Classic by using two drivers.

Most believe the Masters favors the big hitters. Then again, this Masters might be different.

"We haven't really played Augusta the last five, six years in very firm, fast conditions," Els said. "We haven't played a new course, so to speak, in firm, fast conditions. There's going to be a mix of players in there."

The Augusta National golf course was lengthened to a monstrous 7,445 yards this year to provide a stiffer challenge to a stronger field. Tiger Woods, one of the longer hitters on tour, will be helped by the longer course.

Woods' father fighting cancer

By Tim Dahlberg
Associated Press

AUGUSTA, Ga. — Tiger Woods has memories at the Masters that have nothing to do with green jackets, blooming azaleas or spectacular chip-ins.

They're memories of hugs, tears, evenings spent together — memories of a few well-chosen words of support.

He talks about them only grudgingly because he would prefer they remain private. The questions come anyway because, after all, he is Tiger Woods.

His father is home in California, his body ravaged by cancer. Earl Woods is the toughest man his son knows, but even the tough old Green Beret isn't going to win this one.

Woods won't discuss the details — would rather not talk about it publicly at all, if given the preference. It's a family matter, and family matters most.

"Everyone who has had a family member or lived that long, you're going to deal with it sometime," Woods said Tuesday. "Unfortunately, it's our time right now."

The timing couldn't be worse. Not because Woods is favored to win a fifth Masters, but because of what the annual spring week in Augusta has always meant to both father and his famous son.

This is where Tiger romped to his first major win as a 21-year-old, then tearfully embraced the man who helped make it possible as he walked off the 18th green. Earl Woods wasn't supposed to be here that year, wasn't supposed to be anywhere after barely making it through a difficult heart bypass surgery before the tournament.

He came, though, and gave his son a putting lesson that helped him win by 12 shots in a victory that was historic for far more than just the winning margin.

Earl Woods came last year, too, sharing time with his son and his son's new bride even though he was too ill to make it to the course. Woods won a playoff with Chris DiMarco, then rushed home to share it with his dad.

"Every year that I've been lucky enough to win this tournament, my dad's been there to give me a big hug. And today, he wasn't there," Woods said then, his voice cracking and his eyes filling with tears. "I can't wait to get home and see him, and give him a big bear hug."

Earl Woods got that hug. He'll have to wait a little longer for another.

For the first time since Woods first played here as an amateur, his father won't be in Augusta. He was too ill to travel, so ill that Woods left after a practice round at the Player's Championship last month and flew to California to spend a few hours with him.

Woods surprised his father that day, who greeted his son by saying, "What the hell are you doing here?"

To Tiger, that was a good sign. It meant his father hadn't given up.

Earl Woods would have wanted his son to stay in Florida and focus on the task at hand. This was the man who taught Tiger concentration, gave him his competitiveness as he raised him from his high chair with a golf club in his hand.

This was the man who devoted his life to making his son the best.

"I knew Tiger was special the day he was born," Earl Woods said a few years ago.

Earl Woods raised the greatest player in the game. Perhaps more important, he raised a son who loves him deeply.

The bond between father and son was evident in the few glimpses allowed the public. It runs a lot deeper in private, which makes it these times even harder.

"It's always been family first," Woods said. "For me, it's awfully tough. It's hard for my mom as well and everyone who knows my father."

Woods played poorly at the Player's Championship, and sprayed the ball around in a practice round Tuesday. But it's not in his nature to use the distraction of his father's illness as an excuse, and he has won three times this year with the same things weighing on his mind.

He'll tee off Thursday as the favorite to win his fifth Masters in 10 tries as a professional. At this rate, Woods going to fulfill the prophecy of Jack Nicklaus, who predicted at the time of Tiger's first win that Woods would win more green jackets than the 10 that he and Arnold Palmer had combined.

Woods is already the greatest player of his time. In a few more years he'll likely be recognized as the greatest player ever.

But Woods has become more than just the dominant player his father raised him to be. He's a cultural icon, a player who transcends the game and a billionaire in the making.

www.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.com

www.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.com

Congratulations Graduates
from your Alumni Association!
Stop by Memorial Hall for your FREE graduation gift and your chance to win $1,000 CASH!
Join your Alumni Association for only $20 (regularly $40) and get...
- Alumni Career Services
- Kaplan Test Prep Discounts
- Alumni Networking Opportunities
- Student Loan Consolidation
and more!
UMassAlumni.com
You were. You are. UMASS.

summer SLEEPOVER SALE
CHEAP R/T AIRFARE
LONDON from $261*
PARIS from $360*
PRAGUE from $392*
HOSTEL HOOKUP HOSTELS
$19*
BERLIN, DUBLIN, LONDON, RIO DE JANEIRO, MADRID, SYDNEY, VANCOUVER, MELBOURNE GOOD VIBRATIONS HOTELS
$29*
CAIRNS, MUNICH, MELBOURNE, PRAGUE, PARIS, QUEENSTOWN, MADRID, MIAMI, HONG KONG BEDS WITH BENEFITS HOTELS
$39*
HONG KONG, PRAGUE, SYDNEY, MADRID, BERLIN, CAPE TOWN, NEW YORK, PARIS, SAN FRANCISCO
*Hurry! Hotel/hostel sale ends 4/17/06. Prices are per person, per night. Some restrictions apply. Airfare is correct at time of print and out of Boston. Taxes and applicable fees not included. CST #1017580-40
Call or come in to book now:
U of M Campus Center, Rm. 224
(413) 256.1261
STA TRAVEL
www.statravel.com

Augustus goes first in draft

By Donna Tommielleo
Associated Press

BOSTON — Seimone Augustus ran the gamut of emotions this weekend in Boston.

Hoping to win the NCAA women's title with LSU, the nation's leading scorer and the Lady Tigers were ousted in the national semifinal Sunday night by Duke. Three days later, Augustus was back on top as the No. 1 pick in the WNBA draft.

LSU's go-to player is going to Minnesota.

"After the semifinal loss, I mainly went back to my room and read books to try to keep my mind off of what just happened," Augustus said. "Once I got with the WNBA staff, it was focusing on trying to be prepared for the draft, getting ready for my career and my future."

The two-time AP Player of the Year led the nation in scoring with 23 points a game. She also led the Lady Tigers to three straight Final Fours.

Rutgers' guard Cappie Pondexter was selected second by the Phoenix Mercury. Duke's Monique Currie was the third pick taken by the Charlotte Sting. Duke fell short in the NCAA title game Tuesday night, losing to Maryland in overtime.

Baylor's Sophia Young was chosen by the San Antonio Silver Stars, and the Los Angeles Sparks took UCLA's Lisa Willis to round out the top five.

Augustus used her fluid jump shot to put up impressive numbers from the moment she stepped on campus, a Baton Rouge high school star hailed as the biggest recruiting catch in LSU history.

She scored 27 points in her debut against Arizona and has scored in double figures an NCAA-record 132 times in her 140 games. She finished her career with 2,702 points.

Instead of carrying a team, Augustus is looking forward to fitting in as a rookie in the WNBA.

"I kind of relate it back to my freshman year coming into college. You have to get into that comfort zone," she said. "You learn your teammates, learn their personalities and see where you fit in. You just have to use that year to get yourself together, get your thoughts together and your mindset ready for this professional league."

The Lynx finished 14-20 last season and won the league's draft lottery to gain the No. 1 pick. By trading All-Star Katie Smith to the Detroit Shock last summer, the Lynx acquired an extra first-round selection, the seventh overall.

Lynx coach Suzie McConnell Serio said team officials had their minds made up about Augustus long ago.

"She just separated herself from the rest of her senior class," McConnell Serio said. "Nobody's been able to stop her, but when they've contained her they've sent double and triple teams at her, leaving other players open on the floor."

Pondexter will join a backcourt that includes All-Star Diana Taurasi. Pondexter, a 5-9 Chicago native, has sported a WNBA tattoo on her arm since high school in anticipation of this day.

"It's just overwhelming just knowing your dream is here in front of you," Pondexter. "I've admired Taurasi for a long time, and just to have the opportunity to play with her, I think I will learn a lot."

Pondexter averaged 21 points this season and led the Scarlet Knights to two straight regular-season Big East titles.

New Mercury coach Paul Westhead said he's looking forward to pairing the two scorers in his up-tempo offense. The Mercury selected Taurasi first overall in 2004.

"I think Cappie will easily complement Diana Taurasi, and I know 'D' is going to help Cappie because she'll take some of the heat off her," Westhead said.

The draft capped a whirlwind weekend for many of the new professionals. Currie was across town on the floor of TD Banknorth Garden around midnight trying to help win Duke's first national title. The Blue Devils lost 78-75 in overtime to Maryland.

Currie, who came back for a fifth year for a shot at the title, scored 22 points.

"There hasn't been any time really to reflect on everything that has happened over the past day," Currie said. "I'm extremely happy, and very happy to be going to Charlotte. My college career didn't end like I wanted it to end, but I'm taking the next step and am looking forward to what the future holds for me."

"She's a very explosive player," said Sting coach Muggsy Bogues. "She's already a scorer. You don't have to teach her much on the perimeter."

Currie could also help boost ticket sales for the Sting by giving them a player with local appeal for their first season in a new downtown arena.

Young helped lead the Bears to their first NCAA title last year and averaged 17.8 points and 9.8 rebounds in college.

A relative newcomer to the game, she came to the United States seven years ago from a tiny Caribbean island of St. Vincent, with hopes of refining her basketball skills. The 6-1 forward had the biggest game of her life in the 2005 title win against Michigan State with 26 points and nine rebounds, and was named the Final Four's most outstanding player.

"It has been such a remarkable journey," she said. "I just took this opportunity and didn't know what I had in store. The [WNBA] is something you look forward to since you are a little girl and now that it is finally here, it's excitement mixed with nervousness."

Willis, a 5-11 guard, is the Bruins' all-time 3-pointer shooter [186]. The Sparks had the fifth pick because of an offseason trade with Washington that sent Nikki Teasley to the Mystics for Temeka Johnson and Murriel Page.

Celebrating its 10th year, the league held the draft the day after the women's NCAA Final Four in the same city as the championship for the first time. Previous drafts were held at the NBA studios in Secaucus, N.J.

There were three rounds in Wednesday's draft and 42 picks overall.

LSU forward Seimone Augustus was picked first in this year's WNBA draft. The LSU Tigers bowed out in the semifinals of the 2006 NCAA Tournament.

Cheever comeback suprised many racers

By Mike Harris
Associated Press

Eddie Cheever believed for a while that there was a lot more to life than driving a race car.

For the past three years, his days of waking every morning to face a two-hour workout in the gym and eating carefully and sparingly to stay in shape to drive a race car were only a memory.

"For three years, I was just taking care of my business interests and I developed a lovely habit of drinking 15 espressos a day," said Cheever, who continued as owner of Cheever Racing after deciding to leave the IndyCar cockpit at the end of the 2002 season. "I drank more than my share of distilled sugar, too, and I had a lot of great meals. I gained 25 pounds."

That's why it is so surprising that Cheever, now 48, is back in the IRL IndyCar Series this season, driving his team's No. 51 Honda-powered Dallara for at least the first four races of the season, culminating with the Indianapolis 500.

"I can't really give you a reason why I'm doing this, except to say that I had the opportunity and decided to take it," Cheever said last Saturday morning, sitting in a hospitality tent next to the temporary street circuit where he finished 11th the next day, a lap behind winner Helio Castroneves.

As he pushed one egg on a muffin around his plate, eating small nibbles, Cheever spoke about his comeback.

"Under normal circumstances, a team would spend the whole winter testing and preparing for the upcoming season," he said. "A month ago, all the cars were on stands, they had no engines and they hadn't been worked on. We did all of this in a hurry.

"It is kind of mission impossible. We're doing all of our testing at the races during race weekend, so we're getting up to speed slow. I'm not rubbing off the rust, I'm knocking it off with a hammer."

It hasn't been easy, physically, either.

"The first time I sat in a race car, which was at Daytona [in a January test] in the Grand Am [sports car], after three laps I was out of breath.

"I'm putting a lot of time and effort into getting this organized properly," Cheever added. "I have no intention of just participating. So I've started an intense training program and I've lost 20 of the 30 pounds that I should lose. I've done more miles on a bicycle than I ever thought any human could possibly do. And I'd say I'm probably 60 percent there."

Two-time Indy winner Arie Luyendyk knows exactly what Cheever is going through.

Luyendyk retired following the 1999 Indy 500, but came back in 2001 to finish 13th at the age of 47. He tried to make the race again in 2003, but was injured in a crash during practice.

Luyendyk, who won Indy in 1990 and 1997, said coming back to race is not a business decision. "It's a matter of following your heart.

"What you have to ask yourself as a driver is 'Do I really want to do it?' Am I 100 percent behind that decision and do I have the passion to do it?' I did what he's doing now, coming back after a layoff, and it did not work for me. I never felt I was complete with the car, the team.

"Is it going to work for Eddie? You'll have to ask him after he's done with Indy."

Cheever has gotten to race but, unfortunately, neither the budget nor the timing allowed for testing before he started the IRL season at Homestead two weeks ago.

Until this year's Homestead opener, the only racing for Cheever since the season-ending Texas race three years ago had been an exhibition run last October in the Formula One Grand Masters in South Africa — racing against some of the drivers he competed against in F1 from 1978 through 1989 — and a Grand Am sports car race this February in Daytona.

At Homestead, Cheever finished 10th, four laps behind winner Sam Hornish Jr. It was a miserable day for the 1998 Indy 500 winner, and he'd rather not have any more like it.

"Twenty laps into the race at Homestead, I was starting to have talks with myself on the sanity of the decision [to return to racing]," Cheever explained. "But then I thought it would be the same no matter who I put in the car because you just can't turn up at a race and not test.

"The competition is too severe, the drivers are too good, the teams are too established. Somebody had to go through that grueling experience, though, and it might as well have been me."

He got through the difficult day on Homestead's 1.5-mile oval unscathed.

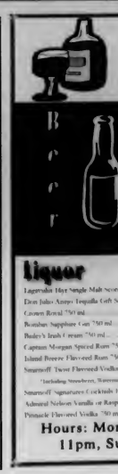
"It was a very ugly, long race for us, but it was a very good result," said Cheever, who also will race on the oval in Motegi, Japan, on April 22. "A lot of it depends on how quickly I can progress from here to Indy. I'm looking forward to getting [to] Indy because I can have an opportunity to do 10-12 days of testing before the race starts."

FUN, EXCITING AND EXHILARATING NOW QUALIFIES AS A JOB DESCRIPTION.

Bright? Outgoing? Energetic? Perfect. How about using your talents to help spread the word about Red Bull?

We're looking for personable and highly motivated people to join the Red Bull Mobile Energy Team. Your part-time job will be to hit the streets delivering energy wherever it's needed. At work, at school, at the gym, on the road, you'll go anywhere and everywhere in search of people who might be tired and in need of energy.

A couple of rules. You should be at least 18, have a good driving record and be able to work flexible hours, including weekends and the occasional evening. Bilingual would be a plus, but most importantly you should be charming and motivated.



If this sounds like fun, you can download an application at www.redbullmet.com.

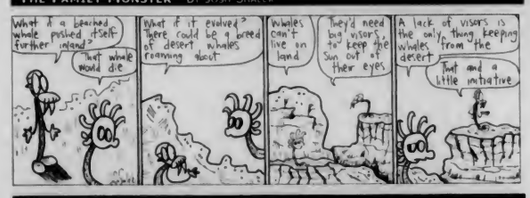
Red Bull ENERGY DRINK

comedy THIS SATURDAY!
CONNECTION
HUKELAU
413•593•5222
705 Memorial Drive in Chicopee
www.hukelau.com
ORDER YOUR TICKETS TODAY!
Star of TBS' "Minding The Store"
PAULY SHORE
Star of the movies "Encino Man," "Son-In-Law" and "Jury Duty"
APRIL 15TH
From the movie "The Longest Yard," NBC's "Saturday Night Live," "The Tracy Morgan Show" and Comedy Central's "Crank Yankers"
TRACY MORGAN

RAIN
3 Clubs/DJ's Under One Roof - Party Until 2:00 am
HOT BODY CONTEST
Every Thursday Night
18+ College Night
■ Weekly $100.00 for Top Male/$100.00 for Top Female
■ GRAND PRIZE: $500.00 cash & loads of Prizes for Top Male and Top Female
■ Cover Charge: 18+ with College ID $10.00 / 21+ $5.00
19+ WET & WILD FRIDAYS
Every Friday Night
$1 Draft Beers
Doors open at 9pm
Cover Charge: 19+ $10.00
21+ $5.00
Now Hiring: Bartenders, Waitstaff, Cashiers and Security Staff
10 Stearns Square - Springfield, MA 01103 - (413) 827-9000 - www.RainSpringfield.com

FOUR Seasons
WINE • LIQUOR • CIGARS
333 Russell St., Rt. 9
Hadley, MA 01035
584-8174
Sale date: 3/30/06 - 4/05/06
not responsible for typographical errors.
Liquor
Wine
Hours: Monday - Saturday 9am - 11pm, Sunday 12pm - 11pm

THE WIZARD OF BROOKLYN By Richard Martelly



ELSIE HOOPER By Robert D. Kryzkowski

JEFF, GOTE & GOAT By Grand Cerulo and Sean Mahan

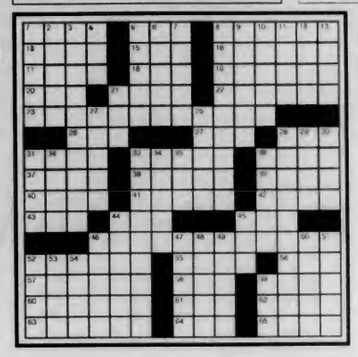
THE FAMILY MONSTER By Josh Shalek

PAUL By Billy O'Keefe

QUOTE OF THE DAY

"MTB is the lava lamp of the 1980s."

—Doug Ferrari



ACROSS
1 Art of the absurd
5 Help!
8 Moistened genetically
14 Utopian garden
15 Hole-making tool
16 To some extent
17 Too Proud to Beg
18 Even score
19 Thelma's partner
20 Spearheaded
21 Planted explosive
22 Sang merrily
23 Decisive moment
26 Morsel for Mr. Ed
27 Jazz enthusiast
28 Louis of boxing
31 Reuben shop
33 Film award
36 Actor Damon
37 Black Sea arm
38 Bewl out
39 "Do ___ others"
40 Strongly advise
41 Closing measures
42 Light gas
43 Wide inlet
44 Young seal
45 Piers Morgan person
46 Star spotters
52 Kind of cat
55 One woodwind
56 Full-house sign
57 Deep red gem
58 Bigwig letters
59 Knock senseless
60 Political exile
61 European high point
62 Acute
63 Go by again
64 Cunning
65 500-mi. event

DOWN
1 Handed out
2 So long to Yves
3 Study of trees
4 Picnic spoiler
5 Smooth fabric
6 Payable
7 REM situation
8 Pool-like game
9 Consecrate with oil
10 Ste. Marie
11 Piccadilly dilly
12 Mogadishu
13 Soaked in and
21 Cambridge sch.
24 Ingenuous
25 Florida city
28 "Emma" author
29 Italian eight
30 School in England
31 Amateurish painting
32 Book before Nehemiah
33 Kisses
34 Rifle attachment
35 Massachusetts cape
36 Writer H.H.
44 Rind removers
45 Cool down
46 Nuku'alofa's country
47 Stellar blasts
48 Short-term govt. investment
49 Too sentimental
50 Positioned accurately
51 Cher's ex
52 Teen follower?
53 Tom, Dick or Harry
54 Take hold of
59 E-ngly Chamonix

Find today's answers online
www.dailycollegian.com

The Moan and Dove
you probably think you're not a wanker.
but your wrong.
themoananddove.com
460 West St. • Rte. 116
Amherst, MA • 256-1710
3pm 'til 1am every day

BEST BAR AROUND
Seven O's
KARAOKE
EVERY WEDNESDAY
LIVE BAND
APRIL 7, 2006
ROCK 201
AT 9:00 PM
$4.00 PITCHER
SUNDERLAND, MA 01375
(413) 665-9588
2PM TO 1AM M-F
12PM TO 1AM SAT & SUN
NEXT TO CLIFFSIDE APTS.

HOROSCOPES

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
You would have a lot more friends if you didn't play so many video games.

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
There is no point in highlighting if you highlight everything.

aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
Don't worry, you will not be sick over the weekend.

taurus Apr. 20-May 20
You are wearing the cutest shirt today. Everyone is jealous.

gemini May 21-Jun. 21
Your favorite TV show is soon to be canceled.

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
You should really stop giving your phone number away to strangers.

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
You have very pretty handwriting! You will never be a doctor.

virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
At least when you move to California it won't be snowing in April.

libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22
If you eat a bagel today it won't count against your diet.

scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
Don't even bother looking at that test score. It will only make you depressed.

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Your mother will call at a very inconvenient time tonight.

capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
Stay away from the macaroni and cheese at the DC today.

Chicago Pizzaria Yes, We Deliver!
PIZZA - CALZONES - SUBS
SALADS - PASTA - DINNERS
RIBS - SEAFOOD - SLICES
PARTY PLATTERS NOW AVAILABLE!!
CALZONE SLICES... LIKE NO OTHER!
HOURS
Sun-Wed: 3pm-2am
Thurs-Sat: 3pm-3am
Order For DELIVERY or PICK-UP
(413) 549-6073
150 Fearing Street
Next to Patterson Dorm
Amherst, MA 01002

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

ANNOUNCEMENTS

THE WORLD HAS HAD ENOUGH of hunger, injustice and war. An extraordinary, enlightened World Teacher is here to help. Learn more: 888-242-8272 *Share-International.org

Be and do something bigger than yourself in college Learn, Lead, and Succeed Army ROTC www.umass.edu/armyrotc

Can you lead? Prove it with Army ROTC FREE MONEY For school Because we can! www.umassedu/armyrotc

APARTMENT FOR RENT

2 bedroom $1100 3 bedroom $1400 4 bedroom $2150 Now Accepting Applications 253-7377 millvalleyestates@winnco.com

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing, 1&2 bedroom apts. Leases begin June, July, Aug or Sep. First come, first serve. Get them while they last. www.brandywine-apts.com stop by or call 549-0600

28 Stockbridge St.: 4 bedroom house- 2 baths, living room, eat in kitchen, pantry, laundry, finished basement, yard, 2 car garage. 1.5 mi. to campus! $2,800/Mo www.amherst-lincolnrealty.com 253-7879

Belchertown 2BR available 3rd week of April or June 1. lease until July $350/month Jen 857-526-1716

EMPLOYMENT

Rent us your Ears! Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu Voicemail: 545-6837

EMPLOYMENT

Bicycle Mechanic/Sales Person needed in Northampton. Please call 584-1727 Ask for Bill.

PAINTERS NEEDED! Hundreds of positions available throughout New England. Work outside with your friends and family in your hometown. No experience needed, training provided. Join large student painting company this summer. Hiring now! 888-277-9787, www.collegepro.com

Fall 2006 Internships with the Student Legal Services Office. Get hands on experience in the legal field. Work directly with attorneys and clients. Earn 12 undergraduate credits. No experience necessary and training provided. Stop by the Student Legal Services Office at 922 Campus Center or call 545-1995

EMPLOYMENT

Summer Job June5-August 25, 2006 Teaching English and obtaining academic credits. Fees: $900 including tickets, travels and accommodations. Contact Ron Song at 203-407-0566 byrdinterco@aol.com

Counter Help part-time year round position must be fast, friendly, and extremely reliable Apply in person at the Woodstar Café 60 Masonic St. North Hampton

Summer Lifeguards, Managers, Camp Counselors, and Director positions open! Greenfield Recreation, 25 min. from Amherst. Apply now. Call (413) 772-1553.

Bartending $300/Day potential. No experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 x162

EMPLOYMENT

Northampton Retail Store. Applications for full-time, part-time and summer employment now being accepted. Prior retail experience a plus, but not necessary. Must be reliable, energetic and have good math and social skills. Depending upon position available, weekend and/or evening work may be involved. Generous employee discount. Call 413-652-2164 between 8:00am and 9:00pm.

HOUSE FOR RENT

Hadley, close to UMass 5 Bedroom home, large yard. Oil heat, Sept occupancy. 549-4270

SERVICES

Pentium Color laptops $99 We type term papers, resumes, cover letters. 413-584-8857

SERVICES

PREGNANCY TESTING, HIV TESTING, Birth-control, and Emergency Contraception. STI Screening and Treatment Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst 548-0002.

WANTED

EGG DONORS WANTED Help make a couple's dream of becoming parents come true by becoming an egg donor. Very generous compensation paid. Must be a non smoking female between the ages of 21 and 32. For more information, please visit our website at www.robertnicolsesq.com or contact Christine or Liz at 781-551-0600.

Collegian Advertising
Open M-F 8:30am-3:30am
Call (413) 545-3500

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS THURSDAY

THURSDAY, APRIL 6, 2006 — SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Forecast: Red Storm

By Dan Duggan
Collegian Staff

Following every game, regardless of the outcome, the focus of the Massachusetts men's lacrosse team is always squarely on its next opponent.

While it may sometimes be difficult for the Minutemen to immediately move on after a big win, they should have no problem putting last Saturday's 7-5 loss at Penn State behind them as they turn their attention to their next game, a clash at St. John's on Saturday at 1 p.m.

UMass coach Greg Cannella knows it can be tough to forget about close losses, but he expects the No. 10 Minutemen (6-2, 1-1 ECAC) to bounce back against the Red Storm.

"We have such high expectations of ourselves that [losing is] hard for everybody," Cannella said. "I think every team that plays goes out there and wants to win every game, and certainly these guys — and I include the coaches — have a lot of pride in what we do, so we were upset that we lost."

"With that said, you have to move on," he added. "You have no choice. Whether you win or lose, you can't treat it any differently because the next game is the most important game."

With polls and out-of-town scores so readily available to players via the Internet, Cannella says it is harder than ever to keep his team in tune with his one-game-at-a-time approach.

"It's incredible," Cannella said of the challenge of keeping his players focused. "It wasn't like that 10 or 15 years ago when I started in coaching, but it is [now]. You can't look at the scoreboard anymore when you play. You just have to say that the most important game on our schedule is this weekend and our goal, as it has been all year, is to play at the highest level we can. You can't change that."

It will be especially important for UMass to keep its focus on the road ahead, because it will not be an easy one. Of the Minutemen's final six games, every opponent but St. John's is ranked or receiving votes in the current USILA poll, and they will face two of those teams — No. 3 Georgetown and No. 15 Syracuse — on the road later this month.

Although St. John's (4-4, 0-2 ECAC) appears to be the weakest opponent UMass will play down the stretch, Cannella does not take any team lightly, as he feels that the success his program has achieved gives foes extra motivation to beat the Minutemen.

"We try to explain to our guys that it doesn't matter who we play now; whether they're No. 1 or No. 20 or whatever, they're all good teams and everybody wants to beat you just because of who you are," Cannella said.

"Regardless of what everyone else is doing, it's about us and how we approach things."

St. John's is led by a trio of sophomores who saw plenty of action in their freshman season. Attacker Tom Michaelsen leads the team with 23 points on 14 goals and nine assists, and is followed by midfielder Justin O'Donnell, who has scored 12 goals and added two assists for a total of 14 points. O'Donnell led the Red Storm with four goals in a 14-6 loss to UMass in last year's meeting.

The backbone of the Red Storm defense is goalie Dave Saccente. Saccente is 14th in the nation with a 6.9 goals-against average and his .586 save percentage is good for 19th.

"I don't think you can consider these guys young anymore with the experience they have," Cannella said. "They've played very well this year in all of their games. They've really improved on defense. They were great in the goal last year, and they're great in the goal this year. It's a solid team up and down."

UMass counters with its own impressive underclassman in the cage, freshman Doc Schneider. Schneider is seventh in the country with a .629 save percentage, and has only allowed one opponent to reach double digits this season.

"The defense has been consistent in their effort and Doc with his," Cannella said. "It's great to see a young guy be consistent and you just hope he can carry that throughout the year. I think anybody who approaches the game the way he does is going to be successful because it means so much to him."

Senior attacker Sean Morris leads the nation with 39 points. His latest came in a 7-5 loss to the Penn State Nittany Lions last Saturday.

KAREN WINEGRAD | COLLEGIAN

Junior midfielder Brett Garber has five multi-point games in the 2006 season. He has 14 in his career as a Minuteman.

Baseball salaries balloon with time

By Ronald Blum
Associated Press

NEW YORK — Baseball's average salary soared nine percent this year to nearly $2.9 million, with Alex Rodriguez topping a sport in which more than half the players on opening-day rosters make $1 million or more.

Rodriguez headed the list at $25.7 million and was No. 1 for the sixth straight year, according to a study of major league contracts by The Associated Press. He was followed by New York Yankees teammates Derek Jeter ($20.6 million) and Jason Giambi ($20.4 million).

San Francisco's Barry Bonds was fourth at $20 million, and Houston's Jeff Bagwell — who might not play because of a shoulder injury — was next at $19.3 million.

"Baseball had record crowds last year," Giambi said. "Probably with Barry going to break the [home run] record, it will bump it up and more people will come out and watch it. That makes players more popular, and in turn guys make more money."

This year's record $2,866,544 average was up 8.9 percent from last year's figure of $2,632,655.

The Yankees' payroll dropped a bit to $198.7 million from $205.9 million on opening day last year. Boston was second again at $120.1 million, followed by the Los Angeles Angels ($103.6 million), the World Series champion Chicago White Sox ($102.9 million) and the New York Mets ($100.9 million).

Payroll figures don't include cash transactions, such as money the Yankees are receiving from Texas for Rodriguez and the White Sox are getting from Philadelphia for Jim Thome.

At the other end were the Florida Marlins at just under $15 million, including 17 players making the $327,000 minimum. It's the lowest figure for any team at the start of a season since Pittsburgh and Montreal in 1998. It's also less than the top 12 players make and 113th of what the Yankees pay their roster.

While the biggest spenders kept their payrolls pretty much at the same levels as last year, many teams at the bottom made boosts. Toronto added free-agent pitchers A.J. Burnett and B.J. Ryan, and catcher Bengie Molina, among others, hiking its payroll to $71.9 million from $45.4 million.

Eleven of the bottom 15 teams increased spending. Baseball's labor contract expires Dec. 19, and the sport's economic system will be negotiated again by players and owners.

"There are still concerns at both the top and the bottom," said Bob DuPuy, baseball's chief operating officer. "The goal would be to get a tighter range that would ensure that even more than 20 clubs at Labor Day still have a chance to compete for playoff spots, that playoff spots are based on skill and talent and blossoming stars and not just on plugging holes with economics."

Oakland, 21st at $62.3 million, still has little margin for error. Some of the high-spending clubs, such as the Yankees, complain that the smaller-market franchises haven't spent their revenue-sharing money on major league payrolls.

"Certain teams are funneling it back in the right ways and there are some teams that aren't," Athletics outfielder Mark Kotsay said. "I think this club in the last couple of years has definitely shed that. They've used the money in revenue sharing and put it back into players' salaries."

In a sign that the money is being spread out, the number of players making $1 million or more rose from 390 to 409 — still shy of the record 425 in 2001. The median salary — the point at which an equal amount of players fall above and below — rose to $1 million from $850,000, breaking the previous high of $975,000 set in 2001.

Figures for the study included salaries and prorated shares of signing bonuses and other guaranteed income for the 813 players on opening-day rosters and disabled lists. For some players, parts of salaries deferred without interest or with minimal interest were discounted to present-day value.

Maryland's national title a win for WNBA, women's basketball

By Howard Ulman
Associated Press

BOSTON — The NCAA's thrilling 25th women's championship game set the stage for the WNBA's 10th season.

"How was that game last night?" the pro league's president Donna Orender marveled Wednesday. "Could you ask for more?"

The WNBA did.

Less than 24 hours after Maryland overcame a 13-point deficit and beat Duke 78-75 in overtime, the league turned its draft into more of a spectacle by staging it for the first time away from the NBA's television studio in Secaucus, N.J. That enabled more fans and reporters from the Final Four to attend.

"I think we had 22 credentials for press last year and we had 78 today," Orender said before the draft at the Boston Convention & Exhibition Center.

The league announced that the All-Star game, set for July 12, will be held at Madison Square Garden, home of the New York Liberty and site of the first All-Star game in 1999. The Liberty's Becky Hammon and Orender unveiled the logo for this year's game.

Twenty-two college players were on hand for the draft compared with 15 last year. Orender said discussions will be held on whether to hold the draft at next year's Final Four in Cleveland, but she was upbeat about the possibility.

Other changes are on tap for the WNBA's 10th season, which begins May 20. The expansion Chicago Sky will start play as the league's 14th team, a 10-member All-Decade team will be chosen and a vote will be taken to determine the WNBA's 10 greatest moments.

The WNBA pre-draft camp was held Saturday in Boston before Sunday night's NCAA semifinals. Past pre-draft camps were held in the New York metropolitan area and, for a time, in Chicago.

"The fact that we're able to actually get a jump on our pre-draft camp and getting our players assigned to their teams so that markets can market behind those players" benefits the league, Orender said. "It's a great way for us to entertain clients, interact with city and fan, collegiate and media base here."

Last year, the draft was held 11 days after the Final Four, which took place in Indianapolis.

"When the idea was first raised, there was almost a unanimity on the concept" of moving the draft to the Final Four city, Orender said. "People said, 'Wow, that would make a lot of sense.' ... I can't speak enough to the relationship that we have with the NCAA. It's positive. It's progressive."

Orender said she was optimistic that two teams could be added "in the next several years" and, with a deep college pool this year, "we have more than enough talent to populate multiple [new] teams."

For the sixth straight season, the number of countries that got WNBA games increased, reaching 193 last year after reaching 78 in 1999, she said.

On Wednesday, two players from the NCAA Final Four were among the top three draft picks — No. 1 Seimone Augustus of LSU went to Minnesota and No. 3 Monique Currie of Duke went to Charlotte. No players were drafted from Maryland, which had no senior starters. Only seniors were eligible for the draft.

"The Final Four was a terrific showcase for women's basketball," Orender said, "but now, today, the very best in the college game will have the opportunity to consider their basketball careers in the WNBA, which is the destination for the greatest female players in the world."

The NCAA women's basketball national championship, held at the TD Banknorth Garden, provided a forum to showcase women's basketball.

Duke lacrosse coach retires in wake of team's rape allegations

By Emery Dalesio
Associated Press

DURHAM, N.C. — Duke University's lacrosse coach resigned Wednesday and the school canceled the rest of the season amid a burgeoning scandal involving allegations that three players on the highly ranked team raped a stripper at an off-campus party.

Mike Pressler spent 16 seasons at Duke and won three Atlantic Coast Conference championships. Last year, his team appeared in the national championship game.

"Coach Pressler offered me his resignation earlier this afternoon, and I accepted it," said Duke athletic director Joe Alleva. "I believe this is in the best interests of the program, the department of athletics and the university."

The rape allegations have roiled the campus and the city, raised racial tensions, and heightened the long-standing antagonism between the privileged students at the elite university and the poorer people of Durham.

The stripper is black and said her attackers were white. Investigators and witnesses have said the lacrosse players taunted her with racial slurs and insults.

Students and townspeople have marched on campus and off in recent days, angry over the school's handling of the allegations and the team members' refusal to cooperate with police. Investigators have said the athletes are sticking together and keeping silent. No one has been charged.

The lacrosse team's co-captains have denied that anyone was sexually assaulted at the party, as have attorneys for the players.

Earlier Wednesday, authorities unsealed documents stating that hours after the alleged rape, a player apparently sent an e-mail saying he wanted to invite more strippers to his dorm room, kill them and skin them. It was not clear whether the message was serious or a joke.

"The court released today a previously sealed warrant, whose contents are sickening and repulsive," said Duke President Richard Brodhead said in announcing the cancellation of the rest of the season. Last week, Brodhead suspended the team from play.

The stripper, a student at a nearby university, has told police that she was hired to perform at a party at a house just off campus last month and was raped and choked by three men in a bathroom. Investigators are awaiting the results of DNA tests on 46 of the 47 team members. The team's lone black member did not have to provide a sample.

District Attorney Mike Nifong has said that he is "pretty confident that a rape occurred," but that he does not expect to file charges until next week.

Duke, considered a national title contender before the lacrosse season began, had a 6-2 record with seven regular-season games remaining before the scandal broke.

The e-mail, according to an application for a search warrant of the player's dorm room, was sent from the player's Duke e-mail account just before 2 a.m. on March 14. Police said investigators received a copy from a confidential source, though they later won a court order seeking access to the account.

In the e-mail, addressed "To whom it may concern," the player says he has "decided to have some strippers over" to his dorm room, "however there will be no nudity."

"I plan on killing the bitches as soon as the walk in and proceeding to cut their skin off," the author of the e-mail says, adding in vulgar terms that he would find the act sexually satisfying. The e-mail was signed with what police said is the player's jersey number.

Investigators did not immediately return calls or e-mails seeking comment on whether the e-mail was serious. But a lawyer for the player who purportedly wrote it said the content suggests his client is innocent.

A damning e-mail, sent by one of the Duke lacrosse players, contained violent language which could be used in the case against the team.

New England's Largest College Daily • Est. 1890

The Daily Collegian

Friday, April 7, 2006 — www.dailycollegian.com — Volume CXVI Issue: 110

Friends of victim and accused testify

Victim: "Johnston's not the same anymore"

By Matt Belliveau
Collegian Staff

NORTHAMPTON—As Kimberly Arasimowicz and her boyfriend shared their nightly goodbyes, she could tell something was wrong.

"Johnston's not the same anymore," said David Sullivan before hanging up.

Two hours later, Sullivan was dead; shot six times by his former best friend, Bryan Johnston.

Arasimowicz's testimony led off the third day of witness testimony, at Hampshire Superior court yesterday, in the trial of Johnston, 24, the Westfield man accused of murdering former UMass student, Sullivan, 22, in December of 2004.

Arasimowicz, who had begun dating Sullivan in January of 2004, described the couple's plans to move to Wilmington, N.C. where Sullivan, who majored in Building Materials and Wood technology, could start his own business.

"We were very close," said Arasimowicz. "We would say 'I love you' every night and talk to each other every day."

Arasimowicz claimed that Johnston and Sullivan had grown apart after Johnston insulted her at the wedding of a mutual friend. The two men had been childhood friends who graduated from Wahconah Regional High School in Dalton and shared the same group of friends.

Justin Bond, former UMass student and close friend to Sullivan, introduced a softer side of the Johnston.

After being assaulted and robbed on the UMass campus in fall of 2002, Bond called Johnston who acted "as a good friend" and let Bond vent out his frustrations.

Bond said he was surprised by the level of sympathy and apathy shown by Johnston and that they became good friends after the assault.

The prosecution, led by attorney Renee Steese, also called on testimony from Chief Medical Examiner for the Commonwealth, Dr. Lauren Mednick.

Mednick, who performed Sullivan's autopsy on Dec. 7, 2004, said that the bullets used in Sullivan's murder were hollow tip bullets, also known as "explosive rounds."

"When fired, hollow tip bullets pierce through the skin and explode shooting fragments of the bullet throughout the body," said Mednick. "The heat from the bullet also causes large tears in the skin adjacent to the entry wounds."

Mednick stated that he found six entry wounds throughout Sullivan's body, including the palm of his right hand and the canal of his left ear.

Steese, who provided the jury with a photograph of Sullivan grotesquely injured right palm, argued that the wound on the right hand shows the victim was in a defensive position.

"These shots caused devastating destruction. No one's pleaded guilty to first degree murder," said Steese. "The Commonwealth must prove its case."

Steese also used a manikin marked with yellow tags to show the areas relative of Sullivan's gun shot wounds.

According to Mednick's autopsy, Sullivan's death was due to massive blood loss attributed to six bullet wounds.

According to witness testimony, on Dec. 6, 2004, Johnston had asked several friends out to drink, but they turned him down because of the rain and snow that night. Johnston finally called Sullivan after 10:30, but he also declined Johnston's invitation.

After that call, Steese said Johnston's neighbor heard him repeatedly pacing and yelling before he drove off in his blue 2001 Lincoln Continental. He took his rifle and a .40-caliber handgun with him and drove to Sullivan's apartment.

Johnston then shot Sullivan six times with a .223-caliber rifle, say police. Sullivan's neighbor and friend, Stephen Kubicki, found his lifeless body minutes later and contacted authorities.

Defense attorney Alexander Z. Nappan doesn't dispute that Johnston is responsible for the murder of Sullivan.

Instead, Nappan argued that his client was gripped by mental illness and paranoia, which culminated with the shooting.

Johnston was torn between his love for his friends, and voices in his head, Nappan added in his opening statements Tuesday.

French PM rejects resignation speculation

By Jenny Barchfield
Associated Press

PARIS— Some 2,000 angry students massed on railroad tracks in Paris Thursday, halting international train traffic in a fresh push to force a new youth labor law off the books.

Prime Minister Dominique de Villepin refused to say whether the measure would be repealed. Villepin spoke more clearly about his own destiny, brushing off growing speculation that he would resign.

President Jacques Chirac "gave me a mission, and this mission, I will lead it to the end," Villepin told a news conference. "All the rest is pure speculation and fantasy."

Calling for calm, he said he was listening to the voices of discontent over his reform aimed at denting sky-high joblessness among youth by making it easier for employers to hire and fire younger workers. Lawmakers from the governing Union for a Popular Movement, or UMP, met for a second day with unions and students in search of a way out. Protesters are demanding the measure be withdrawn.

"The immediate priority, as we all know, is restoring calm," Villepin said. "It is time to get out of the crisis."

The job law has inspired disruptive protests at hundreds of universities and high schools and spurred massive demonstrations and violence by some protesters.

The law originally provided for a two-year trial period during which employers could fire youths under 26 without cause, a measure meant to spur hiring. Protesters say it would make young employees disposable.

Stepping up wildcat disruptions, students set up a pre-dawn blockade Thursday that halted a convoy of parts for the Airbus A380 jumbo jet, the world's largest airliner and the crown jewel of European aviation.

Students paralyzed all train traffic at the Gare du Nord station in Paris for nearly two hours, blocking trains to and from London, Belgium, the Netherlands and Germany. Some 200 police in riot gear moved the protesters out, allowing thousands of passengers packed into the station to start their travels.

Protesters earlier occupied the tracks of another Paris station, the Gare de l'Est, for an hour. In the eastern city of Strasbourg, several hundred students blocked the Pont de l'Europe bridge that links France and Germany.

There was some violence during the evacuation of some 450 students blocking rails at a train station in the southwest city of Toulouse, and four protesters and a police officer were hospitalized, officials of the local prefecture said. The officer had been hit with a stone. The Sud railway workers union denounced the force used by police as "totally out of proportion."

"This is very irritating, but I can understand it," said John Ring, a 40-year-old French businessman at the Gare du Nord who was trying to get to The Hague, Netherlands. "What I can't understand is how the government would allow the situation to get to this point."

Villepin relentlessly defended the job proposal for weeks until Chirac signed the controversial measure into law last weekend but ordered the talks with labor and student groups.

Villepin refused to prejudge the outcome of negotiations, appearing to back down from his previous, inflexible stance.

"I am pragmatic. In this time of dialogue it is important to be open," he said. "I am listening."

But the prime minister insisted that the 23 percent youth unemployment rate, which climbs above 50 percent in depressed, heavily immigrant neighborhoods, is at the heart of many French problems, including riots last fall.

Cheney aide says Bush OK'd leak

By Pete Yost
Associated Press

WASHINGTON—Vice President Dick Cheney's former top aide told prosecutors that President Bush authorized a leak of sensitive intelligence information about Iraq, according to court papers filed by prosecutors in the CIA leak case. The filing by Special Counsel Patrick Fitzgerald also describes Cheney involvement in I. Lewis Libby's communications with the press.

There was no indication in the filing that either Bush or Cheney authorized Libby to disclose Valerie Plame's CIA identity. But it points to Cheney as one of the originators of the idea that Plame could be used to discredit her husband, Bush administration critic Joseph Wilson.

Before his indictment, Libby testified to the grand jury investigating the CIA leak that Cheney told him to pass on prewar intelligence on Iraq and that it was Bush who authorized the disclosure, the court papers say. According to the documents, the authorization led to the July 8, 2003, conversation between Libby and New York Times reporter Judith Miller. In that meeting, Libby made reference to the fact that Wilson's wife worked for the CIA.

According to Fitzgerald's court filing, Cheney, in conversation with Libby, raised the question of whether a CIA-sponsored trip by Wilson "was legitimate or whether it was in effect a junket set up by Mr. Wilson's wife."

The disclosure in documents filed Wednesday means that the president and the vice president put Libby in play as a secret provider of information to reporters about prewar intelligence on Iraq.

Presidential spokesman Scott McClellan said Thursday the White House would have no comment on the ongoing investigation. At a congressional hearing, Attorney General Alberto Gonzales said the president has the "inherent authority to decide who should have classified information."

Libby is asking for voluminous amounts of classified information from the government in order to defend himself against five counts of perjury, obstruction and lying to the FBI in the Plame affair.

He is accused of making false statements about how he learned of Plame's CIA employment and what he told reporters about it.

Bush's political foes jumped on the revelation about Libby's testimony.

"The fact that the president was willing to reveal classified information for political gain and put the interests of his political party ahead of America's security shows that he can no longer be trusted to keep America safe," Democratic National Committee Chairman Howard Dean said.

Sen. Chuck Schumer, D-N.Y., said, "The more we hear, the more it is clear this goes way beyond Scooter Libby. At the very least, President Bush and Vice President Cheney should fully inform the American people of any role in allowing classified information to be leaked."

I. Lewis 'Scooter' Libby, Vice President Dick Cheney's former chief, walks to the U.S. District Court in Washington, D.C.

Libby's testimony indicates both the president and the vice president authorized leaks. Bush and Cheney both have long said they abhor that practice, so much so that the administration has put in motion criminal investigations to hunt down leakers.

The most recent instance is the administration's launching of a probe into who disclosed to The New York Times the existence of the warrantless domestic surveillance program.

The authorization involving intelligence information came as the Bush administration faced mounting criticism about its failure to find weapons of mass destruction in Iraq, the main reason the president and his aides had given for going to war.

Libby's participation in a critical conversation with Miller on July 8, 2003 "occurred only after the vice president advised defendant that the president specifically had authorized defendant to disclose certain information in the National Intelligence Estimate," the papers by Special Counsel Patrick Fitzgerald stated. The filing did not specify the "certain information."

UMass bestowed million dollar grant

By John Fenuccio
Collegian Staff

The Center for International Education (CIE) at the University of Massachusetts Amherst has been awarded a five-year, $8.1 million grant as a subcontractor on a U.S. Agency for International Development project to improve access to quality education in Afghanistan.

UMass Amherst is part of a consortium of U.S. partners led by the Academy for Educational Development, which also includes Indiana University. The consortium will work with 16 Afghan institutions of higher education with a focus on improving their capacity to train secondary school teachers.

"CIE has a 35-year history of highly effective work with developing nations," said Christine B. McCormick, dean of the School of Education. "We are very proud that the center has been selected to work with Afghan institutions to build educational capacity in the essential areas of training teachers and improving access to quality education."

Part of the UMass School of Education, CIE will contribute to this goal through oversight of long-term field operations in institutional development, pedagogical and curricular reform as well as management of a center for educational materials development at Kabul Education University.

Afghanistan's educational infrastructure has been devastated by numerous political and physical attacks over the past 25 years. This has forced large numbers of teachers to leave their profession, hurting the education process for those who need it in Afghanistan. With the fall of the Taliban regime in 2002, and the beginning of social and political stabilization of the country, hopeful signs for education emerged.

CIE has been involved in education in Afghanistan since 2002, initially with a series of smaller projects and since 2004, with a larger literacy and health-training project for women and girls in 11 provinces of Afghanistan. An effort to further aid not only the education, but to spread as much health-awareness as possible.

The center brings this experience as well as its strong relationships with ministry and education officials, to the new Higher Education Project. The initiative is led at UMass by principal investigators David R. Evans, CIE director, and Joseph B. Berger, chair of the department of educational policy, research and administration in the School of Education.

Berger and Evans characterized the Higher Education Program proposal as "a team effort" that pooled the resources of CIE faculty and graduate students in a semester-long effort.

The project may bring as many as 24 Afghan educators to UMass Amherst to pursue master's degrees in educational leadership and curriculum design. Graduates will then return to Afghanistan to become faculty at Afghan institutions where they will be training their colleagues and helping to reform secondary school teacher training for the country.

Notable for his contribution is doctoral student Frank McNerney, who went to Afghanistan as part of the preparation of the bid. McNerney and Berger will return to Kabul for planning meetings with ministry officials and university personnel this month.

U.S. House approves changes to college aid

By Susan Goldwin
Oregon Daily Emerald (U. Oregon)

EUGENE, Ore.— bill passed in the U.S. House on Thursday made several key changes to the federal government's higher-education policy aimed at making colleges and universities more affordable and accessible.

A congressional committee has worked on the College Access and Opportunities Act for three years, and many of the more controversial provisions and amendments were removed or defeated before it finally passed 221-199 along largely partisan lines in the Republican-controlled House.

Related legislation to renew the Higher Education Act of 1965 must pass in the Senate and receive President Bush's signature before any changes take effect.

Before H.R. 609 even reached the House floor, a provision that would have changed the formula for distributing government funding of three programs -- Federal Work-Study, Perkins Loans and Supplemental Educational Opportunity Grants -- was removed, according to a March 31 article in The Chronicle of Higher Education.

Several of the bill's provisions were significantly weakened by an amendment passed during the full House vote, including the creation of a "college affordability index." It also changed a proposed requirement that any school that increased tuition by more than double the rate of inflation over a three-year period would have to explain why and create a plan to prevent future increases.

Schools that increased tuition will still have to report to the U.S. Department of Education, but the department cannot reject a school's explanation for raising tuition.

If the amendment hadn't passed, schools like the University of Oregon, where tuition and fees have increased more than 11 percent for in-state students over the past three years, would have needed to report the price increases and make a plan to prevent similar increases in the future. Although the University's price has increased overall, the rate of increase has declined over the past three years.

The amendment, introduced by Rep. Louie Gohmert, R-Texas, also removed a provision that would have changed the way colleges are accredited.

Private-school interest groups opposed the provision because it would have given states authority over the private institutions.

Many of the provisions and amendments introduced by Democrats were defeated, including one that would have set a fixed interest rate for student loans at 3.4 percent, half the rate new borrowers will pay starting this summer.

"This is a down payment on reversing the raid on student aid," Rep. Dale Kildee, D-Mich., said, referring to the $12 billion reduction in federal student-loan programs that Congress approved in February, according to the article.

H.R. 609 contains dozens of changes to the original act.

Among them are an increase in the maximum Pell Grant award to $6,000 per year, more scholarships for students pursuing master's or doctoral degrees in math, science and certain foreign languages, and a requirement that the Education Department make information about tuition, graduation rates, student faculty ratios and average financial aid packages more easily available online to students and their families.

Several other provisions and amendments were defeated.

One would have required universities to accept transfer credits from educational institutions accredited by national agencies rather than the six regional accrediting agencies currently recognized.

Another would have required colleges and universities to report how students' race was taken into account during the admissions process to the Education Department.

The Senate will vote on its own version of H.R. 609 in April, and if the bill passes, the two bills will be reviewed by a committee and combined before being sent to President Bush.

ARTS & LIVING

CHEESY HORROR AT IT'S BEST

"Slither" makes us of all the fun horror movie clichés.

PAGE 4

EDITORIAL/OPINION

SPRING IS IN THE AIR

The Do's and Dont's of the new season.

PAGE 3

WEATHER

TODAY

High 57
Cloudy

TONIGHT

Low 69
Showers

TOMORROW

High 48
Low 30
Partly cloudy

SPORTS

DUKES ON TAP FOR UM

UM ready for home opener.

PAGE 8

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Michael A. Busack
MANAGING EDITOR Eric Athas
BUSINESS MANAGER Nathan Chomsky
PRODUCTION MANAGER Nicky Belanger
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Katie Huston
ADVERTISING MANAGER Kerry O'Grady
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Lauren Egerian
EDITORIAL PRODUCTION Amanda Allen
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Ian Jones
COPIES EDITOR Amanda Allen
EDITORIAL EDITOR Kristen LaCasse
NEWS EDITOR Dan O'Brien
SPORTS EDITOR Jeff Howe
CIRCULATION MANAGER Thomas Hecht
DISTRIBUTION MANAGER Nick Gleason
FINANCE MANAGER Daniel Conti
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Caren Tortorici
ASSISTANT BUSINESS Phil Smoller
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Morgan-Ann Rousseau
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Alex Butler
ASSISTANT NEWS Megan Daley
ASSISTANT NEWS Matt Belliveau
ASSISTANT SPORTS Dan Duggan
ASSISTANT SPORTS Rob Greenfield
ASSISTANT EDITORIAL Tucker Merrick

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS ACROSS LIFE, BEYOND THE COLLEGE SIGNAL IN 1901, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914 AND THE TRI-WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1956. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967, THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN BROADSHEET SINCE JANUARY 1994. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL WEEKDAYS BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 3:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Eric Athas

COPY EDITOR
Michael A. Busack

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Nick Belanger

PRODUCTION STAFF
Sean Thomas Duram, S. Belanger

If you see news happening, call us at 545-1609 and snap a photo with your cell phone, then send it to news@daily-collegian.com

Scrutiny, criticism grow over key section of health care plan

BY STEVE LEBLANC
ASSOCIATED PRESS

BOSTON—It's the most innovative—or radical—portion of Massachusetts' sweeping health care reform bill, but the proposal requiring everyone in the state have health insurance is coming under fire.

The most vocal objections are coming from those who say the new requirement, known as the "individual mandate," is an unacceptable expansion of the power of the state.

"This is the first time in the country's history where simply by virtue of living somewhere you are mandated to purchase a product," said Michael Tanner, of the Cato Institute, a Washington-based think tank.

Supporters of the idea, including Republican Gov. Mitt Romney, say the mandate is a key pillar of the health plan because it forces individuals to take responsibility for their health care.

But that isn't quieting the critics. While many conservatives embrace the individual mandate, some liberals and unions are suspicious. They typically prefer employee assessments, which the Massachusetts plan also includes.

AFL-CIO President John Sweeney accused Massachusetts of taking "a page out of the Newt Gingrich playbook" by including the individual mandate.

"Forcing uninsured workers to purchase health care coverage or face higher taxes and fines is the cornerstone of Mr. Gingrich's health care reform proposals," Sweeney said. "It is unconscionable that Massachusetts has adopted this misguided individual mandate."

Romney and other supporters of the idea say the individual mandate spreads out the burden of covering the uninsured among ordinary citizens, government and business. Romney is expected to sign the bill, but may veto a $295 per-employee fee for businesses that don't offer insurance.

Romney, a possible candidate for the 2008 Republican presidential nomination, has compared the individual mandate to car insurance. The state requires everyone who owns a car to buy insurance. Massachusetts, under the bill, will also require everyone to have health insurance.

That's a false comparison, according to Tanner.

"Driving has always been seen as a privilege that can be revoked," he said. "This is making me buy a product simply by virtue of breathing."

What no one can say for sure is how many of the estimated 500,000 uninsured people in Massachusetts would be subject to the individual mandate — in effect, how many earn enough to buy insurance but don't.

That, according to John McDonough of Health Care for All, is one of the complex bill's many unanswered questions.

"Whether it will work out or not we don't know," McDonough said. "No state has ever gone down this road."

The bill, a dense 145-pages long, is still a work in progress. Some of the grittier details, such as the exact definition of what it means to be able to afford insurance, will be sorted out when the actual regulations are drafted.

Still, there are enough details to win over supporters, and enrage opponents.

Under the plan, which would take effect in July 2007, everyone who files a state tax return, beginning in 2008, will have to indicate if they have health insurance.

The bill also requires Medicaid and private insurers to turn over to the state lists of their enrollees each month.

Anyone deemed able to buy insurance, but who is still uninsured, will face increasing penalties.

The first year, they will lose their ability to claim a personal exemption on their state tax returns. That would cost an individual about $189 and a couple filing jointly about $378.

The second year they will be assessed half the annual cost of one of the new low-cost health plans that are supposed to be created by private insurers under the bill — a fine that would easily top $1,000.

Statehouse rejects slot machines bill

BY STEVE LEBLANC
ASSOCIATED PRESS

BOSTON—There'll be no slot machines at Massachusetts' four racetracks — at least for now.

House lawmakers on Wednesday dealt a losing hand to a bill designed to allow each of the state's ailing dog and horse tracks to install up to 2,000 slot machines. Backers of the bill warned the 100-55 vote could sound the death knell for some of the tracks, struggling with a steady decline in the number of people attending races.

"The Massachusetts House of Representatives is killing the industry," said Rep. David Flynn, D-Bridgewater. "We're strangling the tracks."

Supporters of the plan failed to convince their fellow House colleagues that the state could reap hundreds of millions if it allows the slot machines. Critics, including House Speaker Salvatore DiMasi, D-Boston, have argued the social cost of expanded gambling outweighed the benefits.

Rep. Daniel Bosley, D-North Adams, said slot machines won't protect racetrack jobs like horse trainers and groomers, won't produce the promised economic windfall for the state, and won't recoup gambling dollars lost to neighboring states with casinos, such as Connecticut.

"We're not going to recreate those jobs," he said. "If it doesn't bring back our money from Connecticut, if it doesn't save the jobs it is purporting to save, we shouldn't do it."

The House also voted 141-13 to extend out-of-state race simulcasting at the tracks through the end of the year. The Senate has already approved the extension. The bill still needs final approval and the governor's signature.

Simulcasting rights ended last week at the tracks when lawmakers failed to reach an agreement. Three of the state's four tracks closed, putting thousands of people out of work.

The Senate overwhelmingly approved the slot machine bill last year. Under the Senate plan each of the four tracks would have to pay $25 million for a five-year license. The state would own the slot machines.

Gov. Mitt Romney, weighing a run for the 2008 Republican presidential nomination, had vowed to veto the measure. That veto would have required a two-thirds vote in both chambers to override.

Some of the strongest support for the bill came from lawmakers who represent the communities where the tracks are located, and where many of the track workers live.

Students urge car makers to adopt tougher standards

BY MIYA K. FRANCIS
UWIRE

WASHINGTON–For most students, April 1st is a day of jokes. But for some environmental activists, it was a chance to raise some important questions.

This year, energy conservation advocates have dubbed the date Fossil Fools Day, and they say the joke is on American consumers and corporations at the expense of natural resources.

In more than 100 cities across the country, student activists held events to "get students and community members to organize to break [U.S.] oil addition and call attention to the biggest 'fossil fools,'" according to the campaign Web site.

A major part of the campaign is convincing large companies to overhaul their fuel economy standards and set an example for others.

Among corporations, Ford Motor Co. has been labeled "the biggest fossil fool because of its production of the least fuel-efficient vehicles," said Sarah Connolly of the Rainforest Action Network, one of the groups sponsoring the movement.

Nile Malloy, an activist from Flint, Mich., and also a member of RAN, said Ford vehicles have a higher emission of greenhouse gasses and worse gas mileage than other brands, and with improvement, the company could encourage change among its competitors.

"Ford's brand gives the power and the responsibility (to lead others)," Malloy said. "Technology exists to make cars have higher miles per gallon."

Malloy said Ford should use its reputation for technological innovation to create more fuel-efficient cars. The group is sponsoring "Adopt-A-Dealer" campaigns to target individual Ford dealers and urge them to promote better fuel efficiency practices within the company.

Another major organizer of the events is Energy Action, an umbrella organization made up of 30 students organizations at 500 different colleges in the United States and Canada that encourages universities to build energy-efficient facilities on their campuses.

Billy Parish, the group's co-founder, said the collective success of the student groups has resulted in "over 100 colleges that are now purchasing clean energy," adding that colleges purchase the largest amounts of clean energy.

"Our vision is to get colleges to model behavior for corporations, cities and other institutions," Parrish said, adding, "Fossil Fools Day is a call to action and for leadership."

"People aged 18-35 are the most sought-after consumer demographic in America," Parrish said. "We're trying to change the consumer habits of our generation. We want to create a bar and say corporations need to think of new ways to attract students.

Some professors are also joining the movement. Michael Klare, a professor at Hampshire College and author of Resource Wars and Blood and Oil: The Dangers and Consequences of America's Growing Petroleum Dependency, said over-reliance on oil was causing the United States to ally with otherwise unfriendly regimes.

"We're addicted to a product we don't produce," Klare said, adding that the addiction has created a "dependence on dangerous countries (to) protect the flow of oil."

Saturn General Manager Jill Lajdziak stands with the Saturn Vue Green Line Hybrid after its unveiling.

Applications Available for Assistant News Editor and News Editor
Apply Within

Happy March!
Delivery: 413.549.0077
Telephone: 413.256.8923
413.256.8924
Fax: 413.253.1173
Panda East
FINE CHINESE & JAPANESE CUISINE
Featuring:
• Vegetarian Options
• Lunch Specials
• Sushi Bar
• "Light and Healthy" entrees
~We bring China Town to you~
Monday - Thursday: 11:30am - 10:00pm
Friday & Saturday: 11:00am - 11:00pm
Sunday: 12:00pm - 10:00pm
Visit us at: www.pandaeastamherst.com
103 North Pleasant Street Amherst, MA

Amherst Road Service
• ASE Certified Auto Repair
• Nationwide NAPA Warranty Available
• Conveniently Located on Bus Route
• Only 8 Miles from UMass
• Student Discount
Mention this ad to receive a
$9.99 Oil Change
(on most cars, up to 5 quarts; excluding tax and fees)
Route 116 Sunderland, MA 413.665.3782

CINEMARK
CINEMARK AT HAMPSHIRE MALL 8
Purchase Tickets Online @ cinemark.com
cinemark.com

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

EDITORIAL OPINION

FRIDAY, APRIL 7, 2006

"I may not agree with what you say but I will defend to the death your right to say it." Voltaire

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

To do, or not to do: that is the question

COURTESY OF UMASS ARCHIVES

See the kid with the pipe!...Yeah, he's about to pop the collar.

Katelyn Harding

Ah, spring. The glorious time of year when the weather is finally nice and New England can begin to peel its layers off, embracing the sunshine. Sometimes the weather makes people behave abnormally, perhaps because they are so excited about sunny days they have no other way of handling themselves. Although we all cherish these warmer days, don't take advantage of them. There are some forms of behavior that are never acceptable, no matter what temperature it may be outside. If you are unsure as to what these activities are, I will list them for you, in hopes that you never find yourself becoming party to any of them.

Beeping at people on the sidewalk: Alright, I get it, you have a jeep and you have just been able to take the roof off, so you want to utilize it to the fullest and beep at everyone you drive by to make sure they notice. Or, you think that by beeping at a girl who is walking, she will cling to your bumper and want to drive in your car. I'm guessing she won't, and this is not a way to get a girl's attention, ever. I am going to have to go with the Seinfeld quote here, "Thank goodness you beeped, I wouldn't have known how you felt!" My sentiments exactly. Guys, seriously, what good will become of beeping your horn at a girl? She will either think you are a jerk, that she has a humungous wedgie, or you want her to get out of the way. Take my advice and just keep on driving; this is no way to attract persons from the opposite sex.

"Southwest Beach:" This is something that to this day, still baffles me. It's not a beach, there's no sand, no ocean, no lifeguard (!), so how does this constitute as a beach? Why don't these people at least go to Puffers Pond or the Connecticut River, where this is actually some sand and a body of water they can swim in? I just do not see how laying in a bunch of dirt can be fun. Also, why does everyone have their bathing suit? Honestly, unless you are on the swim team, there is no reason for a person to bring a bathing suit to school, never mind a bikini. Especially because it's only spring and it's still too early to be going swimming outside.

Do you think that by popping the collar it establishes you as a real man? I think the best is when someone tries to pop the collar and one side just refuses to. That, actually, is an acceptable way to wear a polo shirt.

Popped collars and shirtless wonders: Yes, the weather is nice and it makes you want to wear less clothing. But there is a line between tasteful and tacky, and most guys flirt with it incessantly. Polo shirts are very nice and they come in a beautiful rainbow of pink, yellow, baby blue, light green, etc. But for the love of all that's holy, why do guys insist on popping the collar? Did you forget to tan your neck and are worried about unsightly tan lines? Do you think that by popping the collar it establishes you as a real man? I think the best is when someone tries to pop the collar and one side just refuses to. That, actually, is an acceptable way to wear a polo shirt. I understand you are trying to dress nicely according to the weather, but don't feel the need to make your collar perform gravity-defying feats. And what is it with guys who just mix the shirts altogether and walk around? It's not that hot out guys. Yes, we know you went to Mexico for spring break and are evenly tanned all around, but it is just not appropriate at this time of year. Why guys choose to walk around sans a t-shirt confuses me to the point where I think I'd rather see them with a popped collar. (gasp!)

Mini-mini skirts and Uggs: Alright girls, listen up. Uggs are not a foot accessory to be worn in warm weather. Your feet must be sweating something fierce in those, and I would not like to stick around and see the affects. If you are going to wear a mini-skirt, why bog it down with big clumpy boots? You might as well complete the outfit with a cute pair of shoes; you owe yourself that much. Uggs should just be worn in cold temperatures so that your feet don't freeze. And that is the only reason they should be worn.

These are my suggestions of things to be careful of as the warmer weather approaches. You don't have to listen to my advice I am just asking you to take it into consideration. Oh and ladies, watch out for how mini you wear your skirts. Before you know it, you might have a car full of shirtless wonders beeping at you from their roofless jeep on their way to Southwest Beach

Katelyn Harding was a Collegian columnist

"I'm leavin' it"

Imagine the following describes your average day: You wake up at 4:30 a.m., prepare lunch, and walk to your town's central lot. You wait, hoping to be selected by a labor contractor to work that day. After being chosen and taken to the tomato fields, you wait again for the plants to dry before you can start picking. At this point in the day you have yet to earn a dime. For the next 8–12 hours, you rush to fill as many buckets as possible with tomatoes, buckets that weigh 32 pounds when full. You are paid a per-bucket rate that hasn't changed much since the 70's, which means that you have to pick two tons of tomatoes today just to make 50 dollars.

Marc Rodrigues

This is a snapshot of an average day for the people who pick our fruits and vegetables in the fields of Florida. Indeed, there is a human rights crisis being faced by farmworkers, who labor in these conditions for subpoverty wages, with no benefits, no right to overtime pay, and no right to unionize. In certain extreme cases, farmworkers have been held in conditions of modern-day slavery.

These conditions, however, do not happen in a vacuum. Walk into any local supermarket, from Big Y to Whole Foods, and look closely at the labels on the oranges and tomatoes. You'll see names such as "Sunripe," "Northeast Produce," or "Santa Sweets." What these obscure names (and for that matter brands such as Taco Bell and McDonald's) hide is the reality of farmworker poverty and exploitation. The "Santa Sweets" brand is marketed by the Ag-Mart Corporation for example, which has recently come under fire for exposing farmworkers to dangerous levels of pesticide and employing a labor contractor previously convicted for enslaving workers.

Farm-workers with the Coalition of Immokalee Workers (Immokalee being the name of the town at the edge of the Everglades and at the epicenter of the U.S. tomato and citrus industries) have been organizing and fighting back for over ten years.

The CIW is a worker-led community organization made up largely of Latino, Haitian, and Mayan Indian immigrant workers. Their four-year boycott of Taco Bell culminating in victory in March 2005 spurred a nationwide social movement of farmworkers, students, and other allies.

The CIW and students called on Taco Bell to pay just one more penny per pound of tomatoes picked, and used its leverage as a major purchaser of tomatoes to bring about real changes in the industry. Students organizing with the Student/Farmworker Alliance kicked 22 Taco Bells off their campuses, and had over 300 active campaigns underway against Taco Bell at the time the boycott ended. This groundbreaking victory blazed a new path for workers rights and the concept that workers themselves should be involved in the decisions that affect their lives. Today, fast-food giant McDonald's, another major purchaser of Florida fruits and vegetables, threatens these delicate gains.

Behind the multi-billion-dollar profits and slick marketing of the fast food industry lays the reality of farm-worker poverty and misery, which itself makes these profits possible.

Behind the multi-billion-dollar profits and slick marketing of the fast food industry lays the reality of farm-worker poverty and misery, which itself makes these profits possible. The CIW and its allies have called on McDonald's to follow the lead of Taco Bell, improve wages and working conditions, and create a real, enforceable code of conduct which workers themselves would have a part in formulating. Thus far, McDonald's has responded with public relations maneuvering and appears to be more concerned with cleaning up its public image than cleaning up human rights abuses in its supply chain.

In response to the CIW's campaign thus far, McDonald's announced an initiative dubbed SAFE – "Socially Accountable Farm Employers" – a toothless mechanism designed not by farmworkers but by McDonalds along with the largest agribusiness lobbying group in Florida. CBR Public Relations, a PR firm which according to its own website specializes in "activist management," lists both McDonald's and SAFE as clients.

Many of Immokalee's farmworkers are our age – 18 to 25 years old. This is also the age group that is most heavily assaulted by the slick marketing campaigns of the fast–food industry, attempting to convince us that consuming their products is fun, hip, and cool. What they don't want us to do is look behind these images and see the reality of farmworker poverty. Across the country, however, thousands of students and youth are doing just that, and are taking action.

Farm–workers from Immokalee have just completed their first–ever national "Truth Tour" against McDonald's, which culminated in a large demonstration at the fast–food chain's flagship restaurant on April 1. The workers and their allies are calling on McDonald's to sit down with the workers and develop a real code of conduct that guarantees real rights and a living wage. To get involved, check out the Student/Farmworker Alliance at www.sfalliance.org.

As CIW member Gerardo Reyes-Chavez once stated, "For many years, we, the workers of Immokalee, were invisible to this country – lost in the darkness that agribusiness has helped to create. Now we know that we are not alone and will never be alone again. Today, thousands of students and young people from all over the country know of our struggle, and they have come to understand that this is their struggle as well." The next time you contemplate a Big Mac Extra Value Meal, ask yourself where those pickles and tomatoes came from.

Marc Rodrigues is a UMass graduate student.

You do the math

Kevin Dooley

The graduating Class of 2009 marks a historical turning point for higher education in this country. No, we didn't break the record for stabbings on campus we've taken part in or how many keggers we have participated in. Did you know that if you take the 20 and the 9 from 2009 and then multiply the two numbers you get 180; the number of years it will take the average student from our class to pay off student loans?

I was visiting with a friend the other day and she pointed out an article to me right before I got up to go. It was an article written by George Miller and it got me quite worried.

In this article, which appeared in the San Francisco Chronicle on January 26th titled, "Raid on student aid," he reports that Congress was considering a vote on a budget plan that will take 12.7 billion out of federal student financial aid, the largest cut in history. Update: The House of Representatives voted in favor of passing this bill a week later. Now why would Congress do such a thing? Two reasons actually.

First, members of Congress say that the cuts to higher education are necessary because of the ever-growing budget deficit. At the same time however, there is a bill out there being considered that would again give tax breaks to the wealthiest Americans. Tax breaks when we are currently facing our largest budget deficit in the history of our nation, I'm not a math major, but that doesn't make a lot of sense.

According to the Center of Defense of Information, in the fiscal year 2004 the U.S spent 452 billion dollars in national defense; while we were devoting 58 billion to education.

Secondly, our war and national defense spending are through the roof. Resources going to education and healthcare are just simply pale in comparison to what we spend in national defense. According to the Center of Defense of Information, in the fiscal year 2004 the U.S spent 452 billion dollars in national defense; while we were devoting 58 billion to education. What's even more stunning is how much we spend on national defense compared to other countries. In more information from the Center of National Defense, the U.S. spent 405 billion in national defense spending in 2003.

The 190 other independent nations inhabiting this world spent 485 billion combined in their national defense that same year. By my calculations, this means the rest of the world only outspend us by 80 billion dollars. Hey, maybe I should have taken the Math 100 exemption test when I had the chance. On second thought, I think Math 100 is right where I belong. I do think however that our President should have come to the classes when we learned fractions. He'll need to understand how they work when his poll ratings plummet to that level.

At the same time our country is falling farther and farther behind, the rest of the world is catching up. According to the National Academies of Science and Engineering and the Institute of Medicine, China graduated 500,000 engineers and India graduated 200,000. Add those two figures and take away a zero you get how many students majoring in engineering graduated in 2004 from the United States. 70,000 is the answer for those who are math challenged like me.

We are living in a time of fierce global competition where developing nations like India and China, much to our horror, are actually developing. So with that in mind, maybe our government and more specifically our Administration need to cut back on national defense spending, or no maybe that's not the name for it. In the era of war on terror, we should be calling it "national pre-emptive strike spending."

The rising cost of higher education is taking a toll on everybody. I got the wake up call about the dire situation higher education is in just the other day. Actually, it was a call from my mom. It's not too uncommon to get a call from my mom but she was in a panicked state, which also isn't too uncommon but that's a story for a different article I suppose. She was calling from the supermarket back home and needed to buy something for supper and was in a quite a pickle. Unfortunately however, pickles were completely out of the budget. The choices for supper back at home were going to either be hot pockets or spaghettio's. I told her to go with the spaghettio's with meatballs.

"Kevin, you know the spaghettio's with meatball cost extra," she said.

"But mom, the hockpockets may be cheaper, but can you honestly feel good after eating a hot pocket? You're safer with the Spaghettio's."

"You're right Kevin, what was I thinking?" Don't let anyone tell you your debt from college wasn't worth it.

Kevin Dooley is a UMass student.

Bubbling over Buble

Jen Lane

My hands are out and ready to be cuffed. My battle is over and I'm turning myself in, but if you could just hear me out, I can explain everything.

I sorely admit that I have violated every "I'm cool" rule here at Umass Amherst. First and foremost one of my biggest offenses is that I live on the hill, and I love it. I'm sorry, I do. It's an amazing part of campus, full of smart people I get along with and at the end of the day, I can go to bed before 11 o'clock (oh no!) and I have all my homework done. To enhance this awful situation, I'm hopefully going to be an RA up there next year.

My second offense is pretty large as well, but maybe the jury will let me off a bit lighter for this one. I don't love partying. Last weekend I went to a party and I almost fell asleep, so I left around midnight to go to bed for the night. Is it so awful that I don't like the party atmosphere?

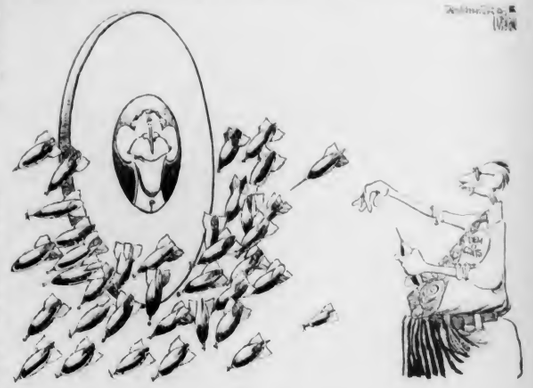
My third offense is what might do me in: I like country music, and Michael Buble. Now I know you're mad, but please, hear me out. This is the most important part of my story, and I know if you listen, I might get off completely, or with a less severe UMass punishment.

Country music is sweet, simple and not all about losing your wife, dog and house in the same song. I promise. It's simple, and you can actually hear the music and the words. There isn't an obnoxious amount of bass that you can play on your subs, but something you can sing along to.

Country music is sweet, simple and not all about losing your wife, dog and house in the same song. I promise.

Michael Buble is the same. He is one of the best new artists out there and most of you haven't even heard of him! For those of us Eastern Massachusetts people, he's played on Magic 106.7 and I'm sure you don't listen to that station. He sounds like a brand new Frank Sinatra and has actually redone a lot of his old songs.

He has a few new ones as well, that are just as fabulous.



Although he sounds like Ole' blue eyes, he has a sense of his own style. For one, he may even be more adorable than Ole' blue eyes. That's almost impossible, I know, but he has a new charm. Something a lot of guys are missing these days. Now-a-days it's big baggy pants, a tee shirt and either very expensive shoes or old crumby ones lying around the room. The guys now can't do their own laundry and sometimes you're afraid to bring them home to Mom and Dad. Not Michael Buble. You take one look at him and melt. His voice makes my knees buckle and gives me white knuckles. The lyrics, which you can hear, give me chills.

So please, after learning a little bit about him, just listen. You don't have to love him like I do, but don't hurt me. I am "cool" in my own way. I hope you understand and let me have the freedom to love and hate what I please.

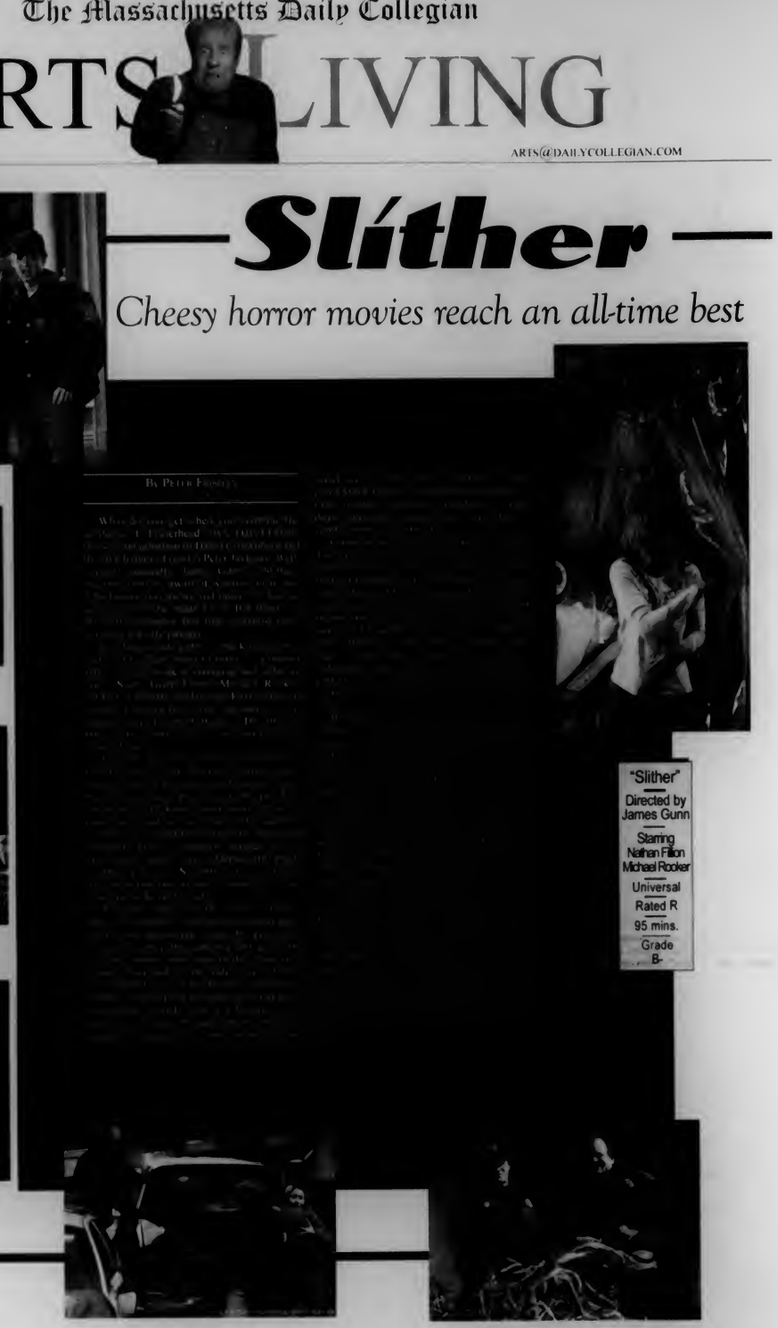
As I know my "I'm cool at UMass" status is slowly coming to an end, please just realize that I not only enjoy, but I love most of what is making me get the boot. Each person has different interests. Mine may not be as mainstream as everyone else's but I'm happy about the decisions I've made. If you want to slap the cuffs on my wrists, you're more than welcome. Because I'm not sorry for what I've done. And to the kid in the back, don't be sorry that I live in Orchard Hill, its okay. I like it here. Sure I wish we had a chairlift to get us back every once in a while, but I manage. I love my pick-up truck and my country music and I think Michael Buble is adorable and will be well known soon enough.

So please, take what I've said into consideration and let me know if there's anyway I can stay in the "I'm cool" club at UMass. And if your final decision is to kick me out of your club or put those cuffs on me, then I'll be okay. And because I'm sure you might want it later, I'll "Save the Last Dance" for you UMass. "My Funny Valentine."

Jen Lane is a Collegian columnist.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

ARTS LIVING



FRIDAY, APRIL 7, 2006 ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

—Slíther—

Cheesy horror movies reach an all-time best

By Peter Fussell

"Slither"
Directed by James Gunn
Starring Nathan Fillion Michael Rooker
Universal
Rated R
95 mins.
Grade B-

The movie Sony re-HEALLY doesn't want the critics to see; 'Benchwarmers'

By Roger Moore
The Orlando Sentinel

ORLANDO, Fla. — How bad is "The Benchwarmers"? So bad that Sony disinvited the press, all over America, from seeing the darned thing.

Except in Orlando. And therein, is a tale —

I go see the movie Monday night as an invited member of the press.

It sucks (shockingly), seeing as how Rob Schneider is in it, Adam Sandler produced it, and David Spade blows and sucks in a co-starring role).

I write a review, not the nastiest ever, but close enough.

It's posted on our KRT wire service. It's the only one there. Nobody else saw it.

And next thing you know, Sony people, from marketing, advertising and the like (apparently not communicating with one another) are calling us, and newspapers planning on running the review. Calls to Dallas, Kansas City, Toledo and on down the line.

And with the calls from Sony come the lies. The review is "bogus," they tell one editor. That I "disguised" myself to get in (a roped-off row for "press" is not exactly incognito) to another. That KRT subscribing papers have to "pay" extra to run the review.

I had an invitation. "You and a guest are cordially invited ..." Regional studio rep forgets to uninvite me, if the studio ever told her to do so. Local rep knows nothing of such shenanigans.

I saw the movie. No disguise, no nothing. And nobody has to pay extra for a wire service they already get. Not that I couldn't use the money. Tribune stock's under $28 a share.

David Spade. Rob Schneider. Fart jokes. Booger jokes. Wedgie jokes. Not high art, but then, you see Sandler's production company and Schneider's name in the credits, well, you know what you get.

It's a dog. Nine-12 laughs, maybe. Some involving booger-eating. Not my fault. From the review:

"Welcome to Adam Sandler World, where groins are for kicking, gas is for passing, jokes are for choking and jocks are for sniffing.

"It's a happy, stupid planet where director Dennis Dugan ('Problem Child,' 'Big Daddy') enjoys the status of a Hitchcock, and Sandler himself no longer needs to make an appearance. He can hire proxy Sandlers like David Spade (career — OVER) and Jon Heder, who proves that his booger-and-bug-eating skills were ignored in 'Napoleon Dynamite.'

"The Benchwarmers,' the latest from Sandler's 'Happy Madison' production banner, severely tests the maxim that 'There's no such thing as a bad movie about baseball.' It's dopey, crude and lowbrow, but harmless."

In other words, a "critic-proof movie." You try keeping the "Cable Guy" crowd away from this. It's opening on 3,724 screens.

But Sony won't hear of it. The BS flies and it flies thick. Remember, Sony was caught making up quotes and critics names for ads for its movies a while back. Wasn't that for ANOTHER Rob Schneider movie? ("The Animal," 2001) They're not real good at this manufacturing good "buzz" thing. And silencing bad buzz.

It's all part of a studio-by-studio effort to control the press coverage of their product. Bad, and getting worse, according to a column I wrote in February, and a piece David Germain wrote for the AP this week:

"Critics are being shut out of more films as studios forgo advance screenings on movies they expect reviewers to criticize, figuring the movies stand a better chance of box-office success with no reviews rather than bad ones.

"So far this year, 11 movies have not screened for critics before opening day, including the Rob Schneider-David Spade sports comedy 'The Benchwarmers' and Mo'Nique's fashion comedy 'Phat Girlz,' both opening Friday."

Why should you care? Well, please don't. Not a lot, anyway. Not like a White House that denies access to the press to control news about a trumped-up war and cover up its own misdeeds and missteps. But still, if Hollywood is spending millions on it, and they're proud of their product, what're they afraid of?

The answer is, they're not proud. They know it's garbage. And they expect to sucker enough people in opening weekend to be able to afford the next junk-picture they whip up. Don't let them.

Apple battle rages on

By Jane Wardell
Associated Press

LONDON (AP) — A High Court judge is unlikely to rule before Easter in the legal fight between Apple Computer and the Beatles' Apple Corps record label over the use of the apple logo.

Lawyers for both sides squared off in London's High Court on Wednesday in the closing stages of the trial over the companies' similar apple logos.

In one corner, Apple Corps Ltd.'s lawyer Geoffrey Vos said Apple Computer Inc. is a "Johnny-Come-Lately" that is attempting to steal the British company's trademark and increasingly encroach on its territory.

In the other corner, Apple Computer lawyer Anthony Grabiner said the Cupertino, Calif.-based company is doing nothing wrong and music lovers are smart enough to tell the difference between the use of the apple logos.

The presiding judge, Edward Mann, reserved his judgment for an unnamed date, but added that it was unlikely to be before the Easter break.

The companies are tussling over a 15-year-old settlement in which each agreed not to tread on the other's areas of business, ending previous lengthy litigation over the logos. Apple Corps uses a shiny green apple as its logo, while Apple Computer has a cartoon-like apple with a neat bite taken out.

Apple Corps brought the current lawsuit, alleging that Apple Computer has breached the 1991 agreement by moving into the music business. It is seeking damages and wants the computer and iPod maker to stop using its apple logo on its iTunes Music Store and in advertising for the site.

Apple Computer says the agreement allows it to use the logo because it does not own the rights to the music, but simply the digital technology to distribute it.

Grabiner has said the computer company paid the Fab Four's firm $26.5 million as part of the 1991 out-of-court settlement, and in return had received "a considerably expanded field of use." The terms of the deal were kept confidential at the time.

Apple Corps was started by the Beatles in 1968 and is still owned by Paul McCartney, Ringo Starr, the widow of John Lennon and the estate of George Harrison.

When loans go bad

Ask the Attorney
Michele L. Leaf

Q. I loaned $2000 to another student in January 2005 so that he would not be evicted. I did not ask him to sign anything because we were friends and I trusted him. He was supposed to pay me back during the summer, but he has given me nothing. I need the money to pay my own rent. I called him to see if he would agree to a payment plan and he told me not to contact him again. Is the oral agreement binding? What can I do to get the money back?

A. It is not a good idea to loan money to somebody without having them sign a promissory note. This note makes it clear that the money is being given as a loan and specifies the terms of repayment. Even though you trusted your friend, you should have asked him to sign an agreement. However, a loan agreement does not have to be in writing to be valid, so long as you have some evidence to support your claim. For example, a cancelled check or an ATM withdrawal would be evidence of the loan. He told you not to call him again so you should stop calling him or you could be committing an unfair debt collection practice for which he could seek compensation.

You are not prohibited from contacting him in writing and this is what you should now do. It is suggested that you should write him a letter seeking repayment. State the terms of the loan in the letter, the fact that he had promised to repay you over the summer, and that he refused to repay you and has asked that you cease contacting him. The letter should reference your attempts to get repayment, and his negative response. You should demand repayment within 2 weeks and state that you will take legal action if he does not comply. You can accept a payment plan if you wish. If you hear nothing from him, you should follow up with an action in small claims court. The Legal Services Office is prohibited from advising one student against another student, but the small claims process is not difficult and is designed for people who do not have attorneys. The complaint form must be filled out and filed with the clerk in the court where you are bringing the action. The case can be filed in the county where either party resides, and the court will notify the other party and set a hearing date. You can ask for assistance from the clerk of the court where you are filing. The cost of filing a small claims complaint is $30 for claims under $500 and $40 for claims between $500 and $2000. If you win the case, the court will award you the costs as well.

The information contained in this article refers to Massachusetts law and does not constitute legal advice. If you need legal advice, seek out an attorney who can give you advice based upon your circumstances and applicable law. Fee paying UMass Amherst students with questions may call the Student Legal Services Office at 545-1995 to arrange an appointment, or come to 922 Campus Center to pick up more information.

'Park' wins Peabody

A typically wide-ranging group of TV and radio broadcasts, ranging from deadly serious news documentaries to "South Park," was joined under the banner of "Peabody Award winner" Wednesday.

The awards, given by the University of Georgia for the past 65 years, represent the best of broadcasting in 2005 as determined by the 16-member panel of industry executives, critics and "experts in culture and the arts." Thirty-two programs were honored this year and will receive their awards in June at an event hosted by "The Daily Show's" Jon Stewart.

"As is the case every year, submissions for consideration by the Peabody board provide insight into the astonishing array of electronic media productions," says Horace Newcomb, director of the Peabody Awards.

In addition to "South Park," which the board calls "TV's boldest, most politically incorrect satirical series," four other prime-time entertainment series were honored: "House" (Fox), "The Shield" (FX), "Battlestar Galactica" (Sci Fi Channel) and "Boston Legal" (ABC).

Of "Battlestar," a critical and audience hit for Sci Fi, the Peabody judges say it "has revitalized sci-fi television with its parallax considerations of politics, religion, sex, even what it means to be 'human.'"

—Zap2it.com

New breed of online games focuses on sex

By Peter Svensson
AP Technology Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Online games have so far mainly revolved around the killing of fantasy monsters. The occasional fight with a Stormtrooper provides some variety.

Companies are now developing a handful of games — though calling them that is a stretch — designed to give players a very different option: making love, not war.

In "Naughty America: The Game," set to launch early this summer, players will assume the forms of alluring but cartoonish people who meet, flirt and have sex with other player characters.

Characters will have their own apartment, but the world will have also have "public sex zones" and themed rooms, said Tina Courtney, the game's producer.

"We've got the cowboy room, the make-your-own-porn room ... it doesn't just have to be 'Your place or mine?'" Courtney said.

Flirting and dating have been rife in online games like "Everquest" and "World of Warcraft" — even leading to marriage between players — despite a lack of romantic or sexual features in the games.

On the other hand, sex-oriented games like "Playboy: The Mansion" and "Virtually Jenna" have been single-player games with no online component, and thus no interaction between players.

This new crop of adults-only games would combine the player-player interaction of the online games and the graphic sexuality of the single-player games.

Game designer Brenda Brathwaite, who has been in the industry for more than 20 years, sees the new games as a natural evolution of online life, noting that even in the very simple text-based adventure games of the '80s, virtual eyelashes were batted.

"If there were two people playing, eventually those people would start flirting," said Brathwaite, who is working on a book about sex in video games.

Multiplayer sexual games are in the works now, Brathwaite said, because Internet connections have become fast enough to make graphically rich online environments and characters possible. For the games that envision players also meeting in real life, mainstream acceptance of dating sites like Match.com also helps.

In "Red Light Center," a game already available in a test version, players take the shape of three-dimensional characters in a red-light district. They can talk to one another through headsets and microphones.

"Rapture Online," a game Black Love Interactive LLC is set to launch next year, will also have three-dimensional characters, with a lot of attention paid to anatomical correctness. It will feature a networking component similar to that of a dating site, but it won't be necessary to use that feature.

"I'm hoping couples who are in a distance relationship will be able to use this privately between them," developer Kelly Rued said.

Of course, these games raise the possibility of sexual predators lurking in the chat rooms. Naughty America has plans to let users pay for a background check that scans their criminal record. Users who do so would have a special tag in their profiles, identifying them to others as someone who's been vetted.

Success for the new games is far from assured, even though they plan to combine dating, fantasy worlds, sexual chat rooms and pornography — four things that have had enduring online popularity.

A few small companies started down this road a few years ago, but have only attracted a small number of users.

"SeduCity" began in 2001 with a simple two-dimensional graphical interface and has 1,500 users, according to David Andrews at Stratagem Corp., the company behind the game. By comparison, Blizzard Entertainment Inc.'s "World of Warcraft" has more than 5.5 million users.

Ren Reynolds, a British technology consultant and writer, believes that players may prefer to continue flirting in fantasy games that aren't explicitly sexual, or they may feel that three-dimensional environments don't improve on text-based chat rooms.

"It's true that you can do more things with text than you can with visuals," Reynolds said. "Why would I want to log on to a game just to have sex with people? It's kind of a nice idea, but I see it as difficult as a sustainable business model."

With the cost of game design increasing, it can be hard to recruit investors for a new type of game. Republik Games said last week it had been unable to close its latest round of financing, forcing it to suspend work on "Spend the Night," another sex-oriented online game that was to debut this year. The studio laid off its entire production team of 12 people.

In their favor, sex games developers point to the relative success of "Second Life," a three-dimensional online world that gives participants freedom to do pretty much anything they want, as long as they can master the game's rather intricate controls.

"Naughty America: The Game," coming out this summer, is one of several games coming out that will allow players to flirt and have sex with other players.

MONTANA'S Steakhouse
NORTHAMPTON STEAKHOUSE
Great place for a date!
At the Clarion Hotel
One Atwood Drive Northampton
Exit 18, off I-91
413-586-1211
view menu at www.hampshirehospitality.com

Arts is looking for editors for the fall. Apply today in the campus center basement.

comedy THIS SATURDAY!
CONNECTION
HUKELAU
413•593•5222
706 Memorial Drive in Chicopee
www.hukelau.com
ORDER YOUR TICKETS TODAY!
Star of TBS' "Minding The Store"
PAULY SHORE
Star of the movies "Encino Man," "Son-In-Law" and "Jury Duty"
APRIL 15TH
From the movie "The Longest Yard," NBC's "Saturday Night Live," "The Tracy Morgan Show" and Comedy Central's "Crank Yankers"
TRACY MORGAN

BEACH CLUB TANNING STUDIOS
BUY 1 GET 1 free
★PACKAGES LOTIONS ACCESSORIES
APRIL 6, 7, 8
U CONN 1244 STORRS RD STORRS, CT 06268 PH.(800) 487-HOTT (4688)
WESTFIELD 459 EAST MAIN ST WESTFIELD SHOPS PH.(413) 564-BTAN (8826)
U MASS 65 UNIVERSITY DR AMHERST, MA 01002 PH.(413) 549-HOTT (4688)

JOBS
INTERNSHIPS
CO-OPS
RESUME WRITING WORKSHOPS
INTERVIEWING SKILLS CAREER CONSULTATIONS
511 GOODELL
M-F 9 AM-4:30 PM
LEARNING COMMONS
W.E.B. DUBOIS LIBRARY
SU 7-9 PM
T & W 6:30 PM-8:30 PM
Career Services
CAREER SERVICES
WWW.UMASS.EDU/CAREERS
511 GOODELL
545-4426
UMASS AMHERST
UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS AMHERST
Student Affairs and Campus Life

Minutemen host Duquesne

BASEBALL from page 8

UMass has to play better baseball on a more consistent basis, and with the recent resurgence of junior first baseman Bryan Adamski at the plate and on the mound, there is a lot for the team to look forward to.

Sophomore catcher Bryan Garrity and the Minutemen look to get back on track with a three-game series against the Dukes this weekend.

Adamski has shown much versatility in 2006, as he leads the team in home runs (2), slugging percentage (.462) and walks (14). He is second on the team in RBIs with eight on the year, and is tied for the most hits and doubles with 18 and four, respectively.

Adamski has also shown his importance to the team with his arm, ranking third on the club with a 3.60 ERA and posting a 1-1 record with one save in four appearances. His most notable performance was in last Saturday's 11-9 victory over Richmond. The first baseman/relief pitcher went 2-for-6 with a run scored and two RBIs, as well as pitching the eighth, ninth and 10th innings to record the win.

With plenty of games to be played in the 2006 campaign, Stone believes that Adamski's potential calls for a bright future.

"He's done well," Stone said. "I think that he's just starting to scratch the surface as to how good he can be. I talked to him yesterday, and I talked to everybody individually yesterday about where we are, where we want to go and how to get there. He's coming around with the bat. He was able to pitch in a couple of games the other day, and he's getting more comfortable at the plate. Once he gets everything going together, I think he is really going to take off."

UMass has had its early-season struggles, nobody is arguing that. But with the team finally returning home this weekend, the Maroon and White will continue to battle and hope that a win can spark a mid-season run.

"For the most part, we're playing hard," Stone said. "Attitudes are good, and we're hanging in. We just need to win some games. We need to feel the feeling you get when you win games, and that will just give us more confidence."

O'Brien has high expectations

By Dominic Poli
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Massachusetts track and field team will put another notch in its spring season belt at the Wildcat Invitational this Saturday.

The meet will be hosted by UNH.

UMass coach Ken O'Brien said that he expects repeat performances from Erik Hoagland, Kevin Ianetta and the other athletes who did well at the Southern Connecticut Invitational last weekend.

Hoagland was the Minutemen's only event winner, taking the long jump with a distance of 23 feet, 4.75 inches.

Hoagland also does the triple jump, but due to a nagging ankle injury, O'Brien is bringing him back carefully.

"We'll try to play it a little bit comfortable with Erik and bring him back into full swing in the next couple of weeks," O'Brien said "But on a gradual basis."

Freshman Steve Gerome placed 4th in the long jump with a mark of 21 feet, 6.25 inches. This was a pleasing result for the first long jump of his collegiate career.

However, Gerome was not the only freshman to make a contribution last weekend.

Freshman Ianetta placed 7th in the 400-meter hurdles with a time of 56.62 and 11th in the 5000-meter race with 15:45.19.

"He has some versatility in the high hurdles and the intermediates," O'Brien said of Ianetta. "I'm hoping for some slight improvement in his performance [without] trying to be overanxious."

O'Brien mentioned that though his team has no serious injuries, it will be losing three big performers for the outdoor season.

Sophomores Sean Calicchio (shot-putter) and Bryan Haynes (sprinter) and senior Brandon London (long jumper) are predominantly football players. And with spring football soon to start, that means the track team will lose some "big scorers."

The Minutewomen are looking to repeat last weekend's results, when they finished in 6th place.

Like O'Brien, UMass women's coach Julie LaFreniere is expecting good performances from the team's usual suspects, like senior Elisabeth Budd and freshman Jordan Veney.

Budd, a sprinter and hurdler, came away with a 3rd place finish in the 400-meter hurdles last weekend, which she ran in 1:06.63.

"She felt pretty good last weekend," LaFreniere said. "She did her 400 [meter] hurdles last weekend and then came back and helped us out in the 4x4 [100-meter relay]."

Veney, a thrower, finished third in both the shot put and discus events. She threw for distances of 42 feet, 2.25 inches and 135 feet, 11 inches, respectively.

LaFreniere said that there is a possibility that, in addition to the shot put and discus, the throws coach, Bob Otrando, might have Veney attempt the hammer throw on Saturday.

It would be Veney's first time ever throwing the hammer in competition. According to LaFreniere, the Pittsburgh-native never competed in the event before due to the fact that Rhode Island is the only state that boasts the high school hammer throw.

Freshman sprinter Dionise Miranda will make her first competitive appearance since badly pulling her hamstring at the A-10 Championships on Feb. 18.

"She's going to run the 200 [meter dash] and that's all she's going to do this weekend," LaFreniere said. "And we'll see how that goes.

"We just want to see how the leg responds and if everything goes well we're going to add the long jump [for the Brown Invitational on April 15]."

LaFreniere has made the tough decision to not use sophomore pole-vaulter Kristen Bakanowski this weekend, in order to heal an injury to her take-off foot.

Duke image takes hit from lax scandal

By Allen Breed
Associated Press

DURHAM, N.C. — At Duke University, they like to say there's only one real fraternity on campus: LAX, shorthand for lacrosse.

Long before the university was rocked by allegations that lacrosse players raped a stripper during an off-campus party March 14, Duke's highly ranked team had a reputation for swagger and a powerful sense of entitlement.

Now administrators are starting to wonder whether they put up with it for too long.

"Taken as a group, is there a special history of bad behavior with this team?" Duke President Richard H. Brodhead said Wednesday in announcing the resignation of the coach, the cancellation of the rest of the season and the opening of an internal investigation.

A black stripper who was hired to perform at a team party has charged that three white players choked and raped her in a bathroom in the early morning hours of March 14. Witnesses said she was also taunted with racial slurs.

No arrests have been made; police are awaiting DNA test results on the team members. The team's captains have acknowledged hiring a stripper and allowing underage drinking, but have denied any rape occurred.

Even before the scandal, the nearly all-white team had come to personify an arrogant elite on this privileged campus, a collection of Gothic-style buildings dominating the landscape of this working-class city almost evenly divided between black and white.

Nearly a third of the team's 47 members have been charged in recent years with offenses such as disorderly conduct and public urination.

Neighbors have described the leased single-story white home where the alleged attack took place as a kind of "Animal House." A rusted tin shed out back is spray-painted with players' nicknames and jersey numbers, and a primitive white painting of a lacrosse player adorns the roof.

Peter Wood, a professor of Native American history who was captain of the Harvard and Oxford University lacrosse teams, said he complained two years ago about coach Mike Pressler's decision to order practice on a weekday morning that conflicted with his class.

He also has had problems with team members signing in, then ducking out of class.

"Certainly in recent years I've been troubled too often by encounters with the men's lacrosse team," he said. The professor said that one thing he "sensed very clearly was just their tightness as a group."

In his recent novel, "I Am Charlotte Simmons," Tom Wolfe portrayed athletes at his fictional Dupont University (a Gothic-style North Carolina school) as lumbering, thuggish "hempes pustules" who get all the women and get away with everything. The lacrosse team comes in for particular scorn.

"Lacrosse," one character says, "is one of the only two sports where white boys are the ones with the machismo." (The other is ice hockey.)

Duke law professor James Coleman Jr., who has been appointed to investigate the team, said he wants to know whether bad behavior by the lacrosse team "is something that has been ongoing, whether the university has been aware of it, whether the teams – the coaches and athletic department – have been aware of it; and whether the university, coaches and athletic department have taken appropriate action to deal with it."

The allegations have Dr. Marie Savard questioning whether the Duke lacrosse program was really the incubator of integrity, responsibility and sportsmanship she thought it was when she had entrusted her three boys to it.

"We were happy that our kids were at Duke and not someplace where it was all about the game and winning and not about the sportsmanship and the academics and collegiality," said the Denver physician, who considered Pressler a "role model and sort-of second parent" to sons Zack, Ben and Aaron Fenton.

"I thought our kids were more protected. I'm feeling naive now." Pressler did not immediately respond to calls and e-mails for comment. But supporters said he was an exceptional coach of high morals.

Newcomer Charlotte makes splash in first A-10 season

A-10 from page 8

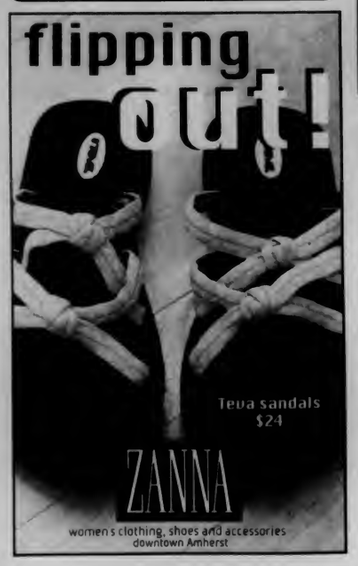
12 conference games, which would give them a final conference record of 9-8.

That kind of a run would be a difficult task to complete en route to the school's first-ever A-10 championship.

Top Billiking

Last weeks player of the week was Saint Louis senior Ashleigh Williams. The Festus, Mo. native and middle infielder is the program's first player to earn an Atlantic 10 weekly honor – the school joined the A-10 from Conference USA this season.

Williams hit .500 in four games last week with seven runs batted in for the Billikens (13-16, 4-2 A-10). She was particularly hot in a double-header against A-10 rival George Washington, where she was 3-for-6 with three RBIs.



Williams raised her season hitting percentage to .311 – second on the team. She has started every game for the Billikens this season, hitting five homers with 23 RBIs.

Write for Daily Collegian Sports

E-mail sports@DailyCollegian.com

LABRAT By Richard Martell

ELSIE HOOPER By Robert D. Krzykowski

JEFF, GOTE & GOAT By Grant Cerullo and Sean Mahon

THE FAMILY MONSTER By Jason Shaulis

PAUL By Billy O'Keefe

QUOTE OF THE DAY

"How many evildoers do you have to kill before you become one yourself?"

—Six Feet Under

ACROSS
1 Market price
6 Lead actor
10 Whole bunch
14 Construction piece
15 Beep with a beeper
16 Prell competitor
17 Back of a tape
18 Yoked pair
19 Space saucers
20 Altar sentence
21 Kept out of the way of
24 Opposite of WSW
25 Climbing plant gripper
27 Talented
29 Self-image
30 Brosnan series, "Remington ___"
32 Brown shade
36 Social customs
39 Super-duper
40 Mehitzah
42 Feels unwell
43 Two peas in a pod
45 Wine and dine
47 Supernatural
49 Parisian street
50 Grand gorge
52 Flutter
56 Mammal's triplets?
57 Lined and crinkly
60 Half a bikini
61 North Carolina school
63 Lord of the manor
64 Proprietor
66 Gob's place
67 Of the ear
68 Cereal grain
69 Tenant's check
70 Small notch
71 Bridge position

DOWN
1 Drop in
2 Put up with
3 Strung along
4 Mideast federation
5 Trade restriction
6 Film reel
7 Hack
8 Got older
9 Go back on one's word
10 Ancient Egyptian deity
11 School eatery
12 Solo
13 Medicated
22 Larger and deeper Sicilia
23 Carpe ___!
26 Propriety
28 Flotsam or jetsam, e.g.
30 Publicity ploy
31 Part of EAT
32 Angora or Burmese
33 In what way?
34 Thin translucent paper
35 First sibling
37 Inventor Whitney
38 W-2 form ID
41 Spine-tingling
44 Flat-bottomed boat
46 Massage
48 Perfect accord
50 Chess material
51 Make laugh
52 Type of T-shirt
53 Lil guy of comics
54 Pick up the tab
55 Dirt
58 Tubular pasta
59 Clapton or Roberts
62 Chow down
65 Sci-Fi Doctor

Find today's answers online

www.dailycollegian.com

HOROSCOPES

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
In memory of Kel from Keenan and Kel, drink some orange soda today.

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
You need a new alarm clock. That one isn't working anymore.

aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
Someone will give you a bunch of baloons today.

taurus Apr. 20-May 20
New swimsuits are always a good investment.

gemini May 21-Jun. 21
There is a good chance you will get arrested this weekend.

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
You have something gross-looking on your face.

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
You will not be able to find a pen before class today.

virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
You are not going to need any more post-its for a while.

libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22
You are going to want to wear your rain boots today.

scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
You will get black-out drunk this weekend.

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
You will have car trouble of some sort tomorrow.

capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
Oh my goodness you missed the OC last night!

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

ANNOUNCEMENTS

THE WORLD HAS HAD ENOUGH of hunger, injustice and war. An extraordinary, enlightened World Teacher is here to help. Learn more: 888-242-8272 *Share-International.org

Will you know how to use your degree? Let us teach you LEADERSHIP. ARMY ROTC www.umass.edu/armyrotc

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Belchertown 2BR available 3rd week of April or June 1, lease until July $350/month Jen 857-526-1716

2 bedroom $1100 3 bedroom $1400 4 bedroom $2150 Now Accepting Applications 253-7377 millvalleyestates@wlnnco.com

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing. 1&2 bedroom apts. Leases begin June, July, Aug or Sep. First come, first serve. Get them while they last. www.brandywine-apts.com stop by or call 549-0600

Center of Town 1, 2, 3 bedrooms; hardwood floors. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

EMPLOYMENT

Counter Help part-time year round position must be fast, friendly, and extremely reliable Apply in person at the Woodstar Café 60 Masonic St. North Hampton

EMPLOYMENT

PAINTERS NEEDED! Hundreds of positions available throughout New England. Work outside with your friends and family in your hometown. No experience needed, training provided. Join large student painting company this summer. Hiring now! 888-277-9787, www.collegepro.com

Fall 2006 Internships with the Student Legal Services Office. Get hands on experience in the legal field. Work directly with attorneys and clients. Earn 12 undergraduate credits. No experience necessary and training provided. Stop by the Student Legal Services Office at 922 Campus Center or call 545-1995

EMPLOYMENT

Northampton Retail Store. Applications for full-time, part-time and summer employment now being accepted. Prior retail experience a plus, but not necessary. Must be reliable, energetic and have good math and social skills. Depending upon position available, weekend and/or evening work may be involved. Generous employee discount. Call 413-652-2164 between 8:00am and 9:00pm.

Summer Job June 5-August 25, 2006 Teaching English and obtaining academic credits. Fees: $900 including tickets, travels and accommodations. Contact Ron Song at 203-407-0566 byrdinterco@aol.com

EMPLOYMENT

Bicycle Mechanic/ Sales Person needed in Northampton. Please call 584-1727 Ask for Bill.

Summer Lifeguards, Managers, Camp Counselors, and Director positions open! Greenfield Recreation, 25 min. from Amherst. Apply now. Call (413) 772-1553.

Rent us your Ears! Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu Voicemail: 545-6837

Bartending $300/Day potential No experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 x162

HOUSE FOR RENT

Hadley, close to UMass 5 Bedroom home, large yard. Oil heat. Sept occupancy. 549-4270

SERVICES

Legal questions? We have answers at the Student Legal Services Office, 922 Campus Center or Call 545-1995

PREGNANCY TESTING, HIV TESTING, Birth-control, and Emergency Contraception. STI Screening and Treatment. Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-0092

Pentium Color laptops $99 We type term papers, resumes, cover letters. 413-584-8857

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS WEEKEND

FRIDAY, APRIL 7, 2006 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Dukes on tap for UM

BY DANNY PICARD
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Massachusetts baseball team hopes that the forecast of rain will hold off until after its home opener against Duquesne (6-18, 2-4 Atlantic 10) at 3 p.m. today at Earl Lorden Field. The Minutemen (3-13, 1-5 A-10) will host their A-10 rival in a three-game series this weekend, and will then hit the road for two weeks.

Getting the start on the hill for UMass this afternoon will be right-hander Chris Lloyd, who comes into the game with an 0-1 record and an ERA of 6.50 in four appearances. The other two pitchers set to take the mound this weekend are junior Rory McDonald and senior David Sullivan.

The Minutemen have had their last two games postponed due to inclement weather, and are coming off of a 10-5 loss to Richmond on Sunday.

UMass has not had the type of start to the 2006 season that it was hoping for, but the offense has been holding up its end of the bargain as of late. The Minuteman bats exploded last weekend against the Spiders, stroking 36 hits and scoring 26 runs in the three-game series.

And while the blame certainly cannot be solely placed on the pitching staff, UMass coach Mike Stone knows that his young arms have to make better pitches in order to be successful.

"We feel that we're starting to hit the ball a little bit better," Stone said. "Our defense seems like it's been OK. Pitching-wise, we need to make some adjustments. We need to pitch more down in the strike zone. We left a lot of pitches fat this past weekend, and were hurt because of it.

"Richmond was a good hitting ball club, but maybe we made them look better than they actually were because we pitched in some fat areas of the plate. And it's tough to beat teams with aluminum bats when you do that."

Duquesne, like everyone else in NCAA baseball, will also be using the much-familiar aluminum bats, and UMass will need a solid outing out of Lloyd if it wants to get out of the basement of the A-10 standings.

The Dukes are currently on a four-game losing streak and are coming off of a 10-6 loss to Youngstown State on Wednesday. They are led by sophomore sluggers Derek Mechling and Aaron Janusey.

Mechling leads Duquesne in batting average (.361), slugging percentage (.663), runs scored (20), hits (30), triples (2), home runs (4) and stolen bases (9). The Dukes' catcher is also second on the team in RBIs with 17 on the year. Janusey leads the Dukes in RBIs with 25 and has a .276 batting average with eight doubles and one home run.

KAREN WINCHESTER/COLLEGIAN

Junior Bryan Adamski leads the Minutemen in home runs, slugging percentage and walks in the 2006 season.

While Duquesne is not one of the better teams UMass will play this season, the Minutemen know that they have to focus on their own play and not worry about their opponents' past successes and failures.

"[Duquesne] hasn't done that well yet either," Stone said. "They have two wins in the league, and we have one. It's hard to really tell what kind of ball club they're going to be. I'm always more concerned about what we do and how we compete. I'm more concerned about how we approach the game and our mental toughness. If we play like we can, and we play hard, and we execute, then we have a good opportunity to win."

See BASEBALL on page 6

Minutewomen host undefeated Bonnies in Atlantic 10 opener

BY DANNY PICARD
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Massachusetts women's lacrosse team opens Atlantic 10 Conference play when it hosts St. Bonaventure (7-0) at 3 p.m. this afternoon at Garber Field.

The Minutewomen (3-7) hope to close out their four-game home stand by giving the Bonnies their first defeat of the season. The Maroon and White will then play three consecutive road games, beginning with Richmond (9-2, 1-0 A-10) at 12 p.m. on Sunday afternoon.

UMass got off to a disappointing start due to its very difficult non-conference schedule that it was given. The Minutewomen played three nationally-ranked teams in their first 10 games, and UMass coach Carrie Bolduc knows that her team's spot in the standings may be deceiving.

"We match up pretty well [to St. Bonaventure]," Bolduc said. "We've come off of a really tough non-conference schedule. We played the best of the best, and we've competed at one of the highest levels. We may not have won, but we can play at that level. And we've got to take advantage of that, knowing that we have played some really good teams."

St. Bonaventure is off to its best start in school history with a 7-0 record, and Bolduc knows that the only way her team can pull off an upset is if they execute on both the offensive and defensive side of the ball.

"We need to have more shots," Bolduc said. "We need to possess the ball, hold it more, and be a little bit more careful with it. We have to take advantage of second chances, rebounds and groundballs, and capitalize off of those."

UMass is a perfect 7-0 in A-10 openers. It has the second-best all-time record in league play among conference members. Temple has the best conference record at 41-3, while UMass is 28-16.

While the Minutewomen may not have the number of wins in which they desire, they know that conference play is the beginning of a new season. From here on out, it is win or go home.

"[Our preparation] is the same, if not better," Bolduc said. "The girls know it's do-or-die, and this is what we've prepared for, and it is starting tomorrow. Tomorrow is a big game for us, and they know that. They know that for us to get into the championship, we've got to really come up with a win tomorrow."

This weekend's A-10 games are no walk in the park for UMass. Days after its battle with undefeated St. Bonaventure, the Maroon and White will take on No. 9 Richmond. The Spiders are also off to their best start ever, and are currently riding an eight-game winning streak.

The Minutewomen need to spread the points across the board if they want to have any chance of putting two wins on the board this weekend. Bolduc knows Richmond's strengths and weaknesses, and she has made it very clear that their shot selection in big games is huge.

"It's about us getting the ball through the midfield, conducting the ball and taking care of it," Bolduc said. "[Richmond] has a very good midfield trap. They are really gelling well together and putting up some points. Their keeper is very strong, so we're going to have to take a lot of shots and shoot well against her."

"The girls know it's a new season," Bolduc said. "They know this is what counts, this is what we practice for, and this is ultimately what matters. It's do-or-die. There are no second chances now."

KAREN WINCHESTER/COLLEGIAN

Sophomore attacker Kathleen Typadis leads the Minutewomen with 24 points and 23 goals in the 2006 campaign.

49ers are toughest test yet

BY ERIC ATHAS
COLLEGIAN STAFF

It might be an understatement to say that the Massachusetts softball team is on a roll. After all, the Minutewomen have won eight straight contests, outscored their opponents 74-6 throughout those games and are first in the Atlantic 10 standings. On Sunday, however, UMass (17-11, 6-0 A-10) will meet its biggest threat within the conference in a doubleheader against Charlotte (26-7, 4-0 A-10) at the UMass Softball Complex.

KAREN WINCHESTER/COLLEGIAN

Senior second baseman Kristi Stefanoni went 1-for-4 with two runs scored, one walk and four putouts against Fordham last weekend.

The 49ers are new to the A-10 this season and are on a roll of their own, winning 18 of their last 20 contests. The majority of Charlotte's wins have been a result of the play of junior pitcher Kristen Bowen, who has nabbed 17 individual wins and currently holds an ERA of 1.65, with 115 total strikeouts.

On the contrary, UMass has an ace of its own. Rookie Brandice Balshmiter is on fire, with a season ERA of 0.86, a 13-5 record, one save and 138 strikeouts. Balshmiter is combined with senior pitcher Jenna Busa has struck out 26 batters while posting a personal record of 4-6.

But statistics are the last thing on the mind of these two squads, and the stakes are as high as they can be – the No. 1 slot in the A-10 standings. The Minutewomen and 49ers are the only two A-10 teams who have not lost a single contest this season, and if they both stay on the winning track, a sweep on Sunday could be huge for either squad come May.

Charlotte will be the second A-10 contender UMass has faced in a span of a week, as the Minutewomen had their hands full against Fordham last weekend in a doubleheader in the Bronx. The first contest was a blowout 8-1 win by UMass, but Game 2 turned out to be the closest game the Minutewomen have competed in since losing to Florida Atlantic 4-3 on March 19.

Although 2005 A-10 Pitcher of the Year Sara Kinney kept UMass at bay throughout most of the contest, freshman Minutewoman Whitney Mollica exploded for a homerun and three RBIs off of three hits. Those numbers, along with Mollica's homer in Game 1 paved the way for her being named the A-10 Rookie of the Week.

This is the seventh A-10 honor that Mollica has earned as a rookie, while fellow freshman Balshmiter was nabbed this week's conference Pitcher of the Week. On top of the conference titles, the two also were named the Dinn Brothers/UMass Co-Athletes of the Week.

Mollica currently leads UMass among starters in batting average (.427), RBIs (33), hits (38) and slugging percentage (.798).

Other offensive leaders for UMass are Amanda Acampora (six homers, 22 RBIs), Amanda Morin (.375 batting average, six doubles) and K.J. Kelley (18 RBIs, .463 slugging percentage). Sunday's doubleheader will begin at 12 p.m., with Game 2 starting at 2 p.m.

Charlotte tops in Atlantic 10

JEREMY RICE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

With the Massachusetts softball team's first home series against an Atlantic 10 opponent coming up on Sunday, it's time to look at the competition within the conference. UMass (17-11, 6-0 A-10) is currently in first place in the A-10, but conference newcomer Charlotte has the best overall record at 28-7.

WORST TO FIRST

Last year Charlotte stumbled its way to a 17-39-1 record and last place in Conference USA. After making the switch to the A-10 this year, the transition seems to going smoothly for the 49ers. Charlotte (28-7, 4-0 A-10) have the best overall record of any A-10 team, and join the Minutewomen as the only two undefeated teams in conference play.

The 49ers have improved in every facet of the game – offense, defense and pitching. Last year, the team had a dismal .213 team batting average, compared to .314 this year. Charlotte is not just hitting for average, however, as the team has already surpassed last year's home run mark – 13 all of last year to 22 through just two months in 2006.

Add to that a slugging percentage that is up 173 points from .291 a year ago to .464 this season, and you have an offense that is much more potent. In the field, the 49ers' fielding percentage is up from .949 to .958, while team earned run average is down from 3.59 last year to 2.37 this year.

A lot of this success can be attributed to influx of new, younger talent into the roster. This season Charlotte has six freshmen on the active roster, compared to just two seniors, showing a lot of changeover from a season ago.

UMass will be Charlotte's first big test in its new league. After sweeping doubleheaders against Dayton and St. Bonaventure earlier this season, which combined have a 4-8 conference record, the 49ers will face a Minutewomen's team that has a conference-best 6-0 record and comes into conference play as the defending A-10 champions.

NOT THERE YET

George Washington has one of the best overall records of any A-10 team, but is only seventh in the conference standings because of a poor showing in conference play.

After a strong start in preseason tournaments that included a Colonial Classic championship, the Colonials are just 3-5 in the A-10. After splitting a two-game set with last place La Salle, George Washington was shut out in a double header with UMass. Later in the season the team swept Rhode Island before losing a pair Saint Louis.

Despite their A-10 woes, the Colonials are 20-14 overall. Only Charlotte and UMass have better overall winning percentages. However, in order to earn a spot in the A-10 tournament, GW will likely need to win at least nine of its remaining

See A-10 on page 6

UMass prepares for Spiders, Colonials in critical matches

BY JOSHUA M. FRIEDMAN
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

The Massachusetts tennis team (9-7, 2-0 A-10) will hope for better weather this weekend when it travels to Washington D.C. to battle the perennial powerhouse, and defending conference champion, Richmond Spiders (9-7, 2-0 A-10).

After another rainout – this time canceling a match against Fordham – the Minutewomen head into a critical and deciding weekend against two A-10 opponents.

A stretch of critical tennis will commence at 12 p.m. on Friday against Richmond, and continue on Saturday at 1 p.m. against George Washington.

Led by three-time coach of the year Mark Wesselink, the Spiders started slow but picked up their play as of late, winning eight of 10 matches, including four in a row, until their recent thrashing by the nationally-ranked Virginia Commonwealth University on March 28th.

The Minutewomen look to hand the Spiders their second straight loss and exact some revenge on the team that beat them in the conference championship match last year. Richmond is considered the prohibitive favorite in the A-10.

Win or lose against Richmond on Friday, the Spiders serve as a measuring stick for the Minutewomen. If UMass can hang around against Richmond, it should be able to compete against any team in the fast approaching A-10 tournament.

The second game of the weekend, against the George Washington Colonials (4-8, 1-3 A-10), is a must-win for the Minutewomen. The Colonials are coming off of two disappointing A-10 losses on the road against Duquesne and Xavier over the weekend.

Few bright spots could be found for the Colonials after dropping back-to-back A-10 matches. However, Junior Mara Frisch did go 2-0 at No. 4 singles. Win or lose on Friday against Richmond, the Minutewomen should be able to handle George Washington.

One token of concern comes from the Colonials marked difference in their play at home (4-1) versus on the road (0-6). GW is led by senior Anastasia Skavronskaia, the recent recipient of the A-10's Player of the Week award war for her performances against Temple and James Madison. Last year as a junior, Skavronskaia was one of 12 athletes to earn All-Conference accolades.

After all the games are played this weekend, the Massachusetts tennis team will have finished their A-10 schedule and will have only two more matches before beginning the conference championships.

Avenging their loss to Richmond and finishing strong against George Washington would give the Minutewomen a perfect 6-0 record in the A-10. UMass put itself in great position to once again go deep in the A-10 tournament and compete for a conference title.

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY • EST. 1890

The Daily Collegian

MONDAY, APRIL 10, 2006 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM VOLUME CXVI ISSUE 111

UMass grad students experience brush with death

'It's a miracle,' says survivor of construction accident

BY DAN O'BRIEN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Juan Jimenez and his wife Maria Lozano had no idea that their trip to Boston last Monday would turn into a traumatic and life-changing experience.

The two University of Massachusetts School of Education graduate students were in the city with their 4-year-old son and some friends doing errands and sight-seeing. The couple thought the day would be a relaxing break from their hectic schedules.

Jimenez, Lozano, and their friends — all native Columbians — had just registered to vote in Columbia's presidential elections at the Columbian consulate. The group was driving to an East Boston restaurant around 1 p.m. when their plans literally came to a crashing halt, Lozano said.

Jimenez was driving the couple's Nissan Sentra and following the car driven by friend and UMass graduate student Andres Ramirez when they turned onto Boylston St. At that moment, a gray Honda cut in between them.

That Honda would be crushed by a large piece of scaffolding only seconds later, killing the driver.

The construction equipment had been attached to a building owned by Emerson College, where there had been ongoing renovations for the past two years.

Police say that around 1:20 p.m., scaffolding fell from the building onto the street below. Three men were killed in the accident.

The driver of the Honda was identified as 28-year-old Michael Ty of Roslindale. Ty was a doctor at Brigham and Women's Hospital.

The other two people killed were construction workers who were standing on the scaffolding when it collapsed. They were identified as Robert Beane, 41, of Baldwinville, and Romildo Silva, 27, of Somerville.

Lozano said neither she nor her husband heard or saw anything out of the ordinary until the moment the Honda was crushed.

"The first second after that happened

See SURVIVOR on page 2

Juan Pablo Jimenez and his wife, Maria Lozano, are both graduate students of the UMass School of Education.

Workers remove a portion of scaffolding from a car that was crushed and whose driver was killed when a 20,000-pound construction platform collapsed last Monday.

Fire damages unoccupied South Amherst home

A fire truck sits outside of the unoccupied house as firefighters rush to put out the blaze that caused extensive damage.

Fire shoots out of the windows on the east side of 90 Pomeroy Lane. Officials are still investigating the cause of the fire.

A one-story home in South Amherst was destroyed Saturday night by a fire that caused over $120,000 worth of damage and injured three firefighters, according to the Amherst Fire Department.

Firefighters responded to a call at 9:06 p.m. when a passerby reported the house at 90 Pomeroy Lane ablaze. It took firefighters a few minutes to get the fire under control.

An orange glow could be seen from down the street as flames continued to shoot out of two windows on the east side of the home.

Thirty-one Amherst firefighters would eventually arrive on the scene with four pumpers, an aerial ladder and two ambulances.

Three firefighters received minor injuries while battling the blaze. Firefighters Chris Mallon suffered bruises when he fell through a floor and into the basement, Jeffrey Parr sustained a minor burn to the face and William Webster strained a knee when he fell partially through the roof.

One unidentified firefighter slipped and fell down the roof with an active chainsaw after he attempted to cut a hole through the roof. The firefighter recovered and continued to fight the flames, and afterwards he appeared to be uninjured.

The fire department reported heavy damage to three rooms and the attic and heat damage to every other room in the home.

No one was living in the house, owned by Laurie Reid, at the time the fire occurred because the building had been undergoing renovations.

Will Loving, a resident of Coach Lane, which is adjacent to 90 Pomeroy Lane, said someone had been burning leaves at the residence shortly before the fire started.

"I came out for a walk around 6:15 or 6:30," Loving said. "I saw people raking leaves and burning them ... They had a smoking pile."

Fire and police investigators have labeled the cause of the fire accidental, but have not come to any conclusions. Officials were still on the scene at press time trying to determine the fire's exact cause.

—Dan O'Brien

Reverend and choir teach about consumerism

BY MICHAEL DEEHAN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

A crowd of students was entertained at Hampshire College on Saturday night by a fake evangelist preaching about the importance of social justice.

"How many televangelists would get invited to a reproductive rights conference?" asked performance artist and playwright Bill Talen, better known by his holy-rolling pseudonym Rev. Billy.

Performing underneath a banner reading "From Abortion Rights to Social Justice: Building the Movement for Reproductive Freedom," Rev. Billy and the "Church of Stop Shopping" Gospel Choir provided entertainment with a message to the multitudes gathered at Hampshire College's Robert Crown Center.

Talen's intention was to inspire his audience to resist consumerism and support local businesses, and the socially progressive preacher received a warm reaction from the decidedly left-of-center Hampshire crowd. Later admitting that most of the show's spectators were probably already in agreement with his "sermon," Talen said he knew he was "preaching to the choir," but that the Pioneer Valley crowd "is a very important choir."

After the performance, several students said that they enjoyed the musical and comedic portions of the show, but that the ideology was lacking.

"It was interesting. I didn't find the rhetoric very convincing," said Tim Dolan, a student at Sarah Lawrence College and Northampton native. "I also didn't find it very coherent," he added.

Another Sarah Lawrence student, Carly Miller, was critical of of Talen's hard-line anti-consumption message. "I'm not a big fan of the "us vs. them" rhetoric. The bad guys vs. the good guys," she said.

The preacher may be a fake, but the choir is no joke. Much of the show's success has been credited to Choir Director James Solomon Benn and the gospel group that supports the good Reverend's exaggerated antics. An authentic gospel sound inspired by African-American church services gives Talen's messages of peace, love and community business a legitimate appeal. The choir is backed up by an alto saxophone, trombone, drums and two keyboards that produce a range of synthesized pianos and organ music.

"Some people accuse us of being a cult. We are a diffi-cult!" Talen said of his fellow activists.

The show began with a procession of 25 singing and clapping choir members, all clad in red robes. The gospel singers are a diverse group, encompassing a multitude of races and styles. As the choir arranged itself on stage, Rev. Billy made his way through the rows of the audience, shaking hands with his "parishioners" as he went.

A song evoking the power of the "Justice Ghost" including the repeated lyrics "My neighborhood is not for sale" got the crowd going by the time the Reverend started his introduction speech.

Talen remarked that he felt that "sinners of consumption" were in the audience. "There's too much credit in this room."

"We think of consumerism as a way of life," Talen said before a song warning against the coming of the "Shopocalypse" and the finale of the performance.

Co-worker testifies at murder trial

BY JOHN FENUCCIO
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Bryan Johnston, on trial for the shooting death of David "Sully" Sullivan, sat through the half-day court proceedings at Hampshire Superior Court with a blank stare as witnesses offered their testimony.

While Johnston's defense team is not debating whether or not Johnston shot Sullivan, they are looking at mental illness as a possible explanation for the murder of a friend.

Gareth Arthur Mellow, a former coworker of Johnston's at Bay State Medical Center and the sole non-police witness of the day, took the witness stand to answer questions from the prosecution and defense.

Mellow, now back from a six and a half month tour of Iraq, worked as a patrol officer along with Johnston while at Bay State Medical. Mellow had never noticed anything particularly off about Johnston and became friendly, especially when Johnston agreed to work during Thanksgiving Day for Mellow.

See MURDER on page 2

Volunteers fight hunger

BY MELISSA D'AMICO
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

Students from the Five College area gathered in Amherst Common Saturday to participate in the 22nd Annual Hunger Cleanup, a one-day work-a-thon that raised money to aid in the fight against hunger and homelessness.

The Amherst Hunger Cleanup was organized by MassPIRG, the Massachusetts Student Public Interest Group, as a way to raise money for hunger relief efforts and raise awareness about hunger as a local problem.

MassPIRG is donating 50 percent of the event's proceeds to the Food Bank of Western Massachusetts, an organization which distributes more than six million pounds of food to local agencies throughout Berkshire, Franklin, Hampden, and Hampshire counties. These agencies include soup kitchens, food pantries, homeless shelters, childcare centers, and elder programs.

The Hunger Cleanup began 22 years ago when a group of students from Aquinas College in Michigan organized 100 students

See HUNGER on page 2

Posters taken down due to racist graffiti

The chair of the University of Massachusetts English department recently requested that her students take down posters promoting an upcoming event after they were defaced by racist graffiti.

The posters were used to announce the Seventh Annual Writers of Color Reading event, which features an ethnically diverse group of talented writers reading from their work, according to event chairperson Anne Herrington.

The reading featured eight UMass students and took place on Saturday at the Food for Thought bookstore on North Pleasant St.

Herrington released an e-mail to English Department students on Thursday informing them of the incident and asking them to take the graffiti-scrawled posters down.

"Free speech does not include defacing others' work," Herrington wrote. "If you see someone marking the posters, ask them to stop."

Some of the alleged racist comments on the fliers included "No White People Allowed!" and the ungrammatical comment, "So stupid, one week their negro's, next their blacks."

Herrington cited the University's mission statement in her argument, saying that one of the goals of UMass is to "achieve a multicultural campus where men and women of diverse racial, social, and economic groups play major roles and, in a spirit of mutual respect, come to understand and appreciate the variety of perspectives that diversity makes possible."

Chancellor John Lombardi released a statement regarding the posters over the weekend, which read "Racist graffiti reflect bigoted minds, and such anonymous scribbling reflects cowardice as well. We expect everyone who passes through this campus to behave better, but from time to time people disappoint us."

—Dan O'Brien

ARTS & LIVING

'NUMBER SLEVEN' SATISFIES

New crime thriller full of twists and action.

PAGE 4

EDITORIAL/OPINION

INTERNET IS TAKING OVER

Media on the Web is affecting politics, says one columnist.

PAGE 3

WEATHER

TODAY	TONIGHT	TOMORROW
High 64	Low 35	High 69
Sunny	Clear	Low 39
		Mostly Sunny

SPORTS

MINUTEMEN WEATHER RED STORM

UM deals 16-9 loss to St. John's in lacrosse.

PAGE 8

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief Michael A. Busack
Managing Editor Eric Athas
Business Manager Nathan Chomsky
Production Manager Nicholas Belanger
Night Supervisor Katie Huston
Advertising Manager Kerry O'Grady
Advertising Production Lauren Egavian
Editorial Production Amanda Allen
Arts & Living Editor Ian Jones
Comics Editor Amanda Allen
Editorial Editor Kristen LaCasse
News Editor Dan O'Brien
Sports Editor Jeff Howe
Circulation Manager Thomas Hecht
Distribution Manager Nick Gleason
Finance Manager Daniel Cossi
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Assistant Advertising Caren Tortorici
Assistant Business Phil Smoller
Asst. Arts & Living Morgan-Ann Rousseau
Asst. Arts & Living Alex Butler
Assistant News Megan Daley
Assistant News Marc Bellveau
Assistant Sports Dan Duggan
Assistant Sports Rob Greenfield
Assistant Editorial Tucker Merrick

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is independently funded, operating on advertising revenue. Founded in 1890, the paper began as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1907, the Weekly Collegian in 1908 and the Daily Weekly Collegian in 1936. Published daily since 1967, the Collegian has been broadsheet since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5 p.m.

Production Crew
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Katie Huston

COPY EDITOR
Eric Athas

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Melody Natal

PRODUCTION STAFF
Lauren Egavian, Michael A. Busack

If you see news happening, call us at 545-1809 and snap a photo with your cell phone, then send it to news@dailycollegian.com

Iraq vet, officer testify at trial

MURDER from page 1

"I had received a call from Johnston early the morning of December 8th, 2004 saying he needed to be picked up and he was in a police car," Mellow said. When asked why he made the trip he said, "Johnston had worked for me on Thanksgiving so I owed him one."

Mellow, who had not previously been to Hadley, made the trip from Sommers, Conn. to where Johnston was waiting, accompanied by police. When Mellow arrived between 1:15-1:30 a.m. to pick him up, he immediately detected an "aged alcohol smell" emanating from Johnston's person. It was during the car ride home to Johnston's Westfield apartment that Mellow noticed something was wrong.

"He kept saying it was dumb luck that he had to deal with police and that it was dumb luck his car got caught in a log when he went to take a piss," Mellow said. Johnston's Lincoln Continental was found stuck on a log used to barricade the parking lot of Aqua Vitae, an Italian restaurant on Route 9 in Hadley.

Mellow testified that Johnston had told him, "It was a good thing that police hadn't searched me because I have my piece on me." Johnston, whose firearm permit had been revoked, brandished a revolver that Mellow grabbed and threw under his seat. Mellow said that Johnston told him he had been to a UMass party that evening but that he hadn't fired the gun.

Upon arriving at Johnston's apartment, Mellow became more uneasy when he noticed the appearance of "thin red scratches all over his body" and Johnston asked Mellow if he would like to see his new plasma television.

Mellow, who in an initial statement to police said he didn't think Johnston was drunk, said he did believe Johnston had consumed alcohol that night, but not to the point where he was out of control.

"I could understand every word he said on the ride home," Mellow said.

Sergeant David Ragazzini, a tenured Westfield police officer, also took the witness stand, as he was on duty during the midnight-8 a.m. shift the night of Dec. 7, 2004. Ragazzini, upon arriving at Johnston's parents' home along with other officers, noticed a troubled and sleepy Johnston.

"He was agitated, saying unless we had a search warrant that we needed to leave," Ragazzini said. He testified that Johnston warned police that "If they had pepper spray, they'd need to use it" because Johnston allegedly stated he was a "special police officer" and knew how to fight.

It was only after Johnston moved his way from the living room towards the kitchen that police intervened, cutting him off from the kitchen because of the "potential danger risk," Ragazzini said. Ragazzini deflected a punch from Johnston and, with the help of two other officers, demobilized Johnston with a short burst of pepper spray.

Ragazzini knew additional officers were necessary before arriving at Johnston's parents' house because the report from dispatch had been a "Section 12." Ragazzini described it as "one of the most dangerous situations" because of the potential risk the individual could be to others and/or himself.

Additional forensic experts associated with various official agencies offered various items seized from Johnston's person the night of the shooting, including a pair of Tommy Hilfiger blue jeans from which samples were taken for DNA evidence, all of which proved to be a match to Bryan Johnston.

Iran continues tests of nuclear weapons

KRT

A Fajr-3 missile is test-fired by Iran. Recently, Iran has upped its weapons testing despite protests from the West.

By Nedra Pickler
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The White House on Sunday sought to dampen the idea of a U.S. military strike on Iran, saying the United States is conducting "normal defense and intelligence planning" as President Bush seeks a diplomatic solution to Tehran's suspected nuclear weapons program.

Administration officials — from President Bush on down — have left open the possibility of a military response if Iran does not end its nuclear ambitions. Several reports published Sunday said the administration was studying options for military strikes; one account raised the possibility of using nuclear bombs against Iran's underground nuclear sites.

Britain's foreign secretary called the idea of a nuclear strike "completely nuts."

Dan Bartlett, counselor to Bush, cautioned against reading too much into administration planning.

"The president's priority is to find a diplomatic solution to a problem the entire world recognizes," Bartlett told The Associated Press on Sunday. "And those who are drawing broad, definitive conclusions based on normal defense and intelligence planning are ill-informed and are not knowledgeable of the administration's thinking on Iran."

Experts say a military strike on Iran would be risky and complicated. U.S. forces already are preoccupied with Iraq and Afghanistan, and an attack against Iran could inflame U.S. problems in the Muslim world.

British Foreign Secretary Jack Straw, in an interview with the British Broadcasting Corp., said Britain would not launch a pre-emptive strike on Iran and he was as "certain as he could be" that neither would the U.S. He said he has a high suspicion that Iran is developing a civil nuclear capability which in turn could be used for nuclear weapons.

MassPIRG fights world hunger

HUNGER from page 1

Humanity is a feel-good experience."

Although continuous efforts are being made by local and national organizations for hunger relief, hunger is still a significant problem throughout America.

"These problems are still happening. [Hunger and homelessness] were problems 20 years ago and they are still problems today," said Renee Provencher, an organizer for the National Campaign Against Hunger and Homelessness.

"This is not just community service. You are now part of a national student movement," she told volunteers.

Andrew Morehouse, Executive Director of the Food Bank of Western Massachusetts, said the event was a "bittersweet experience" in a speech to volunteers.

"[The experience] is sweet because we are able to see so many volunteers come out to help the cause, but bitter because organizations like this have to exist at all," said Morehouse.

Many families throughout the area are unable to support themselves even though they may be employed.

"One out of three households we serve has at least one person who works. These are working families. [The households] have income and still can't get by. They can't stretch their income to meet their basic needs," Morehouse said.

"Food is a basic human right. Through community organizations and volunteer support, we can alleviate the problem of hunger in the short term. We may not be able to solve the problem of poverty, but through [volunteer] support we can solve hunger in America," Morehouse said.

Students were both willing and excited to donate their time for the benefit of their community and to expose the local problem of hunger.

"There is definitely a visibility problem. People don't see the hunger, but it is a huge issue," said UMass senior Stephanie Fauer-Beck.

Student relives harrowing event

SURVIVOR from page 1

we couldn't believe it," Lozano said. "We were shocked. I couldn't move."

After realizing everyone in the car was uninjured, the family got out. They explained that after stepping over a body outside their vehicle, they tried to take their young son Nicolas as far away from the accident scene as possible.

"The first few minutes he was asking a lot of questions — 'What's going on, what happened.' I explained that it was an accident, something fell off, the person fell down, because that's the person that he saw," Lozano said. "I was trying to guide his attention towards other things, the ambulances, the fire trucks…and he was very amazed by that."

Lozano said there was a moment of utter confusion just after the accident happened. She and Jimenez were unaware if their friends in the other car were okay.

"They got out of the car, yelling and screaming, and they thought the worst had happened to us," she said. "But when they saw us, they were just confused. They didn't know what happened, they started hugging us and crying. We were just telling them 'We're fine! We're fine!'"

Jimenez said his family and friends' survival through the ordeal could only be summed up in one phrase: "It's a miracle."

"We're very Catholic…It's the only word we have found for this," Jimenez said. "If you look at those pictures, our car is in between the debris…and where we were, almost nothing happened, the windshield isn't broken."

Life isn't something to take for granted, explained Jimenez, who added that spending time with his family and friends is more important to him than ever before.

"I really think we need to slow down our pace, definitely," he said. "We are [already] very aware of spending time as a family together, especially weekends and afternoons, but now it seems 100 times more important."

If You've Got a Plan We've Got a Van!
Insurance Replacement Rates FREE PICK-UP
POTTERS AUTO & TRUCK RENTAL
• Direct Billing to Insurance Company
• Locally Owned & Operated
• 7 & 15 Passenger Vans
• UMass Purchase Orders, NHEC Rates
North Amherst Motors
Collision Repairs & Glass Replacement
78 Sunderland Rd., North Amherst, MA
(413) 549-RENT (7368)
www.northamherstmotors.com
(One mile North of UMass - on bus route)

Results you can feel...
for back pain.
Dr. Lee Kane
Chiropractic Physican
Participating provider of HMO's student insurance, Blue Cross, GIC, car insurance & most others.
www.AmherstFamilyChiro.com
Amherst Family Chiropractic
Center for Natural Health
228 Triangle Street
Amherst, MA
549-1500
Most insurance accepted

Bueno Y Sano
Every Tuesday is
Fat Tuesday
Grandé Burritos same price as regular burritos every Tuesday.
1 Bdwood Walk, Amherst, MA - Behind Newbury Comics
Call Ahead for Pick Up (413) 253 - 4000
Open Daily 11a.m - 10p.m
134 Main Street, Northampton, MA - Next to Thorne's
Call Ahead for Pick Up (413) 586 - 7311
Open Daily 11a.m - 10p.m

The College of Humanities & Fine Arts
Dean's Seminar: Alumni in the World presents
Nieman Fellow at Harvard University and former Bureau Chief for Europe & the Middle East for the Boston Globe
Charles Sennott '84

A DAY IN THE LIFE OF REPORTING IN THE FIELD
A Journalist in Iraq in the days following September 11, 2001
TUESDAY, APRIL 11
5:00 pm
reception to follow
Memorial Hall
UMass Amherst

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

EDITORIAL OPINION

Monday, April 10, 2006

"I may not agree with what you say but I will defend to the death your right to say it." Voltaire

Editorial@dailycollegian.com

Rise of the blogosphere

Matt Giancola

The presidential debate for the 1960 election was the first to be televised. John F. Kennedy wore makeup and spoke into the camera while Richard Nixon did not. Kennedy came off as a young, charismatic statesman but Nixon looked nervous and ill-tempered.

Kennedy barely won the election. He understood the importance of adapting one's style to fit a new medium. For the next 40 years, television was the most important source of media that politicians used to campaign, spread information and create an image. Bill Clinton brilliantly used his musical appearance on the Arsenio Hall Show to show younger generations that he was part of their culture and that he understood them.

Now, however, the era of television's dominance in politics is over. The form of media that has taken over is the Internet, and this time, campaigns and politicians can do very little to unilaterally craft the message they want to send. The Internet has no corporations running it, no editorial staff determining what is and what is not newsworthy. Instead, millions of armchair analysts are throwing their two cents into the ring and creating a sphere of blogs, some more influential than others.

Writers' real-world professions run the range; they are students, authors, lawyers, politicians and everything in between. The most influential blogs are written by those who also make it their living, or for whom blogs are very much related to their other work.

For example, one of the most widely read blogs, AndrewSullivan.com, is written by the former editor of the New Republic who also writes books about the political landscape. His posts are always original, well thought out, and honest.

Why read about Iraq when you can read an Iraqi's perspective of what is going on in his Baghdad neighborhood? Read the insights of a former Navy War College professor who worked for the Department of Defense at Iraqthemodel.com.

Politicians are increasingly taking advantage of these blogs. More often, they are treating these blogs as newspapers and are willing to be interviewed by the authors. Deval Patrick, a candidate for governor of Massachusetts, recently sat down with some of the biggest Mass. blogs out there. He understands the importance of this new media and does not want to be left behind.

Now, however, the era of television's dominance in politics is over. The form of media that has taken over is the Internet, and this time, campaigns and politicians can do very little to unilaterally craft the message they want to send.

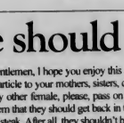
Even the news on television and in print is influenced by the chatter in the blogosphere. CNN devotes a few segments each day to covering some of the important discussions within the Internet. Bloggers like Andrew Sullivan, Arianna Huffington and others are guests on political talk shows.

These bloggers don't simply rant about what is going on; many times they uncover stories that the mainstream media has overlooked. Arianna Huffington was at the forefront of the CIA leak investigation and wrote about Scooter Libby and Judy Miller's dealings. The Smoking Gun, not necessarily a political site, often reveals documents and information that many important people wish would remain secret.

So why are blogs written by ordinary citizens so important to politicians and the mainstream media? The answer is that in many cases, these writers are also the grassroots supporters of either the Democrats or the Republicans.

If you get too many bloggers angry, not only will they write about it — their anger will be reflected in how much money they give to a campaign, how many hours they volunteer and whether or not they go out and vote. Democrats think twice when saying something that will not be received well on DailyKos.com, a huge community of progressive writers. When the Republicans lose the support of The Corner on National Review, trouble awaits them.

This has both a positive and negative effect on partisan politics. The positive effect is that politicians are listening to more of the public, and not just the few party insiders and pundits. It's always a good thing when the public is included in the dialogue. The downside, however, is that politics appears to be moving towards a more vicious partisanship not seen before.



You can firmly believe in the correctness of your viewpoint, but petty name-calling not only weakens your argument, it makes the political process less inviting for the public and continues apathy. The vitriolic hatred that sometimes manifests in liberal blogs, like Daily Kos and the comment section of the Huffington Post, is something that all progressives should be ashamed of. Our worldview is one of helping the less fortunate and understanding and accepting people from different cultures. How are we to get people to understand the importance of progressive politics if we constantly make fun of them?

The right-wing blogs certainly are not saints, either. Their attacks can be truly disgusting, homophobic, racist, xenophobic, and intolerant. John Derbyshire, of the Corner, consistently writes horrible posts. In one, he wrote about how little sympathy he had with the sinking of a ferry off the coast of Egypt. The fact that they were all civilians did little to make him feel any sense of remorse.

Despite these unfortunate exceptions, there are many more that offer enlightening solutions to today's problems. The future of political discourse in the United States will be found on the Internet, by the citizens who participate in the government they own.

Matt Giancola is a Collegian columnist.

He should have bitten his tongue

Chris Eckel

Hello gentlemen, I hope you enjoy this article. If you choose to read this article to your mothers, sisters, daughters, girlfriends, wives or any other female, please, pass on my regards to them. Also, tell them that they should get back in the kitchen and finish making that steak. After all, they shouldn't be allowed to think for themselves. Oops, sorry, I've been hearing a bit too much lately from some rather foolish public officials.

An old bon mot says, "It is better to stay silent and let people think you are an idiot than to open your mouth and remove all doubt." That wisdom came from a politician I respect and admire, Abraham Lincoln.

However, apparently the members of his own party didn't pay much attention, because we have another elected idiot on our hands. Bill Napoli is a Republican state senator from South Dakota, the state that recently spit in the face of Roe v. Wade. After the legislation that practically outlaws abortion was passed, Napoli was interviewed on a PBS special about the bill.

At one point, the host asked under what circumstances an abortion might be acceptable. Napoli answered, "A real-life description to me would be a rape victim, brutally raped, savaged. The girl was a virgin. She was religious. She planned on saving her virginity until she was married. She was brutalized and raped, sodomized as bad as you can possibly make it, and is impregnated. I mean, that girl could be so messed up, physically and psychologically, that carrying that child could very well threaten her life."

Hey, we all get misquoted from time to time, but considering that this was on television, I'm going to assume Bill was saying what he meant, and meaning what he said, and as such, I have a few qualms about his thought processes.

Hey, Bill, I don't want to bring it back to 10th grade biology here, but I'm pretty sure the butt and the baby-making organs are distinctly separate. In fact, some people want to outlaw sodomy because "gasp" it represents unnatural intercourse, since it cannot possibly produce a baby. But enough about that silly biology stuff — it has no place in the abortion debate, right?

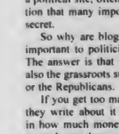
The main problem I'm concerned with is that our friend Bill seems to have very narrow qualifications for who can or cannot get an abortion. Apparently, it is a prerequisite to be a virgin, so I would guess that his wife doesn't qualify, nor would any of our mothers. That, to me, is fairly upsetting.

Bill seems to have very narrow qualifications for who can or cannot get an abortion. Apparently, it is a prerequisite to be a virgin, so I would guess that his wife doesn't qualify, nor would any of our mothers. That, to me, is fairly upsetting.

Apparently, you also have to be religious. Should all the women in America be issued little identification cards that they can flash as they are walking through the doors of an abortion clinic? Maybe their rabbis or preachers can stamp or punch them each time they go to services, by the end of the year, it should look like a well-used Antonio's card.

People like this should not be elected to lead America. This isn't an argument to either outlaw or sanction abortion. I'm not nearly confident enough about my own views on the subject to argue one way or the other. However, I would appreciate someone in the public eye putting forth some intelligent discourse, and not just ridiculous scenarios.

Any one of us could pick out the drunkest kid at ABC and bring up the abortion debate, and he/she could probably say something more coherent and less offensive than this buffoon. I was of the opinion that troglodytes had been mostly phased out of the evolutionary chain (oops, maybe the wrong word choice to use when addressing a conservative), but either they never went away, or else they are coming back in a big way.



The only way to combat such close-minded ideologues is with some intelligent words and actions. Fortunately, there are a lot of smart people out there. Believe it or not, Bill, many of them are female.

In fact, when I think of some of the smartest people I know, at least four women come prominently to mind. Of course, I am sure there are quite a few more women I do not know out there who are eminently qualified to decide what is best for their own bodies. I just hope they are given the chance to do so, rather than be symbolically relegated to the kitchen by an overzealous champion of 17th century puritanical beliefs.

Chris Eckel is a Collegian columnist

Pompous windbags

Adam DeSimone

A project to erect 130 wind turbines off the coast of Nantucket Island is in serious jeopardy. This project would place windmills in federal waters off the coast of Nantucket Sound. Altogether, they would generate energy for three-fourths of all Cape Cod's needs.

The power generated would replace 450 MW of energy from fossil fuels — enough to offset roughly 2.7 million barrels of oil imports per year. At $60 per barrel, Massachusetts sends $162 million abroad to unstable and unfriendly oil producing countries to buy this energy. By building these turbines, Massachusetts would be less vulnerable to oil price fluctuation and would not fund these foreign governments.

Sounds great, doesn't it? Unfortunately, powerful political lobbyists are trying to stop this project. These lobbies have formed a strong coalition whose aim is to preserve the status quo and allow the U.S. to maintain its current irresponsible energy policy.

Surprisingly, our senior senator, Ted Kennedy, is spearheading the derailment of this project. He and many residents of Nantucket, Martha's Vineyard and Cape Cod have mobilized their vast sources of capital to keep the wind farm grounded.

Why? Well, it seems that these people are concerned the proposed farm could obstruct their view of the Sound's natural beauty, despite the fact that the turbines would be over a mile from the coast and barely visible above the horizon. While these people claim to support alternative energy and other sound environmental projects, they simply feel that this is not an appropriate place for such a project. In other words, Massachusetts' liberal elite is arguing a textbook example of NIMBY (not in my backyard).

Initially, these people sighted concerns about inadvertently killing birds. However, these arguments were largely debunked as recent evidence has proven otherwise. While older generation windmills were short and frequently overlapped with flight paths of birds, new models stand much taller, at about 360 feet. This means that the arms of the mill will spin over most birds, causing them no harm.

In fact, a recent study by Danish researchers has shown that less than one percent of migratory birds will be killed while in seasonal commute. Additionally, GE is producing mills that stand about 500 feet, generate twice as much electricity as current models and would further reduce avian deaths.

Despite this research, Kennedy's obsession with protecting his Hyannisport property remains. Recently, he recruited Don Young, a Republican from Alaska, to help sink the deal. Young's proposal, known as the "Young Amendment," would ban any offshore wind farms within 1.5 miles of shore. He proposed this under the guise of protecting shipping lanes and to stop the mills from interfering with radar.

However, this amendment is ridiculous for several reasons. First, any evidence that radar equipment will render ineffective is based off of one study in Britain that was not conclusive.

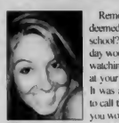
Second, the distance of 1.5 miles would make the U.S. the most restrictive country in the world for offshore windmill construction (comparatively, Denmark's restriction is one-quarter mile). Also, since U.S. oil rigs drill 500 feet from shore, 1.5 miles seems particularly absurd.

Third, the Army Corps of Engineers released a study stating that wind turbines would actually aid ships in navigation since each windmill would have numbers painted on them.

Fourth, 1.5 miles conveniently corresponds with the area that has been set aside for the wind farm. The remaining buildable area would be restricted as to make the project uneconomical.

This bill has nothing to do with wind farm regulation. This language was inserted as an underhanded, backdoor amendment that was supposed to pass without notice.

Also, perhaps the most insulting component of the Young Amendment is that it was introduced as part of a Coast Guard Reauthorization bill. This bill has nothing to do with wind farm regulation. This language was inserted as an underhanded, backdoor amendment that was supposed to pass without notice. Young almost succeeded, there's been virtually no debate. Only our nation's most powerful politicians talk of the issue, and they do so behind closed doors.



Although other politicians are involved with derailing the project (Gov. Romney for example), it is Ted Kennedy and Don Young's selfish actions that are particularly flagrant and damaging. Despite Kennedy's cries of "no blood for oil," he apparently won't act on this assertion.

This is somewhat understandable, since many of his Cape constituents aren't threatened by petrol costs and probably don't have family members serving abroad. As a result, we will have to bear the brunt of his shortsightedness.

Unfortunately, the Young Amendment could soon pass and doom the project. Thanks to Kennedy and all the other hypocrites in Hyannis, the ideal of government transparency was replaced by an opaque, bleak future. Thanks, Ted.

Adam DeSimone is a UMass student

Students, go to the doctor

Rebecca Paskievich

Remember when you were young and deemed sick enough to stay home from school? The knowledge that an entire day would be spent propped on the couch watching TV, being served orange juice at your every demand was exhilarating. It was a huge deal too. Your mom had to call the school and let them know that you would be absent. You had to arrange for a friend to get all of your handouts and worksheets from the teacher so that you would not fall behind. Your illness was all-consuming.

When college students are feeling under the weather, they simply sleep in. There isn't a real panic because there is not typically someone calling out names to double check on who is or isn't present like in elementary school.

Although I'm petrified of missing something critical and therefore show up to class clad in sweatpants and sniffling incessantly, most kids just roll over after turning off their alarms. Making it to Health Services is a joke, especially if you live in Southwest. If you're going to get up the energy to get there, you might as well tromp to class.

In college, as soon as one person seems to be feeling not so hot, all of a sudden every person you know is sick. Germs spread like wildfire, and before you know it, it's difficult to hear your teacher speaking because lecture is full of coughs, sneezes and throat clearing.

I had a cold for literally a month. Some days were worse than others, but I always felt the heaviness in my head. I rarely, if ever, get sick. My stuffy nose and constant headache were driving me nuts.

And it wasn't like when I was little and could be relieved because my symptoms meant not having to finish the two math equations I had for homework. It was just a major inconvenience. Everything still needed to get done, and sleeping all day did not cut it.

My sickness escalated over break. I was reminded of the vital characteristics of illness when I woke up after a solid 16-hour nap. I had to slowly use my hands to prop my body. I sat upright with my head in my hands for at least 30 seconds. If I would have stood up right away, I would have face-planted onto the floor because my forehead weighed of steel.

As I started to shuffle along the floor, my eyes were essentially closed because they were steaming and heavy. I looked like a lost and blind 3-year-old child with one hand firmly feeling the wall as I continued down the hallway. When I switched on the bathroom light I thought the sun had burst through the walls; I closed my eyes tight and fast to avert the blinding shine.

Germs spread like wildfire, and before you know it, it's difficult to hear your teacher speaking because lecture is full of coughs, sneezes and throat clearing.

Stumbling around in the medicine cabinet I found the Nyquil. There was clearly no dosage cup or spoon around so I just slugged it back. I would have preferred pure vinegar to this green, tar-like substance. As soon as I gulped it down I noticed the display of Dixie cups on a shelf. Awesome. I unwrapped some toilet paper to bring back to my cave-like room and slowly waddled back to my safe haven.

I then noticed that I didn't have pants on. I was walking around my house clad in undies and a t-shirt, while I was sleeping I must have taken off my pants because I was so hot.

I finally lay back down, and as soon as my head hit the pillow I realized I forgot to make a damp washcloth for my forehead and eyes. I clearly was not going to get up again, so I just rested my fingers on my closed eyelids, hoping for some relief.

One day I woke up eventually unable to breath because my nose was so clogged. Later that afternoon, I headed to the doctor's — something, thankfully, I never do unless it's for my annual checkup — to see if this would ever stop. I met with a doctor I had never seen before, who had an odd twitch and a bit of a stutter.

I answered a few simple questions after my blood pressure and temperature were taken, and then bam — the instrument used to look in your eyes was up my nostril. While he was scoping around he carried on conversation, asking details about my symptoms. The old man continued checking my snoggers while I told him that I go to UMass and was on spring break.

It turned out that I had a sinus infection. I picked up my antibiotics that day and have been taking three a day since. This story is meant to neither disgust you with messy details about my infection, nor to elicit sympathy; this is simply a plea for those of you who are reluctant to go to the doctor's unless you crack your skull open. Just go.

I used to believe any ailment would go away on its own, but it wasn't until my parents suggested getting checked out that I was finally relieved of an incessant runny nose and pounding headaches.

I had a sniffly spring break, but I'm glad I didn't have to deal with classes while I was sick. If my health only had this type of timing in elementary school I would have racked up perfect attendance awards like nobody's business.

Rebecca Paskievich is a Collegian columnist

We need columnists!
Write one column every two weeks.
Get clips for your resume.
Voice your opinion to the entire campus.
Send application requests to:
editorial@dailycollegian.com
or stop by the Collegian office:
Campus Center basement, room 115

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

ARTS & LIVING

MONDAY, APRIL 10, 2006

'Number Slevin' satisfies with twisted thrills

BY JAKE MONTE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

When a film has a star for every speaking part, it's a safe bet that the script was a good read. The script in question is "Lucky Number Slevin," written by Jason Smilovic, and the stars are Bruce Willis, Morgan Freeman, Josh Hartnett, Lucy Lui, Ben Kingsley, and Stanley Tucci. Even though Lucky Number Slevin is a safe bet, "safe bets" and "sure things" don't always pan out.

'Lucky Number Slevin'
Directed by Paul McGuigan
Starring Josh Hartnett, Lucy Liu
MGM
Rated R
109 mins.
Grade B

We learn this in the beginning of the film when Bruce Willis (Paul Smith), also known as the infamous assassin Goodkat, tells the story of a "sure thing" doped up racehorse bet on by a man named Max. His racehorse collapsed on the track and Max was in debt 22 grand. Paul Smith explains to the man he's telling the story that they killed Max's family to "try to make an impression." Then Smith says, "The reason I'm in town, in case you're wondering, is because of a Kansas City Shuffle. Everyone looks right, you go left." Moments later he kills the man listening to the story and says, "I can't have a Kansas City Shuffle without a body."

We don't know for most of the film what a Kansas City Shuffle is. We don't know why Paul Smith killed this man. We don't even know what the events of the last 10 minutes, which include a couple nameless murders in the beginning, have to do with the main story to which we're about to be introduced.

The main story centers around a man named Slevin, played by Josh Hartnett. The first time we see him he's clad in a bath towel, in the apartment of Nick Fisher, looking in the mirror and cracking his broken nose back into place. Lindsay (Lucy Lui) knocks looking for Nick. She asks him what happened to his nose. Slevin tells the story of a mugging, and Lindsay notices that he's still wearing his watch. The questions the film poses to the audience continue to amount. There's a romance between Slevin and Lindsay that comes to fruition about midway through the film.

When Lindsay leaves, two men, Slow and Elvis, barge into the apartment and tell Slevin that "The Boss" wants to see him. "The Boss" (Morgan Freeman) explains to Slevin that Nick Fisher owes him 96 thousand dollars. Whether or not Slevin is Nick Fisher doesn't seem to concern him. He provides Slevin with a way to get out of debt and call it even. Slevin has to kill The Fairy. He's the son of a man called The Rabbi (Ben Kingsley).

Stanley Tucci plays Detective Brikowski, who drives around in a surveillance van with the words "City Drain" painted on the side along with his fellow cops. He's looking to find out what Slevin's business with "The Boss" is.

"Lucky Number Slevin" has numerous jokes but is virtually never funny. The first hour is plagued by overly-cute and extra-clever dialogue. "I'm gonna say what any man with two penises says when his tailor asks him if he dresses to the right or to the left ...yes." It's the sound of a writer in love with his own words more than the words of the characters. Bruce Willis' sociopathic smile is like something out of a comic book and struck me as mildly stupid.

But there are many positives. "Lucky Number Slevin" is thoroughly entertaining, and if it doesn't annoy you, as it didn't me, you'll find yourself glued to the plot and exhilarated by the twists. The film gets progressively better as it unfolds. The flashbacks in the film are excessive, and the film could do with a cleaner edit, but for the most part the flashbacks work. This is a credit to Director Paul McGuigan ("Wicker Park"), whose mission is obviously to entertain. If your mission is to be entertained, you may find a suitable meeting of the minds.

Lucy Liu plays Lindsey and Josh Hartnett plays Slevin. The pair makes sparks fly in Paul McGuigan's new crime thriller about a man amidst a grim crime war.

Bruce Willis plays an infamous assassin known as Mr. Goodkat, and costars with actor Morgan Freeman.

Humor lights up 'Smoking' satire aimed at tobacco industry

BY PETER FRISMAN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Quick — think of a movie whose protagonist is a spokesman for big tobacco. What genre would this film be?

Chances are, you either guessed "A satire of the tobacco industry," "A parable about humanity and dignity in people deemed evil by contemporary society," or "A dark, almost nihilistic comedy that plays off audiences' preconceived notions about the personalities of people with morally dubious careers." Jason Reitman's "Thank You For Smoking," based on Christopher Buckley's acclaimed novel, is all three. Does this mean it's predictable? Far from it.

Nick Naylor (Aaron Eckhart, "The Pledge") is the aforementioned lobbyist, whose ex-wife has custody of his only child, Joey (Cameron Bright, "Birth"). A man with political savvy and ego, Nick has a philosophy that you're right if you argue correctly, which may explain why he has no problem speaking on behalf of an industry that's responsible for multitudes of deaths a day, as he is quick to tell the audience in his narration. After sleeping with a reporter assigned to write a piece on him, Nick finds his career in jeopardy. Meanwhile, he has trouble explaining to his son the legal necessity of careers like his own. And, of course, there are subplots involving a film product placement deal, his rocky friendship with lobbyists for the alcohol and firearm industries, and his attempted assassination via overdose of nicotine patches.

Above all, "Thank You For Smoking" will be remembered for its comedy. It's obvious that the defense of the tobacco industry would be a gold mine of morose humor, and this film never fails to capitalize upon it. The comic timing is razor-sharp. The logic Naylor employs to defend cigarettes is to common sense as a Rube Goldberg contraption is to a simple machine. The film explores the quirks of a career as questionable as Naylor's, its most memorable resultant scene being when Nick argues with his fellow lobbyists over which of their assigned products kills more people (and therefore, whose job is the most challenging). Lines like "The great state of Vermont will not apologize for its cheese" have a chance to enter the circulation of pop culture repertoire.

The soul of the picture is, of course, its study of the plasticity of truth and morality. Court-appointed attorneys for serial killers must, as per the law, exist, as do positions such as Nick Naylor's. How are we justified, then, for condemning someone who is merely fulfilling a role needed in a just civilization? It's just one of the many moral paradoxes the movie explores.

But "Thank You For Smoking" is far from an impartial observer — in fact, it is the cinematic equivalent of a political cartoon. In order to get its point across, the film molds its characters into caricatures of their real-life counterparts. A senator exploits victims of the tobacco industry without hesitation to sway the public's opinion. Joey's teacher assigns the class a blatantly manipulative essay. The film warps Naylor and his enemies so extravagantly, it's hard to be taken seriously as a political statement.

The film's weakness as social commentary, however, is more than made up for by its humor and depth. "Thank You For Smoking" may not be an indictment of anyone or anything, but it excels as a hilarious send-up of a controversial industry and the ideologies surrounding it.

Thank You For Smoking'
Directed by Jason Reitman
Starring Joan Lunden, Aaron Eckhart
Room 9
Rated R
92 mins.
Grade A-

William H. Macy stars as Senator Orrolan K. Finistirre in Jason Reitman's satire about truth and morality in the tobacco industry.

Aaron Eckhar stars as a political lobbyist for tobacco in "Thank You For Smoking."

UM takes two from Dukes

BASEBALL from page 8

the Duquesne catcher Derek Mechling.

Duquesne's lone score in the fourth inning was set up when Eric Morrison tripled with one out in the inning. After Dante Plassio popped out to third, Joe Berletic walked to put runners on the corners. The Dukes then attempted a double steal, but Morrison got caught between third and home in a rundown.

It looked as if the Minutemen had him out until catcher Bryan Garrity's throw to third hit the runner and allowed him to reach home.

The Minutemen scored one run in the second, fourth and seventh innings. In the second inning, Joe Cotone was hit by a pitch and eventually made it all the way around on a single by Franczek. Charles Kelly also scored after he was hit by a pitch when he stole second and was driven in by Franczek on a fielder's choice.

UMass capped the scoring in the eighth with two runs off of the Dukes' reliever, Gary Pierpont. After getting two outs on a double play, Pierpont gave up a single to Tempesta and a double to Proietti to put runners at the corners. Adamski then came up and sealed the win for the Minutemen by driving the pair in with a double.

Fielding was much improved for the Minutemen on Sunday. Although they did commit two errors, they turned three double plays to get McDonald out of a few jams.

"The defense played great, they turned all of the double plays," the pitcher said. "I was just trying to get ground balls and get out of it. My defense did the job."

In Game 1 on Saturday, UMass turned in a less than stellar performance defensively, recording eight errors. The miscues allowed nine unearned Dukes runs to cross the plate, including four in the extra frame alone.

UMass forced extra innings with a five-run ninth that knotted the score at seven apiece. Duquesne starter Jeff Naughton was dominant through eight but reliever Nick Jones couldn't hold the lead. The starter scattered five hits and gave up just two runs, only one of which was earned.

Adamski led off the ninth with a towering home run to left center that started the rally. The Maroon and White batted around in the inning, getting the five runs on three hits and two errors.

Freshman Mike Dicato entered the game in the 10th in relief of fellow freshman Al Jardine. He quickly got the first two outs of the inning, but got into trouble when pinch hitter Alex Sharick singled to left and then stole second. Mechling plated Sharick with a double to left center.

The next batter, Mike Carroll, singled to advance Mechling to third and he subsequently made it home on an error by the shortstop, Proietti. A pick off attempt by Dicato got away from Adamski and allowed Carroll to advance all the way to third. Morrison then stepped up to the plate and ripped a single down the right field line that scored Carroll and ended Dicato's day.

Stone then brought in Adamski to relieve Dicato and try to stop the bleeding. The senior didn't have much more success than his predecessor as he allowed Morrison to score on a single by Brian Bernardo. The Minutemen finally got out of the inning when Adamski got Manley to strike out swinging.

UMass couldn't get anything going in the 10th as they left one man on base and struck out twice to end the game.

"We had an opportunity to win the first game and we let that one slide away unfortunately," Stone said. "It would have been nice to get after not playing well at all early and we just gave it away again."

Duquesne continued their scoring ways in the first inning of the second game when they touched Minuteman starter David Sullivan for two runs. The Dukes scored on an RBI double by Mechling and a sacrifice fly from the designated hitter Plassio.

UMass also got off to a fast start in the second game, hanging seven runs on seven hits in the opening inning. Franczek kicked off the hit parade with a single up the middle and then advanced to third on a Tempesta base hit.

After a Proietti strikeout, Adamski singled home Franczek for his third RBI of the afternoon. Then Garrity singled to load the bases full of Minutemen for MacDonald. He drove in one and the next batter, Cotone, struck out for the second out of the inning.

The Minutemen added four more runs on two doubles and an error on the third basemen. Tempesta struck out swinging to end the inning before any more damage could be done.

"We're always looking to do things offensively, looking to make things happen," Stone said. "We had a couple of delayed steals today and sacrifice bunts, things like that. I'd like to see us stay back a little bit more. I think that will come — we hadn't played in a week. We stayed with it and bounced back after giving up two quick runs in the first. We showed some good character and eventually won the ball game."

Both sides remained quiet for the next few innings until the Dukes started putting pressure on Sullivan in the sixth. Having already gotten one back in the fifth, Duquesne got to the UMass starter for three more in the inning before he was pulled in favor of freshman Ryan Walczak.

The 6-5, 250 pound reliever was brought in with the bases juiced and one out in the inning. For much of the season Walczak has had control problems (11 walks, eight wild pitches, five hit batters), but that wasn't the case on Saturday. He stopped the bleeding and preserved the lead for the Minutemen with back-to-back strikeouts of Mechling and Plassio, both looking.

"I knew the only reason I was coming in was to get the guys out," Walczak said afterwards. "Garrity called some great pitches and I just wanted to try to get [Sullivan] the win. He deserved the win."

Walczak stayed in for the remainder of the game and picked up the save, the first of his collegiate career.

"We got a real nice performance by Ryan Walczak. It's really the first time he's let it go," Stone said of his big hurler. "He pitched with confidence and that's great to see."

Rouleau fired after tumultuous tenure ends with drug allegations, angry athletes

BY JEREMY RICE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Justin Rouleau, head coach of the Massachusetts ski team, was fired Friday morning less than a year after he was hired for the position. Athletic director John McCutcheon announced the decision to both the men's and women's teams early Friday afternoon.

Men's captain Rush Hawkins said the meeting was brief. The team met with McCutcheon and Associate Athletic Director Jaime Seguin around 2 p.m. on Friday. McCutcheon told the skiers Rouleau, a 1998 UMass alum, was let go for reasons stemming from behavior that was "unacceptable for a representative of the University of Massachusetts," according to Hawkins.

Phone calls to both McCutcheon and Rouleau were not returned.

"[McCutcheon] just told us that he had let Justin go earlier in the day and he was on the hunt for a new coach," UMass skier Jason Small said.

The move was somewhat expected, as a number of coaches, parents and athletes were said to have noted suspect behavior.

One UMass skier, who requested to remain anonymous, said that several coaches and parents approached Seguin because they suspected Rouleau of smoking marijuana while he was with the team.

"Things were pretty disorganized. They were some rumors flying around about him that the administration wouldn't like, for sure," Hawkins said.

"A few times during the middle of the season, he [Rouleau] would come out reeking of [marijuana]," another source close to the team said. "And the parents would ask us, 'Is your coach high?' You can't have a coach suspected of that."

After hearing these allegations, McCutcheon spoke with team captains Hawkins and Erica Mairs.

"Erica Mairs and I went in to do an evaluation [of Rouleau]," Hawkins said. "They pretty much just wanted the truth about some things they had heard."

Rouleau was also involved in controversies regarding the United States Ski and Snowboard Association President, Paul Wojick.

"He lied to [Wojick] about some things and was going to be sanctioned next year anyway," Hawkins said. "If [Rouleau] was our coach next year, he wouldn't have been allowed on the hill. The president had already made a move to sanction him."

Rouleau was also banned from Mt. Snow in Vermont for illegally setting up equipment on the resort's slopes.

"We had gone up there for our first day on snow," Hawkins said. "[Rouleau] asked if he could set gates up there. They told him no, and he did it anyway. He pretty much knew that he shouldn't and did it anyway."

Rouleau's struggles did not remain off the slopes. He also allegedly had problems with some of his athletes.

Hawkins was reportedly not happy with his coach for much of the season, and it reflected in his performance. Last year he was the team's top skier and the individual champion of the Eastern Collegiate Ski Conference. This season Small passed him in the standings.

"[Rouleau] did some great things for us in the off-season, like getting us rain gear and sneakers, but on the hill he was more of a distraction than a coach," Small said of his former coach.

"Before our runs, when mental preparation is all you need to worry about, he would try and talk to us and get us to tweak our techniques, which is a terrible thing to do," Small continued. "Before my run, I just want to be left alone and 'get into the zone' but he just wouldn't leave me alone."

According to some of the skiers, the team spoke to Rouleau to try to work out some of the issues, but it was to no avail.

"[Our communication problems] continued, and some of us found ways to deal with it," Small said. "Some people didn't and just got more and more angry about it, like Rush."

Rouleau led both the men's and women's teams to their second regional championship in two years, as well as strong performances at the USCSA nationals, but neither showing was as strong as the year before.

In 2005, Hawkins swept the slalom and giant slalom at the nationals — the first American skier to do so in 10 years — but struggled in 2006, finishing eighth in both events.

Rouleau was the third ski coach in four years since UMass legend Bill MacConnell retired after more than 40 years at the helm.

Ranked opponents are tough matchup regroup and set things up again. UR was 1-for-5 on free position shots.

W. LAX from page 8

In Friday's match, however, Bolduc's concerns about finishing seemed more fitting. After McCormick made it a 2-2 game with a close-range dart off of a free position shot, the Bonnies built a 5-2 lead on an unassisted shot from Nicole Motando (four goals) and two consecutive free position goals from Katelyn Faas (three points).

The lead was eventually pushed to 7-4 on a Kimberly Ross goal with 12 minutes left in the first half. Lindsay Cassell and Kristina Twichell (first career hat trick) hit goals to close the lead to one just before the end of the first half, before Kathleen Typadis tied it up for the third and final time with a free position shot for her 60th career goal in just 28 games.

Once again, UMass was unable to get over that last hump. With 20 minutes to go, Brenna Houghton swung the ball out from behind the net to Courtney Gibbons, who from the right side fired it past Krissy Anderson for an 8-7 score and eventually take the lead for good. SBU got two more goals from Motondo and Ross to secure the lead.

In yesterday afternoon's game, the Spiders got to work right away, and proved why they are a top-10 team for the first time in school history. Caroline McGuire tallied the first goal of the game less than 35 seconds into the action off a feed from Ashley Friend. From there the Spiders never trailed. It was already 4-0 before McCormick (hat trick) finally put the Minutewomen on board with an unassisted goal.

Another unassisted goal by McCormick two minutes later, at the 17-minute mark, had the Minutewomen trailing, 6-2, at the break. McCormick scored on a free position shot to start the second half, making it 6-3.

Given their recent history of comeback attempts, it's hard to rule out UMass's chances, even against a top-10 team. An 8-0 Richmond run, started by Sara Allen (four goals), shook up everything and had UR sitting with a 14-3 lead. The game ended with a 15-5 score.

Richmond outshot UMass 37-22, including 20-10 in the first half.

Junior midfielder Samantha Sepulveda has scored in six of her last seven games, and has 10 points in the last four games.

UMASS Campus Recreation
GET THOSE FORMS IN BY:
Tennis Doubles (M/W/C)...4/11
Whiffleball (M/W)...4/11
World Cup Soccer (M/W)...4/11
More Info: 215 Boyden, 5-2693
On the Web: http://www.umass.edu/umm

VERACRUZANA
Great Mexican Food on both sides of the river!
$1.00 OFF ANY Enchilada Dinner!
Not valid with any other coupon • Offer expires 5-15-06 • BY46JFM
BARRIO BUCKS!

FUN, FUN, FUN!
BARTEND
BOSTON BARTENDERS SCHOOL
Student Discount!
1-800-357-3210 218 Memorial Ave, West Springfield, MA
www.bostonbartender.com

looking for extra ca$h?
BRING IN CLOTHES TODAY – GET $$$ ON THE SPOT
PLATO'S CLOSET
181 A University Drive, Amherst MA 01002

ASIAN ARTS & CULTURE PROGRAM
ETHOS &
Indian Music Masters
Tuesday, April 11
Bowker Auditorium at 8PM
Marimba, Chinese Gongs, Riq, Djembe, Tibetan Prayer Bowls—all tools of the trade for this quartet of musicians who have thrilled audiences around the world. Ethos has championed works by John Cage, Steve Reich, Simon Shaheen, Glen Velez and Masters of Indian Music. They have appeared at Lincoln Center, the Kennedy Center, the Bermuda Festival and London's Wigmore Hall. Ethos will collaborate with Indian tabla player Samir Chatterjee and sarangi maestro Ramesh Misra in a mesmerizing and hypnotic evening of music and rhythms of the East and the West.
$15, $10; Students $7, $5; Subscription discount applies
FINE ARTS CENTER UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS
1-800-999-UMAS 545 2511 www.fineartscenter.com/asian

Franco the Clarinetting Navy Bean By Rainy Stanford

Elsie Hooper By Robert D. Kryzkowski

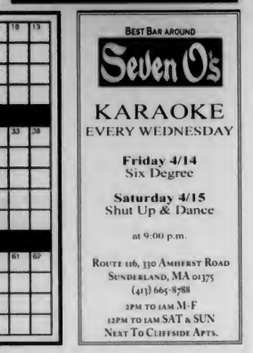
Jeff, Gote & Goat By Grant Cerullo and Sean Mahon

The Family Monster By Josh Shaler

The Zoo By Gabe Stone

Quote of the Day

"We are the people our parents warned us about."



—Jimmy Buffett

ACROSS
1 Bleaches
5 Carvey and Ivey
10 Close to closed
14 Black-and-white cookie
15 All grown up
16 "The Right Stuff" org.
17 Lack
18 Vehicular parades
20 Celebratory avians
22 Racetrack near Miami
23 Punch-drunk
27 Health center
30 Start of an invention
31 NL stadium
35 Male swan
36 Clotting agents
40 SHO rival
41 Slip up
42 Trick of the tongue
43 Singer Orbison
44 Not so ancient language
47 Lemon drink
48 Yoked pair
49 Final balcony
50 Put in position
51 Cagliari resident
56 Pensioner
58 Olympic sleds
63 Workout facility
67 Decorate anew
68 Model Macpherson
69 Scant
70 Hourglass particles
71 Pops the question
72 Side road
73 Time frames

DOWN
1 Bronze percussion
2 Length x width
3 Slirp
4 Fizzy drinks
5 Beavers' barrier
6 Ruckus
7 Kernel
8 Ciao on Oahu
9 Mail or mine preceder
10 Head doctor?
11 Green shade
12 Sailing
13 Impulsive
19 Baseball hat
21 Cold-cuts cutter
24 Dress up
25 Oyster find
26 Old crone
27 Obnoxious one
28 Part of a mailing add.
29 Dwelling place
32 Israeli dances
33 Disintegrate slowly
34 So far
37 Writer Sinclair
38 Mario's brother
39 Temper
45 Stores, as fodder
46 Mr. Baba
52 Gallery filler
53 Post-op regimen
54 Condemn openly
55 RN part
56 Flightless bird
57 Morays
58 Spill the beans
60 Transmission part
61 Millay of poetry
62 Makes a new lawn
64 Heavyhearted
65 Ms. Thurman
66 Prolonged bark

Find today's answers online

www.dailycollegian.com

Best Bar Around
Seven O's
KARAOKE
EVERY WEDNESDAY
Friday 4/14
Six Degree
Saturday 4/15
Shut Up & Dance
at 9:00 p.m.
Route 116, 330 Amherst Road
Sunderland, MA 01375
(413) 665-8788
2PM to 1AM M-F
12PM to 1AM SAT & SUN
Next To Cliffside Apts.

HOROSCOPES

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
You forgot to put your name on that paper you just turned in.

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
You will not need your winter jacket for the rest of the school year.

aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
You could really use some paper towels in your room.

taurus Apr. 20-May 20
The Easter bunny will leave you lots of candy this weekend.

gemini May 21-Jun. 21
You will get pulled over next week without your license on you.

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
You will get extremely lost walking around campus today.

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
When you get to class you will find that your mechanical pencil is out of lead.

virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
You will definitely have enough money to buy a car this summer.

libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22
You should try seaweed salad this week. It's actually really good.

scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
Your room will be a huge mess when you get home from work tonight.

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
You will be prank phone called a lot this weekend.

capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
Those sunglasses make you look super cool.

Chicago Pizzaria Yes, We Deliver!
PIZZA - CALZONES - SUBS
SALADS - PASTA - DINNERS
RIBS - SEAFOOD - SLICES
PARTY PLATTERS NOW AVAILABLE!!
CALZONE SLICES...LIKE NO OTHER!
HOURS
Sun Wed 3pm 2am
Thurs Sat 3pm 3am
(413) 549-6073
Next to Time Out Pool
Amherst MA

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

Announcements

THE WORLD HAS HAD ENOUGH of hunger, injustice and war. An extraordinary, enlightened World Teacher is here to help. Learn more: 888-242-8272 *Share-International.org

Minor in LEADERSHIP And get paid for it! Full time, part time careers after college, ARMY ROTC www.umass.edu/armyrotc

Apartment for Rent

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing, 1&2 bedroom apts. Leases begin June, July, Aug or Sep. First come, first serve. Get them while they last. www.brandywine-apts.com stop by or call 549-0600

2 bedroom $1100 3 bedroom $1400 4 bedroom $2150 Now Accepting Applications 253-7377 millvalleyestates@winn-co.com

Hobart Condos 3 bedroom, hardwood floors, study area in basement. Cable, telephone (internet access) in all bedrooms and study. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER . NO FEES. www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

Employment

Drivers Wanted. Chicago Pizza. Apply in person between 3:30-5pm

Bicycle Mechanic/ Sales Person needed in Northampton. Please call 584-1727 Ask for Bill.

Employment

Northampton Retail Store. Applications for full-time, part-time and summer employment now being accepted. Prior retail experience a plus, but not necessary. Must be reliable, energetic and have good math and social skills. Depending upon position available, weekend and/or evening work may be involved. Generous employee discount Call 413-652-2164 between 8:00am and 9:00pm.

April 14th is the Last Day to Apply to become a Legal Assistant with the Student Legal Services Office. Earn 12 credits while gaining valuable experience. Call 545-1995 or stop by the Student Legal Services Office at 922 Campus Center to get your application.

Employment

PAINTERS NEEDED! Hundreds of positions available throughout New England. Work outside with your friends and family in your hometown. No experience needed, training provided. Join large student painting company this summer. Hiring now! 888-277-9787, www.collegepro.com

Summer Lifeguards, Managers, Camp Counselors, and Director positions open! Greenfield Recreation, 25 min. from Amherst. Apply now. Call (413) 772-1553.

Rent us your Ears! Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu Voicemail: 545-6837

Employment

Bartending $300/Day potential. No experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 x162

House for Rent

Hadley, close to UMass 5 Bedroom home, large yard, Oil heat, Sept occupancy. 549-4270

Lost

Lost keys from Orchard Hill to Art Barn. Remote, silver trinket and 8 keys Call 256-6454

Room for Rent

Large, quiet, comfortable, furnished. Walk to UMass, on Busline. For male Professional/Grad students. June 1 to Sept 1; Fall option. 413-549-1578

Services

PREGNANCY TESTING, HIV TESTING, Birth-control, and Emergency Contraception. STI Screening and Treatment. Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992.

Legal questions? We have answers at the Student Legal Services Office, 922 Campus Center or Call 545-1995

Pentium Color laptops $99 We type term papers, resumes, cover letters. 413-584-8857

Travel

Disney/Beach Area 7/6 nights stay. Pd $600.00 Sacrifice $199.00 Good for one year 978-444-0261

Mark Stolze:
Early Riser
Rookie Surfer
Professional Rocker*
Is Welcome Here

Your life. You can bring it with you. Learn more about Mark and tell us more about you visit pwc.com/bringit

*connectedthinking

PricewaterhouseCoopers

© 2006 PricewaterhouseCoopers LLP. All rights reserved. "PricewaterhouseCoopers" refers to PricewaterhouseCoopers LLP (a Delaware limited liability partnership) or, as the context requires, other member firms of PricewaterhouseCoopers International Limited, each of which is a separate and independent entity. *connectedthinking is a trademark of PricewaterhouseCoopers LLP (US). We are proud to be an Affirmative Action and Equal Opportunity Employer

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTSMONDAY

MONDAY, APRIL 10, 2006 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Minutemen weather Red Storm

Junior midfielder Brett Garber had one assist and two turnovers with three shots on goal in Saturday's 13-6 thumping of the St. John's Red Storm on the road.

By Dan Duggan
Collegian Staff

Any frustration that the Massachusetts men's lacrosse team had lingering from a 7-5 loss to Penn State a week ago was taken out in a 13-6 thrashing of St. John's on Saturday on the road.

The No. 10 Minutemen ensured that there would be no upset for the Red Storm (4-5, 0-3 ECAC), as they dominated from the outset, recording the game's first seven goals. UMass (7-2, 1-1 ECAC) continued to build the lead, holding a 10-1 advantage at halftime.

UMass outshot St. John's 26-10 in the first half and scooped up 24 first-half groundballs, as opposed to just 12 for the Red Storm.

"Obviously we wanted to come and be ready to play," UMass coach Greg Cannella said. "We were trying to play at the highest level we could, and I thought we did that for two quarters. In the first and second quarters our defense was outstanding, and they allowed us to settle down our offense."

The Minutemen return home after a brief two-game road trip to host ECAC rival Hobart on Saturday at 1 p.m.

Against the Red Storm, UMass benefited from a well-balanced scoring attack, as nine different players tallied goals. Senior midfielder Jamie Yaman led the way, recording his second career hat trick, while sophomore midfielder Rory Pedrick and freshman attacker Jim Connolly each added two goals and two assists.

Connolly has become a reliable second option for the Minutemen, scoring nine goals in the last five games. Connolly has been aided by playing alongside senior attacker Sean Morris, who had three points to push his nation-leading total to 42 points.

"It's great to see," Cannella said of Connolly's progression in his first season. "I think he feels more comfortable, and that just comes through experience.

"He works hard and has that inner desire," Cannella added. "We just hope he can continue to do it consistently."

The offensive outburst was especially impressive considering that St. John's has one of the top goalies in the nation in sophomore Dave Saccente.

Saccente entered the game in the top 20 in the country in both goals-against average and save percentage, but the Minutemen were able score at will in the first half.

On the other side of the ball, the UMass defense was typically stingy, allowing just six goals. Freshman goalie Doc Schneider was strong in the cage again, recording 15 saves while letting up five goals.

Schneider's day was made easier due to the play of his defensive cohorts. Senior Jack Reid and sophomores Sean Krygier and David Von Voigt were key in limiting the Red Storm's scoring opportunities.

Reid shadowed leading scorer Tom Michaelsen throughout the game, limiting him to just one goal.

"The effort was there from everybody," Cannella said. "Jack played very well, but I don't like to single one person out. The credit goes to the entire group."

Senior long-stick midfielder Jake Deane returned to form, winning 11-of-18 faceoffs. Deane struggled last week against Penn State, as he won only 5-of-15 draws.

The bounce-back performance by Deane was just one of many for the Minutemen, and Cannella was pleased to see how his team responded following the loss.

"I was happy to see that," Cannella said. "We talked to our guys about leadership. It was OK for them to be disappointed [by the loss] because of the high expectations they have. We're lucky because we have a lot of guys who really care about this."

As is his custom, Cannella stressed that his team must turn its focus to the next game and come out this week in practice with the same hunger it had after the loss to Penn State.

"We said that on the bus; we need to treat wins and losses the same," Cannella said. "We want a pissed off team in practice today."

UMass splits weekend

Loss against an A-10 foe a rarity for UM softball

Freshman pitcher Brandice Balschmiter has a team-leading .86 earned run average with a 13-5 record and 138 strikeouts in 2006.

By Jeremy Rice
Collegian Staff

It was an up-and-down weekend for the Massachusetts softball team (18-12, 7-1 A-10), which hosted Charlotte (29-10, 5-3 A-10) in a doubleheader Sunday, recording one statistic UMass fans rarely see — a loss at home.

The Minutewomen had just three home losses to conference foes all-time before Sunday's split against the 49ers.

UMass lost the first game 2-1 in a heartbreaker, but came back strong in the second game and won, 12-1 in five innings. Next on tap for the Maroon and White is a trip to Storrs, Conn. to take on the Huskies.

Runners left on base was the story of the first game, as UMass left 10 standing to Charlotte's three. It started in the first, when Lauren Proctor struck out with the bases loaded, squandering a golden opportunity for the Minutewomen.

In the next inning, Charlotte designated player Kristi Killough gave the 49ers the 1-0 lead with a lead-off home run over the right field fence. The visiting team went in order after that.

In the top of the sixth, the 49ers began to pull away. With runners on first and second, junior Becky Matthews hit a line drive to right center that went off Candice Molinari's glove and rolled to the wall.

Only one run scored, however, as Balschmiter stuck out Killough to end the inning, leaving runners on second and third. Molinari was credited with the error, as Charlotte led 2-0.

In the bottom of the seventh, UMass started to rally. With one out, Molinari drove a single into left field, but Mollica followed with a grounder to second base. Molinari was thrown out at second, but Mollica beat the throw to first, then stole second when the Charlotte infielders weren't looking.

Senior catcher KJ Kelley represented the tying run at the plate. With two outs and a 2-2 count, Kelley ripped one into left, sending Mollica home with a two-out double. Amanda Acampora was up next as the would-be go-ahead run, but struck out looking to end the late rally.

Twice in Game 1 the Minutewomen had the bases loaded — with two outs in the first and one out in the third — but failed to score. Both times Charlotte pitcher Kristen Bowen got out of the jam with strikeouts.

"I think we were being a little too picky [at the plate] in the first game," UMass coach Elaine Sortino said. "We had chances [to take the lead], and we outhit them."

Balschmiter pitched all seven innings. She gave up two hits and a walk, while allowing one earned run. Balschmiter also threw 10 strikeouts in the game. Charlotte pitcher Kristen Bowens scattered six hits throughout the game, but played her best in crunch time. Three of her four strikeouts came with the bases loaded. The fourth ended the game with two outs in the seventh.

Game 2 started rough for the Minutewomen as well. In the top of the first, UMass allowed two runners to reach, on a hit and an error. Balschmiter then threw a wild pitch on ball four. Charlotte scored on the play to take the 1-0 lead, but Balschmiter recovered to strike out the next batter and end the inning.

The Minutewomen would get it back in the bottom of the inning, however. Amanda Morin singled to right lead off the inning and then stole second to get into scoring position. Mollica then grounded to shortstop and reached on an error, sending Morin in for the tying run.

Kelley was up next, hitting a fly-ball to center field. The ball dropped in front of Charlotte center fielder Evan Miller, who lost it in the sun. The play was ruled a double for Kelley, scoring Mollica. UMass led 2-1 at the end of the first.

The Minutewomen kept the bats going in the second, as Samantha Salato led off with a single to right. After Kristi Stefanoni laid down a sacrifice bunt to move the runners to second and third, Morin doubled to right to send in two runs.

The UMass offense was relentless in the inning, scoring five runs on five hits and sending Charlotte pitcher Christy Murray to the showers. Freshman Jamie Wellons took over the circle for the 49ers, and did not allow another run in the inning.

Whitney Mollica hit her team-leading seventh home run of the season in the third inning, a two-run shot, that gave UMass the 9-1 lead. The Minutewomen would get three more runs in the fourth to lead 12-1 before winning by mercy rule in the top of the fifth.

The split keeps UMass atop the A-10 standings with a 7-1 record, while Charlotte fell behind Fordham (22-16, 6-2 A-10) with a 5-3 conference mark.

The 49ers are new to the A-10 this year, coming from Conference USA, and Sortino expects to see a lot more of them later this season in the A-10 tournament.

"We'll be seeing them again, and I don't think they'll be squeaking into the tournament," Sortino said.

UM takes two of three from Duquesne in first home series

By Jon Pelland
Collegian Staff

It took three tries, but the Massachusetts baseball team (5-14, 3-6 Atlantic 10) was finally able to host their first home game of the season on Saturday in the first game of a doubleheader against Duquesne. The game was supposed to take place on Friday, but rain forced it to be postponed until the following day.

UMass and the Dukes (7-20, 3-6 A-10) split the doubleheader with Duquesne holding off a late rally to win game one, 11-7 in 10 innings, and the Minutemen held on to an early lead to take game two, 9-6. The rubber game of the weekend on Sunday was won by the Minutemen, 8-1.

The Maroon and White will have today off before traveling to Storrs, Conn. to take on Connecticut tomorrow afternoon. The first pitch is scheduled for 3 p.m.

Skies were a clear blue and the temperature was much higher for the rubber game on Sunday.

UMass coach Mike Stone received a spectacular pitching performance from junior Rory McDonald, something the Minutemen haven't see too much of lately.

"Rory pitched a real great game, [allowing] two hits into the ninth inning," Stone said. "That makes a real big difference when you're not chasing balls all over the yard."

Despite some control problems (eight walks), McDonald was able to shut down the Duquesne bats and get the win. The starter went eight innings while giving up just two hits and striking out two. The lone run McDonald allowed was unearned and came in the fourth.

"I felt good. I was throwing hard, my arm feels real good," McDonald said. "I threw a lot of off speed stuff early to show it and established that. [Towards the end] I started throwing more fastballs because they were looking off speed."

The Minutemen jumped out on top early, this time by a score of 3-0 in the first inning.

With the wind blowing in from left field, sophomore Ryan Franczek led off the game with a high fly ball to right field that was hung up by the wind and forced towards the foul line. Duquesne's rightfielder, Anthony Manley, circled around the ball and couldn't make the play, which allowed Franczek to motor all the way to third.

A sacrifice fly by Adam Tempesta brought Franczek home for the first run. Junior Lou Proietti then came to the plate and singled on a bunt before swiping second base. A single by first basemen Bryan Adamski advanced Proietti to third base. Adamski also stole second to get two men in scoring position.

Two batters later, designated hitter Jim MacDonald drove both in with a single to center field. The inning ended when MacDonald also tried stealing second but was thrown out by

See BASEBALL on page 5

Minutewomen drop two straight

By Brendan Hall
Collegian Staff

Nobody said this was going to be an easy walk through the season for the Massachusetts women's lacrosse team, and no better example shows this than last weekend.

After concluding one of the toughest non-conference schedules in the nation, it seemed almost by fate that the Minutewomen (3-9, 0-2 Atlantic 10) opened their A-10 season against, arguably, two of the best teams that the conference has to offer. UMass in turn faltered in both of those contests, dropping a late 11-8 decision at home on Friday against St. Bonaventure and then losing 15-5 at No. 9 Richmond on Sunday afternoon.

Sophomore Kathleen Typadis has scored in 16 consecutive games and has four hat tricks on the season.

UMass returns to action on Thursday at 5 p.m., when it travels to St. Joseph's for a two-game road swing in Philadelphia.

In both games, the Minutewomen put up a good fight for a substantial amount of time but were unable to finish and surrendered the lead. In Friday's affair, for instance, the Minutewomen fought back to tie it up at 7-all after trailing by three at two different points in the game, and an overtake of the lead with 25 minutes to spare was looking good. Three straight SBU goals over a span of 13 minutes, however, quelled those chances.

Yesterday, a free position goal by freshman Kayt McCormick kept a comeback within reach, cutting Richmond's lead to 6-3 before the Spiders' 8-0 run over a span of 23 minutes put the clamps on any rally.

"Talent-wise, I think we match up evenly," UMass coach Carrie Bolduc said. "I just think it's a matter of finishing."

Fouling figured to be another problem, but this time it was in matters of possession. While UMass committed a total of 47 fouls over the two games, just five of the opponents' 26 goals came on free position shots, a far cry from the seven free position goals they surrendered to Boston College in a 16-9 loss two weekends ago.

Against Richmond, however, the Minutewomen committed a whopping 24 to the Spiders' nine. Most of the fouls committed were in transition at midfield, which allowed Richmond numerous opportunities to attempt to

See W.LAX on page 5

New England's Largest College Daily · Est. 1890

The Daily Collegian

Tuesday, April 11, 2006 www.dailycollegian.com Volume CXVI Issue 112

Researchers find new ways to target tumors

By Kay Metcalfe
Collegian Correspondent

The Forbes Research Group at the University of Massachusetts has begun researching new ways to treat cancer with help from a $330,000 grant that was awarded to them by the National Institute of Health last year.

The group has worked to find cancer treatments that will specifically target tumors that chemotherapy often fails to subdue.

The grant, called 'Microelectrode oxygenation control of tumor necrosis,' will fund collaborations between the department of chemical engineering at UMass, headed by Assistant Professor Neil Forbes, and the department of electrical engineering at the University of Michigan under the leadership of Michel Maharbiz.

Forbes has created a device called a 'Cylindroid' which takes a small sphere of cells and compresses them into a cylindrical shape while surrounding them with a liquid that mimics the environment that live cells exist in. The Cylindroid gives Forbes and his team a visual of cells in the center of the cylinder dying due to lack of oxygen. The cylinder of colon cancer cells, which resembles the structure of a tumor, allows researchers to see the different stages of life each cell is in.

Within the tumor are three main types of cells. The cells closest to arteries and veins, called proliferating cells, have immediate access to the bloodstream, and therefore to oxygen, causing the cells to grow rapidly. The cells in the middle are called quiescent cells; they grow more slowly because less oxygen reaches them. The cells in the center are called necrosis, or dead cells, as no oxygen can get to them. "In a tumor," says Forbes, "happy cells grow really fast [whereas] far away cells, due to the lack of diffusion, die."

Maharbiz's research group has made an electrode device that enables the user to control the way and amounts of oxygen being emitted by releasing a current into water.

"Michel has figured out a device that delivers microns; as a visual, a human hair is 100 microns thick," said Forbes.

With this chip, oxygen can

See TUMOR on page 2

Officers offer testimony in murder trial

By Dan O'Brien
Collegian Staff

Bryan Johnston and his lawyer, Alexander Nappan, at the murder trial. Officers who arrived at the crime scene after the murder of David Sullivan testified yesterday.

NORTHAMPTON — The half-day session of the Bryan Johnston murder trial was cut short yesterday after a sudden announcement from the presiding judge. However, four police officers testified and evidence of weapons was displayed during the course of the day.

Johnston, 24, of Westfield, is charged with murdering his long-time friend, David F. Sullivan, 22, on Dec. 7, 2004 in Sullivan's apartment at 105 Meadow St. in Amherst. Sullivan was a University of Massachusetts student.

Judge Bertha Josephson ended the day's proceedings in the midst of testimony from Amherst Police Lt. Ronald Young around noon due to an "unforeseen circumstance." Josephson would not elaborate as to what was the circumstance was. Jurors had expected to hear testimony until 1 p.m.

Leading up to noontime, prosecutor Renee Steese presented evidence to the jury, which included a .40-caliber signum pistol, a .223-caliber rifle, a .38-caliber revolver, two multi-round magazines, one of which that can hold up to 90 rounds or ammunition, and hypodermic needles. Most of the evidence was seized from Johnston's apartment after police obtained a search warrant. A rifle that is believed to have been used in the killing was found behind the Aqua Vitae restaurant on Old Bay Rd. in Hadley.

Westfield Police Chief John Camerota also testified yesterday that he suspended Johnston's Class A firearm license on Nov. 21, 2004. Camerota said that when Johnston had a conversation with him about the suspension a day or two later, Johnston appeared "nervous."

Johnston claimed he needed his firearm license because he was studying criminal justice at Westfield State College and "wanted a career in law enforcement and felt that carrying a firearm was important to him," Camerota said during testimony.

Amherst Police Sgt. Christopher G. Pronovost testified about what he saw after responding to the crime scene around 1:20 a.m. on Dec. 7, 2004. He said police found Sullivan's cell phone, which included at least one incoming call from Johnston.

Jurors are expected to view a DVD of the crime scene and hear more testimony when the trial resumes this morning for a full day.

UMass prepares for possibility of bird flu outbreak

By Caleb Lyons
Collegian Correspondent

The Avian Flu, considered by researchers to be one of the biggest potential epidemic threats the world has seen in decades, has health officials the world over struggling to put into place plans for how to handle possible outbreaks of the disease.

Officials at the University of Massachusetts are also exploring options on what to do if there is an outbreak of avian flu in the Pioneer Valley.

"Right now the strain has not been detected in the U.S. and their bird population, nor has it made a human to human transmission," said Dr. Donald Robinson, the head of Emergency Management at the school. Emergency Management deals with all planning and coordination in the case of a viral pandemic, flood, hurricane or any other widespread disaster that might threaten the University.

While the Avian Flu is not a serious or direct threat to humans in the U.S., the possibility remains that it might become one.

"[Avian Flu] is not aerosolized [yet], like the flu going on around campus now. If that changes, that would spread the infection," said Dr. Alan Calhoun, the Medical Director of University Health Services.

Currently, the virus is only spread through direct contact, and some scientists have theorized that the reason it hasn't been passed though contact with air may have to do with the virus growing too deeply in its victim's lung to be passed on through coughs.

The Avian Flu has caused so much concern because of its high mortality rate in humans, which is currently around 50 percent. However, Calhoun says that while this appears to be terrible news regarding the infection of humans in the future, there is also something positive about this statistic shows.

"Any disease that causes a high mortality rate doesn't spread very fast in humans, because the sad thing is the humans get it and don't live long enough to spread it," Calhoun says. "As terrible as it may sound, it's not a disease that spreads rapidly. If the mortality rate were to drop…more to 20 percent…the surviving humans would be able to pass it on."

Ann Becker, a Public Health Nurse, and the Director of the UMass branch of the Medical Reserves Corps, says she finds the statistics regarding Avian Flu's mortality rate potentially misguiding, claiming it fails to represent the number of infected people who have little to no symptoms.

"…The really sick people come to attention, but those with mild illness never do," Becker said.

Some people, according to Becker, acquire the virus, but they either fight off the virus immediately or mistake their mild illness for normal influenza when they recover soon afterward, and such cases are never reported.

"I certainly think that the mortality rate of 50 percent is inaccurate along with the number of reported infections," said Becker.

However, the origin of the H5N1 bird flu strain is very troubling, says program head of the Biosafety and Environmental Health department, Dr. Maureen O'Leary.

"Humans have not been exposed to 115 virus before, so this is in fact an Avian Influenza, not a Human Influenza," O'Leary said. This means that the human immune system will have never dealt with a virus such as H5N1.

Becker also pointed out the level of misunderstanding around this specific

See FLU on page 2

SGA to host forum about dorm changes

By Matt Belliveau
Collegian Staff

The Student Government Association of the University of Massachusetts is planning a public forum on to discuss issues raised by the EPOCH freshman housing program.

The event will be held on Wednesday, April 12 at 4:30 p.m., in the Cape Cod Lounge of the Student Union.

The EPOCH program, designed for first year students at UMass, is housed in three residence halls (Pierpont, Moore, and Melville) in the Southwest Residential Area.

The mission of EPOCH, according to their Web site, is to facilitate and support a smooth transition of first-year student to UMass and enhance student success and satisfaction through special programming. Currently, the EPOCH program has been made available to first year students who sign up to participate in the program.

The office of Student Affairs and Campus Life is currently planning on expanding the program to other residential buildings on campus. Van Meter, Butterfield, and Thoreau are slated to become EPOCH dorms by next year. Webster, Dickinson, Emerson, James, Kennedy, John Adams, Cance, and Wheeler are other dorms that officials are planning to phase into the program by 2008. In addition to the expansion of EPOCH to new residential buildings, the administration aims to make EPOCH a requirement for all first-year students.

"This is one of the most significant changes to happen to student affairs and campus life in a long time," said Eric Robbie, chair of the Public Policy and Relations committee of the SGA. "The SGA wants to make sure that students have the ability to voice their concerns and give useful input into the planning process."

Students living in some of the dorms that are slated to become EPOCH have raised some concerns about the expansion plans. Some students have said that they feel like they are being unfairly kicked out of their dorms to make way for the prospective EPOCH students.

"It's not right, because they are kicking out longtime residents of those dorms and also giving those people higher priority on housing selection list, which then hurts everyone else when figuring out their living arrangements," said Central resident Jonathan Paquette.

Others have raised concerns over the fact that the program will become mandatory for all freshmen, and not a choice-based option.

The forum to discuss these changes will be open to the public, and students will be allowed to give oral testimony before a select board of concerned members of the UMass community.

The SGA asks that any students who would like to submit written testimony email it to sga@student.umass.edu.

Featured members of the forum are UMPD Representative Detective Lisa Kidwell, Faculty Senate President Dan Clawson, Sally Imowski of University Health Services, RA Union representative Sara Bernardo, Central Area Governor Zach Caunter, Southwest Area Governor Amy Ciaramitaro, and former SGA president Pavel Payano.

Demonstrators protest immigration reform

By Giovanna Dell'orto
Associated Press

Protesters holding signs and American flags gathered in Low Park in Philadelphia yesterday for the National Day of Action on Immigration Rights rally.

ATLANTA — Tens of thousands of immigrants spilled into the streets in dozens of cities across the nation Monday in peaceful protests that some compared to the movements led by the Rev. Martin Luther King Jr. and farm-labor organizer Cesar Chavez.

"People of the world, we have come to say this is our moment," said Rev. James Orange of the Georgia Coalition for the People's Agenda in Atlanta, where police estimated that at least 50,000 people marched Monday morning.

At the Mississippi Capitol, 500 demonstrators sang "We Shall Overcome" in Spanish. In Pittsburgh, protesters gathered outside Sen. Arlen Specter's office to make their voices heard as Congress considers immigration reforms.

Groups in North Carolina and Dallas called for an economic boycott by immigrants to show their financial impact.

The rallies had a noticeable impact on production at Excel Corp. plants in Dodge City, Kan., and Schuyler, Neb., a spokesman for the nation's second-largest beef processor said. He said there was a slowdown, but the company had no intention of taking action against workers who were gone for the day.

"We assume they will be back at work tomorrow," spokesman Mark Klein said.

Atlanta police estimated that at least 50,000 people, many in white T-shirts and waving American flags, joined a two-mile march from a largely immigrant neighborhood Monday morning.

The protesters had two targets in Georgia: congress members weighing immigration reform and state legislation now awaiting Gov. Sonny Perdue's signature that would require adults seeking many state-administered benefits to prove they are in the U.S. legally.

Nineth Castillo, a 26-year-old waitress from Guatemala who joined the Atlanta march, said she has lived in the United States for 11 years "without a scrap of paper."

Asked whether she was afraid to parade her undocumented status in front of a massive police presence, she laughed and said: "Why? They kick us out, we're coming back tomorrow."

Hundreds of Latinos in North Carolina were called on to skip work or boycott all purchases Monday to demonstrate the financial impact of the Latino community on area businesses.

In Arizona, police estimated that at least 25,000 demonstrators turned out in Phoenix while several thousand others demonstrated in Tucson. Miguel Penate, a fast-food restaurant manager who moved from El Salvador six years ago, said being in the country illegally was his only option.

"There's no way to come legally over here," said Penate, 25. "If there was, do you think people would like to be in the desert risking their lives?"

Yinka Aganga Williams, who moved to the U.S. from Nigeria six years ago, joined a small group of demonstrators who marched to Specter's Pittsburgh office.

"This country was built by immigrants, Pittsburgh in particular," said Williams, 54. "This is supposed to be a land of freedom, that's why they came."

ARTS & LIVING

INSIDE MAN REVIEWED

Spike Lee's newest film offers bank heist thrills.

Page 4

EDITORIAL/OPINION

HEALTHCARE FOR THE MASSES

One columnist discusses the new Massachusetts health care bill.

Page 3

WEATHER

TODAY	TONIGHT	TOMORROW
High 69	Low 40	High 68
Sunny	Clear	Low 47
		Partly cloudy

SPORTS

UMASS FACES HUSKIES

The Minutemen travel to Storrs to face UConn today.

Page 8

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief Michael A. Busack
Managing Editor Eric Athas
Business Manager Nathan Chomsky
Production Manager Nicholas Belanger
Night Supervisor Katie Huston
Advertising Manager Kerry O'Grady
Advertising Production Lauren Egwian
Editorial Production Amanda Allen
Arts & Living Editor Ian Jones
Comics Editor Amanda Allen
Editorial Editor Kristen LaCasse
News Editor Dan O'Brien
Sports Editor Jeff Howe
Circulation Manager Thomas Hecht
Distribution Manager Nick Gleason
Finance Manager Daniel Conti
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Assistant Advertising Caren Tortorici
Assistant Business Phil Smoller
Asst. Arts & Living Morgan-Ann Rousseau
Asst. Arts & Living Alex Butler
Assistant News Megan Daley
Assistant News Matt Bellveau
Assistant Sports Dan Duggan
Assistant Sports Rob Greenfield
Assistant Editorial Tucker Merrick

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is independently funded, operating on advertising revenue. Founded in 1890, the paper began as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1904 and the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1956. Published daily since 1967, the Collegian has been broadsheet since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call 413-545-3500 between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

Production Crew
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Erika Lovley
COPY EDITOR
Dan O'Brien
PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Nick Belanger
PRODUCTION STAFF
Tiffany Van Langen, Jesse Susman

If you see news happening, call us at 545-1809 and snap a photo with your cell phone, then send it to news@dailycollegian.com

Amherst police log

Man arrested after alleged assault and battery

Friday April 7

Police responded to 500 Riverglade Dr. at 1:35 p.m. after the owner of a blue 1997 Toyota Corolla SE reported the license plate stolen. The plate has not been located and there are no suspects.

Two cars, a blue 1995 Nissan Sentra SE and a grey 2001 Kia Sportage, were involved in a motor vehicle crash at 312 College St. Friday at 2:54 p.m.

Michael Panlina called police after noticing that someone had hit his car and left the scene of the accident. Panlina parked his car at approximately 1:00 a.m. and upon returning to the car around 2:20 p.m. found a dent in the left rear door and a small amount of blue paint on the lower door.

Two cars were involved in a motor vehicle accident at 67 Northampton Rd. at 3:40 p.m. and while neither driver was badly injured, one complained of neck pain, though he refused treatment. The driver who allegedly caused the crash, was issued a citation for failing to use care while driving. The car that was struck reportedly has rear end damage and a cracked windshield.

Barry Allan Bernier, 49, of 181 West State St., Granby, was pulled over in front of Cataldo's Auto Shop by police at 3:39 p.m. and arrested on multiple charges. Bernier was charged with speeding, marked lanes violations, possession of an open container of alcohol, operating under the influence with serious injury and negligence and negligent operation of a motor vehicle.

Police responded at 7:04 p.m. to a report of larceny from a resident of 46 Townehouse. The owner believes $60 in a money clip and an ATM card were stolen after a group of people, some of whom he reportedly did not know, came to the apartment.

Jonathan Gavin Wilkie, 20, of 2 Shays St., was arrested Friday at 7:48 p.m. and charged with being a person under 21 in possession of liquor.

Police were called after receiving reports that a small group of people walking in and out of the street along 72 Triangle St. and impeding traffic. Police arrested Sean Degnan, 19, of 179 Chapel St., Milford, Conn., and charged him with being a person under 21 in possession of alcohol and having an open container of alcohol.

Saturday April 8

Corey Charles Lawrenson, 18, of 17 Lawrenson Conn., was observed by police with an open container of alcohol and arrested at 12:02 a.m. He was charged with possession of an open container of alcohol and being a person under 21 in possession of alcohol.

Nicholas Anthony Bassolino, 19, of 3 Kristin Conn., Wayne, N.J., was pulled over by police outside of Bertucci's restaurant at 51 East Pleasant St. Bassolino is charged with failing to stop/yield, operating under the influence of alcohol and making a right turn on red where prohibited.

A member of Alpha Epsilon Pi called police regarding a stolen laptop. Police responded to the call at 5:05 a.m. The laptop was later located in the front yard of University of Massachusetts fraternity.

Police were called at 4:47 p.m. after a woman allegedly attempted to use a fake New York license to purchase cigarettes at a liquor store. The woman left the premises after a brief argument with the clerk before police arrived.

The owner of the house at 59 Blue Hills Rd. called police at 6:53 p.m. after he witnessed multiple individuals stealing wood from his property and loading it into a parked car. Police have no suspects at this time but are aware of the wood-theft problem. Similar reports were filed this winter and police suspect the theft is due to the spike in heating oil prices.

Sunday April 9

Mark A. Bortz, 19, of 784 Old Mill Rd., NJ., and Joshua J. Bast, 20, of 26 Prescott St. 1, Everett, were arrested and charged with as people under 21 in possession of alcohol and possession of an open container of alcohol. Prior to the arrest, police had witnessed the two with open cans of Busch Light walking along a public walk way on College St.

Robert E. Powers, 20, of 62 Cliff St., Milton, and Melissa A. D'amico, 18, of 56 Grandview Ave., Watertown, were arrested after police observed the two in front of 977 North Pleasant St. with open containers of alcohol. The two were both charged as people under 21 in possession of alcohol and as being in possession of an open container of alcohol.

Police were called to Starbucks at 1:20 a.m. with reports of a disturbance. Robert Ullo, 22, of 51 Decarolis Dr., Tewksbury, struck a police officer and was arrested and charged with disorderly conduct, resisting arrest and assault and battery on a police officer.

Approximately 75 college-aged individuals attending a party at 13 Townehouse on Sunday were told to clear out after police received reports of loud stereo and voices coming from the apartment. Police say upon being met with no cooperation and being verbally assaulted, police arrested Kevin F. McNeil, 23, of 70 Shields Rd., Mashpee, and charged him with unlawful noise violations.

The owner of a black 1986 Cadillac Deville SE called police at 11:13 a.m. after noticing someone had allegedly scratched the word "Bitch" onto the trunk of her car and punctured the passenger side tires and sidewalls several times.

—Compiled by John Fenuccio

Grant allows for new research of cancer

TUMOR from page 1

be shot into the cylinder of cells wherever the researcher wishes. Patterns of oxygen can thus be sent into the center of the cells, or throughout the cylinder in an intermittent pattern of lines, reaching areas of quiescent cells that don't normally receive such high amounts of the gas.

"[There's] a lot of grant money to put these two technologies together," says Forbes, "[we are] putting the two technologies together to research treatments of cancer."

By using the two inventions together, separated by a polymer made of natural and synthetic compounds and allows the diffusion of oxygen, the team will attempt to answer many unknown questions about the treatment of cancer tumors.

"We want to know whether the lack of oxygen causes necrosis," says Forbes, "and whether certain genes, such as HIF++, allows cells to live in low oxygen environments better."

The grant money will allow the team to try a wide range of experiments on cancer cells; tests will be done involving oxygen levels, oxygen placement, nutrient levels and placement and gene therapy.

Correction

In Monday's edition of the Massachusetts Daily Collegian the headline "Iran continues tests of nuclear weapons" was incorrect. Iran has recently tested new missiles, but there is no evidence that the countru has nuclear weapons. We apologize for any inconvenience or confusion this headline might have caused.

UMass plans mock vaccination

FLU from page 1

strain of flu. She said that many students who came to last semester's flu clinic wanted to know if the vaccine they were receiving immunized them from H5N1, which it does not.

H5N1 is an entirely different kind of flu than anything humans have been infected with before. Most viruses that come from outside humanity can only infect species related to those where the virus originated, but this particular strain's rapid mutation has opened the door to infection of numerous other animals.

According to O'Leary, a virus originating outside of humanity is spread in three phases before reaching a human-to-human pandemic. The first phase involves the virus becoming deadly to its original hosts, birds in this case. Phase two involves transmission from birds to humans, and phase three is transmission of the virus from human to human. H5N1 is currently in phase 2.

"I feel quite comfortable that we're in a good position to handle a potential pandemic in responsible way," Robinson said.

If Avian Flu becomes a phase three infection, and can be passed through the air and has infected students on campus, the first step made in response would be establishing an Emergency Operations Center (EOC,) Robinson said. Any and all staff members who head any specific involvement in the preparation and treatment of such a situation would gather at the EOC in order to better coordinate their efforts against the infection and its effects.

As Becker pointed out, such preparations for the worst run much deeper than simply one or two departments.

"The campus as a whole is doing things like working on their communications plan, working on an evacuation plan and working on a sheltering plan," Becker said. "The Medical Reserves Corps work more along the lines of emergency dispensing sites."

An Emergency Dispensing Site would be the next step after the establishment of an EOC, which according to current planning would be located in the UMass Mullins Center. The EDS would be evacuated and then staffed by members of Becker's Medical Reserves Corps, or MRC, in preparation for treatment of infections, immunizations and any number of other medically related problems that happen to come up.

Most members of the MRC are nursing majors, since enrollment in the group is part of their required graduate program. To better prepare its members, especially those without nursing experience, and stabilize their understanding of what would happen in an emergency, the MRC are currently planning for a mock mass vaccination on April 20 at the Mullins Center. This is the latest step in the UMass preparation for an outbreak of avian flu in the U.S.

College graduates head to the big cities

By Stephen Ohlemacher
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — College graduates are flocking to America's big cities, chasing jobs and culture and driving up home prices.

Though many of the largest cities have lost population in the past three decades, nearly all have added college graduates, an analysis by The Associated Press found.

The findings offer hope for urban areas, many of which have spent decades struggling with financial problems, job losses and high poverty rates.

But they also spell trouble for some cities, especially those in the Northeast and Midwest, that have fallen behind the South and West in attracting highly educated workers.

"The largest predictor of economic well-being in cities is the percent of college graduates," said Ned Hill, professor of economic development at Cleveland State University. To do well, he said, cities must be attractive to educated people.

Nationally, a little more than one-fourth of people 25 and older had at least bachelor's degrees in 2004. Some 84 percent had high school diplomas or the equivalent.

By comparison, in 1970 only a bit more than one in 10 adults had bachelor's degrees and about half had high school diplomas.

Seattle was the best-educated city in 2004 with just over half the adults having bachelor's degrees. Following closely were San Francisco; Raleigh, N.C.; Washington and Austin, Texas.

Molly Wankel, who has a doctorate in educational administration, said she moved to the Washington area for a job, and the culture of the city pulled her from the suburbs. Wankel, 51, grew up in eastern Tennessee and works at a company that develops software and training materials. She recently bought a home in the city.

"I just enjoy walking around looking at the architecture and the way people have renovated these 100-year-old homes," Wankel said.

"I love the landscaping and the lovely mix of many races, straight people, gays, singles, older people, younger people."

The AP analyzed census data from 21 of the largest cities from 1970 to 2004. The AP used every-10-year census data from 1970 to 2000, and the Census Bureau's American Community Survey for 2004.

The 21 cities were chosen because of their size and location to provide regional balance. The analysis was expanded for 2004, the latest year for data, to include all 70 cities with populations of 250,000 or more. While most states in the Northeast have high percentages of college graduates, their big cities do not.

Massachusetts, Connecticut and New Jersey were among the top five states in the percentage of adults with college degrees in 2004. But the Northeast placed no city among the top five, and only one from the region — Boston — was in the top 20.

Cities with few college graduates have a hard time generating good-paying jobs. That, in turn, makes it hard to attract more college graduates, said Richard Vedder, an economics professor at Ohio University.

Cities such as Newark, N.J., Detroit and Cleveland have relatively few college graduates, which helps explain why they are struggling to recover from the decline of U.S. manufacturing, Vedder said.

Among the three, Cleveland had the largest share of college graduates in 2004, 14 percent of those 25 and older.

"Society is paying people more for their brains than for their brawn," Vedder said. "The nerds and the wimps and the geeks are ruling the world."

Bueno Y Sano
Every Tuesday is
Fat Tuesday
Grandé Burritos same price
as regular burritos every Tuesday.

STUDENT LEGAL SERVICES OFFICE
UMASS, AMHERST
CALL 545-1995
or stop in at 922 Campus Center

Celebrity Beauty
Beauty Is Our Only Business
Bring this ad for 30% OFF
any service!
Hours: Tuesday - Friday 11 - 8, Saturday 10 - 4
321 Main St. Amherst (Next to Bruno's)
413 256 0999

Congratulations Graduates
from your Alumni Association!
Stop by Memorial Hall for your FREE graduation gift and your chance to win $1,000 CASH!
Join your Alumni Association for only $20 (regularly $40) and get...
• Alumni Career Services
• Kaplan Test Prep Discounts
• Alumni Networking Opportunities
• Student Loan Consolidation
...and more!
UMassAlumni.com
You were. You are. UMASS.

UNIVERSITY BARTENDING.
✓ Get your Bar Code* Certification
✓ Credit Cards Accepted!!!
✓ Professional Bartending Training with "Hands On" Pouring Sessions
✓ Over 10 Years in Business!!!
✓ Access to Job Placement Database!!!
✓ Great Part-time or Summer Job
LEARN TO BARTEND IN A WEEKEND!
CALL NOW! SPACE IS LIMITED!
April 28th - 30th
Terrace Lounge
Amherst College
1-800-U-CAN-MIX
www.universitybartending.com

FRUSTRATED?
PUZZLED?
DO YOU HAVE:
A grade dispute?
Teacher, roomate or job concerns?
Billing problems?
...or any other University related problems?
THE OMBUDS OFFICE CAN HELP
(confidentially, of course)
students, faculty, and staff are all welcome
823 Campus Center
Office Hours: 8:00 a.m. - 5:00 p.m.
Telephone: 413 - 545 - 0867
fax: 413 - 545 - 9720
e-mail: ombuds@ombuds.umass.edu

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

EDITORIAL OPINION

Tuesday, April 11, 2006

"I may not agree with what you say but I will defend to the death your right to say it" - Voltaire

Editorial@dailycollegian.com

Healthcare for the masses

As a new measure is being pushed through our state legislature, all eyes are on its performance, and it's impact on the future of healthcare in America.

David B. Lawrence

A new health care reform bill set to gain final approval this week will require all Massachusetts residents to have health care. Yes, all residents — everybody, will be insured. But this isn't Universal Health care as you know it. This is a new system that may set the standard for reforming healthcare around the nation… or it may fail.

Whenever you do something novel, something different, something untested, you run the risk of failure. With this new plan, Massachusetts is doing just that. The plan that is expected to be approved by Governor Mitt Romney and set into law will mandate that all Massachusetts residents have health care by July 1, 2007. Romney has likened the system to the law requiring car owners to purchase automobile insurance.

The incentives for purchasing health care will come in the form of both punishments and enticements. The poorest segment of Massachusetts' population will be awarded completely free healthcare. Above a certain level, subsidies will be provided to help pay for healthcare, with individual contributions increasing with income on a sliding scale. Individuals who do not own healthcare will be penalized incrementally. The first year they will lose the ability to claim a personal deduction on their taxes. Following that, higher penalties will be imposed.

There are also incentives for businesses to provide healthcare to employees. Businesses with more than ten employees will be penalized for each employee who is not provided with healthcare. There is a great risk in penalizing small businesses in this manner, as it may discourage small business owners in Massachusetts, and even force some out of the state.

Should we achieve success here in Massachusetts, our system will serve as a model for other states as they seek to insure their populations.

There are other risks associated with this new plan. It marks the first attempt by government to force all citizens to make a particular purchase. That is an extremely large expansion of state government power, which makes certain conservative groups wary. The plan may also collapse under the bureaucratic weight of tracking citizens' healthcare purchases, penalizing them for not making those purchasers, and weighing exceptions. Government services are notorious for red tape, and adding a bureaucratic element to medical situations may backfire.

The plan carries great potential benefits. Universal healthcare may be a social service whose time has come, and though many other attempts at realizing it have fizzled, the new plan is different, and novel, enough to have a high potential for success. Economically, the state will recoup some of its losses by eliminating wasteful emergency room visits, and still more through the fines it will undoubtedly levy. Currently the uninsured are treated by emergency rooms at the government's expense. These visits are inefficient and expensive, and eliminating them from the budget will help pay for new coverage.

Politically, the plan is already a great success. It has been a terrific example of bipartisan progress. Incorporating changes supported by both republicans and democrats, it has been championed by an unlikely team: iconic democratic Senator Ted Kennedy and Republican presidential hopeful Governor Mitt Romney.

However the greatest benefit of the new plan is that it has potential to effect change in the current healthcare system nationally. Should we achieve success here in Massachusetts, our system will serve as a model for other states as they seek to insure their populations. The status quo in America is limited healthcare and expensive emergency room visits for general (non-emergency) illnesses. Internationally, we are considered regressive because we do not extend the benefits of healthcare to all of our citizens. For Massachusetts, the status quo sets the bar low enough that this program is worth the risk.

With its new healthcare mandate, Massachusetts will be taking a significant risk. Moving into entirely uncharted waters in government can always have unintended consequences, and when something as important as individual health is at stake any problems will be magnified. However the problem of limited healthcare coverage has existed for too long, and with this new program Massachusetts may set a standard of support for other states and indeed the nation to follow. The dice have been cast by Massachusetts; let's hope they win the roll.

David B. Lawrence is a Collegian Columnist.

An exciting time (for some)

Mike Sances

In a room where none of us, neither teacher nor students, wants to be, we are all here only because the faceless bureaucracy has stamped this course with the ink of "University Requirement." It is very obviously 60 degrees outside, and we are all hungry. To keep our attention, the professor has been reduced to teaching about mean and median by using kegs as the example unit.

In the morning paper I read of 500,000 people marching in the streets of Dallas, and in the streets of Birmingham, Ala. I read the words of the Rev. Lawton Higgs, a Methodist pastor, in Monday's Washington Post. "We've got to get back in touch with the Statue of Liberty. We've got to get back in touch with the civil rights movement because that's what this is about." I see pictures, shot from on high, of Dallas streets overflowing with people and with American flags, and the pictures are beautiful.

But Sunday was just the sneak preview. As I write, there are at least 110 students from UMass marching in solidarity with the thousands crowding the streets of New York.

Meanwhile, in Paris, weeks of protests by ordinary students like us have killed the First Employment Contract law, or CPE — and quite possibly ended the political career of the once promising Dominique de Villepin, currently the French Prime Minister. The law would have allowed French employers to fire those younger than 26 without cause within the first two years of their employment. Whatever you think about the law and the reaction to it, one thing is clear: the French students' power.

It is an exciting time. Along with the spontaneous, organic, and persistent demonstrations in France and in cities all across America, along with the coming of Tent State next week, there is the reactivation of Students for a Democratic Society, "an association of young people on the left" whose mission, in the words of their Constitution, is to "create a sustained community of educational and political concern: one bringing together liberals and radicals, activists and scholars, students and faculty."

The SDS Constitution was written in 1965, and the last meeting of SDS was in 1969. Unless you take obscure political theory courses at this school, you probably never heard of them. Myself, I remember being assigned to read the Port Huron Statement, published first in 1962, and finding virtually all of it so relevant that I had to ask myself, "Why isn't there an SDS today?" Judge for yourself:

The sit–in lasted for only 12 hours because 50 state police, equipped with riot gear, were sent in at 11:30 PM. All 34 protesters were dragged off and arrested.

"Tragically, the university could serve as a significant source of social criticism and an initiator of new modes and molders of attitudes. But the actual intellectual effect of the college experience is hardly distinguishable from that of any other communications channel — say, a television set — passing on the stock truths of the day. Students leave college somewhat more 'tolerant' than when they arrived, but basically unchallenged in their values and political orientations."

Recall that this was in the 1960's, which "everybody knows" was a time of social upheaval and rebellion against authority in any and all forms. The truth, at least as it happened at UMass, is more complicated than the idealistic narrative.

The Whitmore Administration Building opened in 1967, with the Collegian heralding the opening of "Lederle's Fortress" on September 14 of that year (Lederle was the University president at the time). What may have been the first march on Whitmore occurred two years later, on February 13, 1969, when 34 people staged a 12-hour sit-in protesting the university's ties with the military–industrial complex. (Dwight Eisenhower's phrase). Specifically, the Students for Political Action, the local affiliate of SDS, were targeting the school's relationship with recruiters from Dow Chemical Company, makers of the napalm which brutally burned the skin of Vietnamese children.

The sit-in lasted for only 12 hours because 50 state police, equipped with riot gear, were sent in at 11:30 PM. All 34 protesters were dragged off and arrested.

But was the rest of the university as radical as the Whitmore 34? Hardly. Back in those days, the Collegian conducted referendums in person, not just via its website, and on March 12, 1969 the people were heard. Read an unsigned editorial that day. "A quick glance at the results reveals over two thirds of the ballots being cast in favor…of open recruitment by members of the military industrial complex." The turnout was less than 15 percent, leading the editors to condemn the poll as "Referendum Apathy."

Two years prior, the Collegian asked students to weigh in on the war in Vietnam, the results of which were reported on November 9, 1967. Again, the turnout didn't exceed 15 percent. Roughly equal numbers of respondents, 19 and 21 percent, favored a complete withdrawal and an all-out escalation, respectively. The majority, 37 percent, favored de-escalation of the war. I would guess that, with the appropriate substitution of names and choices, the results of a poll on Iraq would be about the same today.

As we get back in touch with the movements of the past, we should keep in mind that these organizations had their flaws, and that they ended for complicated reasons, reasons which sooner or later will have to be dealt with. You can condemn apathy all you want, but a serious problem is the failure of activists to get non-activist students involved.

Forty years ago, UMass students spent sunny spring afternoons wasting away in courses they showed up for only to satisfy a requirement and avoid the draft. The excitement of the 1960's was right outside the window, but most, apparently, were never even touched by it. So let us repeat history, but let us improve upon it, too.

Mike Sances is a Collegian columnist

Freedom for Whom?

Justin Jackson

Freedom for Jill Carroll does not change a damn thing.

Of course, except for her, her family and those of us at UMass-Amherst and beyond who care for her well-being and safety, as we all should, and as I do myself. Certainly, her release is something for us to welcome and celebrate.

However, before we "sound the church bells, wave the flags, and put up a shout of cheer," perhaps we might employ the critical faculties we hopefully are developing as students in this university by asking what "freedom" means in the larger political, historical and moral context of this war, in which Carroll's release is admittedly a very marginal event.

First, we can ask ourselves whether the continuing presence of 140,000 American troops in Iraq really is bringing "freedom" or "liberty" to the Iraqis themselves. Most Iraqis actually consider American troops to be an army of colonial-like occupation, not some benevolent presence preventing "oppression" by violent militants.

In fact, most Iraqis are intelligent enough to recognize that American troops remain in Iraq because of the United States' government's desire to permanently remain in a country of incredible geo-strategic importance, with, or close to, much of the world's remaining oil resources. The vast majority of Iraqis want Americans to leave quite soon, if not immediately. They rightfully resent that we are building 14 permanent military bases on their soil.

If we are sincerely interested in the freedom of the Iraqi people themselves, perhaps we should recognize that the United States' invasion and occupation of their country was unwise, illegal and a violation of their freedoms and sovereignty. Perhaps we should acknowledge that America's military presence in Iraq is actually contributing to political strife and destabilization; that it is fostering instead of stanching an insurgency, much of which is indigenous, not interested in harming civilians, and a legitimate response to an invasion and occupation by a foreign government; and that it is not actually making progress training Iraqi police or military forces or "teaching" Iraqis self-government (this last self-deception has been long practiced by American leaders and the American public since before even the US invasion of Cuba and the Philippines in 1898).

If we are genuinely interested in Iraqis' freedom, we should withdraw our military immediately, organize an international force to help police the country after we leave, and pay massive reparations to help repair the enormous damage we've inflicted…

If we are genuinely interested in Iraqis' freedom, we should withdraw our military immediately, organize an international force to help police the country after we leave, and pay massive reparations to help repair the enormous damage we've inflicted on the country's resources and its people after fourteen years of economic sanctions and war. This is exactly the suggestion made by UMass alum, Iraq war veteran and National Guardsman Andy Sapp when he spoke on campus yesterday.

Then we might consider what "freedom" means to all of those American servicemen and women who have been ordered to that country in our name. According to a recent Zogby poll, 29 percent think they should be withdrawn immediately, because they realize that they are not accomplishing the stated mission in Iraq put forth (or spun) by the administration. Seventy-two percent of American troops want to be withdrawn by the end of February of 2007.

Yet, a few weeks ago President Bush rather conveniently handed off responsibility for ending the war and troop withdrawal to the next administration. So, if we are truly interested in the "freedom" and the well–being of not just Jill Carroll, but also the honorable and self-sacrificing men and women of our armed services, perhaps we should be working on this campus to bring them home from an impossible mission — which threatens each of them with death, if not physical or psychological injuries that could maim them for life — instead of squandering their efforts and their patriotic sacrifice.

We might also ask ourselves about our own "freedom." We might reflect on the fact that the Bush administration committed high crimes and misdemeanors by purposefully and knowingly lying to the country about alleged threats of weapons of mass destruction, or Iraq's connection to 9/11 and terrorism, and that the continuation of his administration and his policies is an imposition on our freedoms. The Bush government's policies of illegal NSA spying, torture, of detaining American citizens without recourse to trial, just to name a few… all of these constitute violations of domestic, and international laws, and are, in essence violations of precious liberties and freedoms which have taken centuries of struggle to establish in our moral, political and legal traditions.

Perhaps then we can cease the self–adulation, and begin the much more urgent business, in the Daily Collegian's columns and elsewhere, of ensuring real and meaningful freedom for Iraqis, for our soldiers, and for ourselves.

Justin Jackson is a Collegian student.

Write for ED/OP!
editorial@daily-collegian.com

Letters to the Editor

TRANSFERRIN' AIN'T EASY

Dear Editors,

Thanks for publishing Nicole Leete's informative and well-reported article on the problems facing transfers to UMass (April 5). I've been advising students as a faculty member for 20 years, and I've always thought we've done a particularly bad job with transfers.

The key thing for any student needing academic advice to realize is that somewhere on this campus there is a human being with both the willingness and the expertise to deal with your problem – the trick is finding that person.

Ordinary first-year students are clued into the system through their orientation advising and through Pre-Major advising, but transfers often don't find the right person easily. Faculty members vary in their commitment to and expertise in advising, but each department normally has either a faculty person or a staff member who knows practically everything and is ready to help.

The department head, or the department head's secretary, will usually know who that is. Each college also has an academic dean who can help a student navigate the bureaucracy, either personally or through staff.

As Nicole's article said, accessibility to transfers is one of the great strengths of this University, and we need to go out of our way to make their transition as easy as possible.

David Mix Barrington
Computer Science

NOT TOO SHAB...Y

To The Editor:

We want to thank you for your article about the Student Health Advisory Board (SHAB) ICE initiative on April 3. By publishing this article, you are helping to improve the health and safety of the UMass Amherst community, and you should be commended.

There are a few points we want to clarify. One, for ICE to be most effective, it is critical for your designated ICE contact person(s) to know in advance that they will be contacted if something happens to you.

Two, ICE already is a widespread program. The Student Health Advisory Board is simply trying to bring ICE to the UMass Amherst community.

Three, ICE is one initiative of the Student Health Advisory Board, and there are others. For example, another initiative happening this semester is the Health Careers Information Fair on the evening of April 11 in the Campus Center Auditorium.

Finally, the article identifies our organization as the Student Health Association Board, but actually our name is the Student Health Advisory Board, also known as SHAB, and we are a program of the Health Education Department at UHS. Anyone who pays the Health Fee can join. Check us out at the UHS website, or better yet, come to the next meeting on April 12 at 4:30 pm. UHS 302.

Tiffany Sannie and Sharon King
Co–Chairs, SHAB

LIBRARY PASSES MUSTER

I have a question, didn't they just redo the front of the library? Then how come the sliding glass doors are always broken?

If it's not one it's the other. If it's not the other it's both. Maybe they contracted out to Halliburton? (Just a joke!) But it is true, the ones at Stop and Shop work better.

But I must say, otherwise, I think the plaza out front of the library looks fine, and the newly-decorated basement level a–ok.

I sincerely think it is miraculous the whole library doesn't sink into the earth because it is so big. It is a fine engineering feat, and I guess we have people in the engineering department to thank for it.

Joseph Hunt
UMass graduate student

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

ARTS & LIVING

TUESDAY, APRIL 11, 2006 ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

'Inside Man'

Spike Lee's latest is a smart crime thriller

"Inside Man"
Directed by Spike Lee
Starring Denzel Washington, Clive Owen, Jodie Foster
Universal Studios
Rated R
129 mins.
Grade B+

BY PETER FRISMAN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Spike Lee's films have always forced their audiences to question the true motivations of all the characters, be they hero, villain or victim. Given that his latest movie's subject is a bank robbery, it would seem unlikely that he could inflict the same ambiguity to "Inside Man." After all, no matter whom the audience is inclined to root for, chances are that bank robbers only wish for riches and not to be caught, law enforcement wishes to stop the robbers from achieving such goals and the innocent bystanders wish to make it out alive. Thus, one familiar with Lee's modus operandi might view "Inside Man" with reservations as to whether everything is as it seems – and, of course, they'd be right to do so.

The first thing we see is a man, Dalton Russell (Clive Owen) introducing himself to the audience and explaining that he recently planned the supposedly perfect bank robbery. Cut to the first step of said robbery in action: Surveillance cameras are blinded, bank employees and customers are ordered to wear the same painter's disguises as the robbers, and red herrings are served to the police. But perhaps the robber's intentions aren't as clear as previously assumed: The Bank's founder, Arthur Case (Christopher Plummer), expresses an unusual interest in the event and hires power broker Madeline White (Jodie Foster) to ensure an item in his personal safe-deposit box is either kept under wraps or destroyed. The robbery is overseen by Detective Keith Frazier (Danzel Washington), whom Dalton describes as too smart to be a police officer.

Seeing as how a bank robbery movie would seemingly be designed to appeal to audiences more mainstream than Lee is known for, perhaps he will adapt a more pedestrian, ordinary directional style. Get real: Regardless of the film's genre, he is and shall remain for the foreseeable future Spike Lee, and he will inject a constant stream of avant-garde techniques into Spike Lee joints – whether they're called for or not. To his credit, though, he appears to be on his best behavior, and the only problem that arises from his unorthodox approach is potential confusion stemming from the film's nonlinear storyline.

As viewers familiar with Lee's oeuvre also could have predicted, the film is rife with social commentary whose necessity and relevance is questionable. A man released from the bank, having been preceded by people who have proven to be hostages, is at first judged by the police force to be one of the robbers because of his beard and turban and dealt with accordingly. A robber asks to see a boy's handheld video game player, which is running a gratuitously violent program where the goal is to kill police officers and rival gang members, steal cars, etc. The robber then asks the boy to return to his father, who needs to have a talk with the robber about the game. (Feel free to pile on the irony, Mr. Lee; we're fully aware that subtlety isn't exactly your forte.) Still, such tongue-in-cheek asides serve, at least, to add color to the film.

Which is not to say that "Inside Man" is otherwise a predictable and routine heist film. Through moral ambiguity (whose side is the audience supposed to root for, anyway?), steadily growing mystery and humor, the film certainly manages to stand out amongst Hollywood's shameless barrage of mundane crime thrillers.

EXIT 69

Bands on a fast track to success soon derail

BY THOR CHRISTENSEN
THE DALLAS MORNING NEWS

The English media have anointed the Arctic Monkeys "our generation's most important band," declared their 20-year-old singer "the coolest man on the planet" and proclaimed their debut CD the fifth-best British album of all time.

All of which means one thing: The Monkeys will probably be extinct and forgotten in two years flat.

Welcome to the dodgy world of hype, in which U.K. rock groups are pumped up like mammoth beach balls, then promptly pierced and deflated.

There are exceptions, such as Oasis and Radiohead, who are still thriving a decade after the English media first laid hype on them. But the road to stardom is littered with British acts that fizzled soon after being dubbed "the next big thing."

Heard from the Propellerheads lately? What about Cast or Embrace or Gay Dad? And whatever happened to Sigue Sigue Sputnik?

"Britain does tend to produce these bands that are all mouth and no trousers — all attitude and nothing going on in the rhythm section," says Simon Reynolds, a British-born music journalist and a former "cog in the hype machine."

"But in England, hype is part of the spice of pop life — it makes things exciting. Here in America, hype is a dirty word, and people view British bands with suspicion."

Or just confusion. One man constantly scratching his head is Brent Grulke, longtime creative director of South by Southwest, where the Arctic Monkeys performed last month.

"It still baffles me. Why does one British act find themselves in this star-making position and another act doesn't?" says Grulke. "British hype is an interesting phenomenon; it's like this big train coming down the track, way off in the distance. 'Is it bringing something good to SXSW? Or will it run you over?'"

In Great Britain, the train has already arrived. In January, the Monkeys' "Whatever People Say I Am, That's What I'm Not" became the fastest-selling debut album in the country's history, entering the charts at No. 1.

But in this country, Monkey mania has yet to kick in. "Whatever" debuted last month at No. 24 with sales of 34,000, one-tenth of what it sold its first week on its home shores.

American reviewers have been favorable, praising the Sheffield quartet's wiry punk sound and lauding frontman Alex Turner's grim portraits of pub-crawlers and prostitutes. But critics here aren't quite drooling over the Monkeys like they are in England.

"In America, reviewers think bands gradually develop and finally mature on their fifth album, but in Britain, we think the opposite," says Reynolds, a former NME writer who now lives in New York.

"In England, we have the tradition of the fantastic, world-changing debut album ... the band of amazing prodigies that come out of nowhere, perfectly formed, like the Smiths."

But that tradition is less grounded in reality than it is in the peculiarities of the British music scene. England is a relatively small and heavily populated country where trends spread like brush fire, and an army of delirious music writers stands ready at all times to fan the flames.

The era of hype began in the post-Beatle 1960s, as weekly music papers such as NME, Melody Maker, Sounds, Disc and Record battled each other to discover the hot pop band du jour.

Later, the warring weeklies helped ignite punk rock — gravitating toward acts with a knack for saying something ridiculous. U.S. expatriate Terence Trent D'Arby became a U.K. media sensation by claiming his 1987 debut LP was "better than 'Sgt. Pepper's Lonely Hearts Club Band.'"

"You have to hit people over the head to make them notice, and I did it. I know how to play the game," D'Arby told the Los Angeles Times in 1988.

The British press also became notorious for teaming down acts that, months earlier, they'd fawned over. NME, for example, helped catapult Sigue Sigue Sputnik to fame before trashing the band with the cover headline "Would you pay 4 million pounds for this crap?"

"I think readers enjoy the build-them-up-and-knock-them-down syndrome, but it can be a bit rough for the bands," Reynolds says with a giggle. "It's like, 'Weren't you in that band that's been and gone?'"

Not everyone's laughing. "It's just so freakin' sad to me, because those are flesh-and-blood individuals," says Will Johnson of the Denton, Texas, rock band Centro-matic. "You have to approach it with extreme caution — you have to choose whether or not you want to be one of these ultrahyped people that ascend and descend quickly."

And then there's the blogosphere. Reynolds says he's bombarded by publicists and marketers trying to hype new bands on his blog, blissout.blogspot.com.

"They've gotten quite skilled at exploiting buzz and word of mouth. They're always sending me things asking, 'Will you do a promotional contest on your blog?'"

The flip side is that U.S. bloggers are fast becoming like British music journalists – trumpeting obscure bands and then discarding them.

"It's really sped up now," says Reynolds. "The hipsters get the leaked album; they discuss it to death for a few weeks; and by the time it's officially released, they're like, 'I'm so over it. ... That band is so August.'"

That sort of blog-lash might be unavoidable. But overhyped acts such as the Arctic Monkeys "would be wise to pace themselves and not cross the threshold of overexposure," says Reynolds.

The Monkeys are trying to do just that. In February, they began declining interviews as part of "a media hiatus" – although, of course, that hiatus doesn't include major TV shows such as "Saturday Night Live."

But what about the up-and-coming band that wants to use hype to its advantage, to become the next Arctic Monkeys sans the backlash?

Forget about it, says Grulke.

"If you think you need hype, it isn't going to work for you anyway. You're letting the tail wag the dog, and it'll bite you in the ass almost every time."

Zap2it.com

'Fab' new BBC show

Joanna Lumley is reuniting with her "Absolutely Fabulous" co-star, Jennifer Saunders, but this time she won't be playing the Patsy.

Instead, the two, along with Saunders' pre-"AbFab" partner-in-comedy Dawn French, will star in a new series being co-produced by BBC America and its big brother across the pond. The show is scheduled to air sometime next year.

The yet-untitled series, created by Saunders, will run seven episodes. It focuses on the members of a women's club in a small English town. A newly widowed woman (Sue Johnston, "Waking the Dead") joins the club, which purports to be dedicated to truth and fellowship, but finds its members also rather enjoy a bit of good gossip.

In addition to Johnston, Saunders, French and Lumley, the show will also feature Pauline McLynn ("Angela's Ashes," "Father Ted"), David Mitchell ("Peep Show") and Sally Phillips ("Smack the Pony," "Bridget Jones's Diary").

A premiere date for the new show hasn't been determined yet.

Zap2it.com

New Music Tuesday

"It's stasis that kills you off in the end, not ambition." - Bono

M1

6/10

Confidential
Koch Records

Six years after Dead Prez released the brilliant, revolutionary "Let's Get Free," half of the rap group has released his first solo album. Following a few lackluster releases from the Dead Prez camp, M1's album, which came out with little hype, carries a lot of weight on its shoulders. The political group is well-known, though not very commercially successful, for their insightful and intelligent lyrics, and while the albums that followed "Let's Get Free" refused to compromise or dumb down the act, they simply didn't have the strength of the incredibly powerful debut.

With "Confidential" there is good news and bad news; any release from the Dead Prez camp is welcome in the depressing, bland world of modern rap. No doubt M1 blows away the majority of what will be released in 2006. The bad news is that "Confidential" very rarely reaches the heights of "Let's Get Free." While M1 expands his sound, especially in terms of production, and has a good share of great lyrics, he simply doesn't sound as hungry as he was.

On "Land, Bread & Housing" M1 claims that he's a "better revolutionary then rapper," but most of "Confidential" is, seemingly, an attempt for M1 to cement himself in the rap community. While his left-wing politics are still clear – and talk of comrades, community and revolution abound – M1 seems as if he has lowered his guard in exchange for more tame raps. In fact, M1 seems to have stepped off the Public Enemy inspired route on to something more akin to Tupac Shakur: an intelligent, sensitive gangsta. And while M1 wears this suit well – and still does so with a great amount of individuality and talent – there is definitely something lacking from the whole affair.

There are some great tracks; "Early" is the only song to feature the other half of Dead Prez, Stic.man. "Comrade's Call" takes what would could be a dull gangsta-rap tune (with call-and-response chorus) and morphs it into a high-energy adrenaline pumper. "Been Through" features Ghostface Killah, a great beat and some truly fantastic lyrics and delivery, and "Too Smart" finishes the album with a couple of great verses and a strong beat.

While M1 been serving an important role for the past six years – a social and political commentator that is informed, interesting and willing to say what many are to afraid to – he seems eager to show off all sides of his personality. And while that change is refreshing, and perhaps necessary for an artist to continue prospering, it is hard to not feel slightly let down. M1 name checks "Let's Get Free" a few times throughout "Confidential", which only serves to enunciate the differences between the two releases. "Confidential" is still a smart, fresh album but after a few let downs, the Dead Prez camp still seems unable to live up to the remarkable album that they debuted with.

Morrissey

6/10

Ringleader Of The Tormentors
Attack/Sonctuary Records

Only two years after his massive comeback, Morrissey has returned with another new release designed to make his fans – old and new – swoon with delight. While Morrissey used to release albums with astounding frequency, the seven years that preceded 2004's "You Are the Quarry" made that album both surprising and a resounding success. With a new generation of fans, and a still delighted cult of original followers, "Quarry" was a relatively huge smash, and a new Morrissey was born. Not entirely different from the one before but somehow distinctly modern, even in its quasi-quaintness.

"Ringleader Of The Tormentors" follows directly in the footsteps of "Quarry" – it's not a copy, but it does feel like a sequel. However it is clear that "Quarry" was the big comeback; "Ringleader" is being sent out to maintain it, not build upon it. With its lush production, arrangements and songwriting, "Ringleader" has the same velvety feel as "Quarry," but is even more expansive. Morrissey alternately takes chances and plays it safe and ends up with a solid album full of surefire winners, though it is far away from a career best.

Opening with the farewell-themed, Eastern-tinged "I Will See You In Far Off Places," Morrissey brings out his trademark wit quickly, promising to meet again "if the U.S.A. doesn't bomb you." "Dear God Please Help Me" is a torch song, complete with strings from maestro composer Ennico Morricone, and some rather poorly written lyrics about love and lust. The album's first single "You Have Killed Me" is complete cookie-cutter Morrissey, almost a color-by-numbers exercise. And from there the album follows similar patterns. For every great song or moment there is either something so expected or awkward that it takes away from the good. Lyrically Morrissey is, as usual, hit or miss; giving his fans plenty of tearjerkers, laughs and pointed – though not always interesting – observations on life and love.

People that have loved Morrissey for a while will find themselves satiated, though not overly impressed, with "Ringleader" and those who have never enjoyed his work will be able to pass this album up guilt-free. It is certainly impressive that this late into career, Morrissey still seems eager and ready to go. Some of the songs on "Ringleader" can stand safely next the best work in Morrissey's entire catalogue but nothing feels truly new or that exciting. "Ringleader" is more then just an average album – there's a lot to like and not much to skip over – but where Morrissey's, or any artist's, best work grabs the listener and refuses to let go, and where "Quarry" served as an important return, "Ringleader" is just another chapter in a storied career. Far from either a throwaway or an essential, "Ringleader" is going to make a lot of diehard fans happy but probably won't do too much else.

BY NICK ROMANOW
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Boy Least Likely To-

4/10

The Best Porty Ever
Too Young To Die

According to Dicionary.com, alternative music is "a catch-all term for the newest rock music, which has not been around long enough to acquire a specific name."

The Boy Least Likely To, a novel little band from the United Kingdom, perfectly fits the definition for "alternative music." According to its own Web site, "The music is heartfelt and uplifting with unique and sweetly eccentric lyrics, often giving sad undertones to what on the surface appear to be simple upbeat pop songs." This description is totally accurate, but it ignores the fact that the album is impossible to listen to in one sitting. Filled with bizarre little noises in addition to the main instrumentals, this CD saturates your aural senses.

Even if one didn't know this band was from Britain, it would be easy to guess. It just feels English. The vocals sound like they're straight out of the '60s flower power era, but the instrumentals are really bubblegum poppy. One of the best tracks on the album is "My Tiger My Heart." It breaks from the high-pitched theme of the rest of the disc, and is a little slower paced, a bit haunting. This song, along with "The Battle of the Boy Least Likely To," is the highlight of the album. But it's not like there's much to beat when it comes to being the "highligh" of something like this.

The band consists of two people, Jof and Peter. Jof writes lyrics and sings, while Peter is the musician – instrumentalist. Peter is definitely talented at the guitar, and the multitude of other instruments he plays for the band. Jof's voice is gentle and a little hoarse. He kind of croons at times. It's bearable.

As a whole, The Boy Least Likely To's "The Best Party Ever" is an alright album. It's for those into the "indie-pop" thing, who don't mind annoying sounding music if it makes up for its badness with obscurity. Then when all the "I listen to obscure music" kids hang out, they can name drop this band with the assurance that no one will have heard of it, thus giving that person more obscurity cool points.

BY PETE CORBETT
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Shows to go online

BY GARY GENTILE
ASSOCIATED PRESS

LOS ANGELES – ABC will offer four prime-time shows including "Desperate Housewives" and "Lost" on its Web site for free for two months beginning in May as it continues to expand the ways consumers can watch TV online.

The shows will include advertising that cannot be skipped over during viewing. ABC, which is owned by The Walt Disney Co., already offers ad-free episodes for $1.99 each on Apple Computer Inc.'s iTunes store.

The offerings on the ABC.com Web site will also include current episodes of "Commander in Chief," as well as the entire season of "Alias," and will be available through June. New episodes will be available online the day after they run on ABC.

The shows will be supported by advertisers, including AT&T Inc., Ford Motor Co., Procter & Gamble Co., Toyota Motor Corp. and Unilever PLC, among others.

The experiment comes as networks try to reach viewers, who watch less TV in prime-time and are embracing technology that lets them watch shows on computers and portable devices, such as an iPod.

"It's an opportunity for us to learn more about a different model," Anne Sweeney, president of Disney-ABC Television Group, said in a panel discussion Monday at the cable industry's annual convention in Atlanta.

"None of us can live in a world of just one business model. This is about the consumer, and how the consumers use all this new technology. It's consumer first, business model second."

ABC was the first network to sell TV episodes online. Since then others, including NBC, CBS and several cable networks, have offered shows on iTunes, their own Web sites and on Google Inc.'s new video store. Time Warner Inc.'s AOL recently launched in2TV, which streams episodes of classic TV shows with ads.

ABC is working with advertisers to try new, interactive ads that will appear in the shows and will also offer sponsorships. Viewers will be able to pause the shows and skip to various "chapters," but will not be able to fast forward through the ads.

Sweeney said that ABC would be cautious about other distribution deals, being careful to safeguard against piracy, ensure reliability of the technology and make sure any deals are compatible with ABC brands. Whether such ventures are supported by marketing is also a concern, she said.

Sweeney said ABC had already rejected several other deals for possible distribution of TV shows, but she declined to say which ones.

"You're not going to see us on every single platform," she said.

ABC has not made shows available on Google's video store. ABC has also not yet signed any agreements with cable companies to distribute its hit prime-time shows for on-demand replay services offered on cable, although Sweeney said they were in active talks with several providers.

ABC also said it will continue discussions with its local affiliate stations on ways to share revenue from online ad sales. Affiliates, as well as unions representing actors and writers, have sought a bigger cut of online revenue.

"Our ultimate goal is to find an effective online model, one in which our affiliates can take part," Alex Wallau, president, operations and administration, ABC Television Network, said in a statement.

The Disney-ABC TV group also said Monday it will launch a broadband channel for soap opera viewers on April 17, available to Verizon Communications Inc. consumer broadband customers, called Soapnets.

Walk to Campus!
Townehouse of Amherst Condominiums
Hurry contact us now!
50 Meadow St. Amherst, MA
Tel: 413.549.0839
Fax: 413.549.8487

We're looking for editors and we want you!!
arts@dailycollegian.com

EAST HEAVEN HOT TUBS
STUDENT DISCOUNT!

$15 OFF ANY HOT TUB RENTAL FOR TWO
(one discount per rental)
Student Discount only good Mon-Thurs or any day after 6pm
Weekdays 11- Midnight Weekends 11 - 1am
413-587-0000 • 33 West St. Northampton • www.eastheaven.com

Back Forward Stop Refresh Home AutoFill Print Mail
Address: @www.SunraiseInc.com
Screen Printed T's
*White T's ONLY
24 minimum
1 Color, 1 side
Standard Ink
Max Size 10x13
Screen $20
$5
Your Design or Logo!
Apparel Unlimited SCREEN PRINTERS
322 Russell Street Hadley, MA 01035
322 Russell St. Hadley, MA 01035 413-586-7133 www.SunraiseInc.com
*Exp. 4.30.06

A Public Forum on Climate Change
What We Should Be, Can Be and Are Doing as a Nation, Region and Community
Wednesday April 12, 2006
2:30 pm to 5:00 pm
University of Massachusetts Amherst • Student Union Ballroom
Free and Open to the Public
Co-Sponsors: The Environmental Institute and the Climate Change Working Group University of Massachusetts Amherst
2:30 Welcome: Charlene Seymour, Provost and Senior Vice Chancellor for Academic Affairs
2:35 Opening Remarks: The Honorable John W. Olver U.S. House of Representatives and Co-Author, Climate Stewardship Act and Co-Chair, Congressional Climate Change Caucus
Introduction to Panel Discussion by Moderator: Peter Haas, Professor of Political Science
3:00 A National Perspective: Preparing for a Different Climate Jeff Frithsen, Global Change Research Program, U.S. Environmental Protection Agency, Washington, DC
3:30 A Regional Perspective: The Climate Change Action Plan of the Conference of New England Governors and Eastern Canadian Premiers John Shea, Director, Energy and Environment Programs, New England Governors Conference, Boston
4:00 A Community Perspective: The Amherst Climate Action Plan Julie Johnson, Director, Hitchcock Center for the Environment, Amherst
4:30 Open Discussion
5:00 Reception PDPs Available for Massachusetts Teachers
Websites to visit for more information
http://www.umass.edu/tei/TEI_2005/climateforum.html
http://www.umass.edu/tei/TEI_2005/climatechange.html

Ortiz staying in Boston

ORTIZ from page 6

before finishing as runner-up to Rodriguez in a tight vote last year.

In those three seasons, Ortiz leads the majors with 388 RBIs, is second with a .600 slugging percentage and fourth with 119 homers.

In the previous six years in the Twins organization, Ortiz spent just two full seasons in the majors, hitting .282 with 10 homers and 63 RBIs in 2000 and .272 with 20 homers and 75 RBIs in 2002.

In 2003, he came into Boston's camp as one of three potential first basemen or designated hitters, competing with two other new free-agent signees, Kevin Millar and Jeremy Giambi. Ortiz started slowly, playing in 31 of the first 54 games with two homers and 19 RBIs.

But he became a regular when Shea Hillenbrand was traded to Arizona and finished the season with 31 homers, 101 RBIs and a .288 batting average.

In 2004, Ortiz hit 41 homers with 139 RBIs and a .301 average in 150 games. Last season, he batted .300 in 159 games. His 47 homers were second in Red Sox history to Jimmie Foxx's 50 in 1938.

Ortiz says he embraces the intensity in baseball-crazed Boston.

"If you don't want to be famous, just step away," he said.

Red Sox designated hitter David Ortiz agreed to a four-year contract extension with the team yesterday.

New Mickelson winning majors

By Doug Ferguson
Associated Press

AUGUSTA, Ga. — Phil Mickelson and Tiger Woods met in Butler Cabin for the second straight year at the Masters for a role reversal not seen at Augusta National in more than 40 years.

Jack Nicklaus and Arnold Palmer — rivals briefly, driving forces as long as they played — took turns helping each other into the green jacket for three straight Masters ending in 1965. The scene was replayed Sunday evening when Woods, the defending champion, fit Mickelson into the fabled prize.

"I don't really want to trade next year," Mickelson said after his two-shot victory.

But this role reversal was about more than a green jacket presentation.

Two players separated by everything but raw talent looked strikingly familiar in winning the Masters on a super-sized course.

Augusta National was longer than ever in 2002 when Woods went into the final round tied for the lead with U.S. Open champion Retief Goosen, two shots clear of Vijay Singh, with Ernie Els, Mickelson and Sergio Garcia another two shots behind. Woods built a lead and knew his challengers would have to make birdies. They all crashed trying to catch him.

The course was even longer for this year's Masters, softened slightly by rain.

Mickelson was one shot ahead of former Masters champion Fred Couples, with Woods and Singh two shots behind, followed by Goosen and Els. There were 10 players within three shots of the lead, most of them major champions. Mickelson took a two-shot lead and knew par would be his friend. Couples and Woods couldn't make a putt, Singh couldn't deliver a great shot when he needed it.

Along the way, people had to wonder: Who was this guy?

Mickelson carved out a reputation as "Phil the Thrill," a gunslinger whose sole mission was to attack flags and keep everyone entertained with every shot. Even his first two majors kept everyone in suspense to the end — five birdies on the last seven holes to win the '04 Masters, a flop shot from deep rough to tap-in range on the 72nd hole at Baltusrol in the PGA Championship last summer.

This time, he managed to make the Masters boring — which was fine with him.

"The stress-free walk up 18 was incredible. I had been wanting that," Mickelson said. "I had actually been wanting a four- or five-shot lead, but three was OK, too."

For a second — even though he was joking — he sounded like the Mickelson of old.

Lefty didn't endear himself to many people five years ago at the PGA Championship in Atlanta when he opened with a 66 and told CBS Sports that he not only wanted to win, but by a certain margin of victory. He was asked later what number he had in mind.

"I'm not going to say. Doesn't sound good," he said with a smile.

He wound up losing by one shot to David Toms, who laid up on the 18th and made a 10-foot par save.

It took Mickelson a dozen years and 42 majors, but he finally figured out how to win the majors. He strove to keep the ball in play, even using two drivers — the joke was he tried to help Callaway win the driver count — at this Masters. He also crammed for the majors as if they were final exams, spending eight hours in a practice round ahead of the tournament to study how to save shots.

Even on par fives he could reach in two on the back nine of Augusta, he reminded himself that par was a good score (typical Phil, he birdied both of them, anyway, making him 13 under on the par fives at the Masters).

The results — three majors in his last nine starts — have changed his reputation, if not his legacy.

"There's no doubt he's changed," Couples said. "He's an incredible player. He's got more talent than maybe anyone out here in his hands. You've got, obviously, Tiger. You've got Ernie Els and Retief, and those are great, great players. But I think Phil can overpower a golf course like Tiger can.

"He's a much better player than he was five years ago."

It's easy to get carried away with whoever just won the last major. Even with his second Masters title, Mickelson still only has as many majors as Els and Singh among active players, and he still lags seven majors behind Woods.

But Mickelson is worth closer inspection.

He now has won a major in three straight seasons, joining Woods as the only players to have done that in the last 20 years. Only five other players — Tom Watson, Nicklaus, Palmer, Peter Thomson and Ralph Guldahl — have won majors in at least three consecutive years since the Masters was created in 1934.

And there is one more link to Woods unrelated to the majors.

A week before the Masters, Mickelson honed his game by winning the BellSouth Classic by 13 shots, a margin of victory rarely seen. Woods won the U.S. Open by 15 and the Masters by 12, and he won two PGA Tour events by 11. The only other active player to win in double digits was two-time Masters champion Jose Maria Olazabal, by 12 shots at Firestone in 1990.

Two spectacular weeks in Georgia elevated Mickelson to No. 2 in the world, primed for his biggest season ever.

The slogan in a popular commercial with Mickelson used to be, "What will Phil do next?" Now, it seems to be more a matter of when.

We believe everyone's more successful in a flexible environment.

We want you to succeed. That's why we've created an environment that's conducive to personal and professional growth and success. At Ernst & Young we're offering an opportunity to learn from some of the best talent in the industry. So visit us on campus, or on the Web at ey.com/us/careers. Whatever's best for you. We're flexible.

FORTUNE 100 BEST COMPANIES TO WORK FOR 2006

Audit • Tax • Transaction Advisory Services

ERNST & YOUNG
Quality In Everything We Do

©2006 Ernst & Young LLP

Positions Available at the Collegian! Apply in the Campus Center Basement!

Living in a Cloud By John Corbin

Elsie Hooper By Robert D. Krzykowski

Jack Dogg By Xavier Rhodes

The Family Monster By Josh Shalek

A College Girl Named Joe By Aaron Warner

Quote of the Day

"Always do sober what you said you'd do drunk. That will teach you to keep your mouth shut."

—Ernest Hemingway

ACROSS
1 Bike caps
5 Acuff and Rogers
9 Japanese dish
14 Nondairy spread
15 Lincoln and Forbes
16 Go in
17 Fixed
19 Spy's garment?
20 Three score and ten
21 Movie texts
23 Examination
25 Female lobster
26 Wished for oneself
30 Remains after destruction
35 Tears apart
36 Baloney!
37 Caspian, e.g.
38 Actress Perlman
39 Flashy outfit
40 Untruthful one
41 Tolkien creature
42 Characteristic
43 Buck or Bailey
44 Indifferent
46 Wee
47 Waikiki garland
48 God of love
50 Article of clothing
54 Disheveled
56 Stand by for
60 Narrow backstreets
62 Literary grouping
63 British noble
64 Pound of poetry
65 E A P part
66 Back talk
67 Oracle

DOWN
1 Lids
2 Away from the wind
3 Producer Griffin
4 Unspecified quantity
5 Spoke wildly
6 Complies
7 Tokyo coinage
8 Concordes, e.g.
9 Concealment
10 Disconnect
11 Organ knob
12 Miami hoopsters
13 Annoys
18 Feeds the kitty
22 Shrill little cry
24 Double-cross
26 Swashbuckler Flynn
27 Former Indian prime minister
28 Sweeter type
29 Actress Lupino
31 Disorderly retreat
32 Man from Manchuria
33 Transmission parts
34 Before the usual time
36 Listen to
39 Wood pattern
40 Director Spike
42 Small speaker
43 Bothersome
45 New York city
46 Sun creams
48 Do's and don'ts
50 Plum variety
51 Filled with wonder
52 Chimed
53 Lights out bugle signal
55 Rams' mates
58 Labyrinth
57 Combustible pile
58 Russian ruler
61 Poetic pasture

Find today's answers online

www.dailycollegian.com

THE HARP
NEW!! Wireless Internet
OCMP & All Credit Cards accepted
Irish Pub
APRIL SPECIAL!
Honey Brown, Molson
$2.00 a pint / $6.50 a pitcher
TONIGHT: • Trivia Night!
Trivia Night!
Trivia Night!
WED: • Cold Duck Complex
"Come Party Like You're Irish!"
413-548-6900 www.theharp.net
163 Sunderland Rd. - N. Amherst
Just north of the apartments

Submit your comic!
e-mail
collegiancomics@yahoo.com

HOROSCOPES

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
You will get a red light ticket in the mail today.

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
You will get gum all over your backpack this afternoon.

aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
This is not scarf weather. Why are you wearing one?

taurus Apr. 20-May 20
The animal you most resemble today is a zebra.

gemini May 21-Jun. 21
You will be Facebooked by someone you don't know today.

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
You will never understand economics. Give up now.

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
You will have a total of three pop quizzes today.

virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Don't bother going to Health Services for that cold. They won't be any help.

libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22
Don't go on an airplane for at least six weeks.

scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
Do not attempt to go up the down escalator. You will get hurt.

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Your room will be too hot to sleep in tonight.

capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
Stop chewing with your mouth open. No wonder no one wants to eat with you.

★ Submit your comic ★
e-mail
collegiancomics@yahoo.com

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

Announcements

Want a hottie for the coming summer? I'm bold, sleek, and sporty and I always bring the heat. Meet me, the Ford Fusion, outside the Campus Center on April 25th between 10 AM and 3 PM. Brought to you by your New England Ford Dealers.

THE WORLD HAS HAD ENOUGH of hunger, injustice and war. An extraordinary, enlightened World Teacher is here to help. Learn more: 888-242-8272 *Share-International.org

Full Scholarships plus $5,000 cash yearly College for free and career after graduation ARMY ROTC www.umass.edu/armyrotc

Apartment for Rent

2 bedroom $1100 3 bedroom $1400 4 bedroom $2150 Now Accepting Applications 253-7377 millvallevestates@winnco.com

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing, 1&2 bedroom apts. Leases begin June, July, Aug or Sep. First come, first serve. Get them while they last. www.brandywine-apts.com stop by or call 549-0600

Center of Town 1, 2, 3 bedrooms; hardwood floors. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

Employment

Drivers Wanted. Chicago Pizza. Apply In person between 3:30-5pm

Employment

Furniture porter and maintenance person needed for busy auction gallery on Nantucket Island this summer. (508) 228-3942

PAINTERS NEEDED! Hundreds of positions available throughout New England. Work outside with your friends and family in your hometown. No experience needed, training provided. Join large student painting company this summer. Hiring now! 888-277-9787, www.collegepro.com

Full-time summer employment at the Housing Assignment Office, $8.50/hour. Visit the HAO at 235 Whitmore to pick up application.

Employment

Personal Care Assistant for woman In Northampton. Light housework. Cooking, cleaning, laundry, shopping. Must have reliable car to take client to Dr.'s appts. Part-time hours $10.84/hr. References and some experience preferred Please call before 7pm 586-0029

April 14th is the Last Day to Apply to become a Legal Assistant with the Student Legal Services Office. Earn 12 credits while gaining valuable experience. Call 545-1995 or stop by the Student Legal Services Office at 922 Campus Center to get your application.

Bartending $300/Day potential. No experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 x162

Employment

Summer Lifeguards, Managers, Camp Counselors, and Director positions open! Greenfield Recreation, 25 min. from Amherst. Apply now. Call (413) 772-1553.

Rent us your Ears! Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu Voicemail: 545-6837

House for Rent

Hadley, close to UMass 5 Bedroom home, large yard. Oil heat, Sept occupancy. 549-4270

Lost

Lost keys from Orchard Hill to Art Barn. Remote, silver trinket and 8 keys Call 256-6454

Services

Legal questions? We have answers at the Student Legal Services Office, 922 Campus Center or Call 545-1995

PREGNANCY TESTING, HIV TESTING, Birth-control, and Emergency Contraception. STI Screening and Treatment. Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992.

Pentium Color laptops $99 We type term papers, resumes, cover letters. 413-584-8857

Travel

Disney/Beach Area 7/6 nights stay. Pd $600.00 Sacrifice $199.00 Good for one year 978-444-0261

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS TUESDAY

TUESDAY, APRIL 11, 2006 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

UM to face Huskies

By Rob Greenfield
Collegian Staff

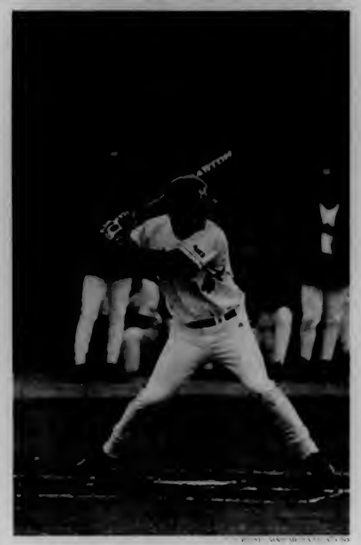
The Massachusetts baseball team travels to the University of Connecticut tomorrow for an out-of-conference matchup with the Huskies in Storrs, Conn.

The Minutemen (5-14, 3-6 Atlantic 10) concluded their first home stand of the year on Sunday with an 8-1 victory over the Duquesne Dukes.

UMass hits the road for a 12-game road swing, including games against La Salle in Philadelphia and the University of Saint Louis in Missouri, before returning to Amherst on April 28 to face the Temple Owls.

UMass is struggling in the 2006 campaign. It has a pitching staff comprised mostly of inexperienced freshman, and UMass coach Mike Stone hopes that they will come around soon.

Minuteman sophomore Aaron Smith has the lowest earned run average (2.84) in limited innings, and UMass' cleanup hitter, Bryan Adamski, has the second-lowest ERA with 3.38.



Against Duquesne this weekend, however, the pitching staff was superb. UMass took its first home series from Duquesne, winning two of three games from the Dukes.

After delays littered last week's action – game cancellations on Wednesday and Friday – the Minutemen's home debut was pushed back to Saturday, when UMass and Duquesne played a doubleheader in cold temperatures.

On Sunday, the Minutemen were 16-for-36 with eight RBIs and eight runs. Junior first baseman Bryan Adamski led the Minutemen with three hits in five at-bats with two RBIs and two runs scored. That was Adamski third straight multiple-hit game and the fifth in a five-game hitting streak. Freshman second baseman Adam Tempesta also had three hits, and added a RBI with a run scored. Tempesta has hit safely in six straight games.

Freshman Jim MacDonald and sophomore third baseman Ryan Franczek both had two hits and two RBIs on the afternoon.

Eight runs was more than enough for the UMass hurlers, who allowed just three hits and one run.

Junior Bryan Adamski has led the Minutemen at the plate and on the mound this season. Adamski is batting .313 and has a 3.38 ERA.

Junior Rory McDonald started the game for the Minutemen and went 7 2/3 innings, allowing just two hits.

Connecticut starter Tim Norton picked up his third Big East Pitcher of the Week Award last week after his one-hit shutout performance against the Villanova Wildcats. That game brought Norton's strike-out total to 49, one more than his 2005 total.

INFIELD POWER

The Minutemen have four hitters batting over the .300 mark in the 2006 season, and they are all in the infield: shortstop Lou Proietti (.328), Franczek (.317), Adamski (.313) and Tempesta (.303).

Adamski leads UMass with three home runs, a .522 slugging percentage and 14 walks. He is tied with Tempesta with five doubles.

VETERAN STRENGTH

McDonald, Chris Lloyd and David Sullivan are the workhorses for the Minutemen. Each has worked over 25 innings. Sullivan has 30 2/3 innings under his belt – and McDonald leads the Minutemen with 17 strikeouts.

Freshmen Mike Dicato and Al Jardine have made the most appearances for UMass. Dicato, who appears mostly in relief roles late in the game, has eight appearances on the season and the lefty Jardine has seven.

Track teams weather conditions

By Domenic Poli
Collegian Staff

Despite the cold, miserable weather on Saturday, the Massachusetts track and field teams managed to walk away with plenty of top performances at the Wildcat Invitational in New Hampshire.

Junior Erik Hoagland, sophomore Nathan Barksdale and the 4x100 meter relay team provided the first-place finishes for the Minutemen.

Hoagland picked up where he left off last weekend at the Southern Connecticut Invitational. He won the long jump and the triple jump events with distances of 22 feet, 11.75 inches and 44 feet, four inches, respectively.

At the Southern Connecticut Invitational, the first meet of the outdoor season, Hoagland claimed victory in the long jump with a mark of 23 feet, 4.75 inches. This continued his reign as a dominant jumper, which first started during the indoor season.

At the Atlantic 10 Championships on Feb. 18, he won the long jump and the triple jump, becoming the first Minuteman to win both events at the meet since UMass joined the A-10 in 1994.

"I expect him to continue to do what he's been doing, and be able to be at the top of the A-10 Conference again," UMass jumps coach Antoinette Otrando said.

Barksdale took first place in the 400-meter dash with a time of 50.58 seconds. He finished .15 seconds faster than his performance last weekend and moved all the way up from 17th place to first.

Mere fractions of a second behind him was teammate junior Manny Harris-Lopes, who finished second with a time of 50.87 seconds.

UMass coach Ken O'Brien paid was pleased with the Maroon and White's two relay teams. The 4x100 meter team, won with a time of 43.75 seconds, the 4x400 meter team claimed third place in 3:33.54.

"All in all, I think the team performed very, very well," O'Brien said.

The Minutewomen boasted three first-place finishers of their own, in freshman Jordan Veney, sophomore Kristen Bakanowski and junior Cuisle Kierans.

With a mark of 43 feet, 10 inches, Veney once again broke the UMass shot put record, winning the event. This was her fourth time breaking that record this year. During the indoor season she broke it at three consecutive meets, the last one being the Valentine Invitational on Feb. 11.

Veney also won the discus with a throw of 132 feet, 3 inches.

Bakanowski, a pole-vaulter, was originally going to sit out the meet due to an injury to her take-off foot, but was cleared to compete by a doctor on Thursday. This proved to be a real shot in the arm for the Minutewomen, as the sophomore won the event in dramatic fashion, with a height of 10 feet, 11.5 inches.

Kierans' win was her first of the outdoor season. Her time of 18:41.65 blew away her competition, as the runner-up (senior Hillary Greene of the University of New Hampshire) crossed the finish line more than eight seconds after Kierans.

Last week's warm weather loosened up freshman Dionise Miranda's hamstring and she was expected to compete in the 200-meter dash. The meet's cold climate, however, forced UMass women's coach Julie LaFreniere to pull her out of the meet.

"She's feeling better, but she's not ready," LaFreniere said of Miranda. "So, unfortunately, I did have to pull her."

Miranda severely pulled her hamstring muscle at the A-10 Indoor Championships, and has been out of commission ever since.

LaFreniere said that despite no additional victories, other athletes still performed very well.

She singled out sophomores Christina DeRosa and Kendra Leighton. DeRosa took eighth place in the 1,500 meters with a time of 4:50.62, while Leighton ran a 27.24 in the 200-meter dash to claim third.

LaFreniere commented that she is proud of all of her athletes for competing well under such bitter conditions.

"The weather was much colder than any of us had anticipated," LaFreniere said. "It was a long meet, with some not-so-nice spring weather."

Mixed results for Minutewomen

By Eli Rosenswaike
Collegian Correspondent

The Massachusetts tennis team (10-8, 3-1 Atlantic 10) returned from its two big Atlantic 10 Conference matches from Washington, D.C. with mixed results.

On Friday the Minutewomen squared off against league favorites and perennial powerhouse Richmond, and on Saturday they were matched up against a lower caliber George Washington team.

The match against Richmond was a large test for UMass and was one it didn't quite pass. With the exception of junior Michelle Spiess at No. 1 singles, the rest of the team could not muster up enough to stomp the Spiders.

UMass lost every singles match except at No. 1, and with the exception of senior Jana Bartoloni at number six, each of those losses came in straight sets.

The formidable combination of Spiess and sophomore Masha Pozar won at No. 1 doubles, but with the losses in the other two doubles matches, the Minutewomen failed to capture the doubles point. Richmond took the match 6-1.

While Friday's loss to Richmond was a minor setback, Saturday's big win (4-1) over George Washington was precisely what the Minutewomen needed.

The win improved UMass to a solid 3-1 in the conference, with its only loss coming against the powerhouse Richmond team the day before. The win was a total team effort as the two stars Pozar and Spiess struggled somewhat in their matches.

Pozar took a rare loss at No. 2 singles, losing in straight sets, and the duo of Pozar and Spiess fell at No. 1 doubles. The loss was only the third in their 20 matches together at doubles in their collegiate careers. However, Pozar's teammates stepped up and got wins in almost every spot.

UMass still managed to claim the doubles point with big victories at

No. 2 and No. 3 doubles. Winning the doubles point has been something UMass coach Judy Dixon has stressed as being the key to victory, and once again that proved to be the case. Seniors Dorothy Iwanowicz and Susan Johnson won in a close match at No. 2, and freshman Stephanie Gimenez and Bartoloni won handily in the third doubles match.

Gimenez and Bartoloni may be the combination at No. 3 doubles that Dixon has been so incessantly searching for since the beginning of the spring portion of the 2005-06 season. Gimenez and Bartoloni were impressive, winning their match easily. Dixon has also stressed how important senior leadership needs to be and how this particular group of seniors needed to step up. Dixon had to be pleased with big wins from seniors Iwanowicz, Johnson, and Bartoloni.

At singles, Spiess won her match at No. 1, which gave the junior her 20th win of the season for the second year in a row. The Minutewomen also won at No. 5 and No. 6 singles with impressive three-set battles by Gimenez and Bartoloni, respectively.

Gimenez made an impressive comeback in her match, rallying from a set down to win. The matches at No. 3 and No. 4 singles were ended early as the match against George Washington had already been decided in the Minutewomen's favor.

UMass captures Knecht Cup

By Judy White
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts women's rowing team returned from the Cooper River in Camden, N.J. with its third straight Knecht Cup trophy on Sunday.

It's actually the same trophy, but UMass' varsity eight boat has put its name on it for third time in the first four years of the event. The inaugural winner was West Virginia in 2003.

"It was a nice win. The wind conditions were tough," UMass coach Jim Dietz said. "It was a nice clean [final] race for us. We dominated the [final] race from start to finish."

The Minutewomen will return to action Saturday in Boston to take on Boston University, Brown and Texas. Brown is No. 9 and BU is No. 20 in the nation according the most recent collegiate polls from April 5.

UMass finished with a time of 7:07.5, ahead of Gonzaga (7:10.8), Villanova (7:18.7), Buffalo (7:22.2), Marist (7:25.3) and Connecticut (7:30.6) in the Grand Final.

In the boat for the Maroon and White was sophomore coxswain Dana Pulida and rowers Catherine Garnepy, Gabrielle Papineau, Hannah Brewster, Sarah Marsan, Katie Berger, Ellen Maskrey, Rachael Nealer and Stephanie Hopf.

For Garnepy, Papineau, Brewster, Berger, Maskrey and Hopf it was also the their third straight Knecht Cup victory.

"Every year it seems like it gets tougher. Having those people knowing what it takes makes it a little bit easier in that aspect," Dietz said.

UMass was the only Atlantic 10 representative in the Grand Final. St. Joseph's and Rhode Island finished first and second (seventh and eighth overall), respectively, in the Petite Final. Dayton finished 11th overall with a time of 7:25.8. The Third Final also saw two A-10 schools on top with Fordham and Temple, who finished 13th and 14th overall, respectively.

The other victory on the weekend for the Minutewomen was in the varsity pair, where Maskrey and Marsan took the title with a time of 8:42.0.

"That's good," said Dietz of Maskrey and Marsan's win. "They were going against a good Villanova [second place, 8:48.6] group. They were racing against top programs to do that."

UMass' second novice eight boat finished second behind George Mason, but ahead of A-10 foe Dayton, who placed second in the A-10 Championships last year to the Minutewomen.

"It's really good because they were ahead of Dayton – because we're looking ahead in two weeks for the A-10s – it could be the second novice eight that gets us the win. You never know," Dietz said.

That team was comprised of freshman coxswain Benna Cheung and rowers Ashley Maroney, Emily Reynolds, Rachel Ebner, Erin Kelly, Emma Einhorn, Andrea Hoey, Beth Young and Elizabeth Short.

The Maroon and White finished fifth in the second varsity eight, fourth in the varsity four, 12th in the first lightweight eight, ninth in the first novice eight and the second lightweight eight didn't qualify for either the grand or petite final.

The varsity quad and the novice four events were cancelled due to unfavorable weather conditions on Saturday. Dietz recalled that the competitors had to go through five inches of mud because it was raining so much. Sunday was much clearer to fit in final races that were postponed.

DNA tests find no matches

By Tim Whitmire
Associated Press

DURHAM, N.C. – DNA testing failed to connect any members of the Duke University lacrosse team to the alleged rape of a stripper, attorneys for the athletes said yesterday.

Citing DNA test results delivered by the state crime lab to police and prosecutors a few hours earlier, the attorneys said the test results prove their clients did not sexually assault and beat a stripper hired to perform at a March 13 team party.

No charges have been filed in the case.

"No DNA material from any young man was present on the body of this complaining woman," said defense attorney Wade Smith.

The alleged victim, a 27-year-old student at a nearby college, told police she and another woman were hired to dance at the party. The woman told police that three men at the party dragged her into a bathroom, choked her, raped her and sodomized her.

Authorities ordered 46 of the 47 players on Duke's lacrosse team to submit DNA samples to investigators. Because the woman said her attackers were white, the team's sole black player was not tested.

District Attorney Mike Nifong stopped speaking with reporters last week after initially talking openly about the case, including stating publicly that he was confident a crime occurred. He went on to say he would have other evidence to make his case should the DNA analysis prove inconclusive or fail to match a member of the team.

Smith said Nifong now has the evidence needed to change his mind.

"He doesn't have to do it," Smith said of filing charges. "He is a man with discretion. He doesn't have to do it, and we hope that he won't."

Nifong's assistant said earlier yesterday the prosecutor would not comment on the findings. North Carolina Central University, where the alleged victim is a student, said after the results were released that the prosecutor would appear at a campus forum today to discuss the case.

Attorney Joe Cheshire, who represents one of the team's captains, said the report indicated authorities took DNA samples from all over the alleged victim's body, including under her fingernails, and from her possessions, such as her cell phone and her clothes.

"They swabbed about every place they could possibly swab from her, in which there could be any DNA," he said.

Cheshire said even if the alleged attackers used a condom, it's likely there would have been some DNA evidence found suggesting an assault took place. He said in this case, the report states there was no DNA on her to indicate that she had sex of any type recently.

"The experts will tell you that if there was a condom used they would still be able to pick up DNA, latex, lubricant and all other types of things to show that – and that's not here," Cheshire said.

Stan Goldman, who teaches criminal law, evidence and criminal procedure at Loyola Law School in Los Angeles, said the DNA results don't mean that Nifong can't go forward with the case – but the test results make a successful prosecution much harder.

"Isn't the absence of DNA evidence, given the way the victim has described the crime, in and of itself almost enough to raise a reasonable doubt?" he said. "That's all the defense has to do."

Robert Archer, whose son, Breck, is a member of the lacrosse team, said the test results only confirmed for parents what they already knew.

"I know the kids on the team and I know they're innocent," said Archer, of East Quogue, N.Y.

Ortiz extends contract four years

By Howard Ulman
Associated Press

BOSTON – Boston Red Sox slugger David Ortiz agreed to a four-year contract extension yesterday, just five months after finishing runner-up for the American League MVP award.

The lefty designated hitter was in the last year of a three-year deal he signed in May 2004 when he could have become a free agent after that season. That contract also included a team option of $7.75 million for 2007.

It paid him $4.6 million in 2004 and $5.25 million in 2005. He had been scheduled to make $6.5 million this year.

"I want to finish my career as a Red Sox player," Ortiz said at a news conference at Fenway Park. "I'm going to be around for a while. I'm pretty sure New England is going to take this as good news."

The new deal includes an option for 2011 for Ortiz, the AL leader with 148 RBIs last year. Since joining the team in 2003 as a free agent from the Minnesota Twins, Ortiz, 30, and Manny Ramirez have developed into perhaps baseball's top power duo.

They combined for 68 homers in 2003, 84 in 2004 and 92 in 2005, when Ortiz's career-best 47 were one less than the AL high of Alex Rodriguez of the New York Yankees. Ortiz and Ramirez became the first teammates in major league history to each have 40 homers and 40 doubles in one season in 2004. Last year, they totaled 292 RBIs.

Ortiz is one of Boston's clubhouse leaders, smiling and joking with teammates. He also is one of baseball's top clutch hitters, leading the league last year with 21 game-winning RBIs, while 19 of his homers gave the Red Sox a tie or the lead.

In their first six games this season, five of them wins, Ortiz has one homer, four RBIs and a .292 batting average. They had yesterday off before today's home opener against the Toronto Blue Jays.

Since joining the Red Sox, Ortiz has been the most productive addition at the plate since John Henry became owner in 2002 and Theo Epstein took over as general manager in 2003.

Ortiz was fifth in the AL MVP voting in 2003 and fourth in 2004.

See ORTIZ on page 6

New England's Largest College Daily · Est. 1890

The Daily Collegian

Wednesday, April 12, 2006 www.dailycollegian.com Volume CXVI Issue: 113

Dozens of University of Massachusetts students along with a Daily Collegian photographer traveled to New York to rally for immigration legislation yesterday. Read the description of the Boston rally on Page 3.

Moussaoui jury shown gruesome photos

By Michael J. Sniffen
Associated Press

ALEXANDRIA, Va. – Jurors weighing the fate of Sept. 11 conspirator Zacarias Moussaoui were shown gruesome photographs Tuesday of bodies burned inside the Pentagon and heard from two determined military officers who crawled almost blindly through falling debris, choking smoke and searing heat to safety.

Despite Judge Leonie Brinkema's warning on Monday that too much highly emotional evidence could imperil a death sentence on appeal, prosecutors showed the most gut-wrenching evidence yet in a trial studded with horrific images. The images came from the mammoth military headquarters just a few miles from the courtroom.

In the third day of testimony from relatives of 9/11 victims, the jurors showed little emotion. One man discreetly wiped his face with a tissue, on earlier days as many as six of the 17 jurors and alternates did so.

After a three-minute bench conference to argue with the defense over what could be shown, prosecutors displayed photos of a charred body on a blue stretcher, another charred body sitting upright inside a wrecked Pentagon office, several charred bodies piled together inside another destroyed office and a small torso covered with ash on a blue stretcher. The mostly intact bodies had barely discernible facial features.

Each picture was displayed for a few seconds. Within minutes, the jury left for lunch.

Moments later with judge and jury gone, Moussaoui defiantly shouted to spectators as he was led out: "Burn all Pentagon next time."

Jurors also heard from two officers who may have been saved by their military training. Lt. Col. John Thurman, who was a major working on Army promotion policies on the Pentagon's second floor on 9/11, and Lt. Nancy McKeown, who was working on the first floor as chief weather forecaster for the Navy's top brass.

The impact of hijacked American Airlines Flight 77 hitting the Pentagon sounded like a bomb to Thurman and an earthquake to McKeown, but they both immediately dropped to the floor and rolled under their desks for cover as light fixtures, ceiling tiles, bookcases and file cabinets fell everywhere.

Both called out to co-workers and groped around in the dark as the lights in their windowless offices went off and his black smoke filled the air.

McKeown never heard any response from the two young sailors in her office; they died that day. Thurman briefly reached two of the five co-workers in his office. One woman briefly held his belt, but neither could follow him crawling through debris. Three of the co-workers died.

At one point, both Thurman and McKeown thought they would die and that thought angered them.

Having crawled to one door only to find fire on the other side and seeing no easy way to reach the door on the opposite side of the room, Thurman felt he needed a nap. "That's when it hit me. I'm going to die," he testified, "and I got very angry. Angry that terrorists would take my life on the same day my parents were getting their first grandchild" (from his sister).

"I realized I had to get out. I pushed file cabinets with all of my strength and found an opening," Thurman said.

Having crawled around her office without finding her aides, McKeown said she thought: "Is this how it's supposed to end?"

"I got angry and called out again. My insides were on fire. It was hard to breathe," she testified, but she pushed toward a glimmer of light and rescue.

See MOUSSAOUI on page 3

Prosecutors discuss Sullivan murder

By John Fenuccio
Collegian Staff

NORTHAMPTON – The weapon allegedly used in the murder of David Sullivan and the area in which it was found was a major focus during yesterday's proceedings at Hampshire Superior Court.

Prosecutor Renee Steese's examination focused on the Colt CAR-15 rifle that Bryan Johnston allegedly used to kill his friend "Sully." Continuing from the previous day's testimony, Lt. Ronald Young of the Amherst Police Department offered testimony on the rifle and the thorn-laden brush area off Old Bay Rd. where officials found the discarded weapon.

"We recruited State Police, the search and rescue unit, the Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms (ATF) agency as well as K9s in a grid-search method" Lt. Young said.

Lt. Young said of the area where the rifle was located on the morning of December 9, 2004, "I had to negotiate through very thick pricker-bushes located about 25-30 yards off Old Bay Rd."

The jury watched as the prosecution presented a DVD recording of the area taken last month. While officials testified it appeared the rifle was placed leaning against the tree where it was found rather than thrown, police observed no visible path to the weapon.

This was evidence perhaps explaining the thin red scratches former coworker Gareth Mellon testified he observed all over Johnston after Johnston called him for a ride because his car was stuck on a log.

Prosecution also presented rifle magazines (or "clips") and an ammunition reloading kit police seized during a search of Johnston's residence. The kit was described as a basic and/or starter kit as it offers an inexpensive way to construct and reload ammunition at a cheaper rate. This is a "painstakingly slow" way to reload, Lt. Young said.

The prosecution also called State Trooper John Schrijn to the witness stand to offer testimony on the rifle and on hollow-point bullets, the type of bullets used to kill Sullivan.

"The purpose [of the hollow-point bullets] is to expend as much energy as possible where it strikes, shooting fragments outward upon impact," Schrijn said. Such bullets are mainly used for hunting, he added, but can be used for other activities, such as target practice.

"This bullet is intended to kill," defense attorney Alexander Nappan said.

An autopsy confirmed the bullets used to kill Sullivan matched the 19 live cartridges found at Meadow St. as well as the bullet found off Old Bay Rd. along with the Colt CAR-15 rifle.

Schrijn also gave testimony regarding modifications and adjustments made to the rifle after it was purchased, saying, "Colt initially marketed it with a straight stock (the butt of the gun) and a 24-inch stainless steel barrel." The rifle at hand was cut to 17.5 inches to make it shorter and lighter. Other modifications included an adjustable "variable" scope and a laser device for accuracy, as well as an attached six-volt battery powered flashlight.

With extensive education and experience in evaluating fingerprint identification, the prosecution called State Trooper Chris Dolan. Dolan, who has made over 1 million fingerprint identification comparisons and roughly 1 thousand verifications throughout his career, testified that while no prints were found on the rifle upon preliminary examination, matches to Johnston were found on the stock of the rifle.

"Two of the three latent prints matched the right ring and middle finger of Bryan Johnston," Dolan said.

The difference between finger ridge-skin prints (prints involving the raised portions of skin found on the finger tips and feet that are unique to each person) and latent prints is that an actual DNA impression is left through the skin's pores on something touched, Dolan said.

While steroids weren't discussed, prosecutor Steese did show the jury a pouch found during a search of Johnston's residence that included syringes used for injecting steroids. While defense attorney Nappan has made it clear Johnston murdered David Sullivan, it will be up to the 16 member jury to deliberate over the defense's insanity plea.

Romney will sign health bill, but without employer assessment

By Glen Johnson
Associated Press

BOSTON – The Faneuil Hall setting will denote history, and a crowd of invited guests will convey importance, but Wednesday's signing ceremony for the state's new health care bill will contain one off-note.

Gov. Mitt Romney is expected to veto or significantly alter a fee proposed for businesses that do not provide insurance.

At times the $295-per-worker assessment was portrayed as a deal-breaker in sensitive legislative negotiations over what could become a model for universal health care across the country. It was something insisted upon by House Speaker Salvatore DiMasi but opposed by Romney and Senate President Robert Travaglini.

In the end, DiMasi and Travaglini compromised and agreed to the fee, but the legislation was crafted as a budget bill, giving the governor line-item veto power over its contents. In an interview Tuesday, Romney made it clear he will try to eliminate the fee, either through a veto itself or modified language sent back to the Legislature.

Both are sure to be overridden by the heavily Democratic House and Senate, a future moment of discord that will stand in stark contrast to the otherwise harmonious ceremony Wednesday.

"It's a very small feature of this bill. It's a very insignificant and unnecessary and, in some respects, counterproductive element of this bill," Romney told The Associated Press. "It applies to a tiny number of employers, and it raises a very small amount of money relative to the scale of this entire proposal. So I don't think it's necessary."

Both Travaglini and DiMasi were not immediately available for comment Tuesday, but both are planning to join Romney at the signing ceremony. There will be three tiers of tickets: "Special VIP," "Special Guest" and "General Admission."

The importance of the ceremony, whose every moment is being choreographed by Romney's advance office, is conveyed by slogan on the tickets: "Making History in Health Care."

Among the expected speakers are Romney, Travaglini, DiMasi and Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass.

The central purpose of the new law will be to provide health insurance to the roughly 550,000 uninsured residents in the state.

Under the state's existing health care system, employers who provide health insurance pay an additional fee of $62-per-worker to fund the pool that pays bills for treating the uninsured. Employers who do not provide insurance are labeled "free riders" because they not only save on insurance costs, but also stick others with the bill when their workers use the so-called "free-care" pool.

The new law will require adults to get insurance, and it will provide businesses with low-cost options for providing it to their workers. The $62 charge will remain for companies that insure their workers, but those who do not will be subject to the $295-per-worker charge to ensure they help support the free-care pool.

Travaglini's spokeswoman, Ann Dufresne, labeled the fee "a peg of the legislation" and said the Senate president already declared the Legislature has sufficient votes to override any veto or attempted change to the bill.

Romney initially greeted the fee with what sounded like acceptance, part of his administration's long-running effort to coax the Democratically controlled Legislature into passing a bill. Romney, a Republican, is considering running for president in 2008, and the new law would likely be the centerpiece of any campaign.

"It makes sense to expand this assessment to beyond those that just currently offer insurance," Romney said April 3, the day the bill passed the House and Senate. "It's not a tax. It's not a broad-based program."

Hours later, though, his communications director, Eric Fehrnstrom, cautioned against reading too much into the comments, saying, "He has not made any decisions about potential vetoes or areas that he might seek to change through amendment."

Administration officials now say the fee could actually discourage registration for the new health program, since some employers might consider it cheaper to pay a $295 fee rather than thousands to insure a worker.

In addition, the administration notes the bill would not apply to Wal-Mart or other companies derided for providing inadequate insurance, since it would be levied only on companies that do not insure any employees.

As important as the assessment was to DiMasi while the bill was being crafted, Romney himself scored a coup when he gained line-item veto power over the final bill.

Gay marriage foes urge lawmakers to put proposed ban on ballot

By Steve LeBlanc
Associated Press

BOSTON – Paul McMahon met Ralph Hodgdon in New York's Central Park on a May Sunday in 1955, and the couple quickly moved in together. Nearly 50 years later the two waited outside Cambridge City Hall on another May morning to become one of the first gay couples in Massachusetts to obtain a marriage certificate.

On Wednesday, McMahon and Hodgdon joined scores of activists on both sides of the contentious gay marriage issue to tell their stories to a key legislative committee.

"The energy was so great we thought we've been together so long, why not do it," said McMahon, 73, of the decision to join the crowd outside Cambridge City Hall on the day same-sex marriage became legal. "It was such a positive experience. It sounds corny, but to legalize it made it more acceptable to people who are uptight about homosexuality."

Lawmakers are gearing up to vote next month on a proposed constitutional amendment to ban same-sex unions. If approved by 50 of the state's 200 lawmakers in two consecutive legislative sessions, the question would go to voters in 2008.

The amendment, which would define marriage as the union of a man and woman, seeks to overturn the Supreme Judicial Court's landmark 2003 ruling that the Massachusetts Constitution guarantees same-sex couples the right to marriage licenses. Massachusetts is the only state to recognize gay marriage.

The Judiciary Committee is expected to recommend whether lawmakers should support or oppose the amendment when it comes May 1st before the joint meeting of the House and Senate.

Shari Worthington of Worcester urged the panel to support the proposed amendment. Worthington said gay marriage is weakening morals in Massachusetts and could lead to an inevitable loosening of sexual restraints.

"Gay marriage is simply the first volley in a longer term war when it comes to making anything goes when it comes to sexuality," Worthington said.

Gov. Mitt Romney, who is weighing a possible run for the Republican presidential nomination in 2008, also urged lawmakers to put the question on the ballot.

Romney said it would be "deeply misguided to become indifferent to what constitutes marriage, as the court and the activists who support its decision are asking us to do."

"In creating a right to same-sex marriage, the court imposed a sweeping change on our society, unsupported by history or precedent, without any attempt to consider the views of the citizens," Romney said in a letter to the committee chairmen.

Legislative leaders may opt to immediately postpone debate when they meet on May 10.

One factor in that decision is a pending lawsuit before the SJC by opponents of the proposed amendment seeking to block it from the ballot. Oral arguments are scheduled for May 4.

The lawsuit argues the state Constitution bars citizen-initiated amendments relating to "the reversal of a judicial decision." Supporters of the question say it simply defines marriage.

Supporters of the question said it's only fair to let voters decide the issue. They collected more than 147,000 certified signatures in support of the question. They needed only 65,825.

Massachusetts Family Institute President Kris Mineau, one of the leaders of the signature drive, said defining marriage as the union of a man and woman strengthens traditional Judeo-Christian values.

"Regardless of how to personally feel about the definition of marriage, the people have earned the right to vote," Mineau said.

Jim Campbell, 58, of Boston, said the chance to marry his partner Jeff Sutlin, 45, has transformed their lives. Campbell is HIV-positive and said the possibility of marriage has helped give him the strength to battle the disease.

"You have no idea what marriage has done to our community," Campbell said. "It has let us bring our heads above water. We're not afraid to hold hands in public. We are legitimate couples."

ARTS & LIVING

LATINO REGGAETON

Political message of change sparked for youth.

PAGE 6

EDITORIAL/OPINION

PREJUDICE AT UMASS

Why do some of us think a piece of cloth can tell us everything about a person?

PAGE 4

WEATHER

TODAY High 70 Mostly Sunny

TONIGHT Low 37 Showers

TOMORROW High 69 Low 42 Partly cloudy

SPORTS

MINUTEWOMEN TO FACE HUSKIES

The Minutewomen make the trip to Storrs to face their A-10 rivals.

PAGE 12

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Michael A. Busack
MANAGING EDITOR Eric Athas
BUSINESS MANAGER Nathan Chomalis
PRODUCTION MANAGER Nicholas Belanger
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Katie Huston
ADVERTISING MANAGER Kerry O'Grady
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Lauren Egasian
EDITORIAL PRODUCTION Amanda Allen
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Ian Jones
COMICS EDITOR Amanda Allen
EDITORIAL EDITOR Kristen LaCasse
NEWS EDITOR Dan O'Brien
SPORTS EDITOR Jeff Howe
CIRCULATION MANAGER Thomas Hecht
DISTRIBUTION MANAGER Nick Gleason
FINANCE MANAGER Daniel Conti
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASSISTANT ADMITTING Caren Tortorici
ASSISTANT BUSINESS Phil Smoller
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Morgan-Ann Rousseau
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Alex Butler
ASSISTANT NEWS Megan Daley
ASSISTANT NEWS Matt Belliveau
ASSISTANT SPORTS Dan Duggan
ASSISTANT SPORTS Rob Greenfield
ASSISTANT EDITORIAL Tucker Merrick

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY OWNED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS AGGIE LIFE, BECAME THE COLLEGE SCENE IN 1901, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914 AND THE TRI-WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1956. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967, THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN BROADSHEET SINCE JANUARY 1994. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL WEEKDAYS BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 3:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Ian Jones
COPY EDITOR
Meghan Murphy
PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Ginny Nichen
PRODUCTION STAFF
Chris Martin, Sean Thomas Duram

Amherst police log

Student assaulted, left with broken jaw, teeth

Wednesday April 5

5:55 p.m.

Jason Yun, 20, of 100 Blanche Avenue in Harrington Park, N.J., was arrested on charges of assault and battery. Two officers were dispatched to Worcester Dining Commons in Northeast Residential Area to respond to an ongoing domestic disturbance. It was reported that a male had struck a female. Both parties had separated, but were located and brought back together again. The male was identified as Yun, who admitted to the officers that he was in an argument with his girlfriend. Witnesses reported that he had struck her, and had pushed her through a set of doors with enough force to knock her over. He only admitted to grabbing her arm, and was placed under arrest. Yun was transported back to the station, and was bailed for a court appearance the following day.

Saturday, April 8

2:43 a.m.

Daniel Quinones, 22, of 210 Lexington Street in Boston, was arrested on charges of operating under the influence of alcohol and a marked lanes violation. His vehicle was initially stopped on University Drive for swerving over the double yellow line on the left and the fog line on the right. When the officer approached the vehicle, an odor of alcohol was detected on Quinones. His eyes also "looked glassy and bloodshot" and he reportedly slurred his speech. Quinones failed a subsequent field sobriety test, after which he was placed under arrest. He later took a breathalyzer test, which he also failed. He blew a .2019, more than twice the legal limit.

Sunday, April 9

1:31 a.m.

A student came into Health Services to report that he had been assaulted the previous night. The victim reported that he had been struck by a suspect, suffering broken teeth and a broken jaw. He said he knew the suspect, who is unknown at this time. The assault came from a verbal altercation that turned physical in Coolidge dormitory. One party wanted another to leave the room, and the latter party refused. The investigation into this case is ongoing.

8:39 p.m.

A missing person was reported in Thatcher dormitory. A concerned resident called about the missing student, and reported that the student had met an unknown person over the Internet and left to Peru. Numerous attempts were made to reach the student by housing staff and police. The mother of the student was contacted, and she was aware that her adolescent had applied to college in Peru and went to that country. The mother attempted to contact the student for further information, and required no further assistance from police.

Brendan Hall

Rumsfeld: 'Talk of US strikes on Iran are "fantasyland"'

By Loleta C. Balfour
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Defense Secretary Donald H. Rumsfeld and his top military leader on Tuesday issued their strongest rebuttal to date of recent comments by retired generals criticizing Iraq war planning and calling on Rumsfeld to resign.

In particular, Rumsfeld said he didn't recall retired Lt. Gen. Gregory Newbold raising any objections to the war planning when he was working in the Pentagon for the Joint Chiefs of Staff.

"He never raised an issue publicly or privately when he was here that I know of," said Rumsfeld. "An awful lot of people around here were not shy about giving their views. ... But in terms of why he would come up with this now, I just can't speak to that."

Rumsfeld said the criticism doesn't affect his ability to do his job.

Newbold, in Time magazine, said he was outspoken in his criticism before the war, saying the "zealots' rationale for war made no sense." From 2000 until October 2002, Newbold served as director of operations for the Joint Chiefs. The U.S. invaded Iraq in March 2003.

At least two other retired generals have raised similar concerns in recent weeks about the administration's war policies, including Gen. Anthony Zinni, former U.S. Mideast commander.

To date, President Bush has rejected calls for Rumsfeld to step down. The defense secretary has served in that job since shortly after Bush took office in 2001.

Gen. Peter Pace, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, said military leaders, during dozens of prewar meetings, laid out a number of questions and concerns about whether there were enough troops and resources for the invasion.

In the end, he said, "I was very comfortable with the prewar planning. I am comfortable with the way it was executed. And I would go back, given the same facts and figures, and reach the same conclusion."

Asked if the U.S. has the resources to fight the war in Iraq and another major conflict — such as a war in Iran — at the same time, Pace said there are about two million U.S. service members who are not in the Gulf region now.

"We have sufficient personnel, weapons, equipment, you name it, to handle any adversary that might come along," he said.

Meanwhile, a bipartisan group assessing the Bush administration's policies in Iraq said Tuesday that it would conduct an exhaustive inquiry but would not focus on "mistakes of the past."

The 10-member Iraq Study Group held its first meeting chaired by former Secretary of State James A. Baker III, a Republican, and Democrat Lee Hamilton, former vice chairman of the Sept. 11 commission.

The leaders said they planned to issue recommendations, which could include proposed troop levels, to the White House and Congress in about a year.

The group's work is an effort to examine Iraq policies "in a forward-looking way, not with handwringing in the past, not looking at mistakes of the past," Baker said.

Meanwhile, the State Department invited cameras to record the first meeting between Secretary of State Condoleezza Rice and Iraq's first full-fledged post-invasion ambassador to Washington.

Samir Shakir Mahumb Al-Sumaida'ie told Rice he is delighted to be the "first ambassador since we got rid of the regime of Saddam Hussein."

Earlier Tuesday, Gen. T. Michael Moseley, Air Force chief of staff, said the Air Force will be needed in Iraq even as ground forces begin to come out.

The Air Force will be needed to carry troops and supplies, to perform surveillance and reconnaissance, and to strike targets, he said.

"I think the Air Force will be there like we were for the no-fly zone for a long time," Moseley told defense reporters. "I don't know yet how many bases. We're looking at reducing the number of bases. We have 18 we are flying airplanes off of right now. I see that number coming down. But I don't see the air and space component leaving soon."

As the fourth year of the Iraq war begins, close to 21,000 Air Force personnel are in Iraq and Afghanistan, with the bulk in Iraq.

Chairman of the Joint Chief of Staff Gen. Peter Pace answers a reporter's question during a news conference at the Pentagon Tuesday, April 11, 2006.

SENIORS-
GOT SOMETHING TO SAY?

Leave your mark!

The Daily Collegian is currently seeking essay submissions from graduating seniors

Write a 750 word piece about the UMass experience and how its shaped you. Bring submissions to 113 campus center basement

Top 3 will be published in the graduation edition on May 15th and 16th

All entries must be received by April 21 at 4 pm
Questions? Call 545-3500

Report finds link between computers and eye problems

By Michelle Lizon
The Daily Universe (BYU)

PROVO, Utah — As finals approach, many Brigham Young University students stare at books and computer screens for more hours than usual, creating an environment not only for possible eyestrain but also for eye damage.

A strong link between eye problems and computer use may exist, according to a new report from the National Women's Health Resource Center, which examines ways to improve vision health and minimize risks for developing eye problems.

Staring at a computer for lengthy periods of time can lead to dry, itchy eyes, headaches and blurred vision, said optometrist Jeffrey Anshel, who trains other optometrists on computer-related eyestrain, in the report.

"Computer Vision Syndrome is a definite problem, and I don't think any optometrist will tell you it's not a problem," said Kristine Dunn, optometrist for the Provo (Utah) ShopKo Optical. "We see it so often."

Dunn said she sees many students come in with eye conditions they developed while at college. Most students don't realize their eye problem is related to how much time they spend not only on a computer but also reading, she said.

"People are affected by the syndrome on an individual basis," she said. "Some people are affected by spending a lot of time on computers and some are not."

Computer users tend to fix their eyes on the screen without averting them for more than a few seconds. Blinking infrequently is the main cause of computer-related eyestrain, the report stated.

Students who spend hours in front of a computer monitor may experience more eyestrain than from the time they pour over books. Anshel said according to current studies people blink about one-third as much as they usually do when they work on a computer than when they are reading a book.

"We'll often put our eyes through a marathon every day and then wonder why they're sore," said Bill Codner, an optometrist for the Orem Eye Clinic. "If someone has an eye problem it will add even more strain to their eyes. It would be like running the marathon with a backpack."

Codner said he sees more college students during crunch times, such as finals, because they are adding additional stress to their eyes.

In the report, Ilene Gipson, a scientist at the Schepens Eye Research Institute, affiliated with Harvard Medical School, said 75 percent of visual impairment problems can be prevented, primarily through lifestyle changes.

Students who spend a lot of time staring at a computer screen can take certain steps to prevent possible eye conditions from popping up in the future.

In the report, Anshel said computer users should take 20 seconds to close their eyes or look 20 feet away, for every 20 minutes they spend on the computer, which breaks up the intensive viewing habits that can cause eyestrain.

He also suggested people position the computer monitor not at eye level, but at the ideal height where a viewer can look straight ahead and see over the top of the screen.

Screens should be about an arms length away from a person's face, Codner said.

"As you halve a distance, you double the amount of focusing required of your eyes," he said. "Computer users need to back off and make sure they keep the font at a decent size."

'Burn all the Pentagon next time,' shouts Moussaoui

MOUSSAOUI from page 1

After a medically induced coma and hospital stay, Thurman said, "Today, I'm fine. ... I feel incredibly lucky; nothing fell on me. But there's guilt about getting the lucky break."

McKeown broke down describing how she took the body of one aide, Petty Officer Edward T. Earhart, to his family for a funeral. "Before turning him over, I checked to see his buttons were buttoned and his medals were straight," she said, weeping. "I stayed until he was buried and I presented the flag" to his relatives.

Now, her daughter is haunted by fear of losing her. "I must call her when I get to work and when I'm coming home," McKeown sobbed. Pentagon Police Sgt. Jose E. Rojas Jr. testified that when he and colleagues saw the second plane hit the World Trade Center on television, they rushed outside in time to see a mushroom cloud of fire over the Pentagon. Racing to the crash site, he could hear "people inside moaning, groaning and screaming" and told them to walk through the thick smoke toward his voice at a blown-out window.

He grabbed one man by the hands. But "he slipped back into the building because the skin came off his hands into my hands," Rojas testified. He had to reach in and dig his hands into the man's hands and pull him out while the man was screaming in pain. Rojas and his colleagues pulled nine people out, all but one badly burned woman survived.

Late in the day, the jury heard brief calls to air traffic control from the cockpit of United Flight 93, which ultimately crashed in a Pennsylvania field after passengers attempted to retake the plane. During the two calls, which came as the hijacking began at 9:28 a.m., a voice was heard saying: "Mayday! Mayday! Get out of here!"

Moussaoui pleaded guilty last year to conspiring with al-Qaida to fly planes into U.S. buildings. A week ago, the jurors ruled him eligible for the death penalty even though he was in jail in Minnesota on 9/11. They decided that lies he told federal agents a month before the attacks led directly to at least one death that day by keeping agents from identifying and stopping some of the hijackers. Now they must decide whether he deserves execution or life in prison.

Defense lawyers say the jury should spare Moussaoui's life because of his limited role in the attacks, evidence that he is mentally ill and because execution would only fulfill his dream of martyrdom. The defense has subpoenaed would-be shoe bomber Richard Reid, serving life in Colorado after a failed try to blow up a trans-Atlantic flight in 2001. In a surprise, Moussaoui testified Reid was to help him fly a fifth plane on 9/11 into the White House.

This artist's rendering shows Assistant U.S. Attorney Robert Spencer, right, questioning New York City firefighter Juan Rivera, Zacarias Moussaoui listens during Moussaoui's sentencing trial in U.S. District Court in Alexandria, Va., Tuesday.

Thousands rally in Boston for immigration legislation

By Annie Mackin
The Daily Free Press (Boston U.)

BOSTON — Thousands rallied in Boston Common and marched to Copley Square Monday afternoon in support of immigration legislation reform as part of a nationwide day of action sponsored by the League of United Latin American Citizens.

The rally came two weeks after a bill, co-sponsored by Sen. Edward Kennedy (D-Mass.), that would ease immigration restrictions passed in the Senate Judiciary Committee. Kennedy's bill stands to receive opposition from Senate Majority Leader Bill Frist (R-Tenn.), who is seeking a proposal that would tighten rules on immigration and on immigrants who are already living here.

Standing on the band shell at Boston Common above a sea of faces and signs reading "No human is illegal" and "The pilgrims were immigrants," Councilors-At-Large Sam Yoon and Felix Arroyo spoke to the cheering crowd about their own experiences as immigrants.

"Yes, we were strangers here, but now we are part of this country and part of this land and we deserve to be here," said Yoon, who was born in South Korea.

He told the largely immigrant group, "You are all Americans, every single one of you."

Other speakers in the Commons and Copley, including Cardinal Sean O'Malley and immigrants living in the state, shared their testimony, speaking in English and Spanish among other languages.

Reverend Harmon Hamilton spoke on behalf of the Black Ministerial Alliance of Greater Boston, pledging his group's support for better working conditions and education for immigrants. Hamilton said their status should not be a barrier to employment or an invitation to exploitation.

The rally brought out various immigrant and cultural organizations, including the Boston Chinatown Residents Association and Catholic Charities Archdiocese of Boston, and Cardinal Sean O'Malley spoke at Copley Square.

Laura Medrano, a volunteer at the event, said the goal of the rally was to "tell Congress they need to reach a decision" on immigration laws because "millions of people are in limbo."

Local artist Gloria Carrige, who handed out the words to protest chants, said she attended the rally in support of her friends and family working illegally in the country. An American citizen, Carrige said awareness of the immigrants' plight is important.

"We are here, we are not lazy, we're very hardworking," she said, noting that many immigrants work two or three jobs. "All we want is to work in a decent way like everybody else."

Carrige said she plans to exhibit her photos from Monday's rally in early May.

"I'm supporting this 100 percent, even if we have to go to the White House, even if they put me in jail," Carrige said.

Even with the large crowds rallying in support of immigration reform, the only noticeable opposition to the event came from a plane flying over Boston Common that trailed a banner reading, "Enforce immigration laws. No amnesty."

Aside from raising awareness to immigration laws, the rally brought attention to immigrant culture. Matt Steele, an English-as-a-second-language teacher, said immigrants should integrate into their communities in order to provide the arts, music and the culture with a "continuous source of renewal that's taken for granted by a lot of Americans."

As she waited at Copley Square for the marching protesters to arrive, Medrano estimated more than 7,000 people participated in the rally.

"We haven't seen marches of this magnitude in a long time," she said. "We're communicating that something needs to be done."

Rallies were held from Los Angeles to Boston in more than 100 cities, with about 100,000 people rallying in New York City, 50,000 in Phoenix and 40,000 in Atlanta.

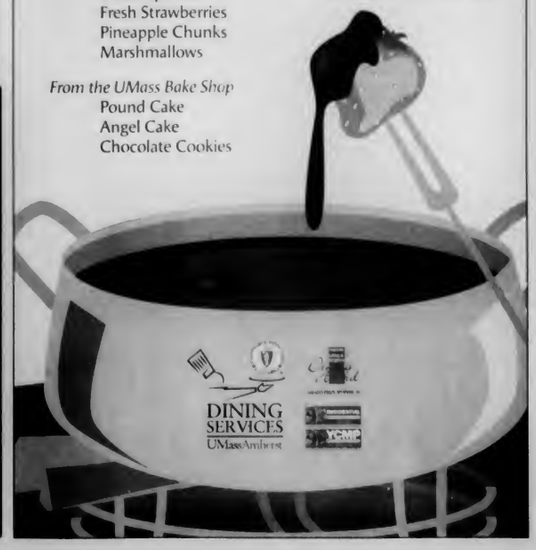
EAST HEAVEN HOT TUBS

STUDENT DISCOUNT!

L. SCHNALL '84

$15 OFF ANY HOT TUB RENTAL FOR TWO
(one discount per rental)
Student Discount only good Mon-Thurs or any day after 11pm
Weekdays 11- Midnight Weekends 11 - 1am
413-587-0000 • 33 West St. Northampton • www.eastheaven.com

TAVERN
est. 03
On The Hill
NOW ACCEPTING RESERVATIONS FOR GRADUATION
Open for Dinner 7 Nights a Week
Reservations Recommended
413 · 493 · 1700
100 Mountain Road · Easthampton, MA



Dip into Chocolate for the Health of it!

Thursday, April 13, 2006
In All DCs from 5-8 pm

*Indulge with Chocolate Fondue
Pretzel Rods
Dried Apricots
Fresh Strawberries
Pineapple Chunks
Marshmallows

From the UMass Bake Shop
Pound Cake
Angel Cake
Chocolate Cookies

A daily bar-sized indulgence of antioxidant-rich dark chocolate could reduce blood pressure and improve insulin resistance according a recent study at the University of L'Aquila in Italy.*

DINING SERVICES
UMassAmherst

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

EDITORIAL OPINION

"I may not agree with what you say, but I will defend to the death your right to say it." Voltaire

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 12, 2006

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Bad UMass food and bigotry

Michael Toomey

At this juncture, the most storied aspects of the University of Massachusetts are a decent basketball team and the sordid Southwest living area. In my estimation, basketball is somewhat fun to play, but watching sports isn't necessarily my thing. As for Southwest, well, the spattering of developmentally challenged doofuses on my floor in [insert Northeast dorm name here] are significantly irksome to me; I feel that thousands of this ilk would probably be too much for me to handle.

So, in consideration of my own well-being, I tend to keep my distance from the area; the closest I come is to the apparent giver of brawn, destroyer of brain, Boyden. But I digress. In the attendance of an event at Curry Hicks, a friend and I skipped the exorbitance of the concession stand and decided we'd get a nice YCMP-covered meal at the nearby Hampshire Dining Commons. Little did we know this fateful venture would enlighten to us to the nature of this place, best synopsized in colloquial jive-talk, the most readily printable being, "Southwest sucks."

Firstly, the most innocuous observation could probably tie into the direr, incriminating ones, by the anguishing effect it causes. Southwest dining is punishment nearing cruel and unusual designation. While the motley pairing of exposed construction and dim, narrow hallways (not unlike ones in the haunted house in Spooky World) provide for an apocalyptic setting for tea and biscuits, the situation only worsened.

By the time we reached the torture chamber that is the main food area, we realized we were no longer in the cozy confines of the vegetarian-friendly Worcester DC, but in one of the seven realms of hell. With a gestalt of an internment camp, half of the lukewarm food was still breakfast fare, at 4:30 Sunday afternoon.

Not necessarily implying a student body virtue that universities cherish, but still the fed were not initially the problem. A student employee lied to our faces about the syrup situation, dragging his feet, pouting in protest of the college experience's apparent inclusion of annoyances such as work, learning and maturation past the level of begrudged pre-teen at detention.

But perhaps the bad decorating scheme put everyone in a funk, because I've never seen fewer smiles amidst a bunch of teenagers in Abercrombie. I almost figured that something dumb happened to someone dumb on the Real World, or on another dumb show. Or maybe a liter of vodka doesn't seem as fun as it did last night.

Moving on, we get our nearly unpalatable food, on plastic plates no less (they spare no expense on the cutlery, either) and sit down in the no less depressing seating arrangements.

Just an interesting historical tidbit; Brian Warner (a.k.a. Marilyn Manson) was hanging out around UMass around the time he recorded his album "Mechanical Animals," and the title of its first song seemed pretty representative of this cafeteria. (No, not "Fundamentally Loathsome," although that would have certainly been applicable.)

At any rate, my friend and I sat down, and now is the time to tell y'all that my buddy is a little Muslim girl who wears her hijab ubiquitously (the shawl Islamic women fix over their hair). Mind you, walking with her on other parts of the campus, I'm never reminded by uncouth stares and whispers of those around us that she's a Muslim.

They went on to say that the uneasiness they seem to evoke from the myriad whites here is excruciatingly palpable in classes, eating and at parties (where alcohol seems to bring out come-ons soaked in white supremacy and scotch).

From the watchful eyes that fixed on her, so suspicious eating pancakes with a glass of milk, I can assume that our fair-haired lunch mates were fearful that in her rumpled North Face fleece she packed heavy explosives, or were considering notifying the FBI that a critical informant to Osama is chowing down at UMass.

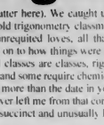
As we left this intrusive rudeness that fixed on us for the 20 minutes we suffered there, we bid farewell by quietly speaking disbelief that such a handsome guy would have involved himself in the axis of evil I remembered a couple weeks ago.

A little while back, I had dinner at the then-underappreciated Worcester with two Cambridge friends from high school (two black girls, to be precise, a specification that, unbeknownst to me, seems to matter here). We caught up, dished the dirt on our old trigonometry classmates, sang the lament of unrequited loves, all that good stuff, until we got on to how things were going now.

Oh, well classes are classes, right? Some are fascinating, and some require chemical stimulants to get down more than the date in your notebook. But what never left me from that conversation is a quote, very succinct and unusually humorless for our chats.

One of these girls said, I never experienced a real feeling of racism or prejudice until I got here. They went on to say that the uneasiness they seem to evoke from the myriad whites here is excruciatingly palpable in classes, eating and at parties (where alcohol seems to bring out come-ons soaked in white supremacy and scotch).

We come from Cambridge, where you've had teachers from virtually every walk of life by the time you hit sixth grade and laughed with all the colors of the rainbow way before then. So the added shock of being gawked at and asked offensive questions about being black is pretty substantial to these girls. They report that it's a little better outside their residence area, and guess where that happens to be?



I don't know the demographics, but I know the gist of them. This is a white school by and large. Additionally, this is a white country by some 80-something percent. With those kinds of numbers, white people are going to be insulated, in a big way. Thank the Lord for great institutions like MTV and the Oscars, showing us that Snoop Dogg is great for overstated hilarity, and that Jamie Foxx is a great actor, better yet, a great black actor.

When you don't wait in line at the grocery store with other races, when you don't make small talk on the bus with someone with ancestry miles and miles away from yours, minorities become a novelty, either endearing or terrifying. This is white America's house, probably only slightly worse in Southwest because of its tendency to boast higher per capita hours watching reality shows and classes missed in wicked Tuesday hangovers.

The funniest bit about all this is that I keep reading that UMass wants some cosmetic surgery on its boozy reputation, and they're wracking their administrative brains trying to decide what should be tucked. I have this feeling that a simple hopping off to Southwest would result in the skyrocketing of average schoolwide GPA, as well as a feeling of its gargantuan crime records. But maybe that spaghetti was just the pits.

Michael Toomey is a Collegian columnist.

Fight the war on tourism

Andrew Freeman

As many of you librul, ivory-tower academees seem to have forgotten, with your talk of peace and no WMDs, on September the 11th, our country was attacked. The great and courageous President George Dubya Bush decided to fight back, for once, unlike Democratic surrender monkeys like Franklin Delano Roosevelt and Lyndon Johnson. He invaded Afghanistan and Iraq, and those nations have been riproaring on the inevitable, debris-strewn, torture-laden yellow brick road to democracy ever since.

Some people think that this whole war on terrorism thing is overblown. But they're just spineless, weasel loving, French food-eating, intellectual reading, unpatriotic, treason-belching brats. Not only should we have invaded Iraq and Afghanistan, but we should invade other Muslim countries, too. How else will our children learn geography, let alone hard to pronounce words like Jihad and Hijab?

But seriously, there's another problem plaguing our nation, besides all these good for nothing liberals who don't realize that Saddam Hussein himself was the weapon of mass destruction.

Guns don't hurt people — tyrannous dictators do. Few people recognize this better than Dick Cheney, that steady-handed marksman who is as good at toppling dictators and hunting terrorists as he is at hitting elusive, unpatriotic quails. To return to my point, the problem is that these terrorists are still around, and they don't seem frightened off.

So where do terrorists really come from? To find out, I, being an upstanding patriotic citizen, consulted the Holy Trinity: God the father, Bush the son, and Cheney, the Halliburton ghost.

So where do terrorists really come from? To find out, I, being an upstanding patriotic citizen, consulted the Holy Trinity: God the father, Bush the son, and Cheney, the Halliburton ghost. What their gospel told me, aside from God's silly pronouncements about not killing and turning the other cheek, was that the terrorists hate freedom-loving America because it is so free that it loves freedom, not to mention freedom fries.

That made perfect sense: the insurgents in Iraq are fighting for freedom from our freedoms, because they don't recognize that our freedoms are better, because we love freedom. And anyone who disagrees with this is a liberal terrorist stooge that should be locked up in Guantanamo Bay, because he doesn't appreciate his freedoms.

Still, maybe there's a deeper cause of terrorism than freedom hating. I turned on my freedom-loving brain, and, in between my unfocused thoughts on how much I hate liberals, it occurred to me that it was all Bill Clinton's fault. While this is the case for everything bad and freedom hating, it also seemed an insufficient reason. Finally, after what seemed an eternity of reasoned thought, I realized what the cause was.

Terrorists hate America because of its freedoms — but how did they find out about those freedoms? September the 11th happened before we decided to hitch up this freedom wagon to the freedom spreading pony of the U.S. military. Clearly some of these freedom-haters had actually seen our freedoms in action.

Sure enough, the Internet revealed the answer. According to The Guardian Unlimited, Sayyid Qutb, a member of an Islamic terrorist organization, the Muslim Brotherhood, visited the United States in 1948 to study in Colorado. Over two and a half years, he witnessed American culture and despised it, noting how churches were "entertainment centers and sexual playgrounds." He decried women's independence, discrimination against blacks but, most of all, the separation of church and state. Qutb's writings came to influence Usama Bin Laden and other Islamic fundamentalists. Other terrorists, such as hijacker Mohammed Atta, also lived in Western countries.

Since America's freedoms are the cause of terrorism, we need to prevent our enemies from seeing them, but how do we tell who the enemy is? We can't, because Islamic terrorists aren't going to identify themselves — they could be anyone, especially librals. Therefore, the only solution is to keep anyone untrustworthy from seeing our precious freedoms. To keep out these enemies, we need a new struggle — a war on tourism.

The goal of the war on tourism would be to keep out anyone who might be a terrorist. Proposals like the 700-mile, $2.2 billion barrier across Mexico are a good, freedom-loving start. But tourists might come across from the People's Republic of Canada, in from the sea or to study in college, as Qutb did, presenting untold dangers.

All these options must be closed off. Essential icons of freedom, like the Statue of Liberty, must be protected from prying eyes, not to mention flash photography. We must smoke the tourists out of their motels. We must defeat the Axis of Emigration. We need a Freedom Act (Right Radical Evil Emigrants and Defend Our Motherland) that suspends the Constitution in cases of tourism, terrorism or voting for Democrats.

Ultimately, the war on tourism will require more than your civil rights, tax dollars and voting Republican. It will require the dedication of everyone to preserve our freedoms, because giving up our freedoms in the name of freedom is what freedom is all about.

[The preceding is a work of satire. It does not reflect the views of the author, or any reasonable person, for that matter.]

Andrew Freeman is a Collegian columnist.

Expanding your perception

World Perspectives
Asif Khan

After my two-week road trip, I made my way to Argentina's western neighbor, Chile. I've been spending a couple of days in the capital Santiago, and I'm leaving for the coastal towns in the north today. I have to return to Argentina this weekend because, unfortunately, I cannot really afford to travel up to Colombia, which is something I really wanted to do, especially after reading Gabriel Garcia-Marquez's autobiography "Living to Tell the Tale," which I would recommend highly. Of course, Shakira also sways your opinion towards her country when trying to select where to travel to next.

Aside from the obvious reasons to travel, like seeing sights, meeting new people, eating different food and shopping, one of my favorite things is the wealth of knowledge you learn firsthand and the conversations that you have. One's mind opens incessantly after meeting people from all over the world — from countries you might have just seen on a globe and not had much information about, or better still, countries that you have studied or learned about and have not had a very favorable opinion about.

I love getting challenged, especially in political debates, because that is what I have studied and am very interested in. Traveling around the south of Argentina and Chile, I met a lot of young Israeli travelers, and we had some great talks and exchanged a lot of ideas and thoughts that benefited us a great deal. They have made me think about the Israeli-Palestinian issue very differently and with a more open mind.

No matter how open-minded one perceives him or herself to be, it just takes one conversation in a hostel patio somewhere with some good Chilean wine to let you know that there is always room for more ideas and different perceptions. The same happened to these other travelers. Most of them had never talked to a Muslim before, even though Muslims and Arabs constitute a significant part of their population. The atmosphere is not one of coexistence and mutual understanding.

With so many conflicts in this world taking place right now and others to come, the biggest thing the world's citizens need urgently is mutual exchanges of information and ideas.

In a neutral situation we all got along very well and had some very good times together and some heated debates, in which we all saw each other's viewpoints and added to our own.

With so many conflicts in this world taking place right now and others to come, the biggest thing the world's citizens need urgently is mutual exchanges of information and ideas, just to get to know each other so the dehumanization can end. The most dangerous phenomenon is when two sides or countries stop talking, and thus begin to invent or imagine false ideas about one another, which are only confirmed and reconfirmed because the other side is not present to contradict and correct them.

We can see a similar phenomenon happening between the United States and Iran currently because of the dearth of diplomatic relations and almost no positive exchange between U.S. Americans and Iranians, especially the younger communities. They view each other as their governments present them and forget that at the end of it all they are just human beings trying to get by and enjoy life along the way.

Many countries that were formerly at odds with each other have now installed many measures in which young people meet each other and travel and work together to lay the foundation for a better future. It has worked wonders because the countries are no longer sending troops to their borders or rallying against each other at the United Nations.

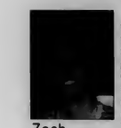
Greece and Turkey; Pakistan and India; and more recently Israel and Palestine with the forming of Faculty for Israeli-Palestinian Peace have utilized methods of mutual intellectual exchanges between students and professors and have had fantastic results.

So, the next time you are traveling, instead of staying in the American clique, make an effort to talk to someone who comes from somewhere else you have not heard of or who will be the first person from that country that you have met. You will be surprised how much of an education you will get. This does not go only for international travel but also in our colleges and universities where there are groups of people who have probably never talked to each other, ever.

Look around at your group of friends next time you are all hanging out, and notice how much you have in common with most of them and what sets you apart. If the former is much higher than the latter, then maybe it is time to diversify a little bit. There are a lot of different people out there, and sometimes becoming friends with someone just because they also play football or come from the same town is just not a good enough reason.

Asif Khan is a World Perspectives columnist who is currently abroad in Buenos Aires, Argentina.

Answer our Poll!



dailycollegian.com

Q. What did you think of the Taste of UMass?

a. It was FANTABULOUS!
b. I was only there for the cheerleaders.
c. The food was good, but it was waaaay too crowded.
d. The food was bad, the eating contests were pathetic and I will never go again.
e. I did not care. I ate off-campus.

America's boy crisis

Zach Oelschlegel

When I went with my church to Biloxi to clean up after Katrina this Spring Break, I was one of five men on a trip of 24. Other groups on campus going to the Gulf to clean encountered the same problem; groups of 13 with two men, groups of 50 and 35 of them women — you get the idea. The ladies on my trip would every so often wonder aloud, "Where are all the men?"

It's an understandable question. It's confusing, as a male, seeing attractive women abound and no men up to the task of dating them. It's confusing looking back at your high school and seeing every class president and vice looking like the next Hilary Clinton or Condoleezza Rice, with the boys sitting idle, passively waiting. It's still confusing when reports come out about affirmative action at universities for males, who now make up a meager 44 percent of total college students, according to a recent Newsweek study entitled "The Trouble with Boys." What is going on here?

I could take this article in a number of directions, pointing to the absurd amount of deadbeat dads out there who haven't a clue on how to teach their boys to be men, leaving it to mothers who haven't an idea where to begin since they were born women. Much of the problem boils down to what society teaches men to be: nice, feminized guys.

All those characteristics boys are notorious for, like aggression and violence, are bottled up. Christina Hoff Sommers lamented over the fallout of Columbine in her book "The War Against Boys," where community leaders blamed the tragedy on the inherently aggressive nature of boys, essentially using terrible logic summed up in the idea that since male aggression has ended up in awful things, like stabbings and school shootings, it's all bad. The result is the state of males today: passive, passionless, young men with no idea of who they are or what purpose they serve. It's what you get when you try and force femininity on masculine creatures.

Newsweek's recent report encapsulated this problem in America's schools, where young girls are vastly outperforming their male counterparts. Things which previously allowed a chance for boys to excel in releasing aggression and moving around, like recess and physical education, have been deemphasized, and in many cases, even completely cut out, with the downward slope of male performance continuing. Be a first grade teacher for a day and it will be no secret which half of the room has trouble sitting still, or not speaking out of turn. Boys are taught from a young age that what causes these tendencies aren't good for society.

Much of the problem problem boils down to what society teaches men to be: nice, feminized guys.

Things cast off in the '70s as a result of socialization are more often being shown by science as the ways in which boys and girls learn differently because their brains are each configured in their own way. With the way education shows a preference to the strengths of young girls while rolling its eyes at more boyish traits, it's no wonder how male dropout rates are much higher than girls, or test scores significantly lower, or how boys are twice as likely as girls to be placed in special education classes or be diagnosed with a learning disorder of some kind.

The problem gets worse in the middle school years, when girls develop faster than the boys do, and into high school, where male competitiveness prevents teenage boys from showing weakness by asking for help. Society's demand for structured class time and standardized tests, even at the first grade level, only exacerbate the problem by telling boys there's something wrong with them when they get outperformed.

As young women were oppressed a century ago and pegged as less intelligent than men, we cannot think this is just proof of female superiority in academics. The system isn't right, and when alternatives are tried, like mentor systems, or gender-based separation of classrooms, the numbers have looked much better. You can try as hard as you want, but there's no denying the fact that boys and girls think, learn and act much differently from each other, no matter the circumstances.

Till our schools change, we can continue to see this disparity in the results. Women can keep wondering where all the real men reside, and I'll scoff and tell them the same thing others are saying: You taught and told them to act like women.

After all, you can try to teach a lizard to walk like a duck and talk like one, but you'll still end up with the obvious result.

Zach Oelschlegel is a Collegian columnist.

The crash test known as protest

Luke Bloomfield

France is once again affirming its singularity. Prime Minister Dominique de Villepin, at the risk of being pushed out of his job after introducing the CPE, a legislation that allows employers to fire workers under the age of 26 without cause before two years of employment, faced a storm of protests that threatened to escalate to "May '68" levels.

Last week, according to MSNBC, more than an estimated 700,000 people filled the streets of Paris, and somewhere between 1 and 3 million people followed suit in the provinces. The Washington Post reported that nationwide strikes paralyzed the country: Paris's metro system functioned at less than 50 percent and the SNCF halted most train travel for the day; post offices, banks and telecommunication networks shut down. It was the largest demonstration against Villepin's labor act yet.

Although Villepin's intention was to solve France's large unemployment situation, the cries of dissent against the CPE were so violent and widespread that the prime minister himself made a flat-out admission a few days ago that the law was not well thought out, a highly unusual move by any politician. The significance of this statement should not be ignored in America, where even here the media has been vigilant.

To what end does such media coverage lend itself? Frankly, these protests had not rendered anything positive, except maybe the apology from the prime minister, but nothing tangible.

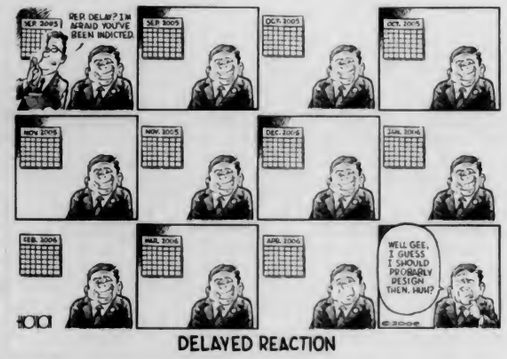
However, after Chirac had signed the bill into law amid and despite the furious cries of the French people, the president of the republic now said the law will be replaced by another, and thus something has emerged from the weeks of demonstrations and strikes, something valuable and lasting: the affirmation of democracy, that over-tooted and underemployed concept.

Permit me to rehearse an ideology that steadily runs with the popular current of my generation. I strongly believe that the social fabric of a country only becomes more durable when it is tested against the opposing elements. If policy, whether good or bad, is passed on any level without first being delivered to the opposition to test its substance, the society the policy affects will settle itself into a lackadaisical attitude towards progression; a certain laisser-faire attitude that results in cultural stagnation, or worse, regression.

I strongly believe that the social fabric of a country only becomes more durable when it is tested against the opposing elements.

In other words, rather than designing a car and sending it straight to the dealers without knowing how it will perform on the road, especially if it's liable to crush like a beer can after the first collision, first ensure that it is suitable for the road by administering a crash test. We must administer the crash test known as protest.

In a sense, the French have championed the concept of protest for protest's sake. I don't mean to say that they protest without cause — the CPE must be challenged — but rather, the act itself of protesting, whether against a bad labor policy, the hunting of wolves in remote Siberia or merely for more coffee dispensers in universities, is itself intrinsically beneficial to the society. It's the drawing board on which discussion (the permissibility of which is arguably the foundation of democracy) drafts progression.



So protest, even if it means merely standing outside the Textbook Annex and boycotting the store (it sends spies to see what books professors have ordered to the local bookstores, then orders the same books itself, effectively drawing business away from the local stores as students are more inclined to walk to the Annex rather than to town if they know they can find their books there).

Or even better, protest the presence of Army recruitment officers who have free access to the University. When Bush invades Iran after the U.N. Security Council fails to comfort America's paranoia, requiring more people to die for his war, we, the students, will be targeted most aggressively. Protest that, unless your palate extends itself to Iranian missiles.

Protest for protest's sake. The only way the power remains checked is by claiming the rights democracy has to offer. Assemble, demonstrate, if for nothing else than out of principle. It's our job to remind the institution what democracy is, a term in which I struggle to find any tangible meaning these days.

Crawling to class in pajamas, then returning to the Xbox will not support the weight of progression. Twenty thousand people with their fists in the air will certainly raise eyebrows, incite discussion and keep the power checked, if only to merely maintain the integrity of the institution. Protest for protest's sake. Call me naïve and romantic if you will, but remember that right now in France this very ideology has manifested and you can be sure the power will think twice before it writes more legislation into law without a referendum.

Luke Bloomfield is a UMass student.

DELAYED REACTION

The vibrancy of our democracy

World Perspectives
Ben Duffy

On January 20, 2005, President George W. Bush took the oath of office and began his second term as president. Crashing the inauguration were legions of enraged citizens from across the left side of the political spectrum. Documentary filmmaker Evan Coyne Maloney was there to interview the malcontents.

As you might have expected, the word fascism seemed to be on all of their lips. Bush is a fascist, Carl Rove is a fascist, and so on. When the protestors spoke, you got the feeling that they really believed what they were saying, and weren't just using the word for maximum shock value.

The fact that some Americans feel uncomfortable voicing their opinions at the airport proves that the United States has passed the point of no return. Fascism rules the land.

I guess that's what bothers me so much about the left. They claim to cherish the right to disagree, which is fine. I cherish that right as well, but they want me to love them for it. They want me to hug them and tell them what great people they are, tell them that the work they're doing for so-called peace and justice is beyond reproach.

Sorry, but the right to disagree does not mean that I have to like you for it. Quite frankly, I don't like them, and the feeling is mutual. Is that the mark of fascism? To the contrary, it demonstrates the vibrancy of our democracy.

I'm not a big fan of the anti-war crowd. Do they have a right to voice their opinions? Absolutely, and I have a right to believe that their opinions are ignorant, illogical, venomous, hypocritical, anti-soldier and anti-American. I have a right to believe that the anti-war crowd encourages the terrorists in Iraq, and that this war would have been over a long time ago if the left hadn't broadcasted weakness and lack of resolve to the enemy in Iraq.

I too feel uncomfortable voicing my opinions on a wide range of issues. Thankfully, I have the courage of my convictions, so I normally don't allow myself to be intimidated into silence. Students who have been in classes with me probably remember me as the guy in the lecture hall who always had his hand up, ready to get into a debate with the professor.

Yeah, that's me. Ask me what I think about homosexuality, race relations, abortion or the Iraq war, and I will tell you. Some of my opinions garner snarling and disapproval in the wider world. Almost all of them garner snarling and disapproval in the tiny, self-important bubble of Amherst.

I have a right to believe that the anti-war crowd encourages the terrorists in Iraq, and that this war would have been over a long time ago if the left hadn't broadcasted weakness and lack of resolve to the enemy in Iraq.

I'll never forget the glorious day of November 3, 2004. John Kerry had conceded the election to George W. Bush, and Bush became the first president since his father to win a popular majority of the vote. The UMass campus was in mourning, and you can bet I was there to rub salt in the wound. Wearing a T-shirt with the face of President Bush and the words "George is my Homeboy," I went about my day in the usual fashion.

My shirt did not go over well, which was all part of the plan. I was trying to make some of these self-righteous liberals feel as uncomfortable as I had felt throughout the most heated election year of my lifetime. 2004 was not a good year to be a Republican in Amherst. Actually, no year is a good year to be a Republican in Amherst, but 2004 was particularly bad.

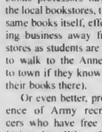
Throughout the day, I got a lot of dirty looks and snide comments. At the DC, one girl sank my shirt and reacted by calling out, if you like Bush so much, why don't you just go join the Army?" Funny, I already did that, actually. I served my four years, and was stop-lossed for an additional four months and two days. I did the whole Iraq thing, and I have the documents to prove it. Anything else?

Walking on campus that evening, one big guy saw my shirt and yelled out, "George Bush is an a I snickered; this sort of sore loser reaction was exactly what I was trying to elicit.

According to the protestors, a fascist society is one in which people feel uncomfortable speaking their minds. That definition of the word is absolutely ludicrous, and it cheapens the word fascist. So is Amherst a fascist community? After all, I frequently feel uncomfortable voicing my opinion, and have actually been physically threatened for those opinions. So I guess it must be.

I'm being facetious. Amherst is beset with small-mindedness, intolerance and dogmatic groupthink, but it is not a fascist entity. Neither is the nation as a whole. I'm sorry if some people feel uncomfortable talking about their feelings at the airport, but that's how things work in a democracy. Just as I was free to wear my opinion on my T-shirt, others were free to shoot me dirty looks because they don't like my opinion. It's not fascism, but rather the complete opposite.

Ben Duffy is a World Perspectives columnist who is currently abroad in Germany.



SENIORS!!

The Daily Collegian is currently seeking essay submissions from graduating seniors.

Write a 750 word piece about the UMASS EXPERIENCE
and how it has shaped you. Bring submissions to 113 campus center basement, or send them to editorial@dailycollegian.com.

The top 3 essays will be published in the graduation edition on May 15th and 16th.

Find evidence before changing the law

John Gruenenfelder

The "save the children" crowd seems to have an inexhaustible source of energy with which to combat society's most troublesome non-problems. Recently, this crusade has been directed frequently at violence in video games. The basic argument is that the violent video games encourage violent behavior in young people, but often there is little to no evidence to support such claims.

As someone who plays his fair share of video games, I'm hardly an impartial outsider. That said, I am one of the approximately 100 percent (give or take a few deranged people) of gamers who do not commit violent acts. Unfortunately, as this campaign moves past the whining stage and towards actual legislation, it becomes far more pressing.

The sad part of this whole debate is it is not new at all: only the particular form of media is new. Before video games it was (and sometimes still is) television, rap music, Dungeons & Dragons and others. But video games have not become more violent as time has passed. They have, however, become more realistic. Apparently, blasting tanks in "Battlezone" in the '80s was OK violence, whereas playing something like "Doom" is no good.

My personal preferences lean more towards strategy games like "Civilization" and old school adventure games. At the same time, I also quite enjoy "Grand Theft Auto 3" (GTA). Not everybody does, but I certainly find it fun. Now, of these two games, which is actually the more violent?

Both are quite open-ended in what they allow you to do and both are very detailed. GTA lets you commit all manners of felonious assault and murder along with a number of other slightly less criminal actions. "Civilization," on the other hand, gives you free reign over how to advance your society from antiquity on into the near future and does so in a tile based game format, not unlike chess. Along the way you can advance science and culture or go to war. Even genocide is not out of the question if you'd prefer your particular civilization to be overly aggressive.

Those troublemakers from People Against Goodness and Normalcy (P.A.G.A.N.) are at it again, trying to destroy the delicate social fabric of our society. It seems some people are still stuck in the '50s.

When viewed in that light, "Civilization" is clearly the more violent of the two games, but it is heralded as an achievement of game design and awards, and acclaim has been given to both the game and its creator. GTA, however, is vilified and held as an example of how bad a game can be. The difference is not violent content but how it is presented.

It used to be that controlling schemes like this were the sole domain of right-wing conservative groups and/or Republicans. I guess the Democrats didn't want to miss out on all the fun. Senators Clinton and Lieberman have presented the Family Entertainment Protection Act. Currently, the video game industry has a rating scheme in the form of the Entertainment Software Rating Board. Stores aren't supposed to sell games rated M (for Mature) to anybody under the age of 17. This bill would make that rule a law.

Those troublemakers from People Against Goodness and Normalcy (P.A.G.A.N.) are at it again, trying to destroy the delicate social fabric of our society. It seems some people are still stuck in the '50s. There is no friendly older gentleman running the toy store selling his wares to the smiling children anymore. Nor is there some perverse coot doing the same.

If you go into a software store, you'll quickly see that most of the employees are actually younger than your average college student. When the clerk is 18 and the customer is 16, rules are going to be bent.

"I'm sorry, kid, this game contains violence which could simply shatter your fragile mind. Come back next month when you turn 17."

That said, I do think the rules should be enforced more strictly, but that doesn't mean it needs to be made law. That's because enshrining this concept in law presupposes that there really is some sort of societal effect from violent video games. We haven't even passed legislation concerning global warming and there's way more evidence in support of that.

It's easy to point at violent games and say that they cause kids to become violent, but that doesn't make it true. The cold, hard truth is that those few who become violent were already severely disturbed beforehand, likely due to societal pressures and problems at school and home. Pretending that "Grand Theft Auto" and "Doom" made them into little killing machines helps no one. It disparages those who create and enjoy video games of all types, and it ducks addressing the real issues behind these violent outbursts.

John Gruenenfelder is a Collegian columnist.

Write letters to the editor!

Send them today!

Or leave them in our office in the Campus Center basement, room 113.

Send e-mails to: editorial@dailycollegian.com

Come on... you know you want to!

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

ARTS & LIVING

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 12, 2006

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Message of change sparked with Latino Reggaeton

By Ray Quintanilla
Chicago Tribune

SALINAS, Puerto Rico — Looking at reggaeton artists Blade Pacino, Great Kilo and duo Artillería Secreta, one might have difficulty calling them social pioneers.

But such artists, sporting baseball caps, pinky rings and attitude, are not only behind one of the most popular and controversial musical genres of recent years. Their music is fueling what some call a major cry for change across a burgeoning and diverse Hispanic community that's struggling to find a single voice in the American melting pot.

To fully understand why reggaeton is becoming so popular, it helps to visit villages like Salinas — one of the poor barrios where this genre was born.

What becomes clear almost immediately is this:

Reggaeton, which blends elements of rap, reggae and techno, has sparked change across Puerto Rico. And the speed of modern communications is bringing those blaring messages to iPods, cell phones and computers in Hispanic barrios across the mainland United States.

"Bien, cuchi, cuchi. Bien, cuchi, cuchi, bien," said Great Kilo, repeating a snappy bit of Spanish gibberish from his new reggaeton recording.

"Singing about problems takes the urge out of wanting to go out and burn something down," he said one recent afternoon before a performance.

"I'm helping young people find their voice," Kilo said.

But that "voice" is driving a wedge between generations of island residents.

On one end are those clinging to Puerto Rico's rich musical heritage in salsa. On the other are students and other youths who believe their parents' generation hasn't adequately addressed the social problems here and on the mainland.

"Those messages of discomfort find a home in reggaeton," explained Blade Pacino. "You can't ignore important issues that young people want to talk about, whether that is in Salinas or New York or Chicago."

Each ethnic or racial group struggles to find a voice, Pacino said. Hispanics are just the latest to do so.

In the 1960s, white, middle-class Americans found their rebellious voice in anti-Vietnam War rock music. Thirty years later, African-Americans expressed their anger and frustration through rap, Pacino said.

Today, reggaeton is emerging as a vehicle to draw attention to problems such as failing schools, growing resentment of illegal immigrants, racism and lack of jobs. The music also contains powerful messages that push the envelope on sex, a taboo topic in Hispanic culture.

Jose Davila, music editor of Barrio 305, one of a handful of reggaeton Web sites, said as the mainland's Hispanic community continues to mature, walls among Puerto Ricans, Mexicans and Cubans are tumbling.

That has helped reggaeton flourish among youths across those communities, he said.

"Ethnic differences don't mean a lot when you look around our major cities and see Spanish-speaking people in the same bad living conditions, and sharing the same feelings about the few opportunities out there," Davila said from his offices in Miami.

Andrew Lazaro, a professor at the Puerto Rico Conservatory of Music in San Juan, said the hot topic on the island is what's happening in reggaeton dance clubs, with police closing several clubs where revelers were having sex on the dance floor.

"Salsa music is pretty tame compared to reggaeton. This new music features girls running around almost naked," Lazaro said, referring to videos and clubs.

What's not in dispute is the music's growing popularity. Reggaeton is saturating airwaves in Chicago, New York, Miami and Los Angeles, home to millions of Puerto Rican, Mexican, Cuban and other Latin American ethnic groups. The genre's first wave of stars — Daddy Yankee, Don Omar and Ivy Queen — is packing audiences into major arenas like Madison Square Garden.

Luiz Fernando Lopes, an assistant director of Indiana University's Latin American Music Center, said the politically charged messages in reggaeton are socially relevant.

"There's nothing unusual about music that conveys a political message or advances a social cause," said Lopez, who has been studying music at the center since 2000. "Since reggaeton has come on the scene it's overpowered a lot of traditional music among Hispanics."

That's the best part, explained Yesenia Cruz, 19, one of about 200 teens who filled a Salinas dance club one evening.

"My parents hate reggaeton," said Cruz, who is a sophomore at the University of Puerto Rico. "They call my music 'noise,'" she added, while a half dozen of her friends cheered her on.

"I tell them, 'Keep your salsa because you all had your chance to change things.' Here we are in 2006, and Puerto Ricans and Hispanics in the United States are enduring the same kinds of social problems. Let's stir things up."

My Peeps! Easter staple becomes cultural phenomenon

By Pat I. Assay
The Gazette-Republican-Sentinel

Some eat them. Some play with them. Some create pseudo-porn Web sites dedicated to them.

People love their Marshmallow Peeps.

But it can be a creepy kind of love. Peeps — the Day-Glo-colored marshmallow confections made by the Pennsylvania-based candy company Just Born — are more than an Eastertime treat.

They're a cultural phenomenon. The Just Born's Peeps fan club has 40,000 members, and the Internet has hundreds of sites that salute, honor and, in some cases, mutilate these charismatic confections.

Peeps are all about buzz — sugar buzz, that is.

They're the only candies that someday might move from the supermarket shelves to the supermarket tabloids.

"Peeps at Play! Shocking exclusive pictures from Aruba!" Readers would, ahem, eat that stuff up.

Consider some of the comments on David Ottogalli's artsy Peep Web site PeepsShow (www.peepsshow.com):

"Besides munching many of the little critters we love to play with them, and am sad to admit, torture them," writes Mary. "For the amusement of kids and adults we nuke them to watch them grow huge and then deflate. The hardened corpses make great decorations."

"I love the sweet grittiness of their exterior combined with the gooey sweetness of their marshmallow inside," Yvette gushes.

"This is what true love is all about."

Candy corn, though tasty, just doesn't attract this kind of adulation.

Though fans label Feb. 15 through Easter (April 16) as "Peeps Season," Just Born churns out Peeps year-round — as many as 4.2 million a day. There's no rush to make them all at once: Peeps have a two-year shelf life.

Ollie Deardorff has been Just Born's official Peeps spokeswoman since 1998. She says there's been a definite upsurge in Peep fanaticism in the past decade.

She insists that many fanatical Peeps fans just love the way these suckers taste — though many fanatics seem more interested in playing with Peeps than eating them.

But Deardorff also believes Peeps exude a certain modest charm.

"Most of the news out there is pretty serious and pretty grim," she said. "When you look at a Peep, you can't help but smile."

Or, in some cases, cackle maniacally.

One of the best known Peep sites, www.peepresearch.org, scientifically details how Peeps react to various stimuli: water, acid, office staplers.

In one test, Peep researchers gauged a Peep's reaction to bright lights and enclosed spaces.

They conducted the experiment, naturally, in a microwave oven, and determined that Peeps balloon like frightened blowfish.

"This response likely evolved in order to intimidate potential predators through the awesome size and prowess achieved in a frightened peep," the researchers opined.

Another site (www.auricular.com/AIM/features/peeps/peeps.html) chronicles the seedy underside of Peep life.

And many aficionados participate in a form of jousting. Two Peeps are skewered with toothpicks, placed in a microwave facing each other, and apparently battle each other as they swell.

"We do not condone microwaving them," Deardorff said.

Scalding Peeps can be downright dangerous to eat.

The Peeps, she added, don't seem to mind.

This Peep, sitting idly in a chocolate egg, will join thousands of others to be eaten this coming Easter.

Nevilles, angry about Katrina, channel emotions into Social Club

By Thor Christensen
The Dallas Morning News

AUSTIN, Texas—When Ivan Neville is feeling upbeat, he calls the New Orleans Social Club a musical "healing process" for evacuees in Austin.

But these days, his optimistic mood rarely lasts long. Six months after Hurricane Katrina devastated his city, he's still stuck in limbo — just like most of his Social Club bandmates.

"The reality is it's going to be a long time before I can go back home. Five years at least," the singer-keyboardist says, his face turning grim.

"If you're black, you're not welcome back in New Orleans," adds his uncle Cyril Neville, who bought a house in Austin and says he's staying put.

"Why would I want to go back to a place like that?"

The two Neville Brothers members have come to an Austin hotel lobby to talk about the New Orleans Social Club, an all-star group whose debut CD, "Sing Me Back Home," hit stores April 4.

But this is no happy "Home." The two spend most of the interview venting their anger and frustration over what has happened to the city that has dubbed the Nevilles "the first family of funk."

When the Social Club gathered in Austin in November to record "Sing Me Back Home," Ivan Neville chose to rerecord "Fortunate Son," Creedence Clearwater Revival's '69 hit about how poor people are first to die in times of conflict. Neville says he sang it with the Iraq war and Katrina's death toll in mind.

"It's frightening that that song was written 35 years ago, but it's the exact same thing going on today," he says.

The CD has uplifting songs, too: "Look Up" by Irma Thomas and Marcia Ball, "Make a Better World" by the Subdudes, and "Walkin' to New Orleans" by Dr. John.

But some of the album's most powerful moments are etched with post-Katrina pain: Willie Tee's "First Taste of Hurt," John Boutte's version of Annie Lennox's hit "Why" and Cyril Neville singing Curtis Mayfield's 1968 civil rights anthem "This is My Country."

"That song taught me that we, the people, have a right to change the shit that's going on," says Cyril, 57. He's sipping Tazo Calm tea, but it doesn't seem to work.

"We have a right to be pissed off — and to say whatever I feel, even if other people get pissed off at me for saying it."

He speaks from experience. First, he came under attack for wearing a T-shirt that said "Ethnic Cleansing in New Orleans" during a hurricane benefit show in New York. Later, he became a target for The New Orleans Times Picayune's Chris Rose, who devoted two columns to "The Bitter Neville Brother From Austin Who Besmirches Our Name."

"Cyril, baby, the storm is where it's always been: In your head," Rose wrote. "Leave us behind, if you want. But don't trash us. Not now. Not ever."

Neville admits the columns stung: "When I start thinking about Chris Rose, I have to put on Jay Z's '99 Problems' and sing along."

But he doesn't regret criticizing the leaders of New Orleans or complaining about how poorly the city treats blacks. "This stuff about me kicking the people of New Orleans while we're down ... I'm one of the people. I lost my house, too," he says.

Cyril and his family moved to an apartment in Austin shortly after Katrina hit, and they've since bought a house in South Austin. Ivan — the son of falsetto-voiced Aaron Neville — is renting a place in Georgetown, near Austin.

"Coming to Austin was pretty much a no-brainer," Ivan says. "It's always been kind of a sister city to New Orleans."

In the '70s, it was one of the first cities to embrace the Neville Brothers and their predecessor, the Meters. Cyril fondly recalls the Neville Brothers playing Armadillo World Headquarters when members of ZZ Top and Stevie Ray and Jimmie Vaughan came to jam.

"And it's like that again now. I've got four people from New Orleans and three people from Austin in my band," he says, referring to his side project, Tribe 13.

"The gumbo's spilled into the chili."

But the gumbo was 100 percent pure on March 18, when the New Orleans Social Club played on the shores of Town Lake during South by Southwest. In addition to the two Nevilles, the show included such Big Easy legends as George Porter Jr. and Leo Nocentelli of the Meters, pianist Henry Butler and Big Chief Monk Boudreaux, decked out in his feathery Mardi Gras Indian costume.

It was an emotional event, with Porter vowing to personally bring Cyril back to the Crescent City and Willie Tee chanting, "We're ready to go back home."

But not everyone in the Club is ready to go back. The Neville Brothers are skipping this spring's Jazzfest for the first time in 15 years — partly out of concerns about Aaron's asthma.

And while Ivan says his band Dumpstaphunk will play Jazzfest, he's in no rush to move back.

"It freaked me out when I went back for Mardi Gras, because it used to be 65 percent black and 35 percent white, and now it's the opposite," he says.

"It's not a complete city yet, and who knows if the levees are ready for the next hurricane season. New Orleans is my home as long as I live, and the spirit of music will always be a big part of the city. But I just can't see going back for a long time."

Inflammatory foods hit concern

By Joann Milivojevic
Chicago Tribune

Among the newer diet plans on the block is the "anti-inflammation diet" that promises to ease the pain of inflammation and help you feel better.

The anti-inflammation diet may have an imposing name but it goes down easy. Mediterranean and traditional Japanese foods lead the pack in inflammation-lowering eating plans. They provide plenty of tasty options for the culinary minded, the casual cook and the restaurant eater, too.

Why focus on anti-inflammation?

Inflammation is a normal immune system response to infections or injuries. When you cut your finger, for example, the immune system kicks in to help heal the wound (causing redness, swelling). But problems arise when your immune system becomes chronic or overactive — rushing around inflaming things when there is no threat, causing harm instead of healing.

Chronic inflammation has been attributed to degenerative conditions such as arthritis and degenerative joint disease," explained Dave Grotto, a spokesman for the American Dietetic Association. "Inflammation is also not good for general circulation and could potentially affect sexual performance."

An anti-inflammation diet has the potential to benefit anyone, proponents say, because the Western diet is out of balance, but it is thought to be especially beneficial for those with inflammatory diseases, such as arthritis and allergies.

Food should not be thought of as the only saving grace, Grotto said. Other lifestyle issues affect inflammation, for example, smoking and the lack of exercise.

But food choices play an important role because what you eat can trigger or temper inflammatory responses in your body.

Dr. Andrew Weil is among those who believe that diet influences inflammation. As he states in his book, "Healthy Aging," an imbalance of fats, elevated blood sugar, refined foods and lack of micronutrients pave the road to inflammation. In short, eat your fruits and veggies, avoid processed foods, add fish to your diet regularly and you could stave off the many problems caused by inflammation.

Two very important fats play pivotal roles in the immune system game: omega-3 and omega-6 essential fatty acids. Omega-6s are pro inflammatory, it is their job to trigger inflammation to occur. Omega-3s are anti-inflammatory — in essence it is their job to counterbalance omega-6s.

"Your body needs omega-3 and omega-6 fats," Grotto said. "It's not about demonizing one fat over another — it's about a proper ratio. We have way too many omega-6s [in the American diet]."

That excess comes from our over-reliance on processed and fast foods that often have plant-based oils (corn, safflower), animal fats and trans fats — all pro-inflammatory.

Other no-nos include margarine, non-dairy creamers and, in general, fried foods in restaurants. Instead choose olive oil, butter in moderation or butter substitutes that are mechanically emulsified rather than chemically processed. And check labels for trans fats and processing methods.

Another easy change Grotto recommends is switching from corn oil (high in omega-6) to canola oil (high in omega-3). He said you won't taste the difference. More foods rich in omega-3 include wild game, grass-fed meats, flax seeds, omega-3 enriched eggs and cold-water fish.

No conversation about the anti-inflammatory diet would be complete without mentioning fish. Yes, much has been publicized about the problems with fish, particularly mercury and PCB levels in large fish like tuna and salmon. Smaller fish such as sardines and herring, however, are less vulnerable to those pollutants because the bigger the fish the higher the potential pollutant level.

Cold-water fish are among the best sources for omega-3 fatty acids. Experts like Grotto and Weil continue to advocate for eating fish. In his book, Weil says he eats wild Alaskan salmon, Alaskan black cod and sardines.

Eating fresh fruits and veggies also helps stave off inflammation. Eat them whole (i.e. a whole apple versus apple sauce). Produce is chock full of so many nutrients that scientists have barely scratched the surface on the numerous antioxidant properties and their role in maintaining good health.

And go for color diversity in vegetables. The more intense the pigment, the better. Think of all the colors — red, green, orange, purple, blue, yellow — and eat them to your heart's content.

Bobby Flay tests against local chefs

By Jerome Yuan
Collegian Staff

"How about those Yankees?"

Food Network personality and New York native Bobby Flay cracked a knowing smile at the resounding boos that erupted from the Red Sox partisan audience. His past Saturday, celebrity chef Bobby Flay did battle in the 4th annual "Iron Cook" competition, a benefit event held at the Calvin Theatre in Northampton. Flay was pitted against 3 local chefs: Jody Bishop of Melissa's, Jake Perkins of Eastside Grill and Michael Babb of Judie's. The money raised from the event went to "Friends of Children," a child advocacy organization that organized this mockup of Food Network's hit show "Iron Chef" for four years running.

It looked like the event would be a fundraising success from the start. Two of the four judging seats were up for auction this year, and the bids were fast and wild, eventually selling for a whopping $1,500 (All tax deductible, of course.) The expected net from this year's event was $30,000, outstripping all the prior benefits. The two ladies who won the seats joined their fellow judges, Northampton mayor Claire Higgins and former local Iron Cook and owner of Spoleto's restaurant, Claudio Guerra, on stage and were eager to taste the offerings of the both opponents.

Flay literally burst onto the stage, slashing his way through a paper screen mimicking the entrance he has on the show "Iron Chef America." The gong was ceremonially struck when the "secret ingredient" of cheese was revealed, and the one-hour competition was underway. Flay was composed and buttering with the crowd from the start, obviously at home in front of audiences and cameras. Keeping with the benefit's recent tradition, Flay challenged all three competitors to a group battle, pitting previous celebrity chefs Martin Yan and Rachael Ray had done.

Throughout the show, auctions were held for the benefit, with a few tongue-in-cheek pokes at Bobby's more famed exploits on TV, including a signed cutting board with footprints on them, a cue to Flay's infamous jumping up and down on one during his appearance on the Japanese version of Iron Chef. "Are those really my feet on there?" Flay asked, to which the organizers jokingly said they stole Flay's shoes from his hotel room.

The show was good-humored throughout. The camp and goofy nature of the original Japanese version of Iron Chef was reproduced onstage, with camera crew running about, live commentary and two fully equipped and top-notch kitchens. Both sides kept up a frenetic pace, each plating delectable-looking and nasal teasing dishes, with the aromas wafting all the way to the back row.

Flay's dishes were typical of his "style" grilling and Southwestern foods, featuring such courses as a Spiced Goat Cheese Enchilada with fresh made Chili Verde. No slouch for showmanship, Flay busted out a blowtorch to create a crust on his "Twenty-Seven" Cheese and Ale. The Iron Cooks countered with innovation of their own, making a "Mozzarella Napoleon" out of cheese curds made fresh on stage. They even brought out a cheese dessert, creating Hand Fried Chocolate and Cheddar Ravioli on top of Mascarpone Cheese Ice Cream. While the Iron Cooks went on to the last second of the hour, Flay calmly finished minutes prior, eliciting the crowd's laughter by replying to an audience member's claim with a very New Yorker "Thanks, guy."

Obviously, the judges were not swayed by Flay's Yankees allegiance, as City Councilor Bill Dwight announced Flay as the winner. The crowd didn't seem to mind either bursting out in cheer for the celebrity cook, who graciously did not jump on top of his cutting board this time. Albeit on a smaller scale, fans of Iron Chef and Bobby Flay got a firsthand taste of what its like to be in "Kitchen Stadium," and everyone came out winners for a good cause.

Have a great idea for Arts & Living? Don't keep it to yourself!

Arts@DailyCollegian.com

www.DJCollegian.com

Plan Ahead for Next Year

Excellent location...1/2 mile from UMass
Spacious Apartments--1,2 and 3 Bedroom Townhouses
All rents include heat, hot water and cooking gas
On site laundry, off street parking.
Basketball and Tennis courts.

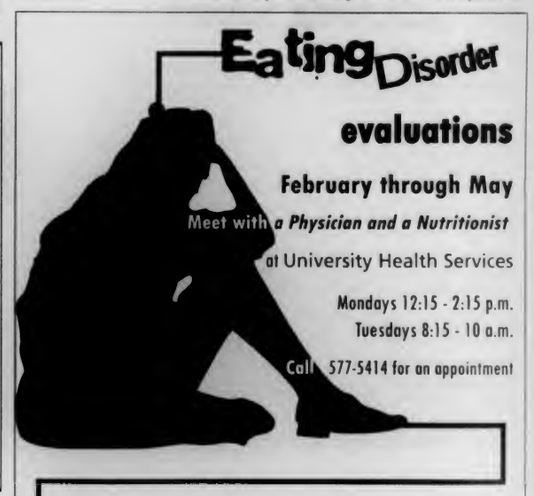
NEW PUFFTON VILLAGE

Office Hours: 8 am to 4:30 pm Monday - Friday
(413) 549-0145

Happy April!

Delivery: 413.549.0077
Telephone: 413.256.8923
413.256.8924
Fax: 413.253.1173

Panda East
Fine Chinese & Japanese Cuisine



Featuring:
* Vegetarian Options
* Lunch Specials
* Sushi Bar
* "Light and Healthy" entrees

~We bring China Town to you~

Monday - Thursday: 11:30am - 10:00pm
Friday & Saturday: 11:00am - 11:00pm
Sunday: 12:00pm - 10:00pm

Visit us at: www.pandaeastamherst.com
103 North Pleasant Street Amherst, MA

Eating Disorder evaluations

February through May
Meet with a Physician and a Nutritionist at University Health Services
Mondays 12:15 - 2:15 p.m.
Tuesdays 8:15 - 10 a.m.
Call 577-5414 for an appointment

- Research indicates at least 20% of college women are bulimic. Some studies suggest this number could be as high as 50%.
- Even with highly skilled care, 30-50% of anorexic and bulimic individuals who do not receive attention early in their disorder will have chronic eating, weight, and behavior problems.
- Chronic dieters become preoccupied with food, suffering considerable emotional and physical consequences including irritability, poor concentration, anxiety, depression, apathy, fatigue and social isolation.
- 42% of American women would rather lose 10-15 pounds than have guaranteed success in careers or romance.

UMASS AMHERST
UHS Health Education Division
577-5181
www.umass.edu/uhs
411-075 02/06

Political hip-hop a major force in South American youth culture

By Cindy Carcamo
The Orange County Register

BUENO AIRES, Argentina — Rap music has become the newest tool for youths to denounce the social ills around them in a part of the world where protesting has evolved into something of an art form.

Poor and rebellious youths who feel disenfranchised are embracing the hip-hop lifestyle and making it theirs on the peripheries of some of South America's largest cities.

Though the hip-hop movement started in the black neighborhoods of the Bronx, many hip-hop artists from Santiago to São Paulo are infusing their rap lyrics with politically charged issues, such as disappeared youth, "American imperialism" and classism.

"Rap music was born and flourishes from places where there's a tradition of struggle," said Manuel Cullen, who co-created the Web site HipHopRevolucion.org.

Cullen, an Argentine who launched his Web site in August with a Venezuelan colleague, said it's only natural for disgruntled Latin American youths to have embraced the fast rhymes and made them their own.

The music came from some of the poorest black neighborhoods in New York. There, youths created the hip-hop lifestyle and found that they could express grievances toward authority and all that was wrong through rap.

Twenty years later, Cullen contends that most U.S. rap music has strayed from its political roots, whereas in South America it's flourished.

In Buenos Aires, there are two hip-hop movements, said Grant Dull, who has produced hip-hop events in the city. Dull, an expatriate who last resided in San Diego, has seen rap music explode and become fashionable in the city just in the past year.

The first world is mainstream hip-hop that's mostly imported from the U.S. or Spain. It's all about the glitzy clothes and the commercialized hip-hop lifestyle.

"The second hip-hop world is marginal, very marginal," Dull said, explaining that it's mostly underground rap music. The music is more political and "in your face," with fewer followers.

It's growing in popularity, however, especially in the suburbs, which — unlike in the U.S. — tend to be the poorer parts of Latin American cities.

"Inevitably politics invades almost everything in Argentina, in art and culture ... because it's so bad," Dull added. "[The music] is a show of emotion, or defiance. It's a sociocultural expression. So I think they can relate to the hip-hop movement before it got all bling-bling on MTV."

Alika Dal Monte of Buenos Aires said the music's energy hooked her.

Dal Monte, 28, who would later co-found hip-hop group Actitud Maria Marta in 1994, fell in love with the rhythm of the music from groups such as Public Enemy and Cypress Hill. But she didn't really know what the lyrics were about.

Later, it would be the words that would make her a devotee.

"Even though it may seem that the situation of every country is distinct, you realize that it really is not that different and that the same happens here. Many, also, are dissatisfied," she said.

Dal Monte formed the group with vocalist Malena D'Alessio, becoming the first all-female rap group to come out of Buenos Aires. They spew verses full of rage and raw emotion. The themes range from denouncing imperialism to Argentina's Dirty War in their song "Child of the Disappeared," sung by D'Alessio, whose father disappeared during the last military dictatorship.

Dal Monte said there is plenty to criticize in Latin America — including Western culture, religion and their effects on people.

"And just on those two subjects you could write 12 albums," she said with a laugh.

In Chile, rap music is considered the music of the poor, and artists there rap about injustices in their neighborhoods. In Brazil, rappers rhyme about the slums and touch on the still-present racism in their society. In Bolivia, the group Lyrical Urban Movement and the Clandestines often mix Aymara, an indigenous language, with their Spanish.

Yet, for some South American rap artists, it's not just about performing. In Chile and Brazil, groups become organized and do social work, holding workshops in poor neighborhoods.

In the shadow of the Andes, a rap artist by the name of Metric, of Mendoza, is an active participant of the Socialist Workers Party.

Actitud Maria Marta has marched alongside human-rights' protesters, and performed for more than 80,000 people at a rally hosted by the Mothers of the Disappeared, an organization that seeks answers to what happened to the missing children during Argentina's Dirty War in the 1970s.

Aside from its political dynamic, Dal Monte said, rap has become an educational tool for some youths who are first introduced to rap music in English.

"For some kids it's their first contact with English language," she said. Because the kids want to know what the lyrics mean, they learn the language and eventually move on to rap artists from their own countries.

Cullen said he believes that rap music has the potential to change communities from within and, possibly, the reality of Latin America — a region with a history of unstable governments and poverty — because the socially active rap artists here are using their stardom to help improve their communities and raise social consciousness.

"Political hip-hop in Latin America went much further than in North America," Cullen contends. "In the U.S., major gangster rap artists copy the worst of each other, just to sell to the middle class. It may be that there's more authenticity in hip-hop from Brazil, Chile ... than in the North American hip-hop."

Journalist Hedges examines the dark, addictive beauty of war

By Meghan Dunlap
Badger Herald (U. Wisconsin)

MADISON, Wis. — There has been very little time in the history of the civilized world when no country has been in conflict with either itself or another country. Since before its birth as a nation, America has been involved in war and in the past century has been the major power on the battlefront. From each war era spring fresh works of literature either based on or written in response to these conflicts. Some of these do what the media cannot and set the record straight, while others exacerbate the myths that are created in wartime.

Like all the others, the war on terrorism has brought a wave of new books to the shelves. One that stands out from others is the national bestseller "War is a Force that Gives Us Meaning," written by New York Times journalist and war correspondent Chris Hedges. Having covered insurgence and war all over the world, including El Salvador, Guatemala, Nicaragua, Colombia, the West Bank and Gaza, the Sudan and Yemen, Algeria and the Punjab, the Gulf War, southeast Turkey and northern Iraq, Bosnia and Kosovo, Hedges endured more than his fair share of life-or-death situations.

This veteran correspondent has been ambushed, shot at, captured, imprisoned and beaten by military police. He has witnessed countless atrocities done against innocent people and the violent deaths of many people whom he had known personally. While putting himself in harm's way so America could stay informed, he left behind a wife and two children on each mission.

What called him to take on dangerous tasks like these? What was worth sleeping in the dirt for? Being shot at and shelled? As much as Hedges hated it, war was like a drug he consumed and was addicted to for many years. "It is peddled by myth-makers — historians, war correspondents, filmmakers, novelists, and the state — all of whom endow it with qualities it often does possess: Excitement, exoticism, power, chances to rise above our small stations in life and a bizarre and fantastic universe that has a grotesque and dark beauty."

How else can Hedges provide those of us who know little about war besides what we read and see on the television besides giving it to us in the words and experiences of him and the wars' victims? Hedges brings all of his experiences as well as his distinguished education of Christian theology and philosophy from Harvard University into this essay-like work of non-fiction.

The literary world is full of memoirs and fictional accounts of wars dating back all the way to the Crusades and Ancient Rome and Greece. It is literature of combat like Homer's "The Iliad" and numerous plays by Shakespeare as well as historical and personal accounts that Chris Hedges references in his academic and philosophical analysis of as well as the basis for his personal remarks regarding the institution of war.

His book is not meant to bash the current administration nor to lay blame on any one individual or group, but to make people think about the very institution of war, about what Hedges calls "The Myth of War." He says, "Ethnic conflicts and insurgencies of our time ... are not religious wars. They are not clashes between cultures or civilizations, nor are they the result of ancient ethnic hatreds. They are manufactured wars, born out of the collapse of civil societies, perpetuated by fear, greed, and paranoia." The United States, under multiple administrations has based our responses, or lack thereof, in countries like Bosnia on such myths.

By exposing this myth, Hedges hopes to give a clear warning to those who may use the emotions surrounding war for political gain. Nationalism should not be the plague Hedges describes it as, where everyone throws their own beliefs to the wind to follow what the government says or does. Hedges uses the Junta of Argentina and the Third Reich as examples of how nationalism can destroy a person's own moral being.

As a reporter in war-torn countries, Hedges was given an opportunity to disseminate these myths. Whether the conflict was between the Junta and the Argentineans, the Palestinians and Israelis or the Serbs and Muslims, each group held its own belief about what was happening to their people.

I was still a child when the Gulf War was going on, yet I can remember the nightly televised reports from overseas. Hedges refers to these in his book as entertainment or fodder for the people at home, not the muckraking many reporters imagine doing on the front. Years later, there is still a disconnect for me about what happened because even though the Gulf War is a part of America's history as much as any other war, we never seemed to make it that far in the three years of U.S. history.

There are so many people for whom there is no need of a textbook — they lived it and survived it but knew others who did not. What Hedges provides in this book is what veterans have known and felt for years. It is the veterans of combat and correspondence whom we should seek in our quest for knowledge and self-enlightenment on this very serious topic.

"War is a Force that Gives Us Meaning" is a book every adult should have on his or her book list. Regardless of our stance on the war, Hedges provides us with a first-hand experience, a gripping portrayal of the lives of those who live in constant fear for their lives and the lives of their families.

As disturbing as some might find the many victims' stories of mass executions, funerals and shooting people for sport, Hedges uses these graphic accounts as examples of what could happen to our country if we let the utopian (if there is such a thing) idea of war entice us or let our allegiance to our nation cloud our judgment. Hedges tells us to look into ourselves and to those who have experienced what war can do before we end up like many parts of our world.

A graduate degree opens doors.

Learn about Hofstra's challenging, competitive and exciting programs. With 150 unique programs in four schools, Hofstra has a program for you in:

Frank G. Zarb School of Business: M.B.A., M.S., Executive M.B.A. and advanced certificate programs

School of Education and Allied Human Services: M.A., M.H.A., M.S.Ed., Ed.D., Ph.D., P.D. and advanced certificate programs

Hofstra College of Liberal Arts and Sciences: M.A., M.S., Au.D., Ph.D., Psy.D. and advanced certificate programs

School of Communication: M.A. in speech communication and rhetorical studies

For further details, call 1-800-HOFSTRA, ext. 657, or e-mail graddean@hofstra.edu

HOFSTRA UNIVERSITY.
Hempstead, New York 11549 • www.hofstra.edu

Duke not off the hook

By Tim Whitmire
Associated Press

DURHAM, N.C. — Standing before a mostly black audience, the district attorney in charge of the Duke University rape investigation said Tuesday he does not need DNA to bring charges and vowed, "This case is not going away."

District Attorney Mike Nifong spoke one day after defense attorneys said DNA testing failed to connect any of Duke's lacrosse players to the alleged attack on a black stripper who said she was raped at a party by members of the nearly all-white 47-man team.

Nifong stopped short of confirming the defense assessment of the DNA results, but said the case would not be hampered by a lack of DNA evidence.

"It doesn't mean nothing happened," Nifong said at a public forum at North Carolina Central University, where the 27-year-old alleged victim is a student. "It just means nothing was left behind."

No charges have been filed. Nifong said prosecutors were awaiting a second set of DNA results, but did not say how those differed from the tests reported Monday. Nifong added that in 75 percent to 80 percent of sexual assaults, there is no DNA evidence to analyze.

The district attorney said a rape case can built on testimony from the alleged victim and other witnesses. Nifong also said the hospital exam of the woman has led him to believe a crime occurred at the March 13 party.

According to court documents, a doctor and a specially trained nurse found the alleged victim had "signs, symptoms and injuries consistent with being raped and sexually assaulted."

"My presence here means this case is not going away," Nifong said to applause from an audience of about 700.

The allegations have led to days of protests on and off the Duke campus and heightened racial tensions around Durham.

Some students at North Carolina Central, a historically black university a few miles away, assailed Nifong for his handling of the case and the media for its portrayal of the alleged victim.

"You all know if this happened at Central and the young lady was from another school or another 'persuasion,' the outcome would have been different," said Toloupe Omokaiye, suggesting to applause from the crowd that the alleged attackers would have been jailed already.

Nifong said that he has never engaged in racial favoritism and that arresting suspects too quickly could harm the case.

"I have been criticized by both sides in this case," he said. "There have been people who have said that I should have given up this case a long time ago, and there are people who have said I should have already indicted, moved against somebody with some charges. The fact is that this case is proceeding the way a case should proceed."

Nifong later told a questioner, who asserted the victim had positively identified her three attackers, that her information was wrong.

The district attorney faces two challengers in a May 2 primary election. Asked by a member of the audience about the campaign, he said: "As the district attorney, you do not get to choose what crimes occur and when they occur. This is not about an election. This is about justice."

Nifong refused to take any questions from reporters after the forum.

Bill Thomas, a defense attorney for one of the team captains, urged the accuser to recant, saying he believes she made up the allegations to avoid a charge of public drunkenness.

"It is my sincere hope that she comes forward and tells the truth in this matter and allows these young men to go on with their lives and for this community to heal," Thomas said.

Duke lacrosse players celebrate during last year's Final Four in Philadelphia. After apparently earning a break in the legal issues they have been facing when no DNA matches came up, the DA in charge of the case has said he will not let up.

Winfield and Ventura head Hall of Fame class

By Dennis Waszak Jr.
Associated Press

Dave Winfield dominated from the mound, Pete Incaviglia became the home run king and Robin Ventura went on a 58-game hitting streak.

That was back when they were still wearing their school colors, before they became major league stars.

Now, there will be a College Baseball Hall of Fame to honor them, with the announcement set for Wednesday.

Winfield, Incaviglia and Ventura are among 46 nominees for the hall's inaugural class. The finalists will be announced April 26, followed by an induction ceremony July 4 in Lubbock, Texas.

"Just like Canton and Cooperstown, sports fans around the nation will begin to turn their attention to Lubbock every summer," said John Askins, chairman and CEO of the College Baseball Foundation, which established the hall.

"Different groups have talked about a college baseball hall of fame, but we decided to do something about it," he said.

The hall of fame museum will be part of a new baseball stadium complex, which will be built on the campus of Texas Tech and is scheduled to open before the 2008 season.

The 22 former players, 12 former coaches and 12 pre-1947 veterans will be voted on strictly because of their college achievements. The list will be pared down through two rounds of voting by an 80-member committee consisting of current and retired head coaches, former players, NCAA commissioners, sports information directors and media.

Winfield, a member of the Baseball Hall of Fame, led the University of Minnesota as a pitcher and outfielder, and was chosen the Most Outstanding Player of the 1973 College World Series.

Known more for his slugging and strong outfield arm in the majors, Winfield was 19-4 with a 2.24 ERA and 229 strikeouts in 169 innings in his three-year career with the Gophers.

Paul Mollitor, a fellow Baseball Hall of Famer and former Gopher, is also among the nominees. He led Minnesota to Omaha in 1977, and finished his college career as the school's career leader in numerous offensive categories.

Incaviglia was one of college baseball's most feared sluggers, setting the career marks for homers with 100 in just three years at Oklahoma State. His 1985 season is the most impressive offensive performance in college history, with 48 home runs, 143 RBIs, 295 total bases and a 1.180 slugging percentage — all remain as single-season Division I records.

Ventura gained national recognition in 1987 with his 58-game hitting streak — still a Division I record — and had a career batting average of .428 at Oklahoma State.

Hawaii's Derek Tatsuno, the NCAA's first 20-game winner, and Wichita State's Phil Stephenson, the NCAA career leader in hits, runs, total bases, stolen bases and walks, are also nominees.

Other nominated players include Joe Carter (Wichita State), Will Clark (Mississippi State), Bob Horner (Arizona State), Brooks Kieschnick (Texas), Barry Larkin (Michigan), Fred Lynn (Southern California), Keith Moreland (Texas), and John Olerud (Washington State).

Players become eligible five years after their final college season, and can't be active at any level of professional baseball. They must have completed at least one year of competition at a four-year school, and been an All-American or made an All-League team.

The late Rod Dedeaux leads the list of nominated coaches. He won a record 11 national titles — including five in a row from 1970-74 — with Southern California, and retired in 1986 as the winningest coach in Division I history. He coached nearly 60 future big leaguers, including Mark McGwire, Randy Johnson, Tom Seaver, Dave Kingman, Fred Lynn and Roy Smalley.

Texas's Cliff Gustafson guided the Longhorns to College World Series titles in 1975 and 1983, and surpassed Dedeaux as the winningest coach in Division I history by the time he retired in 1996. He now ranks fifth

Dave Winfield speaks at his Hall of Fame induction ceremony with the late Kirby Puckett looking on to his left. Winfield, Robin Ventura and Pete Incaviglia headline this year's class of inductees into the College Baseball Hall of Fame.

Broadcaster Jack Buck honored in St. Louis

By Chris Blank
Associated Press

JEFFERSON CITY, Mo. — A broadcaster from Massachusetts joined the ranks of a former president, two war heroes, the creator of Mickey Mouse and one of the most famous American writers.

Former St. Louis Cardinals broadcaster Jack Buck on Tuesday became the 25th person inducted into the Hall of Famous Missourians at a state Capitol ceremony. He joins fellow Cardinal great Stan Musial, who was inducted in 2000.

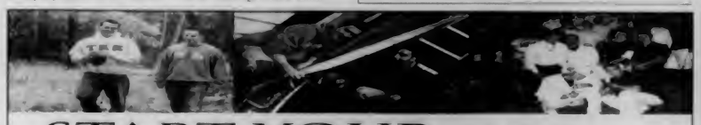
Buck, who died in 2002, was selected to the hall by Catherine Hanaway, the former House speaker and current U.S. attorney for eastern Missouri. She said honoring Buck was one of the few moments of "pure joy" in her career as a public official.

"Jack Buck reached out through the airwaves and touched people in small towns, he touched people who were shut-ins, he touched people who were kids all they way up to people in nursing homes," she said.

"That voice brought to life in vivid fashion games that many of those people never saw," she said. "Many of those people never had an opportunity to walk into a professional baseball park, but for those people, Jack Buck brought those games to life."

A bust of Buck, sculpted by Harry Weber, captures the broadcaster wearing a suit coat and tie and a wide grin. It will be displayed in the Capitol's third floor rotunda with the busts of other famous Missouri residents.

Buck, born in 1924 in Holyoke, Mass., started calling Cardinals games in 1954 and became the lead announcer in 1969. Besides spending almost 50 years with the Cardinals, he called at least one game for almost every professional sport. In 1987, he was inducted into the Baseball Hall of Fame.



He handled the play-by-play duties as Mark McGwire pursued the single-season home run record in 1998 and announced the record-breaking homer by stating "Pardon me while I stand up and applaud."

But some of his most famous calls came in games when the Cardinals weren't playing. After a visibly injured Kirk Gibson hit a pinch-hit, game-winning home run to help Los Angeles Dodgers beat Oakland in Game 1 of the 1988 World Series, Buck said, "I can't believe what I just saw!"

Tony LaRussa, who managed the Oakland team that gave up the home run to Gibson, said that for as long as he has managed the St. Louis team, Buck was the greatest Cardinal.

Celebrity Beauty
Beauty Is Our Only Business
Bring this ad for 30% OFF any service!
Hours: Tuesday - Friday 11 - 8, Saturday 10 - 4
371 Main St. Amherst Next to Bruegers
413.256.0898

FRUSTRATED?
PUZZLED?
DO YOU HAVE:
A grade dispute?
Teacher, roomate or job concerns?
Billing problems?
...or any other University related problems?
THE OMBUDS OFFICE CAN HELP
(confidentially, of course)
students, faculty, and staff are all welcome
823 Campus Center
Office Hours: 8:00 a.m. - 5:00 p.m.
Telephone: 413 - 545 - 0867
fax: 413 - 545 - 9720
e-mail: ombuds@ombuds.umass.edu

START YOUR own FRATERNITY
Tau Kappa Epsilon
Participate in social, philanthropic, communtiy service and intramural activities on campus.
No Pledging! No Hazing!
World's Largest Social Fraternity
$20,000 in Available Scholarships
Instant Leadership Opportunities

Contact:
Steve Lytle
slytle@tke.org
813-394-4087
Jason Fenske
jfenske@tke.org
414-975-1168
www.tke.org/expansion/umass

Sox open in style

By Jimmy Golen
Associated Press

BOSTON — After throwing 36 pitches and walking home a run in his first inning at Fenway Park, Josh Beckett was looking at a short outing and a short honeymoon with the Boston fans.

"It's not exactly the first impression you want to make," he said Tuesday.

But Beckett settled down in Boston's home opener and held Toronto to three hits over seven innings, combining with fellow Florida castoff Mike Lowell to beat the Blue Jays 5-3 and give the Red Sox their fifth consecutive victory.

"He wanted to destroy the dugout after that first inning," said Lowell, who went 4-for-4 with three doubles. "But the way he threw, to be down one run after that inning, I'd take that."

Boston took advantage of the Marlins' latest salary purge to acquire Beckett in the offseason. But the Red Sox also had to take Lowell and his $9 million salary and hope that he bounced back from the worst season of his career.

For one game, Lowell was far more than a throw-in.

"Any time you're in a new situation, a new team, I think it's only natural" to want to make a good impression, he said.

Does he think he did?

"I hope so," he said with a laugh. "If I need to go more than 4-for-4, I'm in trouble."

A year after an epic ceremony to celebrate their first World Series title in 86 years, the Red Sox held a more downscale event. In addition to the usual fighter jet flyover and ceremonial first pitch, the team asked for a moment of silence in memory of longtime broadcaster Curt Gowdy.

Fenway was sold out, as it had been for the previous 226 games.

"Coming from Florida, opening day is sometimes the only day you have like that," Beckett said.

The fiery right-hander allowed one run in his Red Sox debut last week to win at Texas and start Boston's winning streak. His Fenway premiere started poorly but turned out just as good.

Beckett (2-0) walked three in the first inning, along with Vernon Wells' single to left — before falling behind Shea Hillenbrand 3-1 and the bases still loaded. Hillenbrand moved toward first on a pitch that was called strike two, irking Beckett, then hit into a double play to end the inning.

He didn't throw more than 15 pitches in any of the next six innings. In the sixth, he needed just five.

"I felt like we let him off the hook," Blue Jays outfielder Frank Catalanotto said. "To his credit, he settled down."

Beckett walked four and struck out two, getting a cushion when Lowell, Adam Stern and Kevin Youkilis all doubled in the four-run second. David Ortiz homered in the seventh, a solo shot into the right-field corner for his second of the year.

Josh Towers (0-2) gave up four runs on eight hits and three walks, striking out three in six innings. Catalanotto hit a two-run homer in the eighth, a long drive that went off substitute outfielder Wily Mo Pena's glove and into the Toronto bullpen.

Jonathan Papelbon pitched a perfect ninth for his fourth save.

Beckett also gave up a double to Aaron Hill in the third, when Trot Nixon fell while diving, and Bengie Molina's single in the seventh.

Nixon left after three innings with a mild left groin strain and said he would be out five to seven days. Pena entered the game as his replacement.

Notes: Toronto RHP A.J. Burnett allowed two runs and six hits over four innings in his last rehab start for Class-A Dunedin. He struck out four and retired 10 of the last 12 batters he faced. Burnett is scheduled to pitch Saturday against the White Sox. ... Blue Jays RHP Roy Halladay was supposed to go Saturday, but he will miss his next turn with a forearm injury, general manager J.P. Ricciardi said. ... Boston College and Patriots quarterback Doug Flutie was at the game. ... The Red Sox completed an odd 4-6-3 double play to end the fourth: Mark Loretta leaped to catch Molina's liner, but the ball went off his glove toward shortstop Alex Gonzalez, who picked it up, stepped on second and threw to first.

Boston Red Sox left fielder Manny Ramirez (left) has gotten used to patting designated hitter David Ortiz on the head for his homerun ability of late. Ortiz went deep again yesterday for the Sox, who beat Toronto 5-3.

Stars can't make rules

WHITE from page 12

Brett Favre and the Packers have been at odds recently about his indecisiveness on his future.

season on April 3 against the Texas Rangers, you might have seen the Rocket. And you might have heard that he talked with Red Sox general manager Theo Epstein.

Even though he has four teams (the Red Sox, Yankees, Rangers and Astros) vying for his abilities — which it seems he's having fun with — at least this future Hall of Famer is a little bit more concrete on where he stands.

If you pay him enough money, that is. If you're a World Series contender and can get this dominant pitcher, which he proved he still is at the inaugural World Baseball Classic, then why wouldn't you purposely injure your weakest starting pitcher?

I'm just kidding — that's cruel. But it seems like he is seriously just waiting around for somebody to throw a boatload of cash his way. I mean, he could've made his decision to stay or retire a lot earlier, and so could have Favre.

But they continue to "kick back" and seemingly not care about the fans and the game.

Are these players worthy enough of being bigger than the game? Would Ted Williams or Reggie White hold out and make fans wait for them?

There is no player greater than the game itself, not even Babe Ruth. We don't watch the sport for one player, and if you do, then you're not a true fan. We watch because we love the game.

Professional athletes should reflect back to when they were kids and started watching and playing sports. Maybe then they'll realize the game is special and that they are the privileged ones, who wouldn't exist if it wasn't for the fans.

Joey White is a Collegian columnist.

Crisp lands on DL

By Howard Ulman
Associated Press

BOSTON—Red Sox center fielder Coco Crisp was placed on the 15-day disabled list Tuesday after injuring his finger sliding into third base, leaving Boston without the replacement for fan favorite Johnny Damon.

To fill the roster spot, the Red Sox purchased the contract of outfielder Dustan Mohr from Triple-A Pawtucket. Manager Terry Francona expects Crisp to miss several weeks.

"I wouldn't want to lose him for the whole year," Francona said. "But for the short term we should be able to handle this."

Crisp, put on the disabled list retroactive to last Saturday, and Mohr were at Tuesday's home opener against Toronto. Kevin Youkilis batted leadoff for Boston in place of Crisp and singled and doubled in his first two at-bats. Adam Stern started in center field, batted eighth and doubled in two runs in his first at-bat.

Crisp joined the Red Sox in a trade with Cleveland on Jan. 27 after Damon signed as a free agent with the New York Yankees following four seasons as Boston's center fielder and leadoff hitter. Crisp was hurt in Baltimore last Saturday — a nondisplaced fracture at the base of his left index finger. In five games, he is batting .333 with six runs, no RBIs and two stolen bases.

"The idea is, give him 10 days in a splint and see where he's at," Francona said. "My guess would be he'll be a quick healer."

Francona was confident the team could do well despite Crisp's loss.

"If we can't handle it we weren't going to be good enough anyway," he said. "It's kind of like getting hit in the stomach. You lose your breath for a second and then you get right back. We have good enough players to overcome this."

The Red Sox had signed Mohr to a minor league contract Jan. 23 after he hit a career-high 17 homers last year with Colorado. He and Stern are expected to split time in center field until Crisp returns. Youkilis should bat first most of the time, except when J.T. Snow starts at first base in his place.

"Youk's a good on base guy, which we value," Francona said. Stern started in center and batted first in Sunday's 4-1 win at Baltimore and had two hits and two RBIs. But he has had little experience above Double-A and the Red Sox planned to send him to Pawtucket later this month.

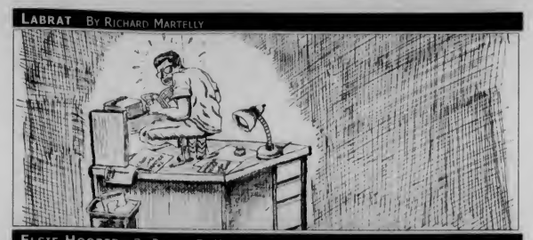
"I just don't want to ask too much of Stern, make it unfair for him," Francona said.

Boston selected Stern in the Rule 5 draft from Atlanta before last season, requiring him to spend a full season in the majors or be offered back to the Braves. Because he spent some of 2005 on the disabled list, he has to be with the Red Sox for the first 17 days this season before they can send him down without giving Atlanta a chance to reclaim him.

Crisp's injury should give Wily Mo Pena more playing time. Pena, acquired from Cincinnati late in spring training, and Mohr, both right-handed hitters, could see action against lefties while Stern and right fielder Trot Nixon, both lefty hitters, rest.

ONLINE JOB SEARCH Workshops
monday's @7pm
calipari rm. in the library

MANY JOBS, internships, +CO-OPS are still available



UMASS AMHERST University of Massachusetts Amherst Student Affairs and Campus Life Career Services
511 Goodell (M-F 9-5) 413-545-2224 umass.edu/careers

GREAT Reasons to use UHS Eye Care Services
1 Savings on routine eye exams for students at UMass
2 A great place to get contact lenses
3 FREE sample start-up contact lens solutions
4 Same day replacement of disposable contact lenses, in many cases
5 Contact lenses mailed directly to your home or office
6 FREE eyeglass adjustments and one year warranty on frames
SPECIAL OFFER: 10 PERCENT STUDENT DISCOUNT ON ALL FRAMES AND EYEGLASS LENSES!*
"I invite you to use the Eye Care Services"
Frederick H. Bloom, O.D. Director, UHS Eye Care Services
* Cannot be combined with other insurance discounts.
For appointments or questions, call 577-5383
UHS EYE CARE SERVICES

WRITE FOR THE COLLEGIAN SPORTS PAGE

LOOKING FOR A PLACE TO LIVE?
KAMINS
SPECIALIZING IN HOUSE AND APARTMENT RENTALS
PRESIDENTIAL APTS. COLLEGE INN APTS
COLONIAL VILLAGE APTS LANTERN COURT APTS
PERRY APTS MILL HOLLOW
177 N. PLEASANT ST. CRESTVIEW APTS.
55 S. PLEASANT ST. 253-2515 AMHERST
LARGEST SELECTION OF APARTMENTS IN TOWN

LABRAT By Richard Martelly

ELSIE HOOPER By Robert D. Kryzkowski

TWO DUDES By Aaron Warner

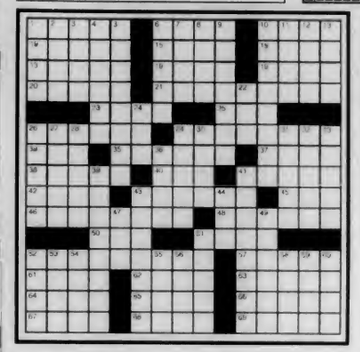
THE FAMILY MONSTER By Josh Shalek

A COLLEGE GIRL NAMED JOE By Aaron Warner

QUOTE OF THE DAY

"The great thing about getting older is that you don't lose all the other ages you've been."

—Madeleine L'Engle



ACROSS
1 80s hairdos
6 Annexes
10 Creole veggie
14 Poet Hart
15 Neophyte
16 Flicks about folk
17 Raring to go
18 Red Sox or White Sox
19 Exchange
20 Blue-shoe material
21 Planetariums
23 Grow
25 Texas tea
26 Distribution do over
29 Round Table knight
34 Coach Palmeghan
35 Pin down
37 Sound quality
38 Word after rain or war
40 Superlative suffix
41 Break off
42 Concerning
43 Allotment
45 Corn unit
46 Comes in again
48 Tailor's need
50 Dog's best friend
51 Ownership paper
52 Real estate pro
57 Nothing
61 Addict
62 Part
63 European country
64 Irritates
65 Lob
66 Constant traveler
67 Harp family member
68 (...) Having My Baby"
69 Slope

DOWN
1 King toppers
2 German wife
3 Craze
4 Tense
5 Sing to
6 Essential perfume
7 Uses aniline
8 Mild expletive
9 Important person
10 Beyond passe
11 Chinese gooseberry
12 Byway
13 Slithery killers
22 Singer Ocasek
24 Pale or ginger
26 Speeder catcher
27 Eradicate
28 "Divine Comedy" poet
29 Itemizations
30 Freeze preceder?
31 Adored
32 NBA star Shaq
33 Hauls, IN 36 Dread
39 Talk
41 Evidencing an allergy
43 Comebacks
44 Chiffons hit, " Fine Day"
47 AT&T part
49 Powerroom bigwig
51 Frock
52 Iworlds
53 Catch sight of 54 Swerve
55 A.A. Milne character
58 Otherwise
58 Tibetan monk
59 Attired
60 Park of London

Find today's answers online

www.dailycollegian.com

THE HARP
NEW!! Wireless Internet
Irish Pub
APRIL SPECIAL!
Honey Brown, Molson
$2.00 a pint / $6.50 a pitcher
TONIGHT - Cold Duck Complex
THURS - Turbine
FRI - Irish Seisiun
SAT - Break Away Sol
"Come Party Like You're Irish!"
413-548-6900 www.theharp.net
163 Sunderland Rd. - N. Amherst
Just north of the apartments

BEST BAR AROUND
Seven Os
KARAOKE
EVERY WEDNESDAY
Friday 4/14
Six Degree
Saturday 4/15
Shut Up & Dance
at 9:00 p.m.
ROUTE 116, 130 AMHERST ROAD
SUNDERLAND, MA 01375
(413) 665-8788
2PM TO 1AM M-F
12PM TO 1AM SAT & SUN
NEXT TO CITIZENS' APTS.

HOROSCOPES

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
You should take up origami. Go buy an instruction book this week.

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
Do not attempt to finish that puzzle. You are missing some pieces.

aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
Speaking without thinking is like shooting without aiming.

taurus Apr. 20-May 20
Your cell phone is very outdated. You should try to get a new one.

gemini May 21-Jun. 21
You slept way too much today. You will never get to sleep tonight.

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
You will be unpleasantly surprised in your first class today.

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
Stop talking about things you don't know anything about.

virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Go spend some time outside today. It is nice out.

libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22
You will not fall asleep when you are driving home this weekend.

scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
Go out for dinner on Friday with some friends.

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
You are not a plant person. Do not buy one, you will only kill it.

capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
Today is opposite day. Spread the word.

Amherst Brewing Company
Jukebox Downstairs & Upstairs!
THE PATIO IS OPENING SOON!
Get more info about our hand-crafted beers, food menu & event calendar at amherstbrewing.com

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Race into a good time. I'm fast, easy to handle and have the look that turns heads. Meet me at the Ford Fusion, outside the Campus Center on April 25th between 10AM and 3PM. Brought to you by your New England Ford Dealers.

THE WORLD HAS HAD ENOUGH of hunger, injustice and war. An extraordinary, enlightened World Teacher is here to help. Learn more: 888-242-8272 *Share-International.org

Full Tuition Scholarships and $5,000 cash. ARMY ROTC Take the challenge. Prepare yourself to excel. www.umass.edu/armyrotc

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Amherst Clean 2BR Bus Near Center $1025 Avail 6/1 413-335-5226

APARTMENT FOR RENT

2 bedroom $1100 3 bedroom $1400 4 bedroom $2150 Now Accepting Applications 253-7377 millvalleyestates@winnco.com

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing, 1& 2 bedroom apts. Leases begin June, July, Aug or Sep. First come, first serve. Get them while they last. www.brandywine-apts.com stop by or call 549-0600

Hobart Condos 3 bedroom, hardwood floors, study area in basement. Cable, telephone (internet access) in all bedrooms and study. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER . NO FEES. www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

EMPLOYMENT

Drivers Wanted. Chicago Pizza. Apply in person between 3:30-5pm

EMPLOYMENT

1000 Envelopes = $5000. Receive $5 for every envelope stuffed with our sales materials. Guaranteed! Free information: 24 hour recording 1-800-796-6567

Full-time summer employment at the Housing Assignment Office, $8.50/hour. Visit the HAO at 235 Whitmore to pick up application.

Furniture porter and maintenance person needed for busy auction gallery on Nantucket Island this summer. (508) 228-3942

Personal Care Assistant for woman in Northampton. Light housework. Cooking, cleaning, laundry, shopping. Must have reliable car to take client to Dr.'s appts. Part-time hours $10.84/hr. References and some experience preferred. Please call before 7pm 586-0029

EMPLOYMENT

PAINTERS NEEDED! Hundreds of positions available throughout New England. Work outside with your friends and family in your hometown. No experience needed, training provided. Join large student painting company this summer. Hiring now! 888-277-9787, www.college-eprocom

April 14th is the Last Day to Apply to become a Legal Assistant with the Student Legal Services Office. Earn 12 credits while gaining valuable experience. Call 545-1995 or stop by the Student Legal Services Office at 922 Campus Center to get your application.

Summer Lifeguards, Managers, Camp Counselors, and Director positions open! Greenfield Recreation, 25 min. from Amherst. Apply now. Call (413) 772-1553.

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending $300/Day potential. No experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 x162

Rent us your Ears! Listening Experiments $10/hr. English must be your first language. Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu Voicemail: 545-6837

HOUSE FOR RENT

Hadley, close to UMass. 5 Bedroom home, large yard. Oil heat. Sept occupancy. 549-4270

ROOM FOR RENT

Large, quiet, comfortable, furnished. Walk to U Mass. On busline. For male Professional/Grad students. June 1 to Sept. 1. Fall option. 413-549-1578

SERVICES

Legal questions? We have answers at the Student Legal Services Office, 922 Campus Center or Call 545-1995

PREGNANCY TESTING, HIV TESTING, Birth control, and Emergency Contraception. STI Screening and Treatment. Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-0992.

Pentium Color laptops $99 We type term papers, resumes, cover letters. 413-584-8857

TRAVEL

Disney/Beach Area 7/6 nights stay. Pd $600.00 Sacrifice $199.00 Good for one year 978-444-0261

Collegian Advertising (413) 545-3500

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS WEDNESDAY

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 12, 2006 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Minutewomen to meet Huskies

BY JEREMY RICE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Massachusetts softball team (18-12, 7-1 A-10) will begin its busiest week of the regular season so far when it takes on perennial rival Connecticut (15-17) today at 4:30.

The Minutewomen will make the trip to Storrs for a single game against the Huskies before hosting doubleheaders against Atlantic 10 rivals Saint Joseph's (10-23-1, 2-4 A-10) tomorrow and Temple (11-16, 4-2 A-10) on Saturday.

The UMass-UConn rivalry is certainly a strong one as far as the softball teams are concerned. The Minutewomen trail the Huskies in the all-time series by a single game, 40-41-2.

A win today would tie the series, and give the Maroon and White a chance to take the all-time lead on Senior Day later this season on May 7, when UConn makes the trip to complete the two-game series.

The last meeting between the two teams was a classic. Trailing 6-3 in the sixth inning, the Minutewomen fought back to tie the game at 6, then won it in extra innings, 7-6, with a sacrifice fly by senior Denise Denis.

In the same game, catcher KJ Kelley broke UMass's all-time home-run record with her 27th career home run in the first inning. Kelley hit No. 28 later in the game during the late rally.

UMass coach Elaine Sortino knows the significance of the rivalry but keeps the game in perspective, knowing it's still a non-conference matchup.

"Just because it's UConn, it's always a big game. UMass and UConn is a big softball game in New England," Sortino said.

UMass has been on a tear as of late, winning nine of its last 10 games, and seven of eight in the A-10. The Minutewomen are currently in first place in the conference, with a one-game lead over second-place Fordham (22-16, 6-2 A-10).

One big reason for the team's success is the performance of the team's freshmen, who are quickly becoming leaders on the field.

Starting pitcher Brandice Balschmiter has been on fire to begin her collegiate career. The freshman is 14-6 with a 0.84 earned run average. She has more strikeouts (152) than innings pitched (149.2), and has four games in which she threw 10 or more strikeouts.

Balschmiter was also named A-10 Pitcher of the Week on Monday for her performance against Charlotte on Sunday. She started both games, going 1-1 with a 0.58 ERA, and 14 strikeouts. It is the fifth time this season Balschmiter has won the award. She has also earned A-10 Rookie of the Week once.

Whitney Mollica is another freshman who has been huge for the Minutewomen. Mollica is second on the team in batting with a .426 average, and leads the Maroon and White in home runs this season with seven. She is just two shy of tying UMass's all-time record for home runs by a freshman. Brandi Cross holds the record with nine, which was set back in 2000.

Mollica is currently tied for third on the all-time list with teammate Stacy Cullington, who hit seven round-trippers last season. KJ Kelley is second with eight as a freshman in 2003.

These two rookies have helped lead UMass to the top of the A-10 in both team batting average (.312) and team slugging percentage (.473), as well as team ERA (2.21).

UMass senior second baseman Kristi Stefanoni has 12 hits, 13 runs and four RBI this season. She will look to inflate those numbers when the Minutewomen travel to UConn today at 4:30.

Picking up the pieces in Wis.

Jeff Howe

As a sports writer for three years now, I have gotten to do some things I used to only dream about when I was younger. I've shaken the hands of some of my childhood heroes, made a lot of great friendships among respected media members and covered some of the greatest athletic events in the country.

Last week ranked as one of the highest points of my young journalistic life, as I was sent out to Milwaukee to cover the Frozen Four — for those less knowledgeable of the hockey jargon, it was the 2006 NCAA Men's Ice Hockey National Championship.

And it was the greatest time of my life.

I was there covering the tournament for Inside College Hockey, where I have worked since August, with an extended group of writers also with the Web site. The following is the abbreviated version of the event's running diary, which was archived at the top of my head.

WEDNESDAY

11 a.m. I arrive at the Bradley Center in Milwaukee after departing from Boston at 7 a.m. I still have no idea what the deal is with the change in time zones, but I was apparently living in Central Time at this point.

11:10 a.m. I stumble across Boston Globe columnist Bob Ryan, who — like myself — is doing laps around the Bradley Center trying to find the media entrance. Apparently it doesn't matter that the entrance could be the doorway located 50 feet across the hall, we still had to walk 300 yards around the building to get to it. Ryan, for all intents and purposes, was a great guy.

4:00 p.m. All of the practice skates and press conferences are pretty much over with for the day. No one on either of the involved teams — Boston College, North Dakota, Maine and Wisconsin — did much on the ice or said much following the skate-around; sounds like the week's events in Buffalo.

9:20 p.m. We walk into the Nike Bauer party at some way-too-overpriced bar across the street from the hotel we were graciously put up in. Side note: If you're going to throw an upscale party with tons of free food, keep the menu cleaner than Buffalo wings. Props on the meatballs, though. The drinks were free for a little while, which was nice, because when we learned of the prices after the cut-off point, the first thing we did was find our new home away from home.

11:15 p.m. Hello to The Lodge. Goodbye to this portion of the diary.

THURSDAY

2:07 p.m. The puck drops to launch the beginning of the first semifinal game between BC and North Dakota. We are treated with a great surprise. Our media seats were four rows behind the penalty box at center ice — a huge rarity for a hockey game. God bless the Bradley Center event staff.

4:05 p.m. BC's Nathan Gerbe didn't just undress NoDak defensive captain Matt Smaby; he ripped his uniform off, slapped the game, walked into the Sioux section and personally handed it to Smaby's family. Rumor has it that Smaby is still lying naked on his back looking at the ceiling of the Bradley Center after the goal of the weekend.

4:30 p.m. Behind a Chris Collins hat trick, BC staves off an intense North Dakota rally and moves into Saturday's championship with a 6-5 win.

8:40 p.m. Unless you truly believed Maine was going to beat Wisconsin — even after cutting the deficit to 3-2 in the third period — this game had long since been decided, but the Badger faithful (more on them later) made the game worthwhile with their intense cheers in unison. Think Alfond Arena times five, or the Mullins Center times 18,000.

11:50 p.m. A UW-Milwaukee coed is spotted dancing on the bar at The Lodge. After hilariously whacking her head on an overhanging light, she tumbled off face-first. We laugh because she wasn't hurt.

11:52 p.m. A 40-year-old North Dakota fan "who dances like (NoDak goalie) Jordan Parise" tries wowing the audience by doing a split on the bar. No one cares, until he follows suit and also lands on his head.

FRIDAY

4:00 p.m. Good time for everyone to wake up and head out to the UNCHC party down the street. On the way there, the INCHECAC writer informs me that the Arizona Diamondbacks are staying in our hotel during their weekend series with the — brace yourself — undefeated Brewers. I'm immediately excited to try snagging some autographs…

4:01 p.m. I realize that I don't care about a single baseball player on the Diamondbacks.

6:00 p.m. Matt Carle wins the Hobey. Ho-hum.

9:00 p.m. The fourth annual Inside College Hockey Barkan Bash kicks off at — where else? — The Lodge. It was, of course, the greatest party of the week. Ask anyone there.

11:00 p.m. I meet and immediately fall in love with a girl from Milwaukee named Laura. If anyone knows her whereabouts and how I can contact her, my e-mail address is at the bottom of this column. Use it. Please.

SATURDAY

8:30 p.m. Wisconsin wins the national championship after BC defenseman Peter Harrold's shot from the left side deflects low off the stick of Brian Boyle, hits the post with 1.7 seconds left in the game and bounces wide. Coach Mike Eaves wins his first national championship with the Badgers since playing on the same team as goalie Dave McNab — a champion of life.

11:45 p.m. Back at The Lodge, I congratulate a Wisconsin fan decked out in red, and he simply shrugs, nods his head and turns away. That was pretty much the consensus of those fans. They love their team, don't know a thing about hockey and seem to care about no one but themselves. They made for a great atmosphere at the rink, but they often tried ruining it off the ice.

SUNDAY

9:10 p.m. In Cincinnati, the flight to Boston is delayed 40 minutes to change a tire at the front of the plane. Good to hear. But after five days of "pumping tires" it seemed appropriate that the trip had come full circle.

Jeff Howe is the Collegian Sports Editor and the Hockey East writer for InsideCollegeHockey.com. He can be reached at JeffHowe@DailyCollegian.com

UM sets serve at home

BY JOSHUA FRIEDMAN
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

The Massachusetts tennis team (10-8, 3-1, A-10) heads into the home stretch, looking to finish the regular season strong against its last two opponents.

With Atlantic 10 conference play behind the Minutewomen, the remaining two matches against Quinnipiac and Boston University should serve as a chance to make final preparations and adjustments for the conference championships in Monroeville, Pa. starting on April 20.

The Minutewomen will face off against Quinnipiac at 3 p.m. today, which is also Senior Day, at the Upper Boyden Courts for the final home match of the season. Seniors Jana Bartolomi, Lesley Fisher, Dorothy Iwanowicz and Susan Johnson will all be honored before the match.

Recently commended Atlantic 10 Co-Player of the Week and UMass Co-Athlete of the Week Michele Spiess will be looking to earn her 40th combined win this season.

Spiess has now compiled at least 20 wins in two straight seasons and has earned a combined 39-6 record this season. She has now been awarded A-10 Player of the Week honors three times this year.

The final home match for the Minutewomen looks to be a good contest. The Bobcats have been tabbed as the 2006 Northeast Conference women's tennis favorites according to a poll of the head coaches in the conference.

Quinnipiac will compete for its third straight NEC title. Led by 2005 NEC Coach of the Year Mike Quitko, the Bobcats lost only two players from last season's championship squad.

The player to watch closely on Quinnipiac is 2005 NEC Player of the Year junior Gabby Pasternak, who will battle Spiess at No. 1 singles.

The Bobcats have three other All-NEC First-Team players, senior Tina Hoang, 2005 NEC Rookie of the Year Amanda Pertuzzi and junior Danielle Rodriquez. The doubles tandem of Pasternak and Hoang has posted an impressive 12-2 record this spring, including seven wins in a row.

Minutewoman junior Michele Spiess will be looking to earn her 40th victory this season when UMass takes on Quinnipiac today at 3 p.m.

UMass downed by Connecticut

BY DANNY PICARD
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Massachusetts baseball team was unable to grab its third consecutive win yesterday afternoon, as it lost to Connecticut by a score of 7-1 in the first game of a two-week road trip. The Minutemen (5-15, 3-6 Atlantic 10) left seven runners on base and only had six hits in the non-conference battle.

UMass freshman left-hander Tom Cote was charged with his third loss of the season. Cote allowed three runs on five hits and three walks in 6 1 innings on the hill. Connecticut's John Slusarz picked up the win, improving his record to 3-1.

The Minutemen will be back in action when they begin a three-game series with La Salle at 3 p.m. tomorrow afternoon in Philadelphia.

Connecticut got on the board first with two runs in the bottom of the third, thanks to one of Larry Day's two RBIs that he had in the game. UMass made it a one-run game in the top of the seventh when freshman Jim Macdonald's RBI single drove in junior Bryan Adamski. The run was Adamski's 13th of the year, while Macdonald's RBI was the ninth of his collegiate career.

The Huskies answered by scoring another run in the bottom half of the seventh to make it a 3-1 game. Connecticut then put the game out of reach in the bottom of the eighth when it scored four runs to give the Huskies a 7-1 advantage.

While there was not much offense for UMass, there was something positive that came out of yesterday's game. Junior shortstop Lou Proietti extended his hitting streak to eight games with a successful bunt in the eighth inning. The junior college transfer finished the game 1-for-3 with a walk, and is now tied for the team lead in hitting with a solid .329 batting average.

Favre not above game

When is a player bigger than the game? Or can a player ever be bigger than the game he or she plays?

Can a player be bigger when he throws for 53,615 career yards and 396 touchdowns?

You guessed it. I'm talking about the famous Green Bay Packer, Mr. Brett Favre.

Joey White

Favre is second to Dan Marino in passing yards, touchdowns, passing attempts (7,610), and completions (4,678) and is third in career wins behind Marino and John Elway with 139.

The "Iron Man" has started the most consecutive games for a quarterback with 221 (241 including the playoffs), has one Super Bowl ring and is the NFL's only three-time Most Valuable Player, as he won it each year from 1995-97.

Without question, those are amazing stats, and he will definitely be a Hall of Famer. But does that mean he's allowed to do what he's doing right now — making the Packers, his fans and the sport wait and bow to him?

As recently as this past Saturday at his annual charity golf tournament in Tunica, Miss., Favre addressed the world. The football world was listening and watching, hoping to hear his decision on whether or not he is returning or retiring — a statement that eager fans have been anticipating since the end of last season and also the year before that.

But Favre, as he did many times last season, disappointed the fans and did not give a straight answer, while Aaron Rodgers, the Packers' first-round draft pick (24th overall) in 2005, awaits his first NFL start.

Speaking of baseball, there is another player that comes to mind when discussing current professional athletes being "above the game," if you will. And I am speaking of the former Red Sox great, Roger Clemens.

This guy makes athletes believe that they can still perform at an old age as he had one of his best years last season. Even though the 43-year-old only went 13-8 last year for the Houston Astros, he had a career-best ERA of 1.87, giving up only 51 runs (44 earned) on 151 hits and almost struck out 200 batters for the 12th time in his career with 185.

Clemens is one of six pitchers all-time to make at least 20 starts in 20 consecutive seasons. He is second only to Nolan Ryan in strikeouts with 4,502 and is a seven-time Cy Young Award winner.

Are those stats reason to believe that one is bigger than the game itself?

If you watched the Red Sox first game of the

See WHITE on page 10

Winer signs with Springfield

The man many regard as the greatest goaltender in the history of the Massachusetts hockey team is making his way back to the Pioneer Valley.

Gabe Winer, who just completed his senior season with the Minutemen last month, has signed an Amateur Tryout Agreement with the Springfield Falcons of the American Hockey League. The Falcons, affiliates of the defending Stanley Cup Champion Tampa Bay Lightning of the National Hockey League, announced the agreement with Winer yesterday.

Winer was most remembered for his 59-save performance in UMass's 2-1 triple-overtime loss to Maine in the 2004 Hockey East championship game at the Fleet Center. As a four-year starter, he compiled a 50-52-10 record with five shutouts. While splitting time with freshman Jon Quick this season, Winer went 9-11-1 between the pipes. He had an .891 save percentage and 2.48 goals against average in his four years in Amherst.

After the Minutemen were swept in a two-game quarterfinal series by eventual Hockey East champion Boston University on March 11, Winer joined with Johnstown Chiefs of the ECHL, where he went 2-2-1 while competing in seven games. He had a .910 save percentage and 3.66 goals against average.

The Falcons have three games remaining on their schedule, including two at home this week.

Jeff Howe

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY · EST. 1890

The Daily Collegian

THURSDAY, APRIL 13, 2006 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM VOLUME CXVI ISSUE 114

Participation urged as new SGA members are welcomed

BY MATT BELLIVEAU
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Student Government Association of the University of Massachusetts appointed three new cabinet members in a relatively quiet senate meeting yesterday.

Senators approved the appointment of Gigi Arguello as the new Secretary of Public Policy and Relations and re-appointed Chinedu Okongwu as Secretary of Finance and Jaimie Corliss as Secretary of the Registry.

President Elvis Mendez spoke briefly on why he felt Arguello was qualified for her new position.

"She has demonstrated a lot of self initiative and was heavily involved in many areas of the public policy and relations (PPR) committee," said Mendez. "She also comes with a extremely positive recommendation from the current chair of the PPR committee, Eric Robbie."

Arguello expressed some of her plans in acting as the new secretary.

"I've thoroughly enjoyed the PPR committee," said Arguello. "I plan to work very closely with the other cabinet members along with President Elvis Mendez and Student Trustee Mishy Lieblum."

As secretary of PPR, Arguello is responsible for acting as Mendez's liaison to the University Central Administration, as well as his connection to the media and for coordinating the SGA's distribution of information.

Mendez also urged students to volunteer to sit on the University's faculty senate committees.

"This is part one of a larger effort to have more students involved in campus politics," said Mendez.

By sitting on the committee, students enroll themselves into a one-credit course that meets once a month. Students are also asked to write a three-page paper relevant to their work at end

See SGA on page 2

Supporting student business

UMass student businesses opened up shop yesterday in front of the Student Union to raise awareness of their establishments, which are largely student-run and operated.

Booze affected Johnston's behavior prior to killing

BY BRENDAN HALL
COLLEGIAN STAFF

NORTHAMPTON—Alleged alcohol abuse and its effect on Bryan Johnston's paranoia was a staple in the testimonies of all seven witnesses who took to the stand yesterday in the trial of the former Westfield State College student who's charged with murder.

After a little over a week of directly examining a wide array of witnesses, the prosecution rested this morning, turning the duty over to the defense. All but two of the seven witnesses were friends and former high school classmates of Johnson, who is being accused of the 2004 murder of former high school classmate and University of Massachusetts student David "Sully" Sullivan. Of those five, only one did not testify that Johnston was at times a "heavy" drinker.

The other witnesses, a Massachusetts state trooper and Johnston's former supervisor at Bay State Medical Center, had reported Johnston acting strangely in separate incidents.

Defense attorney Alex Nappan started the day by calling James Ryan, a state trooper of 24 years at the Westfield barracks. Ryan was asked a line of questions stemming from an incident on the night of Oct. 19, 2002 in which a young white male, identified later that night as Johnston, came through the barracks door and told Ryan that some people were chasing him.

After a complete scan of the entire building revealed that there were no vehicles besides Johnston's and no people at the barracks besides the two of them, Ryan directed Johnston into the booking room, placed him on a bench and put one handcuff on him to restrain

See MURDER TRIAL on page 2

Local students donate books to Baghdad

BY SUSAN KING
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

In an effort to rebuild the war-torn library of Baghdad University in Iraq, Books Building Bridges is asking students at Western Massachusetts colleges and universities to donate academic textbooks in an ongoing book drive this semester.

Books Building Bridges is working with the colleges and universities in the Pioneer Valley to support the donations of textbooks that are no more than five years old in the following academic fields: engineering, math, science, computer science, medicine and technology.

The project works in conjunction with Books for Baghdad, organized in 2004 by Dr. Safaa Al-Hamdani, a biology professor at Jacksonville State University.

"We should do what we can to help," Dr. Al-Hamdani says. "I cannot emphasize the tremendous need for the books and computers in Iraq."

Dr. Al-Hamdani's inspiration was Jeanette Winter's book The Librarian of Basra, which chronicles the work of Alia Muhammed Baker, who worked in her community to save 30,000 volumes from being destroyed by the war.

Since 2004, Dr. Al-Hamdani has sent over 11,000 textbooks but says the university is still struggling to provide adequate material.

Holyoke Community College student Raul Matta says the war has had a tremendous impact on education.

"People don't understand the smaller and more insidious destruction of war, but our own experience as students helps us to understand the impact war has on education," Matta says. "Without books, we as students would be entirely handicapped, and because we can relate to the need for books and resources at our colleges, we understand the need to help the students of Baghdad University."

Books Building Bridges is working to not only to help alleviate the problems Iraq's educational system is facing, but also to bridge the political and geographical gap between the two countries. Along with the book drive, the organization is also creating a pen-pal program between students in Massachusetts and Iraq.

Students have been working to bring these book drives to their schools in order to help the students of Iraq effectively. Smith College senior Ayerstin Rossi says, "The problem of war is so huge and unmanageable, what can we possibly do to change things? This is something so tangible that we can do to make very concrete improvements in the lives of Iraqi students."

The United Nations Children Fund (UNICEF) reports that more than 200 schools have been destroyed during the current war with Iraq while many others have been looted.

After many education reforms in the 1970s and 1980s, Iraq's educational system was among the best in the region, with high literacy rates in the adult population. However, the past two decades have wreaked havoc on education due to wars, sanctions and harsh economic conditions. By the end of the year 2000, Iraq had the lowest regional literacy rate. Also, the decade following the 1991 Gulf War resulted in the plummeting of school spending by 90 percent and teachers' salaries dropped to $6 a month.

The smaller libraries have been the most affected by the war. Many libraries are destroyed and while books may be saved, they are often unavailable to the public.

The donated books will be shipped to faculty and students at Baghdad University in July 2006.

For more information, visit www.booksbuildingbridges.org.

Prof gets grant for STEM gender study

BY HEATHER DIMARO
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

Nilanjana Dasgupta, an assistant psychology professor, received a $400,500 grant from the National Science Foundation after she wrote an academic piece last summer, which examined the factors that either encourage or discourage female students from studying and pursuing careers in science, technology, engineering and mathematics (STEM).

Learning how to recruit women for the currently male-dominated fields of science and mathematics, and how to retain them in the academic and professional world, is one of the main goals that Dasgupta seeks to accomplish with her recently-awarded CAREER grant.

Dasgupta's theoretical model, constructed to be the basis of her investigation, focuses on gender stereotypes that emerge in male-dominated STEM educational environments. Her theory tests how these stereotypes dictate female students' outlooks, decisions, and performances in STEM, and whether a more gender-diverse educational atmosphere ameliorates these STEM stereotypes.

Dasgupta said there is little disparity between men and women's overall performances in STEM, but when looking at standardized test scores and the gender of students who actually pursue this field of work, both tend to favor males.

Biological sciences tend to have equal numbers of male and female students, but with physical sciences, "the percentage of women to men sharply drops off," Dasgupta said, and the problem is just as prevalent at UMass.

"A skewed ratio of men to women in the sciences exists here as much as anywhere else," she said.

The tests, set to begin in the fall, will examine students from UMass, Amherst Middle School, and other colleges in the area using longitudinal and lab studies.

Longitudinal studies will track students over a period of time, some over a period of four years at the collegiate level who begin in a certain STEM major. Dasgupta said she will track these students from their freshman year to see how their attitudes and performances in the major change, taking into consideration peer and faculty gender in the classroom.

Dasgupta said she also plans to track an eighth grade physics class at Amherst Middle School with both male and female teachers to see how students' performances and interests in the class change over the course of the year in relation to faculty gender. Lab studies will be cross-sectional experiments that randomly assign half of the participants to interact with a male expert and the other half with a female expert to see how performances and interests differ, Dasgupta said.

Dasgupta, who has been at UMass since 2003 and studying this kind of research since 1997, said

See STUDY on page 3

New type of charity gives money to schools

BY SARA I. SMITH
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

A new Yahoo!-powered Internet search engine called GoodSearch.com donates about a penny for every Web search to the charity or school of the user's choice.

The donated money for the search engine comes from ads, not users. Users can select an organization from the Web site's list, or add one that's not already available. Then, every time they search, the money goes to that cause. When a charity isn't selected, the profits go to fund operations then are divided among other organizations.

The Idea for GoodSearch.com comes from brother and sister Ken and J.J. Ramberg, whose backgrounds seem perfect for the endeavor. Ken Ramberg sits on the Advisory Board for Venice Family Clinic, the nation's largest free clinic. In addition he was formerly CEO of JOBTRAK Corporation, the largest Internet career site for college students and recent graduates. J.J. Ramberg worked as a television news reporter, a director of marketing at Cooking.com, and at NBC news. She spent time working for microfinance organizations in Uganda and India.

The siblings put their heads together to think of a way everyone could support their favorite charities. When they discovered that $6 billion in revenue was generated by online advertising in 2005, they considered what a fraction of that money could do for charities.

The site began operating in November 2006.

"It just seemed to make a lot of sense to help raise money for charities just by having people search the Internet," Ken Ramberg says.

College students have started using GoodSearch.com to raise funds for their favorite charities.

"We're really excited about the college response and the enthusiasm that's spreading on college campuses," Ramberg says.

Universities like Penn State, the University of Georgia, Indiana University and University of

See DONATIONS on page 2

Historical healthcare bill signed into law

BY STEVE LEBLANC
ASSOCIATED PRESS

BOSTON — Gov. Mitt Romney signed into law Wednesday a landmark health care bill designed to insure nearly all Massachusetts residents and set a national standard for other states to follow.

Even as he signed the bill, surrounded by state and congressional leaders at a ceremony steeped in fanfare at Boston's historic Faneuil Hall, Romney faced criticism for his decision to veto a key portion of the bill requiring all businesses that do not provide health insurance to pay a $295 annual fee.

The law, intended to require coverage for nearly all of Massachusetts' estimated 550,000 uninsured, has thrust the state to the forefront of the national debate about how to provide near-universal health care coverage without creating a single government-controlled system.

It's also a political coup for Romney as he weighs a potential run for the Republican presidential nomination in 2008. The law could be a centerpiece of that campaign if Romney can credibly claim spearheading a groundbreaking health care reform package.

Romney called the legislation a big step forward in health care reform.

"The reason this is so landmark is that we have found a way, collectively, to get all of our citizens insurance without some new government-mandated takeover or a huge new tax program," he said. "Instead the money we're spending on uncompensated care is going to be able to help people get insured and get the subsidy they need to buy that insurance they can afford."

The many speakers at the ticket-only event attended by more than 300 people were quick to congratulate each other on the bipartisan effort. Romney and Democratic U.S. Sen. Edward Kennedy shared the same Faneuil Hall stage for the first time since Romney's failed effort to unseat him in 1994.

"With the signing of this landmark health reform bill, after so many years of false starts, our actions have finally matched our words and we have lived up to our ideals," Kennedy said. "You have given Massachusetts just what the doctor ordered."

See HEALTHCARE on page 3

ARTS & LIVING

MATISYAHU HITS NORTHAMPTON

Hasidic Reggae superstar awakens the Calvin

PAGE 6

EDITORIAL/OPINION

PATRIOTS' DAY APPROACHING

Does our University's appearance make us proud.

PAGE 5

WEATHER

TODAY
High 69
AM Showers

TONIGHT
Low 42
Partly cloudy

TOMORROW
High 66
Low 43
PM Showers

SPORTS

HOBART THROWDOWN

Minutemen set to take on Hobart this weekend.

PAGE 12

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief Michael Busack
Managing Editor Eric Athas
Business Manager Nathan Chomsky
Production Manager Nicholas Belanger
Night Supervisor Katie Hunton
Advertising Manager Kerry O'Grady
Advertising Production Lauren Egavian
Editorial Production Amanda Allen
Arts & Living Editor Ian Jones
Copy Editor Amanda Allen
Editorial Editor Kristen LaCasse
News Editor Dan O'Brien
Sports Editor Jeff Howe
Circulation Manager Thomas Hecht
Distribution Manager Nick Gleason
Finance Manager Daniel Conti
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Assistant Advertising Caren Tortorici
Assistant Business Phil Smollen
Asst. Arts & Living Morgan-Ann Rousseau
Asst. Arts & Living Alex Butler
Assistant News Megan Daley
Assistant News Matt Bellveau
Assistant Sports Dan Duggan
Assistant Sports Rob Greenfield
Assistant Editorial Tucker Merrick

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is independently funded, operating on advertising revenue founded in 1890, the paper began as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1956. Published daily since 1967, The Collegian has been broadsheet since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 3:30 p.m.

Production Crew
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Nick Belanger

COPY EDITOR
Meghan Murphy

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Amanda Allen

PRODUCTION STAFF
Tiffany Van Langen, Ginny Nielsen

Witnesses say Johnston acted reckless when drunk him until his father came to pick him up.

MURDER TRIAL from page 1

In prosecutor Renee Steese's cross-examination, Ryan reported that there was no mention from Johnston of the CIA, mafia or "bloods" gang members being in pursuit of him — three distinct groups that Johnston had reportedly grown a paranoia for.

Matt Riley, a 23-year-old manager at Bub's Barbecue in Sunderland and former classmate of Johnston's at Wahconah Regional High School in Dalton, was next called to testify. Riley became friends with both Johnston and Sullivan in ninth grade, but became closer friends with Sullivan after high school; the two were roommates for two years on 105 Meadow Street, the scene of the murder.

Riley said he noticed a change in Johnston after the defendant returned to Massachusetts from Hawaii Pacific University in Honolulu. The stories Johnston began to tell — of people following him, the "beta mafia" trying to kill him — were "pretty scattered ... they didn't make much sense to me, there were things happening that I couldn't comprehend." Riley also said that these stories would come up "as often as we [he and Johnston] got drunk, basically."

Among other things, he also reported that Johnston had accused Sullivan of being the boss of the "Sullivan Crime Family," and that one night he went to Johnston's apartment and saw Johnston, who would point to spots on ceilings and say there were cameras there, causing him to wave a handgun later that night. In cross-examination, it was found that the two had also been drinking that night.

Nappan next called Justin Bond, a 2005 UMass graduate, who graduated a year behind his friends Johnston and Sullivan, to testify. Bond recalled one night in Washington dorm at UMass when he was struck in face with a beer bottle, and Johnston was the only one who answered his phone call to come help him get medical attention. However, what he called "reckless behavior" on Johnston's behalf caused Bond to lose contact with him in 2003.

One instance happened at 105 Meadow Street, where Bond was one of Sullivan's roommates. According to Bond, Johnston had in his possession a handgun, and was waving it around "in a reckless manner." Bond added that these types of incidents only happened when Johnston consumed alcohol.

Before this incident, the two would see each other on a weekly or bi-weekly basis. Half of the time, Johnston would talk about his suspicions that the mafia was trying to kill him.

Lindsay Tucker, 23, of Hinsdale, testified that that Johnston had a quick temper and was a "heavy drinker."

Johnston's supervisor at Bay State, Ronald Condino, reported no problems with Johnston as a security guard, and had even moved him to be unsupervised.

"He did well with the public," Condino said. "His line of work is a highly service-oriented job, and I thought he did well."

Condino was asked to elaborate on an incident on Oct. 2, 2004, in which Johnston, Condino and several other officers were drinking together at City Line, a pub popular with many employees of Bay State for its close proximity to the hospital. Several coworkers casually stated that they don't know Johnston well, and wanted to know more about him, to which he responded "What do you think I'm in, the CIA?"

Accused murderer Bryan Johnston, left, stands with his defense attorney on Monday in Hampshire Superior Court during trial.

Later that night, outside of nearby Norman's Diner, Johnston reportedly said to Condino, "I know you're in the mafia, I know how you Italians work."

When Condino made a passive rebuttal of "I'm just a hard-working guy like you," Johnston allegedly clenched his fist, turned away and mumbled something agitated.

Adreana Allaine, a 22-year-old hairstylist and former classmate, testified that she became friendlier with Johnston than Sullivan after high school, and enjoyed his company. She said in the fall of 2002 she went to go give Johnston a hug at a bar, when she felt a gun on his back, which he assured her was okay because it was "legal." She noticed a personality change in him after that incident, mainly related to paranoia, but denied that he was neither an aggressive drinker nor one who actively picks fights.

Jeremy Levernoch, 24, a car stereo specialist in Albany, N.Y., was the final witness to testify. He was a friend of Johnston and Sullivan at Wahconah, and socialized a lot with both of them. He reported that one night, roughly a month before the murder, he fell asleep at Johnston's apartment only to be startled by Johnston early in the morning, attempting to pull off Levernoch's red shirt. He thought Levernoch was a "blood" because of the shirt he was wearing.

He added that on the average night following Johnston's return to Massachusetts, they would consume an average of 10 to 12 beers each. That number grew to the 18 to 20 range on weekends. Johnston's talk of paranoia, Levernoch testified, occurred when he was drunk.

The defenses' case will resume in Hampshire Superior Court today. The trial could last another two weeks, with over 100 people on the witness list.

SGA discusses new student housing options of semester.

SGA from page 1

"The workload is light, but the importance of speaking for students is profound," said Mendez.

Robbie, who organized Wednesday's open-forum for students to discuss issues raised by the new mandatory EPOCH freshman-housing program, saw the forum as a success.

"We didn't have a huge turnout, but the people that testified rose some great questions," said Robbie. "Some people testified for the program, some against it, but it was good to get people out there and talking about this."

The EPOCH program, designed for first-year students at UMass, is currently being implemented in three residence halls (Pierpont, Moore, and Melville) and the University is planning to expand it to six more residence halls before 2008, including Van Meter, Thoreau, Kennedy, John Adams, Cance, and Wheeler.

"This is one of the most significant changes to happen to student affairs and campus life in a long time," said Robbie.

UMass graduate and coordinator of the Student Center for Education and Reform Jamie Jee also announced that advocates and students from across Massachusetts would be attending meetings in the State House with legislators between 11 a.m. and 2 p.m. in support for adequate funding for public higher education.

Robbie also stated that volunteers are needed for an emergency preparedness drill for Thursday, April 20 at 8 p.m.

The drill will simulate a mass vaccination effort. Volunteers will play the roles of disaster victims; no injections will be given.

To sign up, or for more information on the drill, students can contact Tom Schiff from University of Health Services at 577-5181, or by his e-mail, tschiff@uhs.umass.edu.

Shawn Robinson, chair of the Ways and Means committee, warned Registered Student Organizations that if their budget proposals were not received by 2 p.m. on April 17 that they would be without funding for next year.

"If groups haven't given us their proposals yet, they can Friday; just come up to CSD Friday and we will work with you to get one done by Monday," said Robinson. "Our final budget should be presented on April 26. So, we'll actually be able to work on any problems we may find this year and we won't have to approve it all in one meeting."

In the back from left to right are Sean Bliss, Valerie Lewis, and Eric Robbie at last night's UMass SGA meeting.

Charity innovative with donation methods

DONATIONS from page 1

Iowa have promoted the site as a way for supporters to raise funds for the charities they support year-round.

The University of Iowa Dance Marathon donates to the Miracle Network for Pediatric Cancer. "In just the first week and a half [of promoting the site] we brought in $50, and we haven't even promoted it as much as we plan to," says Travis Bushaw, chief executive director of the UI Dance Marathon.

Since GoodSearch.com's goal is to raise as much money for charitable causes as possible, they don't spend much on advertising. The site relies on word of mouth, publicity, and promotion from charities, including the Juvenile Diabetes Research Foundation, the Elizabeth Glaser Pediatric Aids Foundation and Heal the Bay.

GoodSearch.com's greatest accomplishment so far has been the support "already received from thousands of charities, major organizations, and thousands of smaller organizations that they were never aware of," Ken Ramberg says. "To raise awareness, I think, is a great accomplishment, and the speed of which it's taken off is very exciting as well."

Tired of the Dorms?
It's never too early to look for an apartment with Lincoln Real Estate
Lincoln Real Estate
32 N. Pleasant St.
253-7679
www.amherstlincolnrealty.com
Now accepting applications for June 2006

Let us see you 'work it'
The Daily Collegian
Apply NOW!
113 Campus Center Basement

STUDENT LEGAL SERVICES OFFICE
UMASS, AMHERST
CALL 545-1995
or stop in at 922 Campus Center

Celebrity Beauty
Beauty Is Our Only Business
Bring this ad for 30% OFF any service!
Hours: Tuesday-Friday 11-6 Saturday 10-4
321 Main St Amherst (Next to Bruno's)
413 256 0869

CLUB JL
Proudly Presents.
A NEWLY REMODELED CLUB IN WESTERN, MASS.
Come see us soon!
Immediate Openings
Start Today!
No Experience • No Problem

comedy CONNECTION
THIS SATURDAY!
HUKELAU
413•593•5222
705 Memorial Drive in Chicopee
www.hukelau.com
ORDER YOUR TICKETS TODAY!
7PM
From "Saturday Night Live"!
TRACY MORGAN
From the movie "The Longest Yard" and Comedy Central's "Crank Yankers"
MAY 20TH
From "Whose Line Is It Anyway?"
GREG PROOPS

summer SLEEPOVER SALE
CHEAP R/T AIRFARE
LONDON from $261*
PARIS from $360*
PRAGUE from $392*
HOSTEL HOOKUP
HOSTELS from $19*
GOOD VIBRATIONS HOTELS from $29*
BEDS WITH BENEFITS HOTELS from $39*
CAIRNS, MUNICH, MELBOURNE, PRAGUE, ATHENS, QUEENSTOWN, MADRID, MIAMI, HONG KONG, HONG KONG, SYDNEY, MADRID, BERLIN, CAPE TOWN, NEW YORK, PARIS, SAN FRANCISCO
*Hurry! Hotel/hostel rates ends 6/17/06. Prices are per person, per night. Some restrictions apply. Airfare is correct at time of print and out of Boston. Taxes and applicable fees not included. CST #1017580-40
Call or come in to book now:
U of M Campus Center, Rm. 224
(413) 256.1261
STA TRAVEL
www.statravel.com

Fulbright Fellowship awarded to professor

By Derrick Perkins
Collegian Correspondent

Economics professor and faculty advisor for the Center for Public Policy and Administration (CPPA) at the University of Massachusetts Michael Ash has been awarded a Fulbright Fellowship for the spring of 2007 in Budapest, Hungary.

Ash will be researching environmental justice at the Corvinus University of Budapest and will serve on the board of the Center for Environmental Policy and Law (CEPL) at the English-language and U.S. accredited Central European University. Ash is planning to collaborate on an environmental justice study with Janos Ladanyi, a professor of sociology and social policy at Corvinus University.

While formally sponsored by Chair of the Sociology Department at Corvinus University Professor Zoltan Szanto, Ash believes that it is his contact with Ladanyi, whom he describes as a "prominent Hungarian academic," that made his application more attractive to the Fulbright Commission.

His research will culminate with what Ash hopes will be a publishable paper or series of papers on the stratification of exposure to pollution in Eastern Europe.

"I want to look and see if poorer communities or if communities that are disproportionately composed of racial and ethnic minorities are disproportionately exposed to industrial pollution in the same ways that my research in the U.S. has found," Ash said.

While in Budapest, Ash will be teaching one or two semester-long courses at Corvinus University on policy analysis, quantitative methods and geographic information systems, all three of which he considers relevant to studying how the effects of pollution are distributed across class and ethnicity. He also hopes to have a series of workshops and seminars for faculty and graduate students at the Central European University.

Ash believes that the experience he has had teaching at UMass Amherst for the past seven years is integral to what he is bringing to the students and faculty at both of the European universities.

"I've had a great opportunity at UMass to develop courses that are simultaneously using high-tech techniques, econometrics, statistics, and microeconomics, for policy relevant topics," he said. All of these, according to Ash, help students solve the citizenship and public decision-making questions that will confront them. He is also "very excited to connect with policy-oriented students in the Hungarian higher education system."

Ash is looking forward to the way in which his research in Hungary will enrich his future courses at UMass Amherst. He plans to return with a "whole batch of interesting case studies" and a new perspective on environmental justice and public policy. He hopes to impress upon his students at UMass Amherst the way in which Hungarians and Central Europeans view and solve public policy and environmental problems.

Though Ash will be lecturing solely in English while at Corvinus University, he is working towards an understanding of the Hungarian language. He has been using a standard university textbook and has also been tutored in an attempt to familiarize himself with the language before leaving for Hungary. The one phrase he has perfected well in advance is: "I do not speak Hungarian well."

According to its Web site, The Fulbright Program, established in 1946, is the U.S. government's primary international educational exchange program. First proposed by Senator J. William Fulbright, the program is designed to "increase mutual understanding between the people of the United States and the people of other countries of the world." Sponsored by the U.S. Department of State, the Fulbright Program annually sends 800 faculty and professionals to lecture and conduct research abroad. More than 41,000 Fulbright U.S. Scholars have conducted research and taught in 140 other countries since the programs inception. A further 43,000 Fulbright Visiting Scholars have performed similar activities within the United States.

New healthcare bill signed in Bay State

HEALTHCARE from page 1

Besides the $295 per-employee fee, the law provides subsidies and sliding-scale premiums to get poor and low-income residents into health plans. Those deemed able to afford insurance but who still refuse would face increasing tax penalties.

An ABC News-Washington Post poll of more than 1,000 adults nationwide released Wednesday found 55 percent of Americans would support a health care law similar to the Massachusetts model in their own states, with 41 percent opposed. The poll had a margin of error of plus or minus 3 percentage points.

Romney used his line-item veto power to strike eight portions of the bill, most significant the $295 fee. Administration officials say the fee could actually discourage registration for the new health program, since some employers might consider it cheaper to pay the fee than insure workers. Romney, in his veto, said it was not necessary to implement or finance the reform.

Leaders of the heavily Democratic House and Senate have said they would override any changes proposed by the governor.

House Speaker Salvatore DiMasi called the vetoes disingenuous, saying the law was crafted with concessions and compromise.

"To change anything will disturb the delicate balance that made this law possible," DiMasi said. "Each and every element of this law is critical to accomplishing our intentions and goals."

DiMasi said he wasn't sure if the governor was issuing the vetoes "for purposes of making the bill work or making him look good politically."

Business and hospital leaders also criticized the veto of the fee.

Massachusetts Hospital Association President Ron Hollander said the veto threatened the balance of the bill.

"I think it is important that all the parts and all the parties stay together," he said. "The employer assessment is critical."

Michael Widmer, president of the business-backed Massachusetts Taxpayers Foundation called the $295 assessment "a fair compromise that reflected the fact that one group of employers were subsidizing the free care costs of another group."

Romney, speaking to reporters after the event, defended his actions.

"There are many businesses who have been flooding my office with calls as well as business associations, that are very concerned about it," he said. "I made it very clear to both the House and Senate that I didn't believe the $295 made sense."

The Rev. Harmon Hamilton of the Roxbury Presbyterian Church said there are still big questions left unanswered by the bill. He said the one sour note in the hoopla-drenched event was the lack of poor people invited to the historic hall for the signing.

"What was missing from the picture was poor people and people of color, the diversity of the folks who ultimately will be affected and impacted significantly by the bill," he said.

Besides the $295 per-employee fee, the law, would requires everyone in Massachusetts be insured by July 2007, provides subsidies and sliding-scale premiums to get poor and low-income residents into health plans. Those deemed able to afford insurance but who still refuse will face increasing tax penalties.

The first year, they will lose their ability to claim a personal exemption on their state tax returns. That would cost an individual about $189 and a couple filing jointly about $378.

Program encourages diversity in dorms

By Piotr Butkiewicz
Collegian Correspondent

Prince Hall in the Southwest Residential Area at the University of Massachusetts is featuring its annual program "Around the World in 30 Days" as part of a month-long series of events aimed at community building among the living area's diverse student population.

Presentations by international students every Thursday night and an International Dinner at the end of April offer students an opportunity to meet peers from around the world.

"There's really a special international dynamic here in Prince," said 23-year-old graduate student Daniel Petrelli, a resident advisor and organizer of last Thursday's event, where students from Belgium, Wales, France, Poland, Germany, and Sweden made presentations and fielded questions by an inquisitive audience of about 25. The night included sleek PowerPoint shows, photographs, anecdotes, life experiences and travel recommendations.

"They really made me want to go to their countries," said Krista Anthony, a 22-year-old graduate student and Prince resident "I was also impressed with the amount of questions afterward. There was nice discussion after all the presentations."

The program, now in its ninth year, allows Prince residents, a diverse collection of graduate students and international scholars from 42 countries and 18 U.S. states, to present their native countries and share their unique cultures with UMass students "in order to build a foundation for communication, community and respect," says Residence Director Mohamed Gnod. He has been the Prince-Crampton Cluster's RD for the past seven years and is pleased at the success of Around the World and the level of networking among residents.

"We are trying to create an environment where students get to know each other and trust each other," Good said. "Knowing creates respect and community. And some residents tell me that they have seen more diverse scholars from different countries in this building than they have ever seen in their own countries, especially at the college age."

The weekly presentations in Prince's International Lounge are grouped into four regions: Europe & Australia was April 6, the Americas & Caribbean will be showcased tonight, April 13; Asia & the Middle East will be next Thursday, April 20; and Africa & Cape Verde on April 27.

The culmination of the program is an International Dinner on April 29 where residents prepare a buffet of international cuisine for an average turnout of 300 people. The dinner includes music and dance performances by international students and community groups.

All events are open to the public and anyone interested in presenting in the weekly events or participating in the dinner by cooking, playing music, dancing or otherwise can contact RD Mohamed Good at the Prince-Crampton Cluster Office at 545-2299.

Gender in STEM field studied at UMass

STUDY from page 1

that her interest in the investigation was spurred by a broader interest of mind in relation to stereotypes. She said that we tend to group people based on their profession, and as a result, we have very strong stereotypes about what these people are like. The STEM gender gap is just one example of this, Dasgupta said.

Dasgupta will conduct a cross-sectional pilot test this semester with another graduate student, though the real tests will begin in the fall. She said she is looking to speak with undergraduates at UMass who started in or are currently in STEM majors and she is looking for participants who are interested.

Is it in you?
The Daily Collegian

UMass Fine Arts Center
Center Series 2005-2006
30th Anniversary Season
30 Years of WOWS and CHEERS!
THE WORD IS OUT! The Fine Arts Center is turning 30 and is looking forward to a birthday bash that lasts all year long. For this special season, we will bring back some popular favorites, as well as, introduce a few new ones to our stages. Don't miss the party! Look for the stars that indicate that it's a great event for families. And as always, the Fine Arts Center offers substantial discounts for youth 17 and under and seniors.
E=FAC²: Mass Ensemble in Critical Mass
Special Anniversary Event
Thursday, May 4
Bases on Einstein's theories, Mass Ensemble fuses music with technology, sculpture, dance, and aerial performance to create a futuristic performing arts concert.
"Looks like sculpture, sounds like Zappa, kicks like Jackie Chan." -Alaska Design Forum
Concert Hall at 7:30 pm
April 30th is Community Day! Join the fun and big birthday bash while Mass Ensemble strings a giant earth harp from the Concert Hall building to the plaza. More info to come. Sponsered by MassMutual Financial Group, Bank of America, the Valley Advocate and 93.9 The River
TICKETS ARE ON SALE NOW!
Call and ask about our "Take 3" subscription offer or to request a fully illustrated brochure.
CALL 545-2511 or 1-800-999-UMAS
Check us out online at www.fineartscenter.com where you can safely purchase tickets and find press releases, artist features, a visitor's guide and more.
The Fine Arts Center
The Fine Arts Center's venues are fully accessible and ADA compliant.

Dip into Chocolate for the Health of it!
Thursday, April 13, 2006
In All DCs from 5-8 pm
*Indulge with Chocolate Fondue
Pretzel Rods
Dried Apricots
Fresh Strawberries
Pineapple Chunks
Marshmallows
From the UMass Bake Shop
Pound Cake
Angel Cake
Chocolate Cookies
A daily bar-sized indulgence of antioxidant-rich dark chocolate could reduce blood pressure and improve insulin resistance according a recent study at the University of L'Aquila in Italy.*
DINING SERVICES
UMassAmherst
YCMP

ATTENTION STUDENTS WITH DISABILITIES

BILL COSBY

STUDENT UNION - CAPE COD LOUNGE
Friday - 10:00 a.m.
April 14, 2006

WILL BE HERE TO TALK TO STUDENTS WITH DYSLEXIA AND LEARNING DIFFERENCES

OPEN TO ALL STUDENTS

PLEASE ARRIVE EARLY

FREE ADMISSION

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

EDITORIAL OPINION

Thursday, April 13, 2006

"I may not agree with what you say but I will defend to the death your right to say it." Voltaire

editorial@dailycollegian.com

UMass should be doing more

With the holiday coming, students should be able to take pride in their campus. Its appearance, however, is something not yet to be desired.

Gilad Skolnick

One of my favorite holidays of the year is coming up: Patriots Day. A day when we commemorate how our soldiers in Concord and Lexington bravely got crushed by the vicious British, due to our soldiers' inexperience, poor marksmanship and lack of basic training. The ideal way to commemorate this wonderful day is to go see a re-enactment of the battle where it happened, but for those of you who hate America and won't go to see such, then Patriots Day can serve as a valuable day to reflect upon your surroundings. I think it's what Paul Revere might have wanted.

Hence, I have recently been taking the values of Patriots Day to heart. Thinking, observing and reflecting on my surroundings has resulted in the obvious observation. Since my arrival at the University of Massachusetts in the late summer of 2002, this campus has been under construction — constant tearing down, followed by paving, rebuilding and more building. It always looks like our campus has just survived a hurricane or a British invasion (the unpleasant kind that happened in 1776 and the war of 1812, as opposed to the cool 1960s kind). Is our campus deteriorating and falling apart slowly, or is it just improving?

If there was one word to describe UMass' construction, it would be amusing. The parking lot fiasco of 2003 is most notable, when UMass spent tens of thousands of our dollars to pave a beautiful parking lot by the Fine Art Center. Then within weeks after it was built, they destroyed it and spent tens of thousands of dollars to build a slightly different but, nevertheless, very similar parking lot in the same place.

Then there is the New Dirt. UMass' leadership has decided that they needed to make mundane construction projects spicy, so they came up with a better name, so that we will smile a bit more as we walk past the noisy construction. I just hope they get that dark dirt that is nice and rich with nitrogen. I'd also prefer if they could call it New Soil, which has a less offensive ring to it.

Dirt has been moved around since I have arrived here, what is new? At first I thought that UMass' dirt had simply gotten old, and new dirt had to come in and replace it. Perhaps there could be a beautiful picture of what the finished product is supposed to look like at each location instead of just a big threatening sign warning of New Dirt? In addition, I would like at least one batch of real authentic new dirt to be brought over to somewhere on campus.

From half its floors being bookless, because according to one librarian, the building wasn't designed to hold books, to its beautiful locked-off balcony to prevent people from jumping, I guess one should be grateful that it still stands.

Our library, not wanting to be left out of all the action, decided to start leaking. I guess the randomly falling bricks gig was getting boring. Well, two years of construction almost, and it still isn't done. It's taken over a year to repave the area around the library. I don't know much about construction, but I do know that the Empire State Building took under two years to build from start to finish, and that's over 100 stories, and built over 75 years ago.

Surely just redoing the pavement around a 25-story building should take less time. But then again, it would go against our library's history of defying logic. From half its floors being bookless, because according to one librarian, the building wasn't designed to hold books, to its beautiful locked-off balcony to prevent people from jumping, I guess one should be grateful that it still stands.

Further, the forests by Orchard Hill are being threatened by more parking lots. Hopefully they'll get it on the first try. The forest here is blessed with very rare old growth trees, some centuries old. This creates a unique natural habitat that groups like MassPIRG have been fighting to preserve. If only we had a beautiful, free bus network that went everywhere from Belchertown to Northampton, and throughout campus. If anything, I'd like to see the pond paved, that would be a real nice place to park, right in the center of everything; we already scared our beloved swans away anyway.

Additionally, we have a much more serious problem on campus. I am not talking about our ailing network of fallout shelters, whose ability to protect us against nuclear weapons remains questionable. It is a campus that remains unfriendly to those who are handicapped.

I was in a communication class on the second floor of Machmer, in a class discussion about how awful it was that much of the campus wasn't handicapped accessible; in other words, de-facto discrimination against the handicapped. I suddenly realized that the very classroom in which the discussion was held was only accessible by stairs.

I scoured the hallways looking for an elevator but could not find any. The doors on the first floor are not handicap-friendly, either. This is because these buildings have been grandfathered in and are not held accountable to the federal laws. To be fair, UMass is trying to make improvements in this subject to some degree, but perhaps before we get a new fancy on-campus gym, we should make sure that our buildings can be used by all of our students.

So enjoy your amusing surroundings, and during this holiday season I wish you all a happy Passover, a joyful Easter, and most importantly, a patriotic and reflective Patriots Day.

Gilad Skolnick is a Collegian columnist

'Do your job, Mr. President'

World Perspectives

Ben Duffy

Half a million protestors gathered in Los Angeles recently. 50,000 more in Denver, and 20,000 in Phoenix. They were largely illegal immigrants, protesting their right to break our immigration laws. It kind of makes you wonder where the INS was during all of this.

The fact that illegal immigration is an issue in this country makes you wonder if some people ate stupid for breakfast this morning. What's to debate? They broke our laws. As the late Congressman Sonny Bono once said, "My position on illegal immigration? It's illegal."

One of the most common arguments heard from the pro-immigration side of the debate is that illegal immigrants "are coming here to do the jobs that Americans won't do." If those words sound familiar to you, they should. They came from the mouth of President Bush. It's become so bad that the man charged with enforcing our laws has taken the position that these laws aren't worth enforcing. Do your job, Mr. President.

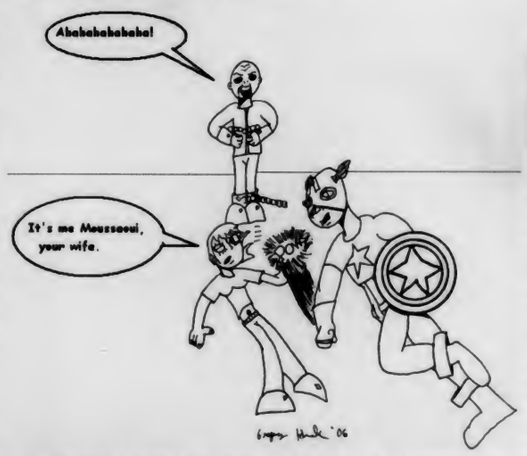
To be sure, most conservatives do not agree with Bush on this one. Though the Republican Party has largely ignored the issue until recently, it's [the Republican Party] base is fed up. We want action. We're not asking much, only that our laws be enforced. No, support for the (illegal) immigration movement comes largely from the left. In fact, Bush's remarks about "illegals" doing "the jobs that Americans won't do" came straight from the left wing's talking points.

It's the first time I've ever heard anyone on the left make the startling admission that there are some jobs Americans won't take. When debating liberals on the topic of welfare, I've often found that such a suggestion is tantamount to heresy. I'm simply not allowed to say that some Americans are on welfare because they won't take a job unless it pays 12 bucks an hour and involves nothing more stressful than air conditioned office work. That politically incorrect truism makes welfare recipients sound lazy, so I'm not permitted to say it. I'm supposed to believe that all public assistance goes to people who can't find jobs and never to people who won't find jobs.

That doesn't jive with the idea that we need illegal immigrants to do "the jobs Americans won't do." I thought Americans would take any job, if only there were jobs available. Guess not. Why are we paying able-bodied Americans to do nothing, while we allow others to enter our country illegally and do the entry-level jobs that Americans used to do? That's outrageous. Illegal immigrants aren't doing "the jobs Americans won't do," but rather they are doing the jobs that Americans should be doing.

Why are we paying able bodied Americans to do nothing, while we allow others to enter our country illegally and do the entry-level jobs that Americans used to do?

It reminds me of the long, hot summer of 2004, when I was working at an amusement park. I hated that job. I worked too many hours for too little money. I had to remain civil with park guests who were less than courteous with me. I even had to wear a goofy uniform. It was the summer without end.



The park brought in a slew of immigrant workers from Brazil, Poland, Jamaica, Russia and Bulgaria. These immigrants were legal, of course, but the principle remains the same, as you will see. It's not that the park wouldn't hire Americans, but there just weren't enough Americans to run the whole park. Oddly enough, there was a major Massachusetts city not far away with more than its fair share of unemployment. Its boarded-up houses and filthy streets were the prototype of urban blight. With a pool of unemployed people sitting right at its doorstep, why did the park need to get workers from halfway around the world?

Because even amusement park work is one of those "jobs Americans won't do." That's silly. When I used to go to that same amusement park as a kid, I don't remember a staff of immigrants running the park. Not that long ago, it was Americans who ran the rides, sold the food, worked the games and swept up the cigarette butts. Not anymore.

Besides, I took the job. This particular American wasn't too proud to clean puke off the teacups; that's just life. It infuriates me to think that some people are too proud to work an honest day's work at an amusement park, but not too proud to live on the dole.

We've got ourselves in quite a bind here, and I don't know how to fix it. Large swaths of our working class no longer work because of some imaginary unemployment crisis. Meanwhile we bring in foreigners (legal and otherwise) to do the "jobs Americans won't do." There's something wrong with this picture, and it needs to be fixed.

Ben Duffy is a World Perspectives columnist who is currently abroad in Germany.

Grinning in the face of terror

Adam McGillen

A smile: universal symbol that all is right in one's own world. That is what graced the face of Zacarias Moussaoui when he watched tapes of the devastation of 9/11 during the course of his trial. A smile of content: as if to pat himself on the back for a job well done. A smile of evil, as Satan would grin when another soul is condemned to eternal damnation. A smile to remind us all of the blind hatred that was so embodied in the utter destruction of the American symbol of progress that was the World Trade Center.

Moussaoui did not participate in 9/11, though. He was like a little brother, always tagging along with Al-Qaeda and Osama bin Laden, but he was not invited on that fateful day. The heart of a terrorist still exists in Moussaoui, and it can be seen in that contented smile that crosses his face when he watches Americans die.

When I first read the story on NYTimes.com, which mentioned Moussaoui's poignantly timed smirk, all those feelings that overwhelmed me in 2001 came rushing back. I was a mere freshman in high school when I heard about the attacks during the very first week of classes. Walking down the hall, head down, minding my own business, I heard that the World Trade Center was in flames and had been struck by an airplane. Confused, I continued to my next class and was quickly escorted to the library to sit down and watch CNN.

Laughter is a great weapon against terrorism, and an even better preserver of the American way of life. We certainly cannot run from the dreary aspects of living in this day and age, but we can learn to cope by having a sense of humor.

The magnitude of what was happening took a few hours to hit me, but when it did, it shook my very existence. I watched dumbfounded as thousands of lives were simply erased with absolutely no purpose. Some insane accident, that had to be the explanation. Then plane number two hit, and there was no question: this was terrorism at its absolute worst.

In the weeks following I remember feeling utterly powerless. Just 13 years old at the time, I had no way of helping the cause despite how badly I wanted to. There was no way of getting to Ground Zero; I wasn't even old enough to donate blood, such a small but meaningful contribution.

All this happened while Zacarias Moussaoui was held in custody, knowing of the impending attacks and revealing nothing to American officials. This blind disregard for any value of life is what defines the suicide bombers and terrorists who still live in our world today. The deaths of 9/11 were not purposeless, though; it was using murder as a messenger, killing people to strike fear into others. The accomplices of Moussaoui were not so much attacking an American landmark as they were attacking the American way of life.

Usually I steer away from topics like this. Reading the paper every day is depressing enough, but when I read about Moussaoui's smirk I couldn't help but write. For the most part, my columns stick to off-topic subjects that are meant to draw some smiles of their own. Greg draws the comics that accompany my writings for the same reason. If one person laughs at my column, my work is done. I usually laugh the hardest: I can't believe the stuff I write ever gets printed.

Laughter is a great weapon against terrorism, and an even better preserver of the American way of life. We certainly cannot run from the dreary aspects of living in this day and age, but we can learn to cope by having a sense of humor. It is important to be informed of the events that so affect our world and to do our part in helping good prevail over evil.

As American citizens, we are all involved in this war on terrorism, and we each fight it in our own way. There are the soldiers who are dedicated to protecting our country, the journalists who make sure the important stories are heard, the students working hard to make our future better, and the comedians who help us to pursue the happiness that we all want in life.

Moussaoui's trial should serve as a reminder of what happened on that infamous day in September of 2001, and push us to each fulfill our distinctive roles. We each have a duty to ourselves and our country to pursue the truth of what happened on 9/11, so that we may seek justice. September 11th shall never be forgotten, and we should also never forget to enjoy all of the freedoms that come with being an American, especially that freedom to laugh a little.

Adam McGillen is a Collegian columnist

Good places that don't exist

Wesley Miller

For those of you debating whether or not to dig the tent out of the basement on the trip home this weekend for the coming demonstrations, I share with you a certain hesitance. Years of walking around this campus bombarded by the word "change" and invitations to various rallies and demonstrations against University policy have left a bad taste in my mouth when I consider whether or not this is a real solution or yet another expression of Liberal Puritanism. The Tent State flyers are claiming a better vision for UMass and a model University comprised of teach-ins and performances. Understanding that this type of demonstration is not a "utopia or bust" call to arms is vital for our understanding the value of Tent State as an experiment in social activist thinking.

It feels like we've entered into a great interim of utopian thought in history. It has been long since Greenwich Village lost its bohemian zeal and the student uprisings of the 1960s took a back seat to the idea of the university as an income enhancer. Contemporary dreamers look back on the first half of the 20th century as a kind of democracy for people of their kind. How is it that Virginia Woolf was able to own her own printing press, introduce the great European thinkers to an English-speaking audience (ie: Freud, Dostoyevsky) and experiment with various mediums of literature, including a biography of her sister's dog? It seems the avant-garde shared a much more comfortable tension with popular culture than we have today.

Modern utopianism is a shell of its former self. In a recent New Yorker article entitled "The Utopians," writer Ben McGrath covered a bizarre utopian settlement growing on an abandoned beach in Puerto Rico. The settlement, named "Playa Grande" by its creator Boylan Curry, a former banker, is a vast playground for the creative and intellectual. Artists' Bungalows at Playa Grande would be available only per invitation at a reduced price of $50,000. You would additionally need to pass an admissions board that thus far is chaired by none other than recording artist Moby.

The old methods of creating a Bohemian paradise, whereby artists and intellectuals rushed the low rent districts of major cultural centers, appear to have been suspended for the time being.

This new strain of utopianism seems more to me like a type of Bohemian jet-setting than anything else. The old methods of creating a Bohemian paradise, whereby artists and intellectuals rushed the low rent districts of major cultural centers, appear to have been suspended for the time being. Instead, the utopian thinker has decided to move with the age and globalize, and Thomas Moore has been replaced by a guy who used to write books advising high school seniors on how to present themselves idiosyncratically for college admissions boards.

The roots of utopian thought rest, at least in the western sense, with Thomas Moore. "Utopia" comes from the combination of the Latin and the Greek words meaning "nonexistent, good place." Utopianism has been both championed and discredited over the years. Fredric Jameson, a prominent post-modernist, holds that utopias are not meant to be goals, but instead realized as critiques of the present. Ernst Bloch championed man's inclination to dream, claiming that utopia must extend to and permeate all forms of natural sciences and philosophy.

The University is yet another example of utopian thinking in action, complete with professors filling our heads with silly little daydreams about the importance of literature, social action and cultural understanding. The University is not a utopia, but a haven for all the best aspects of utopian thought. In my opinion, the University falls somewhere between Bohemia and strains of 18th century Enlightenment thought. The student must resolve the tension between his or her living in social paradise and the demands of classical academic student.

Campus activism, I feel, is an attempt to resolve that tension, however abstractly. The demand for freedom and improvement is ironically encouraged by the very situation that stifles it. There is no reason to fear campus activism, if anything, history has shown us that it's healthy, even if there are only three Tents next week and the rain comes down. It may not be on a beach in the Caribbean, but at least we won't have to listen to Moby.

Wesley Miller is a Collegian columnist

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

ARTS & LIVING

THURSDAY, APRIL 13, 2006 ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Matisyahu graces the Calvin

The Hasidic Reggae Superstar awakens Noho with rhythm and soul

By Morgan-Ann Rousseau
Collegian Staff

On Tuesday night the Calvin Theatre featured a show by reggae's newest and Jewest phenomenon, Matisyahu. The Hasidic reggae superstar, as he is affectionately known, showed off his harmonious skills by fusing the art of rap, reggae and beat boxing, then topped it all off with an energy that electrified a mixed crowd of religious followers, college funk-a-holics, and music lovers of all ages.

One of the most enjoyable elements of Tuesday's show was its upbeat and soulful essence, displayed through Matisyahu's poignant connection with the audience.

Let's not beat around the fact that looking at this long bearded, black garbed character causes one significant question to rear its ugly head. "Should I be here? I'm not Jewish…" Honestly, the occasional emergence of Yiddish lyrics and spiritual chanting lends to the feeling that you are attending a religious ceremony of some kind. However, with an open heart and mind, the connection to Matisyahu's music quickly dissolves any feelings of displacement due to religious background.

With Matisyahu leading the way with vocals and beat-box, Jonah David hammered the drums while Aaron Dugan was on the guitar and Josh Werner played bass. The band started off on stage with no sign of the leading man.

After a few minutes of the band building up some instrumental feeling, Matisyahu appeared on stage and started the show off slow and easy, then livened it up with some buoyant reggae flavor with songs like "Youth," "Fire of Heaven," and other new and old songs. During the show the beat-boxing luminary enjoyed hopping around to the funky beats his band unleashed and even jumped from one step to the next with a lively fever of fresh sounds that could come only from his heart.

The eclectic artist was graced on stage twice by a talented musician who plucked a hefty reggae string instrument, to which Matisyahu beat-boxed with rhythmic sounds and lip twisting fire that set the crowd into a tempest of tempo and shoulder-jolting hops.

The Calvin wasn't the ideal place for a show of this nature, which inspires dancing and free movement. However, the restraints of ticketed seating assignments didn't keep fans from jamming in the aisle when they could, or boogying right in front of their seats. The lucky others who enjoyed general admission were free to gallivant in front of the stage area right below Matisyahu's exquisite vocal cadence that echoed into the smoky lights.

However, any venue is better than none at all, and fans of all seating arrangements felt free to "toke up" at their discretion, regardless of the blatant religious affiliation surrounding them. Surely it was an interesting mix of Orthodoxy and marijuana — doubtful that the two are mixed in many other contexts.

It seems the fans of this new music fusion find delight in not only the messages Matisyahu gives in his lyrics — in fact many of his fans don't share that religious common ground — but rather a unity through the feelings of peace and union delivered in each syllable of his sound. When the man chants, language is dissolved from English or Yiddish to a higher tongue of pure feeling and soul.

The band came to a close with an awakening performance of "King Without A Crown," one of the more popularized tracks on Matisyahu's 2005 album "Live at Stubbs." Finally, to wrap up the evening, the crowd grooved to "Jerusalem," from his recent album "Youth," which debuted March 7.

Formerly known as Matthew Miller, the 26-year-old musician took on his Jewish Orthodox name, Matisyahu, after discovering a higher spiritual devotion to the Jewish Orthodox religion.

Matisyahu's upcoming tour dates include California for the Coachella Music and Arts Festival, Ireland, Finland and Tennessee in June for the much awaited Bonaroo Music festival. Check out a full listing of the upcoming tour dates at his music Web site, www.matismusic.com. You don't want to miss an opportunity to experience his performance, which was surely a pleasure.

Being funny easy feat for 'Scary Movie 4' star Anna Faris

By Daniel Ehnberg
Staff Writer

LOS ANGELES — There were many times a few months back — and only months ago when Anna Faris was ready to bid farewell to the "Scary Movie" franchise.

"Scary Movie," the Wayans brothers' slasher parody, was a smash hit, but the hastily made "Scary Movie 2" chilled that enthusiasm in a flash, earning terrible reviews and less than half of the box office of the original.

"I think after the second one, it was just really one day at a time. … I never really imagined when we were shooting the second one that there would be a third," Faris admits. "I was kept very much out of the loop. I still don't even believe that I'm here, because I can't believe that I've survived. Regina [Hall] and I are the only ones who have been in all four and I keep thinking, 'It's because nobody's pretty reasonable and cheap for the studio to hire.'"

But giving the franchise a chance to go fallow, "Scary Movie 3" was entrusted to comedy legend David Zucker ("Airplane!") and brought viewers back to the theaters. With the Wayans family off pursuing "White Chicks," Faris suddenly became the series' centerpiece as Cindy Campbell. Originally just a winking take on Neve Campbell's "Scream" character, Cindy has become her own blissfully brainless entity, Faris' creation.

"With Cindy, it's really important to play her very sincerely, and she obviously has no sense of humor, which I think is funny in itself," Faris smiles.

She continues, "The main difficulty in playing a character that's not the brightest girl is just the sense of vanity. There are people out there who think that I'm very much like my character and that's a bit of a hard pill to swallow, but I really do have a great time and I think that doing comedy in general is having a lack of vanity and trying not to have too much of an ego. Especially for a young woman, it's easy to be like, 'Oh, I really want to look good. I wish I could look sexy.' But that's not very funny."

Faris is, in fact, obviously funny and not just when she's playing dumb, though that's usually all that's asked of her. Outside of the "Scary Movie" films, she's done a lot of small parts, though some have magically grown. A case in point would be this winter's "Just Friends," in which Faris' goofy pop star became the centerpiece of commercials after audiences responded to the character.

"There just aren't that many roles written for young women that are character-y kind of roles, especially in comedies," Faris says with some regret. "There's always the funny sidekick guy. I think that that's the biggest challenge, that people don't write interesting women very frequently. And then it's easy to just hire a really pretty girl, because it's just serving one purpose, the role."

Without pausing, though, Faris confesses, "I don't blame the industry. I sort of blame myself a little bit. I feel like if I had a little bit more initiative and I worked a little bit harder, I could develop something for myself."

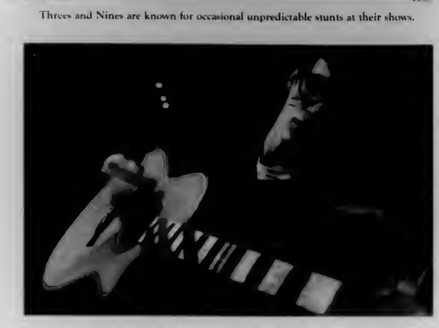
Despite the paucity of opportunities, Faris has managed to pop up in some impressive places. With her memorable supporting turns in "Lost In Translation" (as a young starlet who Faris swears wasn't based on Cameron Diaz) and "Brokeback Mountain," she's been in films nominated for best picture at two of the last three Academy Awards ceremonies. But Faris doesn't show up at parties and she doesn't attend random premieres, she'd rather spend time with her husband (actor Ben Indra) than do the public things the industry expects of designated "next big things."

"I really do hate that part of the industry, but I think it's probably true that I should go to some of these things and do some of that stuff," she says. "But at the same time I feel … and maybe this is very naive … a little bit like my career is a bit ahead of my publicity, which I appreciate. I feel like there's room for surprises. I can still make interesting choices and I'm still a bit of a mystery and it's nice. I feel a little bit like a chameleon."

She stops, perhaps enhancing that mystery. Then she lets out a big smile.

"And I'm also a little bit lazy."

"Scary Movie 4" opens Friday.



The "Scary Movie" film series is going strong, now up to it's fourth movie with actress Anna Faris playing the lead character Cindy in "Scary Movie 4."

Rock trio poised for a national release after winning contest

Threes and Nines are known for occasional unpredictable stunts at their shows.

The band's lead singer Andy Kaufman is only 17 years old and writes songs in-between being home-schooled.

By Patrick S. Pemberton
Knight Ridder Newspapers

SAN LUIS OBISPO, Calif. — Threes and Nines has a history of being unpredictable.

One time, police escorted the band from a gig after they obliterated their instruments onstage. Another time, lead singer Jake Brebes danced so wildly he accidentally kicked a hole in his bandmate's engraved floor bass. And last year — in a moment avant-garde comic Andy Kaufman would have appreciated — Brebes arranged for a friend to jump on the stage and attack him during a gig.

"It was actually during a part where there's a drum solo," Brebes said. "I stopped, he came up and punched me in the face, and I just laid there for a second and then I got back up, and we went right back into the song."

The most surprising moment in Threes and Nines history, though, came last fall when this band of teenagers beat a bunch of veterans to win the first Winery Music Awards in Paso Robles, Calif. With the upset victory, the band earned the top prize — a contract with indie label RNH.

A national distribution deal with Fontana Distribution means the band's forthcoming album should be sold in stores everywhere. And to promote that, the band is lining up gigs.

Which means, of course, the crazy antics will have to end.

"I enjoy being a little controversial and messing with people sometimes," said Brebes, 17. "But that's not very good business."

The band has toned things down to avoid frightening off venue owners.

"I would say now we're shooting toward putting the music out in a professional way," Brebes said cautiously.

With their days of smashing instruments behind them, the band will focus more on the music, which is a blend of mellow contemporary and classic alternative rock.

The band started as a duo three years ago, with Brebes playing guitar and Max Triplett playing drums in a group called Pretty Little Pancreas.

In the beginning, the band's future was uncertain.

"We weren't really liking the music we were playing," Brebes admitted.

"Or each other very much," Triplett added.

So they broke up.

A couple of months later, Triplett called Brebes and announced, "I'm playing drums for you again," and they were back on. The band became Threes and Nines, a reference to poker wild cards, and moved from electric to acoustic. Meanwhile, Brebes, who had been compared to Bright Eyes singer Conor Oberst, worked on making his voice less quivery.

Brebes, the band's singer and songwriter, is home-schooled, which allows him more time to write songs — something he often does late at night.

"I have a recorder in my room, and when I record my voice, I'll be screaming in the microphone," Brebes said. "And there's no other music anywhere, so people think I'm crazy, in my room just screaming."

For all his screaming, the songs the band has completed recording thus far are mellow and catchy, inviting comparisons to the Shins and the Violent Femmes. The melody-driven numbers are simply arranged but mature, with clever lyrics that don't reveal the youthful writer's lack of life experience. And while there may be less chaos onstage these days, Brebes' love of the unpredictable still comes out in the music.

"Oh a lot of the songs I'll shoot for a really happy, carefree sound and write about, you know, someone killing themselves."

It was that energetic music, along with Brebes' Buddy Holly aura (he wore a suit and thick-rimmed glasses), that helped the band advance to the finals of the Winery Music Awards in Paso Robles.

Set to face five other bands in the final battle, the young group pulled yet another shocker. It changed its lineup.

Just days before the third and final round, bass player Tasha Brittain joined the band, replacing an interim bassist. Brittain, who comes from a musical family, rehearsed with the band just once before the finals.

"I thought, 'Oh great — I'm the new guy,'" remembered Brittain, 18. "I'll show it for them they're gonna hate me."

The band came in as underdogs, having scoring the lowest points of the finalists from the previous round. After working out technical kinks, though, they rocked the finals.

"These kids showed up and proceeded to blow everybody away," said Jon Cartwright, one of the judges and president of the RNB label.

Cartwright, who had committed to offering a contract to the winner, liked the band's marketability potential. The band's hip look, youth, good songs, an energetic stage presence and a stand-up front — all things that made them unique.

The band is currently finishing off an 11-song album, due out by late summer.

Two of its completed songs can be heard on The Tribune new-paper's Web site, www.sanluisobispo.com.

Cartwright, who once worked for recording giant EMI, recently looked to hand up with Fontana Distribution, an arm of Universal Music. If the pieces fall into place, he said, the band's music would be available in stores and on iTunes and downloads. He's even considering soundtrack and commercial work.

This is all a little weird for Brebes, who's a fan of underground bands like Neutral Milk Hotel and Modest Mouse.

"I don't really like MTV … or anything like that," he said. "I don't think they really what we're shooting for."

On the other hand he wouldn't mind living playing music as a career. He'll compromise.

"This is a break-[illegible]," said Kathy Kelly, who [illegible] awards and has become the band's manager.

Cartwright has told the [illegible] that making it in the music business is a long-shot. But the band is choosing to ignore — so much that [illegible] going to college in order to [illegible] Threes and Nines can get.

"I can always go to college," she said. "This is something happening [illegible] stuff is yet to come."

Amy Grant likes family-focused life enough to play in living room

By Malcolm Mayhew
Knight Ridder Newspapers

When most musicians say they like to make their shows as intimate as a living room, it's really just a figure of speech.

Amy Grant means it.

"We're taking my living-room furniture there," Grant says of her shows this week in Fort Worth, Texas. "I told everybody I wanted these shows to feel like my living room, so a friend of mine said, 'Well, why don't you take the furniture?' So we're bringing my couch, a chair and I'm having a print made up of a painting we bought by Robert Harper. This picture that I see every day in my home will be the backdrop for the show."

In a way, Grant wanting to paint a picture of her home life, and feel like she's at home, makes perfect sense. After years of recording and touring, with and without her country-music icon of a husband, Vince Gill, Grant says it's time for a nice, long breather. She doesn't have any plans to make a new record anytime soon, and she's playing only a handful of shows this year.

Grant, 45, has seen her career come full circle. In the '80s, the Georgia-born singer established herself as one of the leading lights, commercially and artistically, in contemporary Christian music, becoming one of the genre's first superstars. That laid the groundwork for her crossover into pop music in the late '80s/early '90s via hits such as "Baby Baby" and "That's What Love Is For." After her mainstream popularity began to wane a bit, she went back to inspirational music, releasing CDs of spiritual hymns.

Now, she says, she's pouring her energy into her family. She has four children — three from her previous marriage to Texas-born songwriter Gary Chapman, one with Gill — and the last thing she wants to do is raise them on the road.

"We've done that before — taken the kids on the road," says Grant, who has lived in Nashville most of her life (aside from a short stint in Houston). "We hired tutors to go on the road with us, and it was fine. I love touring and performing, and it's a great catalyst for releasing what you think and how you feel, but I have three teens and a 5-year-old, and these are the most important times in their lives. It would be fine with them if I checked out and went on tour, but it's not fine with me. This is a time in my life when I want to be with them in a way that I haven't been able to be with them before."

As the clock ticks and musical trends wash away what was once popular, Grant says she realizes she probably won't again reach the commercial peak she ascended to at the height of her career. Although other artists may be in denial, refusing to believe that they won't sell millions of records again, Grant embraces her cooled career.

"I think that there are great examples of women who have had lifelong pop careers — Cher, Tina Turner — the people whose music is timeless and who don't do the same thing and who always reinvent themselves. That's not me," she says. "Honestly, it's a relief to me to not look at the Hot 100 all the time and worry about jumping in there and trying to play that game. That part of music doesn't matter to me anymore. What still matters to me is a great song that can turn your mood on a dime."

She has a few of these songs floating around in her head, she says. Getting them down on paper is the tough part.

"As you can imagine, it's hard for me to find time to work on music," she says. "Writing, for me at least, requires solitude, and I don't know how to get it. I love being around the kids, but my 5-year-old is so demanding, there's hardly any time to have a thought. But I'm always scribbling down a [illegible] I have to tell [illegible] stuff is yet to come."

ONE COUPON PER GUEST PER VISIT

VERACRUZANA
Great Mexican Food on both sides of the river

$1.00 OFF ANY Enchilada Dinner!

Not valid with any other coupon • Offer expires [illegible] or 4/14/06

BARRIO BUCKS!

If You've Got a Plan We've Got a Van!
Insurance Replacement Rates FREE PICK-UP
POTTERS AUTO & TRUCK RENTAL
• Direct Billing to Insurance Company
• Locally Owned & Operated
• 7 & 15 Passenger Vans
• UMass Purchase Orders, MHEC Rates
North Amherst Motors
Collision Repairs & Glass Replacement
78 Sunderland Rd., North Amherst, MA
(413) 549-RENT (7368)
www.northamherstmotors.com
(One only North of UMass - on bus route)

EAST HEAVEN HOT TUBS
STUDENT DISCOUNT!

L. SCHMALL '04
$15 OFF ANY HOT TUB RENTAL FOR TWO
(one discount per rental)
Student Discount only good Mon-Thurs or any day after 11pm
Weekdays 11- Midnight Weekends 11 - 1am
413-587-0000 • 33 West St. Northampton • www.eastheaven.com

$500 cash bonus
Special offer for college and trade school students, recent grads and graduate students
May be combined with most other publicly available Ford Motor Company national incentives at the time of purchase or lease on the model you select. Limit one offer per customer. See your [illegible] Lincoln Mercury Dealer for details. Visit our Web site for official Program rules.

2006 Ford Fusion
DEFINE yourself
Log on to www.YourTicket2Drive.com for a chance to win:
$ $500 cash
$ A trip to the 2006 mtvU Woodie Awards in New York City
$ A brand new 2007 Ford Fusion!
o6 college student purchase program
www.fordcollegehq.com
Ford LINCOLN MERCURY
NO PURCHASE NECESSARY. Open to legal residents of [illegible] who are currently enrolled for [illegible] accredited college/university junior college, community college or [illegible] at time of entry AND IN ALASKA AND HAWAII AND [illegible] RESTRICTED BY LAW. Entries for the Grand Prize Sweepstakes must be received by 11:59 p.m. (EST) on 10/2/06 and entries for the Monthly Sweepstakes drawings must be received by 11:59 p.m. (EST) on the [illegible] of each calendar month during the Sweepstakes Period. Subject to [illegible] Rules. Visit YourTicket2Drive.com

What's not likeable 'About Brian?' apparently nothing

By Ed Bark
The Dallas Morning News

Broadcast TV's fall, mid- and spring seasons have been ringing in new prime-time series since September.

Most have been ding-dongs, but some will answer the bell again next season. Now, at last, comes the last of them. ABC's "What About Brian," an agreeable descendant of the same network's "thirty-something," gets a high-visibility sneak preview Sunday in the "Grey's Anatomy" slot. Then it moves to Mondays at 10 p.m. EDT in hopes of finishing at least a solid second to CBS' "CSI: Miami."

Set in Los Angeles, "Brian" is built around sweet 34-year-old Brian O'Hara (Barry Watson of 7th Heaven). Cuter than a puppy dog in a bluebonnet field, he nonetheless is the unattached "seventh wheel" among five longtime friends and his older sister.

The girl of his dreams, gorgeous Marjorie Seaver (Sarah Lancaster), of course is engaged to his very best friend, Adam (Matthew Davis). So Brian basically spaces out while Marjorie tells him exactly what he doesn't want to hear from her: "You're a great friend. You're everybody's friend. Everyone loves you. You're a catch."

That pretty much makes him Jimmy Olsen, or so he thinks. But on one halfway magical night, Brian and Marjorie get tanked up and impulsively kiss each other. So might the game be on after all?

Co-executive producer J.J. Abrams is TV's reigning king of the week-to-week string-along, with "Lost," "Alias" and "Felicity" already on his resume. This looks like more of the same, beginning with the last scene in Sunday's premiere. It finds Marjorie back with Adam and intent on setting up Brian with one of her ultra-cute friends. We should all be so unlucky.

The other principals are Brian's insecure older sister, Nic (Rosanna Arquette), who's married to a younger yoga guru named Angelo (Raoul Bova). Also meet Dave and Deena Greco (Rick Gomez, Amanda Detmer), whose 13-year marriage has yielded three kids and no sex of late.

Brian and Dave otherwise are reasonably happy together as co-owners of Zap Monkey video games. Sunday's best sequence finds Brian entering the workplace as The Who's dead-catchy "Baba O'Riley" starts pumping its iron. It's a perfectly choreographed mini-music video, a real treat for the eyes and ears.

When not pining for Marjorie, woe-is-me Brian tries to extricate himself from "Car Girl" Karen (guest star Amy Jo Johnson), whom he impulsively dates after their autos first meet in a fender-bender. She repeatedly brands him "Ted Bundy" when he tries to break it off. Frankly, that's not very funny.

Watson is amply appealing as Brian, however. It's easy to root for him while at the same time finding it hard to buy his predicament, if that's what it is. Judging from his friends' situations, he's better off having loved and lost without buying any rings, tying any knots.

Come to think of it, the life of Brian seems almost seventh heavenly. He has the looks and disposition of an angel, not Rob Schneider. Odd men out should all be so lucky.

Daniel Powter almost gave up on music sucess

By Jim Farber
New York Daily News

NEW YORK — Daniel Powter doesn't get it.

It seems half the world's population has compared his voice, single and image to that of 2006's biggest breakthrough artist: James Blunt.

Yet Powter asserts, "The only connection between James and me is that we're both white and have male genitalia. I sound more like James Brown than James Blunt."

Oh really?

Let's look at the evidence: Both Powter and Blunt sing florid ballads in super-earnest, pinched falsettos over arrangements as dense as pea soup. And both avoid even a hint of the cool or aloof.

Not that you'd mistake one singer for the other. Blunt is the more romantic of the two, Powter the quirkier. If this was 1975, one might say Powter was Leo Sayer to Blunt's Cat Stevens. In fact, both singers sound so much like stars of that era, their songs wouldn't seem out of place on Rhino's "Have a Nice Day" collection of '70s smashes.

Powter's comparisons to both Blunt and the '70s are likely to only intensify starting this week, when his self-titled debut CD hits American stores. Already the singer has enjoyed a huge success with the CD overseas, as well as a smash with his first stateside single, "Bad Day."

Last week, that ditty became the best-selling song in the country. It also became radio's most-played song, as well as the land's most digitally download item. In just the last week, "Bad Day" sold 113,000 copies via iTunes, with a digital total to date of nearly half a million.

Ironically, "Bad Day" has also become something of a synonym for failure. The teeming masses who watch "American Idol" each week hear this piece serenade every losing contestant as he or she slunks off stage in defeat.

Powter considers the song's placement on "Idol" ironic, since he used to take part in musical competitions as a violinist between the ages of 9 and 12. The musician grew up playing that stringed instrument in a tiny town in the Okanagan Valley, just outside Vancouver. Yet, as a teenager, he switched to piano, which remains his instrument of choice.

After moving to Vancouver at 20, Powter began playing in bands, though he says he never found the right dynamic or partners to suit his taste. Still, neither does he consider himself a proper "singer-songwriter," even if everything in his music argues otherwise.

Courtesy of A&E Mercury

Singer Daniel Powter is known for his quirky nature and popularity overseas, but now the musician is enjoying a growing popularity in the U.S as well.

Powter struggled in the music business for a long time. At age 35, he's coming to his pop career late. In fact, he had given up on having a major music career several years ago. "I thought maybe I would just play for 40 people every night in clubs," he explains.

So, several years ago, Powter decided to just record the album he wanted with a small-time producer, Jeff Dawson, for his own indie label. By happenstance, that album wound up getting the attention of Warner Bros. Records, which liked it enough to sign him. Just one hitch: They wanted him to rerecord the disk with respected producer Mitchell Froom.

Powter says Froom was initially reluctant to take on the project, since he felt the original CD had its own spare identity. "He said, 'You don't need to rerecord it, just touch it up,'" Powter explains.

Once they got to work together, however, Froom had plenty of ideas for tweaks. Powter compares the two versions by saying the original album "was like an empty house, put in the furniture."

The first country where the final CD took off was France. Coca-Cola wanted to make it part of a huge, local Christmas ad campaign. At first Powter hesitated. Then he got realistic about how hard it is to get a career going.

From there, Powter explains that the song "spread slowly [across the Continent] like some horrible seeping virus — like bird flu."

Eventually, the UK also succumbed, sending the song to No. 1 on its charts.

Still, "Bad Day" might not have had a similar impact in the U.S. were it not for its placement on "American Idol." Powter claims never to have seen the show, saying, "I don't watch TV."

Yet the singer understands that being part of a critically derided program has its consequences. Then again, Powter is realistic about the fact that he was never destined to become a press darling to begin with. He even admits that "Bad Day's" lyrics can be seen as "cheesy."

"But you know what?" Powter concludes. "I'm a really cheesy guy."

Luckily for him, cheese seems to suit America's current taste.

'God or the Girl': religion on reality TV

A new territory for television's reality entertainment

By Marisa Guthrie
New York Daily News

"God or the Girl," a new reality show about young men wrestling with whether or not to become Catholic priests, may sound like a sleazy series that promises cheap thrills and rote religious bigotry.

"Reality television has a well-deserved reputation for being sensational," said Kiera McCaffery of the Catholic League.

"I had visions of a seminarian in a hot tub with a bunch of women," said Joe Adair, one of the show's characters.

Judge not, lest you be chastened.

The show's producers screened "God or the Girl" last month at the U.S. Conference of Catholic Bishops in Washington, D.C. The consensus, said McCaffery, "from sources we respect, is that it's unobjectionable and a fair portrayal."

"God or the Girl," beginning Easter Sunday at 9 EDT on A&E, is a journey of the heart, not the flesh.

Adair, 28, is a student counselor at John Carroll, a Jesuit university in Cleveland. He has been in and out of the seminary twice. Dan DeMatte, 21, lives with nine other celibate men at Ohio Dominican University. Steve Horvath, 25, chucked a high-paying job in the financial sector and a girl "he wanted to marry," to become a missionary. Mike Lechniak, 24, and his girlfriend, Aly, are both active in their Scranton, Pa., parish.

And while Lechniak says he "received the call" as a high school sophomore, he frets over "the loss of a female companion for the rest of my life."

So while the title may be a bit polarizing, it is not without a kernel of literal truth.

"What I struggle with is the mandatory celibacy," said Adair. "But I've always had this unfolding desire to serve the church. If I'm married or a priest or single, I'm still serving God."

Becoming a priest requires a vow of celibacy. Being a Catholic does not, within the confines of marriage, of course.

Producer Darryl Silver started pitching his idea for the show two years ago. And although several networks liked the concept, they were reluctant to commit.

"Nobody wanted to pull the trigger," he said, "because if the show went the wrong way it would be absolutely scandalous. The last thing you want is this thing to go south and the Catholic Church picketing your network."

Silver initially sought cooperation from dioceses around the country in casting the show. But the church declined to help, he said.

"Everyone was suspicious," said Silver. "Although we wound up casting these guys without them, in continuing forward we always kept a dialogue open with the Catholic Church."

And if the title smacks of titillation and sexual innuendo, maybe that's not such a bad thing.

"We talked about [the title] a lot," he said. "It's not exactly what the show is about. But in retrospect I think the [title] is important because the point is to get people to watch the show."

If viewers tune in thinking they're going to get "a sermon on 'Temptation Island,'" said Silver, at least they're tuning in.

NORTHAMPTON'S STEAKHOUSE
Great place for a date!
At the Clarion Hotel
One Atwood Drive/Northampton
Exit 18, off I-91
413-586-1211
view menu at www.hampshirehospitality.com

START YOUR OWN FRATERNITY
Tau Kappa Epsilon
Participate in social, philanthropic, communtiy service and intramural activities on campus.
No Pledging! No Hazing!
World's Largest Social Fraternity
$20,000 in Available Scholarships
Instant Leadership Opportunities
Contact:
Steve Lytle slytle@tke.org 813-394-4087
Jason Fenske jfenske@tke.org 414-975-1168
www.tke.org/expansion/umass

Write for Arts!
arts.dailycollegian.com

Where are YOU living next semester?
Apartments Available!
CHECK OUT PUFFTON VILLAGE!
Excellent location...1/2 mile from UMass
Spacious Apartments--1,2 and 3 Bedroom Townhouses
All rents include heat, hot water and cooking gas
On site Laundry, off street parking.
Basketball and Tennis courts.
Pufton Village
1040 N. Pleasant St. #410
Amherst, MA 01002
413-549-0145
www.pufftonvillage.com

UM not looking ahead

LACROSSE from page 12

"We need to clear the ball at 100 percent," Cannella said. "We need to be really good facing off. We need to limit our turnovers. We had 19 turnovers against St. John's, which is way too many. We're averaging around that per game, and we'd like to average eight to 10 a game.

"I told our guys that I still want them to push themselves and take chances, but we've got to be smart about it. It's the doers that make mistakes, but we don't want to make too many of them. We still want our guys to be aggressive."

Another key around this time of the year, when the weather gets warmer in New England and names like "Georgetown" and "Syracuse" creep closer and closer, is that everyone on the roster stays focused from game to game.

If the guys on the field stay as prepared as Cannella — whose prep folder for Hobart was bigger than most UMass undergrads' history books — then the daunting task of keeping their vision tunneled from week to week shouldn't be much of an issue.

"It's imperative; if you look past anybody and anytime, they'll beat you," Cannella said. "The next game is the most important. You can't do it for a second. I think our guys are focused."

The primary focus for UMass success on Saturday will be finishing the ball against a tough goaltender in Mike DeSantis, who made 16 saves to beat Syracuse last month.

"Their goalie has been really solid for them," Cannella said. "He was really solid in the Syracuse game. [The assistant coaches] went to the Syracuse game when he beat them and came back and said, 'Wow, this kid is really good.' It's going to be a challenge."

Karen Wing/Collegian

Senior defenseman Jack Reid has led the Minutemen to a 7-2 record this season.

Leadship key to UM's success

NOTEBOOK from page 12

allowed a career-low five goals to the Red Storm.

Schneider is third in the nation with a 64.1 save percentage and is 18th with a 7.91 goals against average. Cannella is pleased to be getting such solid goaltending, especially since he said it's hard to tell if a freshman will be ready to step in and contribute immediately.

Cannella attributes a great deal of Schneider's success to the work he has done with first-year assistant coach Jake Coon, who works with the team's goalies.

"You always wonder about [freshmen], but we talk about preparing the right way, and I think Doc and the other goalies have prepared the right way with Coach Coon," Cannella said. "If you prepare the right way each and every week and you go out there and play to the best of your ability, good things will happen. And hopefully good things will continue to happen for him."

LEADING THE WAY

Cannella points to the team's leadership as a key in keeping the focus on the next game, rather than looking too far down the road.

"It's huge," Cannella said of the team's leadership. "Every year our leadership makes or breaks us. These guys have been super leaders — not only the captains, but the seniors and some of the upperclassmen. They make sure the guys know where we're at. We're nowhere yet. We're not where we want to be. And not until we play 14 games will we be where we want to be."

Cannella counted on the team leaders to have the squad fired up for last Saturday's game with St. John's and the team responded by bouncing back from a loss to Penn State the previous week with a blowout win over the Red Storm.

Cannella has said that he wants that same type of intensity in practice following wins, and he expects the team to be pumped up for Saturday's matchup with Hobart.

"I think they have a pretty decent focus," Cannella said. "I think after saying that, at least they know how I'm feeling. Our leaders understand where we're at in the season so they've been urging their teammates to be ready because this is going to be a battle."

NOTES: UMass is averaging 11.9 goals per game, which trails only Virginia's 15.6 average.

Senior attacker Sean Morris still leads the nation in scoring, but the gap is closing. Morris averages 4.67 points per game, while Albany's Frank Resetarits is second with 4.33 points per game.

Bolduc keeping things positive percentage of .402, which ranks as the worst in the A-10. Magan also has the third worst goals against average in the league at 11.41.

WOMEN'S LAX from page 12

UMass has not been blessed with the easiest of schedules. It had a non-conference schedule that consisted of three nationally ranked teams, and the first two A-10 games were no walk in the park, either. The Minutewomen had to jump into conference play against the best two teams in the league in St. Bonaventure and Richmond.

With only five games remaining on the schedule, one would think that the playoffs are almost set in stone. That is far from being the truth. UMass may be in last place in the conference with an 0-2 conference record, but it is still very much alive. The Minutewomen know that their time for second chances is slowly running out as each A-10 game passes, and for that reason they know they must have a successful weekend.

As much as the Minutewomen have struggled this year, Bolduc could not be happier with the way her team has shown no signs of giving up, and at this point of the season, they are going to need to stay positive to have a chance to get into the post-season.

"[The atmosphere in the locker room] is as good as it can be," Bolduc said. "I am so proud of my team, and it gives me chills to think about that because we were in this last year, and I see so much strength in this team. They are continuing to work hard.

"Obviously, the season is not over, but I am so proud of what they have done, and what they have accomplished in the last couple of games. The morale is as high as it can be, given our record, so it's impressive. It says a lot about our team. We're very resilient."

Boston signs Crisp to extension

BOSTON—Red Sox center fielder Coco Crisp has agreed to a three-year, $15.5 million contract extension, a deal that could keep the man who replaced Johnny Damon in town until 2010.

Crisp, on the disabled list with a broken finger, already was signed for this year at $2.75 million. The extension contains a $1 million signing bonus and salaries of $3.5 million in 2007, $4.75 million in 2008 and $5.75 million in 2009.

The deal contains an $8 million team option for 2010, the first year Crisp would have been eligible for free agency. The option has a $500,000 buyout and contains salary escalator provisions.

Red Sox general manager Theo Epstein said talks about a Crisp extension heated up late in spring training and the deal had been done for a while.

"We think investing in Coco was a wise move," he said yesterday.

Before the extension, Crisp's contact was set to expire at the end of the year, but he would have been eligible for arbitration through 2009, which would have kept him in Boston until then.

Crisp said his short time in Boston convinced him it was worth giving up his first shot at free agency.

"I was able to hang out with the guys and the front office, and see what they were like," Crisp said. "I had fun with the guys. Being with the Red Sox made it easy. You want the security and having that, and playing for the Red Sox, is great. There's no better place to be."

Crisp, 26, was acquired by Boston in a six-player deal with Cleveland during the offseason. Crisp, who bats leadoff, had his best season last year in Cleveland, when he hit .300 with 86 runs scored, 16 homers and 15 steals.

This season, Crisp was hitting .333 (8-for-24) with six runs scored in five games before breaking his left index finger while trying to steal third last Saturday in Baltimore.

Crisp's extension comes two days after the Red Sox signed slugger David Ortiz to a four-year, $52 million extension through 2010.

Associated Press

Red Sox center fielder Coco Crisp signed a three-year contract extension with the team yesterday. The deal is worth $15.5 million.

SENIORS-
GOT SOMETHING TO SAY?
Leave your mark!
The Daily Collegian is currently accepting essay submissions from graduating seniors.
Write a 750 word piece about the UMass experience and how its shaped you. Bring submissions to 113 campus center basement
Top 3 will be published in the graduation edition on May 15th and 16th
All entries must be received by April 21 at 4 pm
Questions? Call 545-3500

Playoffs need reseeding

By Kevin B. Blackstone
Knight Ridder

DALLAS - Just in the last year, it instituted a dress code and barred employment to kids straight out of high school. In previous years, it divvied up teams into more divisions, dumped short best-of-5 playoff series and adopted the game-changing 3-point shot.

In short, change is not anathema to the NBA. Modification is as much a part of its tradition as tradition is a part of baseball.

So it doesn't make sense that the league is wedded to a postseason format that no longer fits its regular-season format.

It is time for Extreme Makeover: NBA Playoffs.

Reseed them.

This isn't a novel demand. Others have raised it before, as recently as February's mid-season break called All-Star Weekend, when the league's plenipotentiary, David Stern, gave his annual state of pro basketball address.

When the thought has been raised before, it has never even gone as far as to receive an up or down vote from the board of governors, a league spokesman said. Someone should bring it up again after this season.

For now, we have this: the two best teams in the West by, far are the Spurs and Mavericks. Each is on the threshold of its 60th victory.

The next closest team in the West is Phoenix. The Suns just won their 50th, a rung no other Western Conference team will reach.

But the Suns are guaranteed an easier route to the Western Conference finals than the Spurs or the Mavericks. How's that?

The loser of the Spurs-Mavericks battle for best record in the West will be dropped to the No. 4 seed in the conference, while the Suns are guaranteed the No. 2 seed. That's because the Spurs and Mavericks are in the same division (Southwest), and the division winners, including the Suns (Pacific), are seeded 1 through 3.

More ridiculous, if the Spurs and Mavericks escape their first-round matchups, they must meet in the second round.

The adage is true that you have to beat the best to be the best. The road from the West to the NBA Finals goes through Texas, and at some point, the Spurs and Mavericks would seem destined to have that head-on collision on Interstate 35.

But why not have that meeting of titans where it would make sense, in the conference finals? Who wants to watch a conference title series between the Spurs or Mavericks and the Suns, or any other team in what would appear to be a mismatch?

The Suns are 1-3 against the Spurs and are scheduled to meet the Mavericks in Phoenix tonight with a chance to even that season series at two wins apiece.

The NHL wouldn't let that happen. For over a decade, hockey has been reseeding its playoffs based on conference performance.

"The reason we use re-seeding is to reinforce the value and meaning of regular-season performance," NHL spokesman Frank Brown explained.

What reward is there in winning one of the league's six divisions, as the Stars are about to do? A top seed, 1 through 3.

But after the first round, the best remaining teams are matched with the worst. A Spurs-Mavericks second-round matchup would be averted.

The NFL says it's a misnomer that it reseeds. It only assures that the highest seed plays the lowest remaining seed.

Time was when the NBA was able to avoid what it is about to have happen. A couple of seasons ago, Minnesota and San Antonio finished with the best records in the West from the same division. But they wouldn't have met in the playoffs until the conference championship.

That was because there were only four divisions in basketball then. The third-best team in the West, the Lakers, got the No. 2 seed and the Spurs were awarded No. 3.

Last season, the NBA split up its four divisions into six, creating the possibility of the problem the Spurs and Mavericks now present.

The good news is that there is an easy solution to all of this that could prove better than what even the NHL and NFL do. It could preserve the credit for winning one's division as well as reward another for season-long accomplishment.

Ronald C. Modra/Sacramento Bee/MCT

San Antonio forward Tim Duncan is leading the Spurs in a battle with the Dallas Mavericks for the No. 1 seed in the Western Conference.

Capel lands job at Oklahoma

By Jeff Latzke
Associated Press

NORMAN, Okla.—Mike Krzyzewski has developed quite a few coaching protégés in college basketball. Jeff Capel thinks he might not fit the same mold as the rest of his Duke brethren.

Capel, who agreed Tuesday to a five-year deal worth up to $850,000 annually to be Oklahoma's new coach, played alongside Grant Hill on Duke's 1994 team that went to the NCAA title game but lost to Arkansas. But he also endured a 13-18 season in 1995 while Krzyzewski missed 19 games following back surgery.

"My experience at Duke was different," Capel said. "It was different from a lot of people that have played at Duke, especially more recently, because of all the things that I went through during my four years there."

Capel's run with the Blue Devils was still successful. His teams made it to the NCAAs three out of four years, although they didn't make it past the second round after that 1994 run.

At times, he was thrust into the point guard position during the run to the Final Four, and now he thinks those types of experiences are paying off. At age 31, Capel was the third-youngest Division I coach last season.

"I had to grow up very quick there because a lot was expected of me as a freshman," Capel said. "I had to learn how not to defer. I had to learn how to not be afraid to say things and to set a standard, to be an example for the rest of my team. I just think that's kind of carried over."

Along with growing up as a big brother, Capel credits his struggles with illness and injury after college and his three years playing in the CBA and in France with helping him to mature. When he was hired as Virginia Commonwealth's head coach in 2002, he was the youngest coach in Division I.

Capel was 79-41 in four seasons with the Rams, including trips to the NCAA tournament in 2004 and the NIT in 2005 — the school's first consecutive postseason bids in 20 years.

"Obviously when you get an opportunity to be a head coach at 27, you have to grow up pretty quick," Capel said. "I've always felt I was a little bit older than I was, and it's because I've always kind of felt like I've been a leader."

Photos by C. Chesterman, Charlotte Observer

Jeff Capel was hired as the coach of the Oklahoma basketball team on Tuesday. Capel got into coaching after playing at Duke for Mike Krzyzewski.

Part of Capel's coaching philosophy comes from Krzyzewski and some is from his father, who's an assistant with the Charlotte Bobcats.

"In a lot of areas, I've been heavily influenced by him," Capel said.

Coach K's other disciples have had mixed results.

Mike Brey coached Delaware to two NCAA bids and Notre Dame to three more before three straight NIT berths.

Tommy Amaker led Seton Hall to three NIT bids and a run to the NCAA round of 16 before taking Michigan to the NIT championship in 2004 and the NIT title game this season.

Neil Dougherty took TCU to the NIT last year before going 6-25 this season.

Three others lost their jobs this season: Quin Snyder resigned from Missouri, Tim O'Toole left Fairfield and David Henderson was fired by Delaware.

For what it's worth, Krzyzewski thinks Capel will succeed at Oklahoma. When Capel sought out Coach K's advice, he was told Oklahoma is "one of the best jobs in the country."

"Jeff is one of the best communicators I've known and he will continue the quality tradition of basketball there by building a program suited for long-term success," Krzyzewski said.

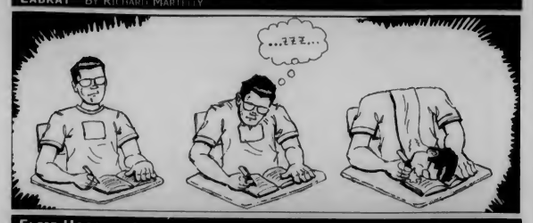
Capel's Duke pedigree was certainly appealing to Oklahoma's players, some of whom remember him from his playing days.

"When you have Coach K or Duke anywhere in the scenario, that's going to be a good thing," freshman forward Taylor Griffin said. "He's probably at the highest level or one of the best coaches out there. That's got to mean something."

Capel takes over a squad that loses three impact seniors in Taj Gray, Kevin Bookout and Terrell Everett and says he isn't concerned about an unresolved NCAA investigation into more than 550 improper recruiting phone calls by predecessor Kelvin Sampson and his staff. Oklahoma is scheduled to meet with the NCAA's Committee on Infractions on April 21.

"It's over with," Capel said. "There was a mistake made and you move on to the next play."

For Capel, that means a commitment to excellence. At his introductory news conference, the new coach answered a screaming fan's "Beat Texas" plea with a promise to do that and gave hope for much more.



"I really feel like this is a place, the University of Oklahoma, where you can win the whole thing," he said.

LABRAT By Richard Marteeny

ELSIE HOOPER By Robert D. Krzykowski

THE FAMILY MONSTER By Jonas Sharpe

PAUL By Billy O'Keeffe

A COLLEGE GIRL NAMED JOE By Aaron Warner

QUOTE OF THE DAY

"Nobody knows you when you're down and out."

—Eric Clapton

ACROSS
1 The ones here
6 Coin opening
10 Coffee, slangily
14 Horse opera
15 Secrete
16 Has creditors
17 Of an arm bone
19 Type of triangle
20 Spanish tarlet
21 Boglike
22 Bouquet bottoms
24 Shoe's basket
26 At the stern
31 Woodsman's tool
32 ___ Retiret, CA
34 New Haven scholar
35 Jolly old salts
37 Overstep
40 Vivacity
41 Ticks off
42 Periods
43 Part of the Indian Ocean
45 Confront
46 Earmark
47 NYC arena
48 Type of whiskey
50 Kennedy or Kopper
51 Flock members
53 Pugilist's weapone
56 Astronaut Buzz
58 Japanese verse
62 Putting to death for beliefs
65 Life-drawing subjects
66 Toledo's lake
67 Lat. list-ender
68 Foolish
69 Author Unis
70 John of the PGA
71 Selects actors

DOWN
1 ___ de force
2 Patriotic Nathan
3 Sicilian volcano
4 Chairs
5 Mekilekes list
6 Flickering
7 Aither and Kudrow
8 Scent
9 Hardy heroine
10 Young kangaroos
11 Punching tool
12 Churchillian gesture
13 Pompous one
19 "I ___" (Taoist book)
23 Pluses
25 Ogle
26 ___-Lorraine
27 Failed to hit
28 Plate appearances
29 Actress Fawcett
30 "M*A*S*H" procedure
32 With acorn
33 Puts to a test
36 Weep
38 Gore and Capp
39 Bring off
44 Say without saying
49 Cultural 52 Devoured
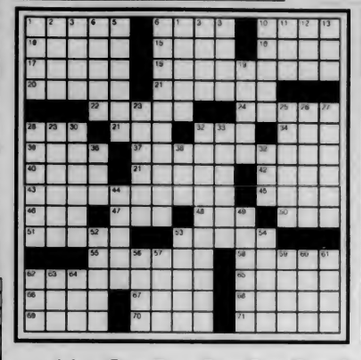
53 Leaf
54 Dry-heat bath
56 The ___ Scott Case
57 Comic Rudner
59 McKinley and Lupino
60 English county
61 Employs
62 Singer Torme
63 "We ___ the World"
64 ___ Grande



Find today's answers online

www.dailycollegian.com

The Moan and Dove

The moan and dove encourages you to drop out.

themoananddove.com
460 West St. • Rte. 116
Amherst, MA • 256-1710
3pm 'til 1am every day

Best Bar Around
Seven O's
KARAOKE
EVERY WEDNESDAY
Friday 4/14
Six Degree
Saturday 4/15
Shut Up & Dance
at 9:00 p.m.
Route 116, 330 Amherst Road
Sunderland, MA 01375
(413) 665-8788
2pm to 1am M-F
12pm to 1am SAT & SUN
Next To Cliffside Apts.

HOROSCOPES

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
Someone will steal your garden gnome tonight.

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
Rainy days would be more fun if you had a prettier umbrella.

aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
It was definitely worth skipping all your classes today to watch soap operas.

taurus Apr. 20-May 20
You will consume three gallons of ice cream this weekend.

gemini May 21-Jun. 21
If you cleaned your room you'd probably find your other shoe.

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
You should get your nails done on Saturday.

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
You will run into someone you'd prefer not to today.

virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
You would probably be really good at kick boxing.

libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22
You are addicted to Lost. You might need professional help.

scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
You are not computer savvy. Don't even try to make a Power Point presentation.

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
You are almost out of paper clips. Buy some more before next week.

capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
What the heck do you need all that duct tape for?

Chicago Pizzaria Yes, We Deliver!
PIZZA - CALZONES - SUBS
SALADS - PASTA - DINNERS
RIBS - SEAFOOD - SLICES
PARTY PLATTERS NOW AVAILABLE!!
CALZONE SLICES...LIKE NO OTHER!
HOURS
Sun - Wed. 3pm 2am
Thurs - Sat. 3pm 3am
Order For DELIVERY or PICK UP
(413) 549-6073
150 Fearing Street
Next to Patterson Dorm
Amherst MA 01002

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

ANNOUNCEMENTS

I don't just grab attention; I demand attention with my bold style and speedy frame. Meet me, the Ford Fusion, outside the Campus Center on April 25th between 10 AM and 3 PM. Brought to you by your New England Ford Dealers.

Full Tuition Scholarships and $5,000 cash Prepare yourself to EXCEL and LEAD Visit us at www.umass.edu/armyrotc

APARTMENT FOR RENT

2 bedroom $1100 3 bedroom $1400 4 bedroom $2150 Now Accepting Applications 253-7377 millvalleyestates@winnco.com

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing, 1& 2 bedroom apts. Leases begin June, July, Aug or Sep. First come, first serve. Get them while they last. www.brandywine-apts.com stop by or call 549-0600

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Amherst Clean 2BR Bus Near Center $1025 Avail 6/1 413-335-5226

28 Stockbridge St.: 4 bedroom house- 2 baths, living room, eat in kitchen, pantry, laundry, finished basement, yard, 2 car garage. 1.5 mi. to campus! $2,800/Mo www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

AUTO FOR SALE

2001 Volvo s40 T 80K miles Black, 4 door, well maintained Volvo 240 Sedan, leather, new brakes and tires, front/side air bags, winter package, CD, air, auto, $9,500 or BO. 586-7124 or Louise.Morse@comcast.net

EMPLOYMENT

Full-time summer employment at the Housing Assignment Office, $8.50/hour. Visit the HAO at 235 Whitmore to pick up application.

EMPLOYMENT

Furniture porter and maintenance person needed for busy auction gallery on Nantucket Island this summer. (508) 228-3942

Personal Care Assistant for woman in Northampton. Light housework. Cooking, cleaning, laundry, shopping. Must have reliable car to take client to Dr's appts. Part-time hours $10.84/hr. References and some experience preferred Please call before 7pm 586-0029

Drivers Wanted. Chicago Pizza. Apply in person between 3:30-5pm

PAINTERS NEEDED! Hundreds of positions available throughout New England. Work outside with your friends and family in your hometown. No experience needed, training provided. Join large student painting company this summer. Hiring now! 888-277-9787 www.collegepro.com

EMPLOYMENT

April 14th is the Last Day to Apply to become a Legal Assistant with the Student Legal Services Office. Earn 12 credits while gaining valuable experience. Call 545-1995 or stop by the Student Legal Services Office at 922 Campus Center to get your application.

Rent us your Ears! Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu Voicemail: 545-6837

Bartending $300/Day potential. No experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 x162

HOUSE FOR RENT

Hadley, close to UMass 5 Bedroom home, large yard, Oil heat, Sept occupancy. 549-4270

ROOM FOR RENT

Large, quiet, comfortable, furnished. Walk to UMass. On busline. For male Professional/Grad students. June 1 to Sept. 1. Fall option. 413-549-1578

SERVICES

Legal questions? We have answers at the Student Legal Services Office, 922 Campus Center or Call 545-1995

PREGNANCY TESTING, HIV TESTING, Birth-control, and Emergency Contraception. STI Screening and Treatment Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992.

Pentium Color laptops $99 We type term papers, resumes, cover letters. 413-584-8857

TRAVEL

Disney/Beach Area 7/6 nights stay. Pd $600.00 Sacrifice $199.00 Good for one year 978-444-0261

WANTED

Egg Donors Wanted: Established Donor Program seeks loving, healthy women, 21-33, to donate eggs to infertile couples. Non-smokers only. Generous compensation! 1-888-363-9457, www.reproductivelawyer.com

EGG DONORS WANTED Help make a couple's dream of becoming parents come true by becoming an egg donor. A very generous compensation paid. Must be a non-smoking female between the ages of 21 and 32. For more information, please visit our website at www.robertnicolsesq.com or contact Christine or Liz at 781-551-0600.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS THURSDAY

THURSDAY, APRIL 13, 2006 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Hobart throwdown

Statesmen have proven to be a dangerous team

By Jeff Howe
Collegian Staff

For the last two seasons, the Hobart men's lacrosse (4-5, 0-4 ECAC) team has been a difficult group to figure out.

When the Statesmen are on, they have beaten the likes of Syracuse at the Carrier Dome — like they did on March 28, 9-8 — but when they are off, they have lost to teams like Binghamton — a 7-5 affair on March 14.

UMass coach Greg Cannella, who is getting ready to take on Hobart at 1 p.m. on Saturday at Garber Field, can provide a fair assessment for Hobart's trouble with consistency.

"We're the same way, aren't we?" he retorts.

The No. 10 Minutemen (7-2, 2-1 ECAC) came out of the gates flying to a 3-0 record and outscoring their opponents 37-25, but then fell to Albany for the third year in a row in a frustrating 9-8 contest at Garber Field. Cue the season's second three-game winning streak in which the Minutemen outscored their opposition by a count of 44-27 before its second disappointment of the year, a 7-5 loss against a solid Penn State squad, and UMass was once again forced to do some soul searching.

The three Gorilla captains — Sean Morris, Jack Reid and Jake Deane — have been echoing Cannella's requests for everyone in the locker room to find — and keep — their "edge."

With just five games remaining on the schedule until the NCAA Tournament begins — and judging by the recent decisions of the tournament selection committee, the Minutemen can't finish any worse than 4-1 or 3-2 to pick up a bid — UMass has a very limited amount of time to fine-tune the engine.

In addition to keeping their edge, Cannella is looking for his club to play for a full 60 minutes as well as key on three other important areas.

See LACROSSE on page 9

Senior long-stick midfielder Jake Deane leads the Minutemen into an ECAC clash with rival Hobart on Saturday at 1 p.m. at Garber Field. Deane is 11th in the nation in faceoff percentage, winning 60.8 percent of draws this season.

Schneider has impressed in goal this year

By Dan Duggan
Collegian Staff

After starting every game in goal this season for the Massachusetts men's lacrosse team, Doc Schneider is no longer a freshman in UMass coach Greg Cannella's eyes.

"I don't think anybody's a rookie anymore," Cannella said. "After the first two or three games I don't think guys are rookies anymore. I think they learn right away how they have to play to succeed. None of those guys are rookies anymore — they're out there playing with us."

UMass Notebook

Cannella's view is partly due to the fact that he feels Schneider is battle-tested after playing in nine games, but it is also due to the way Schneider has performed.

Schneider is in the midst of a dominant stretch, as he has held opponents to single digit goals in the past seven games.

Schneider was named the ECAC Rookie of the Week on Monday following a 15-save performance in a 13-6 win over St. John's. Schneider

See NOTEBOOK on page 9

Hitting the road again

By Jon Pelland
Collegian Staff

After a brief — but successful — three-game homestand, the Massachusetts baseball team (5-15, 3-6 Atlantic 10) is in the midst of yet another road trip. This one isn't quite as long as the previous 17-game trip, but at 10 games, it will be a long time before the Minutemen get to step foot on Earl Lorden Field again.

Beginning today, and ending Saturday, UMass will be in Philadelphia to take on the LaSalle Explorers (11-19, 4-4 A10). The series begins today instead of the usual Friday opener because of the Easter holiday on Sunday.

The current road swing already brought the team to Storrs, Conn. On Tuesday and after the weekend the Minutemen will be traveling to Lynn, Mass. for the opening round of the Beanpot Tournament.

The trip will then end on April 26 after a three game series with St. Louis in Missouri, the Beanpot Final and a game in Chestnut Hill against Boston College.

On the past homestand it looked as if the Minutemen were making improvements. Throughout the weekend, UMass got the balance of offense and defense that they sorely lacked on the opening roadtrip.

In defeating Duquesne two out of three at Lorden Field, the Maroon and White compiled 36 hits to score 24 runs. That's compared to 34 hits and just 18 runs for the Dukes. The Minutemen also received spectacular pitching performances from freshman Ryan Walczak (3 2/3 innings pitched, 1 hit, 0 runs allowed) in relief and starter Rory McDonald (7 1/3 innings pitched, 2 hits, 1 unearned run allowed).

Senior first baseman/pitcher Bryan Adamski continues to pace the UMass offense, but the veteran has some company on top of the offensive stat sheet. Along with Adamski (.329), junior shortstop Lou Proietti (.329) and sophomore third baseman Ryan Francoeur (.317) all have averages above the .300 mark.

Entering the series with LaSalle, however, the Minutemen are coming off of a 7-1 thumping at the hands of Connecticut. The visitors kept it to a two-run game for eight innings but couldn't hold on to knock off the stronger Big East opponent. In the bottom of the eighth the Huskies came out and broke the game open. Three hits led to four runs and the eventual victory.

The Explorers enter the weekend riding high. On Tuesday night they won the Liberty Bell Classic for the first time in school history. For those who don't know, the Liberty Bell Classic is the Beanpot meets Philadelphia.

In this year's championship game at Citizens Bank Park, the Explorers won in dramatic fashion, beating Lafayette, 6-5. Trailing by two runs entering the ninth, LaSalle scored three runs on four hits and a Lafayette error to win the title. Catcher Rich Prall's RBI single in the ninth was the deciding factor in the game.

Historically, UMass holds the edge over LaSalle. Although the all-time series began just eight years ago, the Minutemen have enjoyed a 12-4 record against the Explorers. The last time the two schools met was a season ago in Amherst. UMass took two-of-three from their opponents behind wins from now-Arizona Diamondbacks prospect Matt Torra and current senior David Sullivan.

Harris signs on with UMass

With four players set to join the Massachusetts men's basketball team next year after sitting out this season, UMass coach Travis Ford did not have many scholarships to offer high school recruits.

Ford was still able to land a high school stud, as he announced yesterday that Baltimore native Ricky Harris has signed a National Letter of Intent to join the Minutemen next year.

Harris, a 6-foot-2, 175-pound guard, is coming off of a prep season at The Winchendon School in Winchendon, Mass. Harris graduated from Baltimore powerhouse Calvert Hall College High School in 2005.

"We are very excited to welcome Ricky Harris to the UMass basketball family," Ford said. "Ricky brings a new and different dimension to our basketball team as a quick multi-talent guard. He is a great shooter who can create his own shot."

Harris said he felt comfortable with UMass, especially considering the links the school had to his native Baltimore.

"I feel very confident in my decision in choosing UMass," Harris said. "They have had a connection with Baltimore area players in the past, including Donta Bright. When I met with Coach Ford he was straight up and forthright with me from the start. He showed me that he cared about me and my family as individuals, which was important to me. I also felt comfortable with Assistant Coach Adam Ginsburg since he also had Baltimore connections, having coached at Towson University."

Harris averaged 17.0 points per game while shooting 43 percent on 3-pointers and 81 percent from the free throw line this season for Winchendon. Harris' coach at Winchendon, Mike Byrnes, played for the Minutemen in the late 1980s.

Harris will be vying for playing time next season in a crowded backcourt, which includes returning players Chris Lowe, James Life, Brandon Thomas and walk-ons Drew Rossi and Nana Ampin, and fellow newcomer Tiki Mayben, who sat out this season due to academic ineligibility.

–Dan Duggan

Connecticut no match for UM

By Eric Athas
Collegian Staff

In a classic New England rivalry, the Massachusetts softball team knocked off Connecticut yesterday afternoon by a score of 6-4, giving UMass the first of a two-game series, which will continue on May 7 at the UMass Softball Complex.

The Minutewomen (19-12, 7-1 Atlantic 10) will next take on Saint Joseph's this afternoon in a doubleheader, which begins at 3 p.m.

Against the Huskies, the Minutewomen had control throughout the contest. Junior Amanda Morin got things started off on the first pitch of the game with a single to left field. After junior Candice Molinari singled and advanced Morin to second base, freshman Whitney Mollica loaded the bases with her 41st hit of the 2006 season.

Senior captain K.J. Kelley cracked the scoreboard first for UMass, flying out to centerfield, to drive in Morin to give UMass the early lead.

The score remained stagnant for the proceeding two innings, as freshman Brandice Balschmiter kept the Huskies at bay on their own turf.

The Minutewomen heated things up once again in the top of the fourth inning. Errors by the UConn defense led to scores by sophomore Lauren Proctor and freshman Carly Morin. Another error by the Husky squad brought in freshman Samantha Salato.

UMass increased the lead in the top of the fifth inning when a double by Mollica scored Molinari. With a 5-0 deficit heading into the bottom of the fifth, UConn had a lot of catch-up to do.

Through the next two innings, the Huskies were able to score four runs, and put the Minutewomen on their heels. Jillian Ortega, Holly Calcagno and Kristina Tolles each knocked in runs to make the score 5-4 heading into the seventh inning.

Although UConn kept things close, Kelley increased the Minutewomen's lead again with a single to centerfield, which brought in Mollica. Balschmiter then sealed the deal when she struck out Meghan Tierney and forced two groundouts.

Balschmiter fanned 12 throughout the afternoon, only giving up four unearned runs at the latter end of the game. So far this season, the rookie holds an ERA of 0.80, striking out 164 batters, with a personal record of 15-6 with one save.

Another freshman, Mollica, is making noise in her first collegiate season as well. Mollica leads the team in several categories, including batting average (.429), RBIs (38), and hits (42). She has also registered a whopping seven home runs this season, followed by junior Amanda Acampora, who has knocked six out of the park.

UMass currently sits atop the A-10 conference, losing only once to Charlotte last weekend. Fordham is behind the Minutewomen in the standings with an A-10 record of 6-2. This afternoon, the team will take on the team third to last in the standings — Saint Josephs, which has only won two conference contests and has an 11-24 overall record.

Sophomore outfielder Lauren Proctor went 3-for-3 with a run scored in a 6-4 win over UConn yesterday. Proctor is batting .366 this season.

Minutewomen seek A-10 win

By Danny Picard
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts women's lacrosse team will be in search of its first Atlantic 10 win of the 2006 season when it travels to Philadelphia to take on Saint Joseph's (4-5, 1-1 Atlantic 10) tonight at 5 p.m. at Finnesey Field.

The Minutewomen (3-9, 0-2 A-10) are trying to snap a three-game losing streak in which they have been outscored 42-23. The Maroon and White are coming off of a tough weekend after losing to St. Bonaventure on Friday and No. 9 Richmond on Sunday.

While both the Bonnies and the nationally-ranked Spiders are the top two teams in the conference, UMass coach Carrie Bolduc knows that her team's game plan remains the same. Put the ball in the net.

"We need to score goals," Bolduc said. "We have to finish. That's it. It's that simple. If we can do that, we'll be winning games."

If you looked at the A-10 statistics, you would be able to feel Bolduc's pain. The Minutewomen are second last in the league in goals per game with only nine. And their 108 goals on the year make them the third-worst scoring team in the conference, right ahead of today's opponent.

Saint Joseph's has only scored 96 goals this season, and averages 10.67 goals per game. The Hawks are in third place in the A-10, and only have one more win than the Minutewomen. UMass is currently in last place in the eight-team league, which shows that the playoffs are still wide open to any and all of the eight teams.

The Hawks are led by Kerry O'Connell. O'Connell has 29 goals on the year, and is the A-10 leader in goals per game with an average of 3.22. The Minutewomen will have to shoot the ball on net if they want to get back on the winning track. Saint Joseph's goaltender Sarah Magan has played all nine games for the Hawks in 2006 and has a save

See WOMEN'S LAX on page 9

Sophomore attacker Kathleen Typadis and UMass will take on Saint Joseph's today on the road at 5 p.m. Typadis leads the team with 26 points.

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY · EST. 1890

The Daily Collegian

FRIDAY, APRIL 14, 2006 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM VOLUME CXVI ISSUE: 115

President Wilson visits Amherst campus

By Mike Sances
Collegian Staff

University of Massachusetts President Jack Wilson addressed a gathering of the Faculty Senate on Thursday, confidently asserting that the state's five-campus system had begun to bounce back from almost $150 million in cuts between 2000 and 2003. But aside from an increase in student fees and a substantial number of early retirements, Wilson maintained that the overall quality of the flagship campus had not been diminished in that time.

"We didn't cut enrollments, as many universities did at that time, and I would assert that we didn't compromise at all," Wilson said. "We didn't compromise our courses, and we didn't compromise in the faculty that we hired."

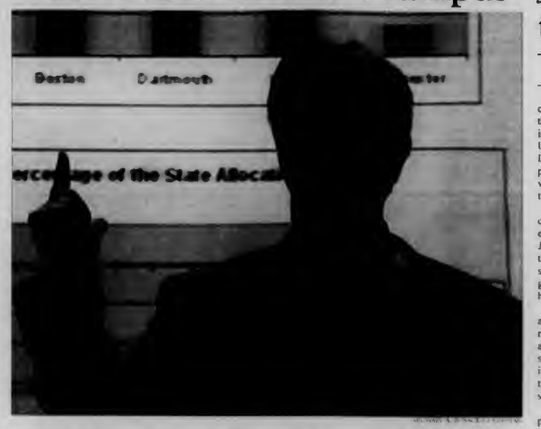
Throughout his speech, Wilson referred to the period between 2000 and 2003 as "the emergency period" or the "rough times."

"As you all know, because you've gone through it, we've been through some pretty rough times over the last few years," he said. Echoing State Senator Stanley Rosenberg, who delivered similarly themed remarks to the Senate in February, Wilson was highly optimistic about the future, as well as the present.

"We're off and running," he said. "We survived."

Wilson was also unrepentant about the fee increases levied on students in recent years, defending them on the grounds that they were the only alternative to laying off thousands of UMass employees.

Wilson reiterated that the fee increases over the past three years had been lower than the rate of inflation, while the school was able to meet 91 percent of demonstrated financial need. He also pointed out that UMass Amherst is rated by US News & World Report as a "national leader" in graduating students with low debt.



"The hardest impact was on the upper-middle-class students," Wilson said, in reference to the effect of the budget cuts on financial aid.

No students at the meeting challenged Wilson's claims, and only a handful of questions came from Senators.

Professor Richard Bogartz rose to ask President Wilson about the most recent addition to the UMass system, UMass Online. Bogartz said he would be teaching an online course in the fall semester, and was curious how he would be able to ensure that the persons taking his exams were really the students they claimed to be.

Wilson said that there was a system in place to prevent cheating in the online courses, but pointed out that the problem was not isolated to UMass

See WILSON on page 2

University of Massachusetts President Jack Wilson speaking to members of the Faculty Senate yesterday.

Johnston's sister gives tearful testimony

By Matt Belliveau
Collegian Staff

NORTHAMPTON — In what could be seen as a major victory for the defense team of Bryan Johnston in the murder of his best friend and University of Massachusetts graduate David Sullivan yesterday, a forensic psychologist testified that Johnston was "not criminally responsible" at the time of the murder on Dec. 6, 2004.

Carole Feldman, the forensic psychologist who spent over 50 hours evaluating the mental health of Johnston after the murder, declared that Johnston suffers from paranoid schizophrenia, a disease that was genetically prevalent on both sides of his family.

Feldman, who developed her analysis through reviewing various reports and testimonies from police and Johnston's friends and family, stated that due to his major mental illness, Johnston "lacked the substantial capacity unable to appreciate the severity of his wrongdoing."

According to Feldman, Johnston's paranoia caused him to experience numerous vivid visual and auditory hallucinations.

Feldman rehashed many of the numerous hallucinations brought up in earlier trial dates.

Her evaluation attributed Johnston's change in mental health once he enrolled at the University of Hawaii, where he "began to hear voices coming out of the walls," he said. The voices, he went on to say, had a threatening tone to them, and continued to evolve until one day it became so unbearable that he took the first flight from Honolulu back to Hartford, leaving behind his brand new motorcycle, laptop, and furniture in his lavish apartment.

Feldman added that Johnston told her that he had been drugged and raped while living in Hawaii.

After returning to Hartford, Johnston began having hallucinations involving his best friend, David Sullivan.

"Johnston said that Sullivan told him that 'we' had paid to have him raped in Hawaii, that he was responsible for putting microphones in his rooms," said Feldman. "One day, while leaving a class at Westfield State College, he saw Sullivan, who wasn't a student there, walking out of a class with an eerie smile where Sullivan told him 'I can get you whenever I want.'"

When Feldman asked Johnston why he went to Sullivan's house on the night of the murder Johnston answered, "There comes a point where you want to know everything."

Jurors were also told of Johnston's introduction to weapons early in his childhood.

In his interviews with Feldman, Johnston explained that his father would take him up into their padded attic of their home in Westfield to go "target shooting" out their window.

"But as a young boy, according to his father, Johnston 'couldn't shoot anything alive,'" said Feldman.

Johnston's sister, Kimberly Johnston, gave her tearful testimony

See MURDER on page 2

Counter protest held in UMass

A rally yesterday afternoon in support of a proposed local Wal-Mart expansion drew protests from at least one student group outside the Student Union at the University of Massachusetts.

The UMass Republican Club sponsored the rally, in part, because the group supports Wal-Mart's low retail prices for working college students, and thinks many of the criticisms against the chain store are unfounded.

Republican Club member and former Student Government Association presidential candidate Rob Shepherd spoke to the crowd at the event. In an interview after last night, he explained that the club's reasoning behind the rally was due, in part, because their voices are often overshadowed by the majority political groups on campus.

Shepherd said that many of the protestor's comments were not relevant to the Republican Club's argument.

"People were heckling us, mostly about the Wal-Mart corporation itself and not the specific store," said Shepherd.

The Republican Club is rallying support behind an expanded Wal-Mart on Route 9 in Hadley because they say lower prices are good for working college students and the larger store will bring in new jobs.

"It's a capitalist system. If you really have a problem with Wal-Mart, then don't shop there because they will lose business," said Shepherd.

Members from the UMass Radical Student Union were on hand to protest the event.

Some of the RSU members shouted at the Republican Club's speakers while addressing the crowd. Most of the comments referred to Wal-Mart's use of cheap overseas labor and low wages for many of its store employees.

—Collegian Staff

WMUA wins three Associated Press regional awards

By Holly Seabury
Collegian Correspondent

WMUA, the student radio station of the University of Massachusetts has was recently recognized by the Associated Press Massachusetts/Rhode Island region in three categories at an awards ceremony held in Sturbridge on April 8.

UMass journalism graduates Kathleen McCann, Kristen Millen, and Emily Moses won the award for best continuing coverage for their series on the Graduate Employee Organization protest in the spring of 2005.

WMUA General Manager and communications student Marc Bertrand and Sports Production Director and communications student Nick Zguro were awarded for their coverage of a UMass Women's basketball game against Siena in November.

Melissa Blanksteen, a journalism student and WMUA News Operations Director won the award for best feature story. Blanksteen was recognized for her piece on a sand mandala made on campus last semester.

"I was surprised, but proud," said Blanksteen, a senior who has been on the news station for four years. "It really meant a lot for me to win this during the last of my college years."

According to Blanksteen, the award winners sent in their submissions to the Associated Press at the end of January this year. Like every year, they competed with colleges and universities in the region for seven different categories. Bigger news stations such as ABC-40 in Springfield compete as well, but not with college level news stations.

This year, WMUA tied Emerson College for the most awards, with three awards each, followed by Boston University, which won two awards.

"It's always exciting to see which schools will win," said Blanksteen, "especially when it comes down to public schools versus private schools."

"I'm very proud of what our news station has done," said Blanksteen. "It's nice that we are being recognized and approved of what we are doing."

The station broadcasts three news updates daily Monday through Friday and can be heard 24 hours a day, 365 days a year on 91.1 FM or online at wmua.org. It also airs a new weekly news talk show, the UMass 1800, on Sundays at 5:30 p.m. The sports department broadcasts UMass Football, Women's Basketball, and Lacrosse games throughout the year.

WMUA has been named for 17 years straight as the Valley Advocate's "best college radio station." The station, which has been on air for over 55 years, is currently made up of 28 students and is a student-run, student and community radio station.

For UMass students who are interested in WMUA, Blanksteen explains that it is very easy to get involved. The station, located in room 105 of the Campus Center basement, is always looking for students who are interested and motivated.

"I was a Japanese major coming into UMass. Now I'm the News Operations Director of my school's news station," said Blanksteen. "It's easy; get involved, take my spot when I graduate next month. We want to reach out to students, they make us great."

WMUA staff member Kate Wiley.

WMUA staff member Whitney Kmetz.

WMUA broadcasts three news updates daily Monday through Friday and can be heard on 91.1 FM or online at wmua.org.

Forum discusses the importance of solving global warming

By Steve Stafford
Collegian Correspondent

The Environmental Institute and Climate Change Working Group presented a public forum on global warming yesterday at the University of Massachusetts.

Speakers at the even gave their own personal perspectives on the climate change crisis, and answered questions from the audience. Moderator Peter Haas, who is also a UMass political science professor, opened up the discussion with a quote from Mark Twain: "If you don't like the weather, do something about it," he said.

Massachusetts Democratic Congressman John Olver, a former UMass professor, expressed his concern that American policy had fallen behind other countries.

"This is really the most challenging problem facing us in this century, and I know that's a bold statement," Olver said. "It will affect which parts of the world are livable."

Olver reminded the crowd that the United States uses one quarter of all the energy used in the world, though comprising only five percent of the world's population.

The United States has provided the model for industrialization and improving the standard of living," he said.

Olver didn't hesitate to implicate President Bush about the global warming problem.

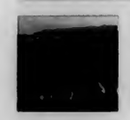
"[Bush's policies were] a piddling response to an extremely serious problem. He told the country that 'America is addicted to oil.' This coming from a Texas oil president. Was this an epiphany or something?" Olver said.

EPA official Joel Schiraga represented the executive branch following these remarks.

Climate has changed, climate will continue to change. We're already seeing the changes. This isn't something we can ignore," Schiraga said, noting the trends of increased temperatures, increased precipitation and more intense storms over the past century.

"By 2090, New England will feel more like Washington D.C. or Virginia," he said.

Speaker John Shea followed him in similar fashion. "New England is a brand name for rustic, beautiful villages," warning us that global warming threatened to change this.



Finally, speaker Julie Johnson, who has worked to reduce emissions in the Amherst area, said that we should be developing "a vision for the post-carbon era." Her group has worked to change school curricula, using more efficient street-lights, and encouraged people to turn down their thermostat, or drive less.

UMass junior Patrick Wallace

See FORUM on page 2

ARTS & LIVING

COACHELLA MOVIE FAILS

"Coachella" is Drew Thomas' unsuccessful debut as director.

PAGE 5

EDITORIAL/OPINION

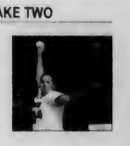
DRINKING AND DIALING

What you need to know to protect yourself and your loved ones; especially them.

PAGE 4

WEATHER

TODAY
High 72
Raining



TONIGHT
Low 45
Raining

TOMORROW
High 69
Low 41
Mostly sunny

SPORTS

MINUTEWOMEN TAKE TWO

Pitchers carry UM through A-10 doubleheader.

PAGE 10

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Michael Busack
MANAGING EDITOR Eric Athas
BUSINESS MANAGER Nathan Chomsky
PRODUCTION MANAGER Nicholas Belanger
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Katie Huston
ADVERTISING MANAGER Kerry O'Grady
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Lauren Egerian
EDITORIAL PRODUCTION Amanda Allen
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Ian Jones
COMICS EDITOR Amanda Allen
EDITORIAL EDITOR Kristen LaCasse
NEWS EDITOR Dan O'Brien
SPORTS EDITOR Jeff Howe
CIRCULATION MANAGER Thomas Hecht
DISTRIBUTION MANAGER Nick Gleason
FINANCE MANAGER Daniel Conti
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Caren Tortorici
ASSISTANT BUSINESS Phil Smoller
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Morgan-Ann Rousseau
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Alex Butler
ASSISTANT NEWS Megan Daley
ASSISTANT NEWS Matt Belliveau
ASSISTANT SPORTS Dan Duggan
ASSISTANT SPORTS Rob Greenfield
ASSISTANT EDITORIAL Tucker Merrick

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS ALGIE LIFE, BECAME THE COLLEGE SIGNAL IN 1901, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914 AND THE TRI-WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1958. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967, THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN BROADSHEET SINCE JANUARY 1994. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL WEEKDAYS BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 3:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Eric Athas

COPY EDITOR
Michael A. Busack

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Amanda Allen

PRODUCTION STAFF
Sara Belanger, Sean Duram

If you see news happening, call us at 545-1809 and snap a photo with your cell phone, then send it to news@dailycollegian.com

Court sides with Salem State College in covert videotaping case

By Steve LeBlanc
Associated Press

BOSTON — A worker at Salem State College had no reasonable expectation of privacy when she used a rear work area to change her clothes and apply an ointment for a severe sunburn to her chest, the state's highest court ruled Thursday.

Gail Nelson, who was working as a secretary at the college in 1995, sued the college for invasion of privacy after a co-worker discovered a hidden camera that was taping the portion of the office where Nelson unbuttoned her blouse to apply the ointment.

The Supreme Judicial Court sided with the college, agreeing with a lower court ruling that the college was within its rights to videotape the area without notifying workers first.

"Despite all of the plaintiff's efforts discreetly to conduct acts of a very personal and private nature in the office, in this case, there was no objectively reasonable expectation of privacy," the court ruled. "Even if the plaintiff thought she was alone, there was no absolute guarantee, including when she locked the door to apply her medication or change her clothes for the evening. The office was public."

The camera had been installed after the college became concerned about possible unauthorized access to the office after hours. None of the preserved tapes showed Nelson changing clothes or applying ointment.

The court chastised the college for letting the camera run continuously, including during the work day.

"There is no question the defendants' twenty-four hour video surveillance of the entire office was unnecessarily broad for the limited investigation of alleged criminal activity occurring in the office after hours," the ruling said.

Even so, the court ruled, Nelson shouldn't have expected privacy in that part of the office.

Nelson's lawyer Jeffrey M. Feuer said the ruling was not only a blow for his client, but for other workers.

Feuer said the court "basically said that employees are not entitled to privacy unless they have exclusive control over a work area and the work area is a private one" — such as their own private office.

"The court also failed to recognize the difference between being seen by or monitored by your boss and being secretly videotaped. The camera is an unblinking eye, it never looks away and it records for posterity everything you do," he said. "That's different than the boss walking by your desk or office and glancing in."

Dr. Stanley P. Cahill, executive vice president for Salem State College said the school was glad the case was settled.

"We are very pleased with the result of this particular case and we are glad it is over for all involved," he said.

John Reinstein, legal director for the ACLU of Massachusetts, called the ruling a significant setback for privacy in the workplace. The ACLU served as co-counsel on the SJC appeal.

"It is unfortunate that the Court essentially found that there was no privacy violation under either the Fourth Amendment or under the statutory right of privacy where a party is subjected to covert video surveillance, so long as the surveillance takes place in a location where they might be observed by others," he said.

The ACLU is backing a bill that would regulate electronic monitoring, insist that companies notify employees of such surveillance and prohibit any monitoring in private areas.

Springfield superintendent to get citation for traffic accident

SPRINGFIELD (AP) — The superintendent of Springfield's public schools will get a criminal citation after all for his role in a traffic accident earlier this week, Police Commissioner Edward A. Flynn says.

Superintendent Joseph P. Burke, driving his sport utility vehicle, rear-ended a minivan on Tuesday morning, according to police. After the accident, he continued for 30 yards, made a left turn onto another street and drove another 170 to 200 yards before coming to a stop on a traffic island.

Burke said that his brakes and steering malfunctioned after the wreck and he could not stop until he reached the island.

The driver of the vehicle Burke struck complained of a neck injury, but refused medical treatment.

Burke was given a written warning for leaving the scene of a property damage accident when the investigating officer determined that Burke's actions did not rise to the level of a criminal citation.

But after reviewing the report of the incident, Flynn concluded that a warning was not sufficient given the facts of the case, and on Wednesday directed the police traffic bureau to issue a criminal citation. That means Burke will have to appear in district court at some point to answer to a citation of leaving the scene of a personal injury accident.

"My belief is that this is a decision that needs to made in the court room, not on the side of the road," Flynn said.

"Officers have the right to use their discretion based on the facts as they see them (but) ... This is a case where too much discretion was used," Flynn said.

Burke was in an accident, he knew he was in an accident and he left the scene, Flynn said.

Burke's reasons for not stopping do not matter, Flynn said. If his brakes and steering malfunctioned, he must go to court and prove it, Flynn said.

—Associated Press

Johnston: 'We were a close family'

MURDER from page 1

to jurors explaining Johnston's gradual metamorphosis from a dedicated family man to a paranoid schizophrenic.

Kimberly Johnston, 32, who holds a associates degree in nursing through UMass' online courses, repeatedly broke down in tears as prosecutors on both sides asked her describe her brothers behavior in the months leading up to Sullivan's murder.

"We were a very close family," said a weeping Kimberly Johnston. "I was very close with Bryan."

Kimberly Johnston said that she noticed a change in her brother during her visit to Hawaii in 2001.

"He started telling me people where following him," said Kim Johnston. "But he said he couldn't tell me who because he would be putting me in danger."

Kim Johnston, who works as a nurse in a psychiatric hospital, said she expressed concern to her parents but no action was taken.

"You worked in a locked psychiatric ward and you didn't know what to think" asked prosecutor Renee Steese.

Johnston explained that she received a disturbing phone call in the middle of the night from her brother in the fall of 2003.

"He just kept on screaming 'The General is giving orders', and telling me to 'shut up'," said a sobbing Johnston. "I just hung up the phone."

Jurors also heard testimony from two Westfield State College professors that taught Johnston while enrolled in the fall semester of 2003.

William Cook, who taught two of Johnston's classes in 2003, said that her first impression was that he was a "highly intelligent student that was friendly and well respected by his peers."

Olver blames Bush for global warming woes

FORUM from page 1

says the event could have benefited people's knowledge about the issue.

"I was disappointed that more people didn't show up," Wallace said, "It really is shameful. Amherst is a pretty progressive place and even here students didn't show up."

"There is a lot of misinformation out there," said event coordinator John Kochendorfer, "Many people think that the hole in the ozone layer is the same as the global warming issue. A lot of people assume that the blame lies entirely on industry, but our own individual actions are also significant in solving this problem."

Harvard professor speaks at UMass

By Sesugh Nomishan
Collegian Correspondent

An esteemed Harvard professor and co-author of the book "Sugar and Spice and No Longer Nice" gave a lecture on the increase of violence in adolescent girls this past Thursday at the University of Massachusetts Campus Center.

Dr. Deborah Prothrow-Stith from the Harvard School of Public Health delivered the message that violent behavior, something commonly attributed to males, is growing in young women. She says the statistics show young girls are committing more serious violent crimes during the past decade. Prothrow-Stith says she is concerned because this is a fairly recent discovery to society, public health, and the criminal justice systems, and not many programs are focused on helping young women.

"Programs are focused on boys or are gender neutral," Prothrow-Stith said. "It has to do with the lack of use of guns in girls and we have to change the social norms," she said.

Prothrow-Stith, who works in inner city Boston, believes setting, gender, or class does not restrict the issue of violence.

"Violence is not contained to the inner-city community," she said. "All communities deal with issues of child abuse, teen violence, and ignoring them is like sitting on a time bomb," she said.

Jason Schweid, a UMass graduate student who attended the lecture shares similar sentiments.

"Sometimes we blame the violence on a community when the same behavior takes place everywhere," he said.

Prothrow-Stith presented a chart illustrating the percent change in juvenile arrests during the 1990s. Females had a 57 percent increase in aggravated assaults and a 44 percent increase in weapons arrests. Males decreased by 5 percent and 7 percent during the 90s in each category respectively. These numbers, Prothrow-Stith suggests, indicate a significant change in the social norms.

The use of violence in advertising in today's society is something that has affected social norms, according to Prothrow-Stith. She says the marketing of violence to girls is the biggest change in social norms during the past decade. Prothrow-Stith used an issue of "Jane" magazine, a publication geared towards attracting young "20-something" female readers, to illustrate her point. Some of the advertisements used phrases such as "You Bitch! . . . It's nice to show your mean streak" and "You won't find please and thank you in her vocabulary. . ." demonstrating a boisterous, arrogant pride in vulgarity.

Patricia Chicano, a Nutrition Epidemiology student who was raised in Peru, had never seen such an ad before.

"I was surprised to see the magazine advertising being mean," Chocano said.

"I experienced [in Peru] mean girls but it was a social class thing. The rich girls were mean to the poorer girls," she said.

Prothrow-Stith said the girls that are most at risk to exhibit violent behavior are those that are witnesses to violence and/or have family members in jail. She says the biggest challenge for public health is reaching out to these kids and healing the hurt that they often deal with.

"There is not enough initiative from the public health system to invest time with these kids and connect them with an adult to mentor them," Prothrow-Stith said. "We need to be more intentional about helping these kids instead of waiting till they go to jail," she said.

The UMass School of Public Health and Health Sciences presented the lecture. Prothrow-Stith is Professor of Public Health Practice and Associate Dean for Faculty Development at the Harvard School of Public Health.

First recovery high school set to open

BEVERLY (AP) — The first "sobriety school" in Massachusetts is scheduled to open in Beverly this fall.

The school is designed to help students in grades nine through 12 who are recovering from substance abuse disorders.

It would be the first public school of its kind in Massachusetts, and state officials are pushing for similar schools in Boston and in the western part of the state.

Lt. Gov. Kerry Healey said the Beverly school will help students who want to complete their education in a supportive and sober environment.

"Recovery high schools provide an opportunity for kids to continue their education in a place that is free from the social pressures that often lead to relapse," she said.

The school will have up to 50 students, four full-time teachers, a part-time art teacher, a full-time counselor and a nurse.

It will be administered by the Northshore Education Consortium, an organization comprised of 17 school districts.

The education consortium was awarded $1.5 million from the state over the next five years. The group is leasing an unused middle school from the city.

—Associated Press

UMass president says school is rebounding

WILSON from page 1

Online. It is also an issue in face-to-face courses, he said, and there is inevitably a way to cheat any system.

The Senate also passed a motion endorsing an administration plan to implement a mandatory, 75-minute online course on alcohol consumption which all incoming first-year students will have to complete by October 15, 2006.

Intended not only for those who drink or drink heavily, the Senate motion also emphasized the value of the course for the sober student, stating that the online course "affirms their health choices and provides helpful information for dealing with intoxicated individuals, recognizing alcohol overdose, and helping a problem drinker."

Originally, the course, offered by the Web site mystudentbody.com, was to be required for transfer students as well, but was restricted to only incoming first-year students in the amended version. It was unclear whether graduate students would also be required to complete the course.

It's time to highlight that dull hair!
HIGHLIGHTS Starting at only $45 with this coupon*
CALL FOR A COMPLIMENTARY COLOR CONSULTATION TODAY!
STYLE HAIRCUTS & CONSULTATION* $5 OFF w/ WENDY, LAURA AND KATE COUPON EXPIRES 5/20/06
Styles by Deborah & Co
HAIR SALON & SPA
Paul Mitchell Signature Salon

CLUB J-
CASTAWAY
Proudly Presents.
NEWLY REMODELLED CLUB IN WESTERN, MASS.
Come see us soon!

BURGER KING
HAVE IT YOUR WAY
NEW FRENCH TOAST SANDWICH AND CHEESY TOTS
It's A Sweet Thing
FREE SMALL CUP OF BK JOE® NO PURCHASE NECESSARY
FREE BACON DOUBLE CHEESEBURGER WHEN YOU BUY ONE
FREE ORIGINAL WHOPPER® WHEN YOU BUY ONE
FREE BREAKFAST SANDWICH WHEN YOU BUY ONE

Applications are now open for assistant news editor and news editor for the Fall 2006 semester.

Alcoholism treatment wins federal approval

WASHINGTON (AP) — A once-a-month injection to treat alcoholism won federal approval Thursday, expanding availability of a drug previously sold only in daily pill form.

The Food and Drug Administration approved Vivitrol, spokeswoman Laura Alvey said. Cambridge, Mass.-based Alkermes Inc. will make the injectable form of the drug, also known as naltrexone. Cephalon Inc., of Frazer, Pa., will market and sell it.

The companies hope monthly injections of the drug, to be administered at a doctor's office, will prove an easier regimen for alcoholics to follow than the daily pill. The drug is to be used in conjunction with counseling or group therapy, the companies said.

"Daily adherence to a medication is challenging for most people, and even more challenging for people with alcoholism," said Richard Pops, Alkermes' chief executive officer.

The drug works by blocking neurotransmitters in the brain believed to be associated with alcohol dependence, diminishing the craving for alcohol.

Pops said the drug's price wouldn't be decided until its U.S. launch in late June. He didn't offer sales predictions and said initial marketing would not include direct-to-consumer advertising.

Naltrexone initially won FDA approval for treating alcoholism in 1994. It first was sold to treat narcotic dependency. Other drugs to treat alcoholism include Antabuse, which has been sold since 1948.

The market for Antabuse and naltrexone has been limited, with annual sales in the low tens of millions of dollars.

Vivitrol will carry the strongest warning prescription drugs can bear. The black-box warning will caution patients that the drug can cause liver damage, said Dr. Elliot Ehrich, Alkermes' vice president.

The pill form of the drug bears a similar warning, which says liver damage was observed at higher-than-recommended doses.

Frank Baldino, chairman and chief executive officer of Cephalon, said 2.2 million Americans are seeking treatment for alcoholism, among the 9 million who are alcohol-dependent.

—Associated Press

Man who lived in school arrested in Boston

BOSTON (AP) — A homeless, illegal immigrant from Mexico, whose story of secretly living inside his old high school in Minnesota prompted an outpouring of sympathy and donations, has been arrested on home invasion charges in Boston.

Francisco Javier Serrano, 22, was embraced by many in Minnesota last year after they learned he had spent weeks hiding at Apple Valley High School, foraging for cafeteria food and showering in the locker room. A wealthy developer was so moved he provided him with money, an immigration attorney and a rent-fee apartment overlooking downtown Minneapolis.

But immigration officials ordered Serrano back to Mexico and believed he had boarded a plane home Jan. 5.

Two weeks ago, police arrested Serrano in an apartment in Boston's North End after they found him, with a knife, in a struggle with the tenant, The Boston Globe reported Thursday.

Serrano remains in Suffolk County Jail facing charges of home invasion.

"I'm absolutely shocked," said Rochelle Barrett, who along with her husband, the developer Basim Sabri, hired an immigration lawyer for Serrano. "I never saw this side of him. I never thought he could be capable of doing something like this."

The office of Immigration and Customs Enforcement in Minnesota has no idea how Serrano got to Boston, said spokesman Tim Counts, who added the agency expects to gain custody and deport him.

A federal immigration judge had granted Serrano permission to leave the United States voluntarily by Jan. 5. But now officials suspect he never boarded the plane after waving goodbye to supporters and journalists who saw him off at Minneapolis-St. Paul International Airport.

Immigration officials received a tip Monday that Serrano was in Boston. Counts said Boston police provided authorities with Serrano's fingerprints, which helped confirm his identity.

Because Serrano has no history of violence and did not hurt the tenant, prosecutors expect to downgrade the charge of home invasion to breaking and entering, said David Procopio, spokesman for the Suffolk district attorney.

A pretrial hearing is scheduled for April 28. If convicted, he could face up to 2 1/2 years in the County House of Correction. After serving the time, he would be deported, Counts said.

Francisco Javier Serrano, 22, faces charges for a violent break-in in Boston.

Serrano moved from Mexico to Minnesota in 2002 to live with his father. He fell in love with the United States and wanted to stay, go to college, and get a good enough job so he could send money to his family in Mexico, his mother, Guadalupe Flores, told the Globe by telephone from her home in Mexico City.

His visa was for six months, but he stayed When his father moved from Minnesota to Connecticut, Serrano followed, but left when the two had a falling out, his mother said.

"He decided to live his life on his own," she said, crying. "But he did it very badly."

—Associated Press

Man acquitted of fatally shooting a Boston teenager

BOSTON (AP) — The acquittal on Wednesday of a Boston man who was charged with the fatal shooting of a city teen out riding his bicycle three years ago has outraged the district attorney, who thinks the jury spent too little time deliberating.

Kevin Johnson, 20, was acquitted of the slaying of Steven J. Jackson, 15, after less than two hours of deliberations.

"We respect the jury's verdict when it's clear they carefully considered and deliberated on the evidence," Suffolk District Attorney Daniel Conley said. "But we deeply doubt that happened in this case.

"I'm confused," he said. "What was it about this case and this victim and his family that didn't merit a bit more work in the pursuit of justice?"

The shooting was the result of ongoing friction between the teens in the city's Roxbury neighborhood, prosecutors said.

A 15-year-old boy allegedly pulled out a handgun and pointed it at Jackson on April 23, 2003.

A short time later, another teenager riding a bicycle approached Jackson, who was also riding a bicycle, and shot him in the head with a .38 caliber revolver, then shot him again in the abdomen after he hit the ground, authorities said.

Prosecutors allege the shooter was Johnson, then 17.

Jackson died the next day at a city hospital.

A woman who knows Johnson testified that she saw him shoot Jackson, while another witness who has known Johnson all her life told the jury she saw him pedaling away from the scene and trying to hide his face with a hooded sweat shirt. Two other witnesses said they saw a shooter wearing a hooded sweat shirt fire the second shot and then ride off on a bike.

The weapon was recovered from a man who said he purchased it on the streets close to where Johnson lived at the time.

Johnson's defense attorney, Robert Griffin, argued in court that witnesses told police that Jackson's killer was a little over 5 feet tall, while Johnson is 5-foot-11.

Jackson was being raised by his grandmother in the Warren Gardens housing development.

—Associated Press

Iran must face consequences for nuclear defiance, says Rice

WASHINGTON (AP) — Secretary of State Condoleezza Rice said Thursday that Iran will have no choice but to comply with worldwide insistence that it back off its disputed nuclear activities.

Rice indicated the next step against Iran will be a resolution at the United Nations Security Council seeking punitive or coercive sanctions to stop what the United States says is a covert drive to acquire nuclear weapons.

"When the Security Council reconvenes, there will have to be some consequence for that action and that defiance," Rice said after a meeting with Canada's new foreign minister, Peter MacKay. "And we will look at the full range of options available to the Security Council."

Rice referred to the Security Council's power to "compel ... member states of the U.N. to obey the will of the international system."

"I'm certain that we'll look at measures that could be taken to ensure that Iran knows that they really have no choice but to comply," Rice said.

Iran denies it intends to build weapons, and has refused to give up what it calls a legitimate program to develop nuclear power for electricity.

In Tehran, Iranian President Mahmoud Ahmadinejad said Iran will make no concessions in talks this week with the head of the U.N. nuclear watchdog agency, who is visiting the Iranian capital to try to defuse Iran's standoff with the West.

"We won't hold talks with anyone about the right of the Iranian nation" to enrich uranium, as Iran announced this week it has done, Ahmadinejad was quoted as saying Thursday by the official Islamic Republic News Agency.

"No one has the right to retreat, even one iota," he said.

Iran says it is enriching uranium to a low degree to be used as fuel for generating power in a reactor. Higher-level enrichment makes uranium suitable for a nuclear bomb, but Western experts familiar with Iran's program say the country is far from producing weapons-grade uranium.

The Security Council has given Iran until April 28 to cease uranium enrichment activities, a deadline Rice mentioned Thursday.

—Associated Press

SENIORS-
GOT SOMETHING TO SAY?
Leave your mark!
The Daily Collegian is currently seeking essay submissions from graduating seniors
Write a 750 word piece about the UMass experience and how its shaped you. Bring submissions to 113 campus center basement
Top 3 will be published in the graduation edition on May 15th and 16th
All entries must be received by April 21 at 4 pm
Questions? Call 545-3500

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

EDITORIAL OPINION

FRIDAY, APRIL 14, 2006

"I may not agree with what you say but I will defend to the death your right to say it." -Voltaire

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Causing a "Ruckus"

Michael Dennis

It's an interesting concept. Upon the [illegible] Napster, "illegal downloading" [illegible] American list of moral guidelines, [illegible] before marriage, don't down[illegible] to you. Even Apple is in on the game, when you purchase a new iPod, it's as though Steve Jobs himself is preemptively admonishing you for playing [illegible] apples. As part of the packaging, [illegible] that says (in four languages)

[illegible] downloaders out there, that [illegible] from iTunes." For all of you tech [illegible] out there, that further translates [illegible] niece for sub-CD quality mp3 [illegible] who really cares about music and not [illegible] "morals," there is no truly [illegible] illegal downloading.

[illegible] some of legal digital music services, they [illegible] example Ruckus, the newest addi[illegible]. With Ruckus, if you're a student [illegible] for the service, you can have as [illegible] account. The obvious reason for the [illegible] to combat the propensity of college [illegible] to unload files. Not to mention movies, [illegible] porn, and porn. If students [illegible] Coach Bags, Gaucho pants, Red [illegible] would.

[illegible] those parents who let their 16-year-old [illegible] get drunk at their house, pro[illegible] supervise them. Only in this case, [illegible] it is music files. The mindset in both [illegible] is one to do it anyway, so they might [illegible] permission."

[illegible] get your blood boiling is to look [illegible] Ruckus' service attempts to appeal to [illegible] from the site "Although it may

UMass is like those parents who let their 16-year-old daughter and her friends get drunk at their house, provided adults are home to supervise them. Only in this case, instead of alcohol, it is music files ...

[illegible] registered, you have not... THIS [illegible] info. Before we were just toying [illegible] it as security stuff... stel[illegible] information and the various corpo[illegible] provide us with) wonder why [illegible] for them. Well, that's why.

[illegible] for college students aside, [illegible] I expected it to be. Downloading [illegible] of the most mind-numbing experiences [illegible] prohibitive world of legal down[illegible] You can only listen to music files for [illegible] files expire. (You have to renew [illegible] to them.) You can only play them [illegible] PCs. You can't even transfer them to [illegible] (To those of you who own mp3 players, try [illegible] what Intl you're going to do with these [illegible] ways to convert Ruckus music files [illegible] that are iPod friendly — but how is [illegible] from illegal downloading? In that case, you [illegible] just plain ahead from Soulseek or Limewire. [illegible] Ruckus once you're off campus, unless [illegible] that only wants to pay for files that they

[illegible] problem with legal music down[illegible] prohibitive nature of the [illegible]. However, there is a more con[illegible] pressing reliance on mp3 files [illegible] Sure, it's great to have [illegible] for storage, not to mention the [illegible] price when coupled with a [illegible] the facts. When you buy [illegible] get really buying an album. [illegible] album, a set of sub-CD quality [illegible] album, but try as they might, [illegible] the files, or if your hard drive [illegible] buy the actual CD (or, better yet, [illegible] and then rip mp3 files from [illegible] source?

[illegible] going to tell you to do anything [illegible] going to tell you to do anything [illegible] file sharing, don't let other [illegible] right or wrong — decide for your[illegible] video files and you don't own a [illegible] want to reevaluate your strat[illegible] of us, and you use file sharing [illegible] them more power to you. And if [illegible] service that provides you with files [illegible] go ahead. Thanks to UMass, [illegible] to use Ruckus... but you'll end up [illegible] if you actually expect to keep the

Michael Dennis
Student

Verizon and vodka

Caroline Moss

Victims of a crippling problem. Both have entered the ten digit program. Step one is admitting you have a cellphone.

An old proverb says "A drunk man's words are a sober man's thoughts." This profound statement unfortunately is also completely accurate.

We've all been there. You're eating dinner with your friends at the DC and someone mentions having to go to the library and then someone else chimes in with, "Aw man, I have like, seven papers to do tonight. I've known about them since 1992 but I haven't really gotten around to them. They're due tomorrow...yo, who wants to watch Wedding Crashers?" And after coming to the conclusion that yes, it definitely would be cooler if it was Saturday and not Tuesday, you leave dinner with every intention of getting your work done, actually getting some sleep, and showing up to lecture tomorrow, cause hey, you haven't done that in a while.

But all of a sudden your not in your room doing work at all, you're doing a lightning round with four of your friends singing "Land Down Under" by Men At Work at the top of your lungs, yelling profane words to express your feelings on that paper that will clearly not be written at any point during the night. 12 minutes later you're at the prime of your inebriation, feeling good, taking some pictures, lying on the floor laughing hysterically because someone decides to play "Rub One Out" by 2ge+her, and we all know nothing's funnier than artificial boy bands singing about self-pleasure.

Somewhere between your last shot and dancing to Eric Prydz's "Call on Me", you find your cell phone, and decide that 12:18am on Tuesday is probably the best time to check in with your friends, your ex, maybe your current boy/girlfriend, you know, just to let them know that you're still in love, maybe you want to call Grandma, see how she's doing. It happens.

For those of you scoffing right now because you wouldn't consider yourself a "drunk dialer", I salute you and your self control. For those of you who lack any whatsoever, I understand.

Because your night was going really well until you reach for the phone and call the answering machine of your best friend back home. "Jaaaannneee..." you say, "oh Jane, you are my fave friend everrr and... (You are suddenly distracted by something going on in the room)

"Dude, no don't pick up the lamp...oh sorry, Jane? Are you there? Ha no! Because this is a message, wait...hello? Do you guys have a grab-and-go at your school!? (she must wonder what that is)

"Well I just want to let you know that you are very pretty and I miss you k bye!" – Probably a level three on the obnoxious scale, but you can't help it as you step up your game a bit.

For those of you scoffing right now because you wouldn't consider yourself a "drunk dialer," I salute you and your self control. For those of you who lack any whatsoever, I understand.

Your next line: "Guys! Wait. I'm gonna call Greg." (Oh sorry, side note: Greg broke up with you two weeks ago and you "don't care").

Your statement is met with cries from your belligerent friends, most of which don't make sense, but the overall response regarding this genius plan is "do it!" (Minus the timid negative vote from the only person in the room who opted for Pepsi that night.)

Seriously, though, it's a good idea, you should probably just call him anyway, just to let him know that you don't care. So there you are, sprawled facedown on your friend's roommate's bed, limbs hanging over the side, waiting for Greg to pick up the phone. Eventually he does. Hey, what can you do now? He walked right into that one.

"Greg! Hi, I don't care how you are. You're an asshole! I'm calling to let you know that I am fine without you, because I am!" (seriously, you are, can't everyone tell by the phone call?)

"What? Ok...yeah whatever. I don't even wanna ever talk to you ever! (At this point you have fallen off the bed in the midst of your rage).

"Yo Greg. We're done." (Of course, that was most likely established when he, you know, broke up with you, but you can't be bothered with technicalities at this point).

That went well.

At Five a.m. you wake up in your own bed. How you got there, you'll never know, but you feel like you've been run over by a truck. Then its 12 p.m. You wake up for the day, and that horrible nauseating stomach ache overwhelms you. You know the one, where for the first two minutes, you're pretty happy with yourself and your life, and then you remember (or maybe you don't) what you did the night before, one event at a time, and slowly you begin to want to crawl in a hole and die. You have two voicemails on your cell, one's from Jane, they don't have Grab and Go, and one's from the girl from your 8 a.m. class wondering where you were this morning, because you missed a quiz. Great.

You swear to yourself you'll never drink again, and you stick to your guns for 36 hours.

Students of UMass, while I am sure the majority of you are not willing to compromise walking your paths to becoming raging alcoholics, leave the cell phone behind for a night and see what its like to wake up the next morning with your pride and dignity still intact, instead of wondering what the hell you had to say to your tenth grade lab partner at three a.m. Friends don't let friends drink and drive, and until a law passes that declares the illegalities of operating a cell phone while under the influence, friends shouldn't let friends drink and dial either.

Caroline Moss is a Collegian columnist.

Decision makers and you

Greg Collins

A discussion I had with my roommate recently about health care raised the issue: who should be responsible for getting health insurance, government or private employers and individuals? When political issues are discussed, analyzing who is making the decision and whether this entity is responsive to public feedback is as important as the actual substantive policy issue at hand.

Freedom comes in many forms, such as the five freedoms outlined in the First Amendment. But say that a despotic government disallows a newspaper from printing critical editorial pieces. It is crucial to recognize not only the differing views of the government's policies, but also that a centralized group of like-minded individuals – in this case consisting of despots who are running the government — takes away the option of the newspaper to print dissenting opinion. What mattered most to the Founding Fathers when writing the Declaration of Independence was not necessarily English taxes on colonists but that the decision-makers responsible for these policies were not Americans but distant legislators and monarchs overseas.

The actions of such distant Britons represented the tendency of an insulated group of people who hold disproportionate political influence to make judgments and pass legislation affecting those who do not have that influence. These judgments include establishing what they deem as a morally superior policy and then looking down on others who do not share these same values. This was one of the causes of the Revolutionary War and has been a perpetual political theme throughout history. For instance, in Greek mythology, rather than directing their energies toward representing the concerns of Greek citizens, gods were concerned solely with their own subjective sentiments and their relationship to other Gods.

One consequence of these centralized and insulated groups is that they are not subject to constituent feedback, a collective opinion that may have different viewpoints than their own. Because the populace is not fortunate enough to be part of such groups, it is difficult to alter whatever legislative or administrative solution the members of that centralized group have already decided upon.

For instance, affirmative action policies first publicized by President Kennedy and President Johnson to prohibit job discrimination were implemented by administrative agencies to promote hiring policies based on racial characteristics. These agencies consisted of officials who were insulated from public opinion and who were the primary decision makers of implementing this policy. Although many public opinion polls revealed that opposition of these policies were expressed not just by American citizens but also by black Americans, members of executive agencies such as the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission transformed the original policy intentions to fit their own prescribed and like-minded visions of justified public policy, regardless of the opinions of those who were directly affected by them.

The difference between these insulated groups and groups that are in the private sphere, such as business executives, is that the latter are directly affected more by feedback than public groups like administrative agencies or judicial courts. Owners are considered to be the primary decision makers for their businesses, but unlike public agencies they are responsive to feedback by their customers. If customers do not like a product or a service, then the owner will be forced to cater to this feedback or he will lose a lot of money.

One consequence of these centralized and insulated groups is that they are not subject to constituent feedback, a collective opinion that may have different viewpoints than their own.

As opposed to insulated governmental groups who have been afforded the role of being primary decision-makers in areas once left to the private sphere and who have the benefit of carrying out policy with little fear of suffering public backlash, business executives do not have the benefit of implementing initiatives without fear that they will be subject to public feedback. Customers are the ultimate decision-makers for private enterprise.

There is also a tendency for isolated groups of people who are not responsible for passing or implementing policy to claim moral superiority through academic work or news reporting. The fact that many members of these groups, such as university professors in the humanities or journalists who work for major newspapers, hold far more liberal positions than Americans not in these groups is not as important as the point that these viewpoints are considered by many within their group circles to be the authoritative word on the subject at hand.

Historically, the views and academic work of these insulated people have been used to justify policy decisions that have not resulted in what they originally perceived. For instance, many psychologists — individuals considered to be astute observers of human behavior — supported the implementation of sex education programs in public schools, yet there have not been conclusive studies showing that these programs have reduced teen pregnancy.

It is the assumption that people who hold disproportional influence within academia (or in administrative agencies) are intellectually superior and therefore should have the final say in developing and carrying out policy that encourages the transfer of decision-making processes from a private individual or entity to a more centralized group.

The next time you engage in a debate with someone about political and non-political issues, think about the entity that is responsible for the decision-making in addition to the actual decision being made. Consider whether insulated groups not subject to responsive feedback are truly taking into account the concerns of their constituents or are rather promoting their own visions with little regard to the people who are actually affected by the policies. A look at history, whether it is the British Empire or Nazi Germany, reveals that such actions erode the liberty that enables individuals to make their own decisions.

Greg Collins is a Collegian columnist.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

HAIL TO THE BUS DRIVERS

I am writing in response to Jon Brandt's Opinion piece of April 6th, entitled "More Public Drunk Transportation."

Mr. Brandt, you seem to view free public transportation as some kind of inalienable right to which you are entitled. This is not the case.

The bus system is a privilege, a service provided to you by hard-working people who are students, just like you, and have social lives, just like you. It costs a lot of money to provide this service. Some of that money comes from student fees, some of it from the University, some of it from Five Colleges, some from the town of Amherst, and so on. You claim that "it just doesn't make sense" that bus service is less frequent on weekends and late at night. The reason for this is that the bus company has a finite amount of funding; these are the times when the fewest people ride the bus, and when it is most difficult to get people to drive the bus.

So, Mr. Brandt, if you are serious about wanting additional bus service on the weekends, I have a couple of suggestions for you. First, you should see what you can do to increase the amount of funding the bus company receives. Perhaps you could simply write them a check for a few million, or, more likely, speak to the administrators and legislators who decide such matters.

Second, if you are a UMass student with a driver's license, there is nothing stopping you from applying to work for UMass Transit Services and driving some of these buses yourself. Remember, anyone can write an opinion in the newspaper, but only a small fraction of people actually do something about the issues they have opinions on.

Do yourself a favor and become part of that fraction. Finally, I would like to address your apparent implication that infrequent buses late at night are partially responsible for excessive drinking on campus. I consider it childish, ignorant, and beneath the level of this publication, especially since you have provided no evidence to support this claim.

In the future, I and my colleagues would appreciate it if you would refrain from making such unfounded claims about our organization in print.

Will Wagner
UMass Student & Bus Driver

HAVE A GREAT WEEKEND! love
the collegian staff

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

ARTS & LIVING

FRIDAY, APRIL 14, 2006

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Coachella movie dies on arrival

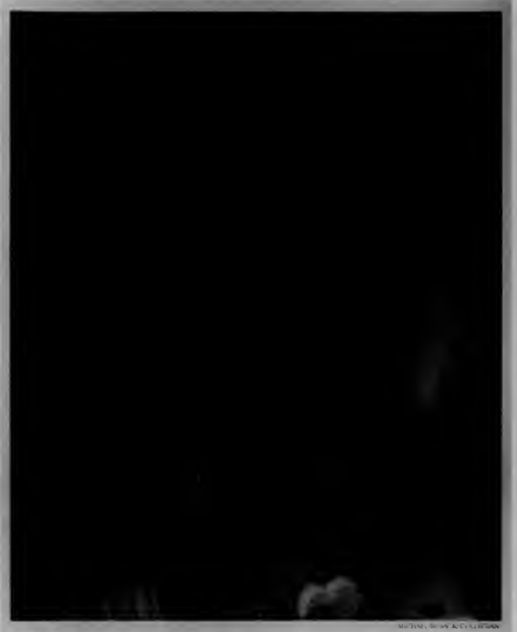
By Matthew Gardner
The Daily Cardinal (U. Wisconsin)

MADISON, Wis. — The Coachella Valley Music and Arts Festival has been one of the most celebrated outlets of alternative culture for the past six years. The festival, which takes place annually in Indio, Calif., showcases today's cutting-edge bands alongside those who have paved the way in the past, making it something of a scene-defining event.

"Coachella" the movie is an attempt to capture the unique atmosphere of the weekend, but unlike a great concert film, this movie is merely a series of performances interspersed with unenlightening interludes. While the performances are split between riveting and dreadful, the film fails to capture the grandiose quality for which Coachella the festival is so renowned.

"Coachella" is Drew Thomas' first film as director, and unfortunately, it is a rather unsuccessful debut. The main problem is the stale interpretation of the event itself. Coachella is undoubtedly an inspirational weekend, thanks to the combination of the world's most mind-blowing sonic and visual artists and the gathering of thousands of like-minded appreciators. This film, however, displays a boring, pedestrian event.

The main reason for this misrepresentation is the pace of the film. The viewer is presented with act after act, occasionally divided with interludes of varying interest. A few of these short clips consist of prominent musicians or lame fans speaking into the camera, while others attempt to relay the quirkiness of some of Coachella's strange and often hilarious non-musical attractions.



The common thread among the interview clips was the artists' emphasis on the festival's oasis-like atmosphere. However, keeping with the tradition of the pretentious rock star, these commentaries mostly consist of ramblings about how the fest is such a great escape from the turmoil of politics and corporate America, and never really bring the viewer into the experience of attending the event. Nor did the scenes involving fans, who mostly struggled to put up their tents and avoid running into ex-boyfriends.

The film does boast quite an impressive lineup of artists. However, instead of focusing on a flow of performances that would truly show the movie audience what Coachella is like, the film attempts to bombard the viewer with the most wide, varying array of bands as possible, and in a quick, uninviting fashion.

The photography often made the performances sterile and detached. Iggy and The Stooges, for instance, were included with a rendition of their classic "I Wanna Be Your Dog," but the legendary noisemakers seemed far removed from an audience that probably loved every second of it-although you wouldn't know from watching the film. Other acts, such as The Mars Volta, suffered from a combination of hollow recreation and their own almost embarrassing on-stage floundering.

It is not fair to say the film completely misses the mark, however. Luckily for Thomas, some of the acts featured are so brilliant it would be almost impossible not to capture them favorably. Performances from Belle & Sebastian, Oasis, The Arcade Fire, Bjork, Fischerspooner and Radiohead seized all the attention left over from the dismal rest of the movie. While Oasis' Gallagher brothers may seem like the antithesis of Coachella's utopian philosophy, Liam's monumental crooning soared over the masses of the festival, finally offering a true Coachella moment. Fischerspooner's bizarre dance tent performance was the film's most beautiful party.

The film's one true moment of ecstatic reflection was during Belle & Sebastian's sublime performance of "The Boy with the Arab Strap." For just five minutes, over the sounds of Foo Fighters raging from the other stage and rahid fans on the verge of tears, the film captured a half-dozen boys and girls from Scotland and the feeling of being a part of something perfect. Beyond these few performances, however, you would be better suited to take the trip to Indio.

Peer healthy snacks

Students from the sex education theater troupe, the Not Ready For Bedtime Players, sell chocolate lollipops in the shape of vaginas, genitalia, and large Volvas in the Campus Center last Tuesday. The players will be selling the pops as a fundraiser next Tuesday and Thursday in the Campus Center.

Buzzcocks fail on 'Philosophy'

By Fitzgerald M. Doubet
The Daily Vidalia (Illinois State U.)

NORMAL, Ill. - Listening to Buzzcocks's latest album "Flat-Pack Philosophy" and thinking of the group members as some of the founding fathers of punk rock, one may suppose the title of the album should be "What Happened?"

Inspired by groups like the Sex Pistols, Buzzcocks's somewhat shocking name actually comes from a British slang meaning "youngster." Nevertheless, the band proved to be as fast, loud and raunchy as the rest of their punk rock compadres in the late seventies.

Thirty years later, however, the band appears to be lacking in the charm that garnered them popularity with young punks in England. If the idea of 50-year-old punk rockers seems foreign, Buzzcocks have done their best here to try and change that, but they just don't measure up.

Not to discriminate against age, but let's just face it, as musicians get older their lives change, ideas change, lots of things change, and they don't tend to retain the same quality as they had when they were young.

Take a look at Eric Clapton for instance. Compare early work with Cream, Blind Faith and Derek and the Dominos with later solo work on "Pilgrim and Back Home." Yeah, that late stuff is Ok, but it's nothing compared to the classics.

Punk artists are no different, but the music is so widely recognized as a youth culture, and with some exceptions, punk hands don't tend to last that long. Some fans of the genre have seen this as a blessing, because they feel it keeps the music fresh. Well, they may just be right. "Flat-Pack Philosophy" is a bit stale.

Now it's perfectly fine for a band to age, mature and develop their sound, but there's a certain point at which that music changes so much that it no longer makes any common connection with early works.

Buzzcocks's power pop songs have always shown more feeling in comparison with other punk artists of their era but still managed to keep that edge just enough to allow them to sneak their way into the crude youth genre.

This album, however, lacks the required edge to make it true punk rock, but it isn't quite pop enough to make it radio-worthy.

The Buzzcocks sort of straddle the fence on this album, sometimes making one think they will fall to either side, punk or pop, but they never do. They just sit there, legs dangling, teasing by tipping back and forth, but their balance remains steady.

The album starts out strong with the title track "Flat-Pack Philosophy" with that classic three-cord punk sound and 77 sound bass lines, and then the vocals come in. Up until this point, one might think they were listening to any Buzzcocks album, but the vocals change matters. One realizes then just how much Pete Shelley and Steve Diggle, who both sing, have aged.

They haven't lost their voices exactly, but the whiny insolent voices of young punks from early Buzzcocks records have been replaced by the voices of middle-aged men. It just seems so out of place.

British singer tries to bring back a swinging, soul sound

By Rob Watson
Knight Ridder Newspapers

PHILADELPHIA — They call it "laying in the cut." It's old-school hipster talk for finding your groove and staying deep within it, whether it's in life, music, or, in the original street definition, laying low in an Oldsmobile Cutlass Supreme.

It's also a way to describe the British soul crooner and guitarist James Hunter, whose latest CD, "People Gonna Talk" (GO Records/Rounder), brings to mind R&B sounds of an earlier time. Critics have thrown around names such as Sam Cooke, Jackie Wilson and other early-'60s faves.

"Those comparisons are so ludicrously flattering that they are difficult to object to," Hunter says, humbly, over scrambled eggs at noon one Sunday. While touring in the States, he has made Philadelphia his home away from home.

The 42-year-old native of Colchester, England, likes to be locked in the subtleties of soul's swing. His sound stays in the pocket. Nice and easy, laying in the cut.

Adult-album-alternative station WXPN-FM, at the University of Pennsylvania, hailed him as last month's "artist to watch," and he DJed at the station, playing the artists who inspired him. He mesmerized Conan O'Brien's television studio audience, and his concerts have turned into the sock-hops of 2006. His show at World Cafe Live last month had older fans up on their feet, remembering the music of their parents, and younger folks enthusiastically doing their best imitations of steps created long before their time.

David Dye, host of WXPN's World Cafe, was caught off guard by Hunter's sound when he got a promo CD from Rounder Records.

"I was blown away when I heard it — I didn't even know he was English," Dye says. "Obviously, it's a throwback kind of sound, but a lot of people do throwback sounds and they aren't very good. What makes Hunter different is his age and his sincerity. It makes his sound new music, instead of just a replication of a sound that's come before him."

Hunter, who became a fan of late-'50s and early-'60s soul music from European radio programs and his grandmother's old records, finds it funny that people associate him with just one "sound," anyway. If anything, "People Gonna Talk" covers a wide variety of styles, from "Smoke Without Fire," an understated track whose horn arrangements say Ray Charles at his coolest, to "Talkin' Bout My Love," which has guitar licks that evoke Chuck Berry in a sentimental mood.

"People often think that every artist in that realm had the same qualities," Hunter says. "If I want emotional intensity, I'll listen to Little Willie John, but if I want some pyrotechnics, I'll go to Jackie Wilson. It's not all the same emotional level, that stuff, which people make the mistake of thinking it is."

And that, perhaps, is because there aren't a lot of places where Americans can still hear soul and R&B from the '50s and '60s. There are bands reviving that '70s funk sound — Poets of Rhythm and New Mastersounds — but like jazz, the music that inspired Hunter has stayed more popular in Europe than in the States.

"Over here, at its peak, it was the mainstream thing, whereas at home it was always a bit of an underground secret," Hunter says. "People here don't seem to be in awe of it like we are, still."

That awe, Hunter thinks, keeps him from being just another white guy riding the coattails of the black artists who pioneered the music he likes to play. In fact, for him there isn't much controversy about it at all, as long as you're honest.

"Actually, somebody warned me that African Americans might object to what I was doing," he says. "I have never run into it before, but I respect those concerns. Look at Elvis Presley,

See HUNTER on page 6

In his new album, British soul veteran James Hunter tries to bring an old soul sound for new audiences.

Alfre Woodward: a true believer

By Roger Moore
The Orlando Sentinel

Alfre Woodard sits perfectly perched on that pedestal, "women we love" in the movies, a fact that the years and too few roles truly worthy of her have done nothing to diminish. Earthy, funny, sexy, she is, at 53, the actress's actress.

"She can be very funny," writes film scholar David Thomson in the "New Biographical Dictionary of Film," "deadpan, tragic, brave, tough, wise, street smart, or stupid."

The Oklahoma native and Boston University alumna did the "stupid" bit earlier this year in "Something New," playing a mother who disapproves of her daughter's choice of a landscape architect (and white) beau. She does a little bit of everything as Betty Applewhite on ABC's "Desperate Housewives."

And she's equal parts funny, and sassy smart, in "Take the Lead," the new teach-kids-to-dance ballroom dancing movie, in which she plays a skeptical inner city school principal opposite idealistic dance teacher Pierre Dulaine (Antonio Banderas).

Question: The movie pushes this idea that dance can change the lives of troubled or "at risk" kids. Did making it make a believer out of you?

Woodard: Oh, I'm a total believer in the arts as a way of healing people, of their role in a healthy society. Dance, music, painting, it changes you. And I knew Pierre Dulaine's story, what he believes ballroom dancing does for kids. That's why I signed on to do this. I hoped, 'Great. Maybe people will think about doing this in schools nationwide.'

Q: Why is teaching kids to ballroom dance a good idea?

Woodard: We are ritualistic, as a species. And there are not a lot of ways to experience the rituals we crave these days. Since the '60s, we don't touch when we dance. In the club, we're 'droppin' it like it's hot.' Every dancer is starring in his or her own movie.

But with ballroom, you have to look at the other person. You have to touch them. You have to look at people around you, consider them, their needs and feelings. It's becomes this communal exercise in good manners. Kids take to it, lap it up.

Q: You've played school principals, authority figures before. Yet you've also managed to avoid being typecast. How do you do it?

Woodard: I only say yes to things that interest me. And I never do the same character twice. I'd be bored. If you know you can do something, there's no need to go to work.

Q: This is the sassiest, fastest-talking principal I've ever seen in a movie.

Woodard: I got to improvise a lot of that stuff, me chewing out the kids, walking the school's halls. I didn't get to dance. Didn't want that to bleed into my interpretation of Augustine. You know, 'Alfre played this principal and she had fun learning to dance, too.' Augustine doesn't dance. But I did get to talk. A lot.

Q: Betty Applewhite. Nice to get a role on the hottest show on TV.

Woodard: I know! But I hadn't seen "Desperate Housewives" before they offered the part. They sent me some episodes on tape, and I liked the fact that it breaks form. As a viewer, and a performer, I always wonder, 'Why is it that I know, without looking at the clock, that this story is at the midway point, or is at a commercial break?' You shouldn't sense that. This show hides that stuff.

Q: People give actors baggage that sometimes limits what they can do. But your baggage, this earth mother thing, nurturing, sweet, is pretty nice.

Woodard: I've done quite a few women you wouldn't want to have in your house, as well.

Alfre Woodward, seen here dancing with Antonio Banderas, believes that the arts, whether dancing, painting, drawing, sculpting or acting, help heal people and solidify their role in society.

Q: And your favorite among all the roles you've played?

Woodard: I have to say Popeye Jackson, in "Miss Firecracker." Out of all the people I've ever played, Popeye would be the one I want to hang with. I get her. I like her humor, her unself-consciousness. And working with Mary (Steenburgen), Holly (Hunter), Scott (Glenn) and Tim (Robbins) was like actor camp.

Q: You first earned wide notice for playing Geechee in "Cross Creek," the Marjorie Kinnan Rawlings biography, back in 1982-83. Any memories of doing a period piece in the swamps of Florida?

Woodard: Oh yes! Snakes falling out of the trees. One day, an AD (assistant director) had to shoot a snake that fell right out of a tree, almost on top of Mary Steenburgen and Rip Torn, just as they were about to do a take. Plopped down between them, BAM.

And I can still see this great, famous cinematographer, John Alonzo ("Chinatown"), up to his neck, in the swamp, with a camera on his shoulder, shooting up at a scene of us on the boat. Glamorous business, right?

Hunter's sound brings old soul and to a somewhat lesser extent, look at Eminem today. The bottom line is that there really hasn't been a popular form of music that doesn't owe a lot to African-Americans. I just dig that particular sound."

HUNTER from page 5

Through all comparisons and attempts at pigeonholing him, Hunter plays it cool. Full of smiles and jokes, yet understated. Maybe it's because he's been at this for a long time. Playing in nightclubs for more than 20 years in and around his hometown, holding a job as a signal-maintenance worker for British Railways, and touring as a backup singer to Van Morrison (who has called him "one of the best voices, and best-kept secrets, in British R&B and soul") has produced a practical man. He's continuously honing his craft, playing the music he loves, waiting for others to take note.

"It seemed like my career was always on the edge of something," Hunter says. "Twenty years of bubbling under and not quite erupting kept up the excitement for me. I guess."

Artist Steve Erdman took note about 18 years ago. While in London, he stumbled upon Hunter playing on the street and they became chums. Although the two exchanged letters and funny little drawings for years — Hunter's scratchings of himself and his bandmates illustrate the CD booklet — it wasn't until 2002 that the dynamic changed.

"We brought him over for a private party," says Kimberly Guise, Erdman's fiance, who lives with him in an apartment in Philadelphia. "That's when we decided to try and help him record an album."

With no music-industry acumen, the couple formed GO Records in 2003 with one purpose: to let Hunter record the album he wanted to make.

"He released a couple of albums before this that he wasn't entirely happy with. Our goal was to give him his musical freedom," Guise says.

What emerged from Hunter's work at London's Toe Rag studios, home to artists including the White Stripes and host to an array of vintage recording equipment, were 14 well-written songs, mostly about love's trappings.

From the offbeat skip of the album's title track, "People Are Gonna Talk," to the early Temptations-like swing of "Watch and Chain," Hunter's music and message merge, with very few loose ends.

"One can't get really wistful with some of the clobbering rhythms they've got now," Hunter says. "They all sound a bit constipated to me."

He's been taking his brand of R&B up and down the East Coast since the beginning of the year, with plans to keep it up till he plays Europe this summer. When he does have time to relax, he returns to Philly.

Guise thought it was a natural fit, partly because of her familiarity with the area.

"I was born and raised in University City, went to Masterman, actually, and just moved him in with us," Guise says. "James really likes it too. He wakes up and walks all the way down to Penn's Landing when he can."

So what does Hunter think about Philly? Has he done the whole birthplace of freedom — Liberty Bell, Independence Hall — thing?

Not quite. It's history of another sort that has intrigued him so far.

"I have an old picture of Sonny Til and the second tenor from the Orioles outside the Earle Theatre," Hunter says about the black-music hot spot that used to be at 11th and Market. "It was such an atmospheric picture, I dragged my girlfriend around town on a bit of a pilgrimage until I finally found it. That was one of my coolest moments so far."

Ejiofor not man enough for role

By Randy Myers
Knight Ridder Newspapers

Walking in stilettos didn't faze Chiwetel Ejiofor (pronounced "chew-it-tell, edge-oh-for.") Neither did squeezing his trim 5-foot, 10-inch physique into a tight red dress, or wearing a poofy Diana Ross wig.

What really needled the star of the British comedy "Kinky Boots" was the modern form of torture called body waxing.

The painful procedure was required for him to portray Lola, a drag queen who inspires a soul-searching shoe manufacturer to launch a line of male fetish footwear. The charming comedy is based on a true story and shows that along with acting chops, Ejiofor has a fine set of legs and a strong set of vocal pipes.

Prepping for the role reminded the 31-year-old London native of the squirm-inducing chest hair removal scene from last year's hit "The 40-Year-Old Virgin."

"That was actually stolen from my life," the nattily dressed actor says with a shudder at the Clift Hotel. "I did it only once."

His eyebrows were first to go, then his underarm hair was plucked. He suffered through that niggling pain. But when it came time for the more sensitive territories, such as the back and later the chest, things got particularly hairy.

Bleary-eyed from it all, Ejiofor cried uncle.

"I simply wasn't man enough," he says.

But even though he cuts corners, Ejiofor makes for a convincing and complex drag queen. The feisty Lola is a far cry from Ejiofor's other current big screen role. In director Spike Lee's crafty crime caper "Inside Man," he plays a savvy New York police officer who's partnered with Denzel Washington when robbers take bank hostages.

It was the second time he's worked with Lee. "I'm a great fan of Spike Lee's films. He's a great person and a great personality to work with and be around," he says. Previously, the son of Nigerian parents starred in Lee's "She Hate Me," which was universally panned.

Even though most people mangle the pronunciation of his name, they probably do recognize his face. Expect to see a lot more of it in the future, as the roles just keep coming.

Ejiofor started acting on the stage in his early teens, going on to earn raves and awards as an adult in England. He entered the big leagues immediately, landing his first feature role in Steven Spielberg's 1997 slavery drama "Amistad."

His breakthrough came in 2002, with director Stephen Frears' taut thriller "Dirty Pretty Things." He gave a blistering performance as an illegal immigrant and hotel clerk who uncovers a horrifying transplant conspiracy. Nearly everyone took notice.

Since then, he's segued into roles that showcase his versatility. He's done romantic comedy ("Love Actually"), branched out into sci-fi ("Serenity"), even did a shout-'em-up ("Four Brothers").

Later this year, Ejiofor will be seen in the futuristic "Children of Men," reteaming with "Inside Man" co-star Clive Owen. In that film, he'll play the leader of a radical political group at odds with Owen's character. Based on a P.D. James novel, it's directed by Alfonso Cuaron ("Y Tu Mama Tambien"). He'll also appear in the independent feature "Tonight at Noon" with Ethan Hawke.

Those parts couldn't be more different than the character of Lola. A good screenplay is what interests him most, Ejiofor says.

"It's not really that I'm looking at scripts and I'm thinking 'Oh that's not really the sort of thing I do.' Because I don't know what it is I do. So I just read scripts and if I like the character, then I'm intrigued and interested in portraying those characters. It sort of becomes as simple as that in a way."

When Ejiofor read the "Boots" screenplay, he instantly knew he wanted to play Lola, who changes the lives and attitudes of working-class factory employees. He wanted the part so much he even showed up for the audition in a wig.

"I just shaved and put the wig on," he says. "I wasn't a very glamorous drag queen that day."

To prepare for the role, he and co-star Joel Edgerton, whose character Charlie Price inherits the failing shoe business after his dad dies, scoped out the London drag scene, along with director Julian Jarrold. Some of their acquaintances helped out on the project.

Ejiofor joins a long list of actors who have portrayed drag queens to varying success. Terence Stamp and Guy Pearce seemed like naturals in "The Adventures of Priscilla, Queen of the Desert." Wesley Snipes and Patrick Swayze did not in "To Wong Foo, Thanks for Everything, Julie Newmar" — although co-star John Leguizamo did.

Even this year's Oscar-winning best actor — "Capote's" Philip Seymour Hoffman — put on makeup and a dress for "Flawless," opposite Robert De Niro.

To play Lola, Ejiofor steered clear of stereotypes.

"I just wanted to make sure that I kind of believed in the character really, as much as possible, and that I felt that what Lola was saying was completely real and completely believable, and that's why people sort of had a change in attitude toward Lola."

During most of the "Kinky Boots" shoot, he resembled an "off-duty drag queen" because he had acrylic fingernails soldered on and his eyebrows waxed, the actor recalls. The reactions from others provided insight about the eruptions of hostility Lola encounters in the film.

"It is one of those things that people clearly find difficult to immediately deal with," he says. "They clearly find it sort of shocking, and I was kind of shocked by that reaction. Initially, I was at pains to sort of say, 'Oh, well, I'm making this movie.' Then, of course, very, very quickly I became incredibly defensive about it, and I thought why should I explain that I'm making a movie?

"I think at that point, I became much more sort of partisan about the project, and about Lola. I think I was always of the viewpoint that obviously everybody should be able to express themselves in different ways. But it was very interesting to me to actually be in a situation where I was practically having to live that philosophy."

SMOKIN LILS B.B.Q.
OUTDOOR BBQS & CATERING
STRONG AVE. NORTHAMPTON
413-587-0400
BBQ IS BRAIN FOOD!!!
15% OFF WITH VALID COLLEGE ID!!

CINEMARK
CINEMARK AT HAMPSHIRE MALL 6
367 Russell St. 413-587-4233
Schedule for Friday 4/14/06
thru Thursday 4/20/06
Purchase Tickets Online @ cinemark.com
Scary Movie 4 (PG13) 1:10 1:25 1:45 4:20 4:35 4:50 7:00 7:25 7:40 9:15 9:40 10:10*
Inside Man (R) 1:20 4:15 7:10 10:05
The Wild (G) 1:35 4:25 6:50 9:00*
V for Vendetta (R) 1:00 4:15 7:15 10:15
Benchwarmers (Pg13) 1:50 4:35 7:40 10:00*
Failure to Launch (PG13) 1:55 4:40 7:30 10:06
Lucky Number Slevin (R) 1:30 4:10 7:20 10:10*
* = no passes or supersavers
Senior Show 4/20 Lucky Number Slevin @ 10am
Take the Lead (Pg13) 1:05 4:05 7:05 9:50*
Friday Night Rewind May 5 Animal House Midnight
Ice Age: The Meltdown (PG) 1:15 1:40 4:00 4:45 6:45 7:35 9:05 9:55
• NO PASSES, NO SUPERSAVERS
cinemark.com

Celebrity Beauty
Beauty Is Our Only Business
Bring this ad for 30% OFF any service!
Hair Cuts
Waxing
Coloring, Perms
Facial Treatments
Hours: Tuesday - Friday 11 - 6 Saturday 10 - 4
321 Main St. Amherst (Next to Bruno's)
413.256.0899

Back Forward Stop Refresh Home AutoFill Print Mail
Address: @www.SunraiseInc.com
Screen Printed T's
*White T's ONLY
24 minimum
1 Color, 1 side
Standard Ink
Max Size 10x13
Screen $20
$5
Your Design or Logo!
*Exp. 4.30.06
Apparel Unlimited
SCREEN PRINTERS
322 Russell Street
Hadley, MA 01035
322 Russell St.
Hadley, MA 01035
413-586-7133
www.SunraiseInc.com

Remember when you felt like this?
Find it again...
UMASS
Haigis Mall bus stop • 10:00 am
Amherst College
Converse Hall bus stop
10:20 am
for the FREE Sunday shuttle to Dwight Chapel
Dwight Chapel
885 Federal Street, Belchertown, MA 01007 • 413-256-8059 www.dwightchapel.org • Pastor Emmanuel Hagg
We're growing in Christ - come grow with us!

ATTENTION STUDENTS WITH DISABILITIES
BILL COSBY

STUDENT UNION - CAPE COD LOUNGE
Friday - 10:00 a.m.
April 14, 2006
WILL BE HERE TO TALK TO STUDENTS WITH DYSLEXIA AND LEARNING DIFFERENCES
OPEN TO ALL STUDENTS
PLEASE ARRIVE EARLY
FREE ADMISSION

UM sweeps doubleheader

KAREN WING/COLLEGIAN

Sophomore Stacy Cullington has a .203 batting average with three home runs and 12 RBIs for the 2006 season.

SOFTBALL from page 10

offensive spark.

"I think we were just disassociated from the game and a little bit flat in tired [in Game Two]. We put up those first two runs but I just think these kids are really tired," UMass coach Elaine Sortino said. The team had a late game against rival UConn the night before and then had to return to Amherst for two against St. Joe's. Sortino called the process "pretty hectic."

"The change in pitchers gave us a new lease on life," Sortino said. "We've been talking about trying to create a little more spark and enthusiasm, and we came right out and got it going."

Mollica batted in three more runs in the nightcap, giving her four on the day. She now has 42 RBIs on the year, just three short of tying the school record for single-season RBIs. Mollica is also three home runs shy of breaking UMass' single season home run record for freshman. She has seven round-trippers this season.

Sortino believes her young batter is improving everyday, saying that Mollica is pulling the ball more of late.

"The thing I like about her is lately I've seen her be able to come to the left side [of the field], as well as the right side," Sortino said. "I think she has a great savvy for the game and she does a great job at the plate. I hope she breaks the record."

On Saturday, the A-10 action continues when the Minutewomen host Temple (11-16, 4-2 A-10) at the UMass Softball Complex. Last year UMass split the two-game series with the Owls in a pair of blowouts. The Minutewomen lost the first game, 11-3, before coming back strong in the night cap with a 10-1 win.

Saturday will be the last for UMass to play at home for a while, as their next three meetings are on the road.

James spraigns ankle in Pistons matchup

Cleveland Cavaliers star LeBron James sprained his ankle against the Detroit Pistons after landing on Tayshaun Prince's foot.

CLEVELAND (AP) – Cleveland fans hated to see LeBron James limp off the court. So did Tayshaun Prince.

The Detroit Pistons were on their way to a 96-73 home victory over the Cavaliers on Wednesday night when James landed awkwardly while being guarded by Prince on a three-point play late in the third quarter.

Even though James and the Cavs loom as a possible second-round opponent for the Pistons, Prince didn't want to see James hobbling off the court and trying to keep weight off his left ankle.

"For one of our players, or any other player, this is an important time of the season and you don't want anyone to get hurt," Prince said. "You want them to try to help their team accomplish something. Hopefully, this is not too serious for the Cavs and he can get back healthy."

James left the court moments later for X-rays, and the Cavs said he was day to day. His status for Cleveland's game against New York on Thursday night wasn't immediately known.

"It's sprained pretty good, but nothing serious," James said. "You never really know until the next day, but I've had them before, and this is nothing that bad."

In other games, it was: Chicago 96, Atlanta 90; Indiana 117, Boston 112; Orlando 103, Toronto 96; Memphis 96, Charlotte 88; Philadelphia 116, New Jersey 96; Milwaukee 100, Washington 97; New Orleans 104, Seattle 99; Minnesota 82, Houston 79; Utah 104, Denver 83; Golden State 114, Dallas 102; and the Los Angeles Clippers 97, Portland 93.

The Cavs have the option of resting James, because they are locked into the No. 4 seed in the Eastern Conference. Everything below Cleveland remains jumbled.

Milwaukee beat Washington on Wednesday night, while Indiana, Philadelphia and Chicago all were winners. The Wizards are in fifth place, the Bucks and Pacers are a game behind them, and the 76ers and Bulls are another game back in a tie for eighth.

There are no such worries for the Pistons, who moved within a game of earning home-court advantage throughout the playoffs. Detroit will secure home court with one more victory, or a San Antonio loss. The Pistons have the tiebreaker because they beat the Spurs in both meetings.

Detroit (63-15) tied the franchise record for victories and if it wins one of the last four games, it will break the record set during the 1988-89 season, when the Bad Boys went on to win the first of two straight titles.

"As I said in the locker room, people die to get to 50 [wins]," Pistons coach Flip Saunders said. "To get to 60 is really something. Every win beyond that shows that you've been able to play at a pretty high level for a long time."

WARRIORS 114, MAVERICKS 102

At Oakland, Calif., Jason Richardson scored 25 points and lowly Golden State shocked the mighty Mavericks for the third time this season, putting a big crimp in Dallas' hopes of finishing with the West's best record.

Dirk Nowitzki scored 29 points and Josh Howard added 18 for Dallas (59-20), which missed its first chance to match the franchise record with 60 victories. The Mavericks trail San Antonio (60-18) by 1 1-2 games in the Southwest Division and Western Conference standings.

76ERS 116, NETS 96

At East Rutherford, N.J., Allen Iverson had 40 points and 10 assists, and Chris Webber added 18 points after missing two games with a lower back strain. New Jersey allowed its most points in a game this season and fell to 1-3 since tying a franchise record with 14 straight wins. Philadelphia has won three games in a row after losing 10 of 13.

BUCKS 100, WIZARDS 97

At Milwaukee, Michael Redd scored 21 points in the second half, including the winning basket with 19 seconds to play. The Bucks snapped a four-game losing streak. Washington has lost four straight, but remains in fifth place.

BULLS 96, HAWKS 90

At Atlanta, Ben Gordon scored 19 points as Chicago won without injured guard Chris Duhon (lower back pain) and forward Luol Deng (concussion).

CLIPPERS 97, TRAIL BLAZERS 93

At Los Angeles, Elton Brand scored 25 points, Sam Cassell added 19 points and 10 assists, and the Clippers snapped a three-game losing streak.

Rookie Jarrett Jack had 20 points to equal his career high and seven assists for the Trail Blazers, who have lost four in a row, 14 straight road games, and 15 of their last 16 overall.

PACERS 117, CELTICS 112

At Indianapolis, Peja Stojakovic scored 25 points, Jermaine O'Neal had 21 points and 15 rebounds, and Indiana beat Boston, which was eliminated from the playoff race.

GRIZZLIES 96, BOBCATS 88

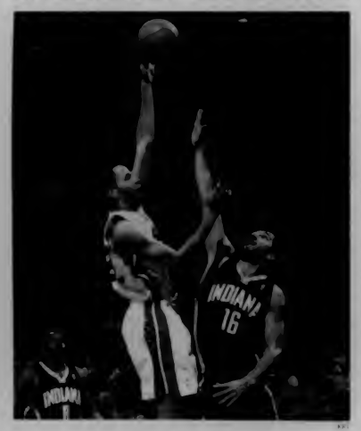
At Charlotte, N.C., Eddie Jones hit a 16-foot jumper that barely beat the shot clock with 41 seconds to play. He led six players in double figures with 16 points for the Grizzlies, who remained a half-game ahead of the Clippers for the fifth seed in the Western Conference.

JAZZ 104, NUGGETS 83

At Salt Lake City, Carlos Boozer scored 25 points and pulled down 13 rebounds, and Utah (39-39) got back to .500 for the first time in two months.

The Jazz got within 1 1/2 games of Sacramento for the final playoff spot, although the Kings hold the tiebreaker over Utah.

HORNETS 104, SUPERSONICS 99



At Oklahoma City, Chris Paul scored 21 points, including four in the final minute, and New Orleans held off Seattle and gained ground in the playoff race.

MAGIC 103, RAPTORS 96

At Orlando, Fla., Jameer Nelson had 27 points and all five Orlando starters scored in double figures as the Magic handed Toronto its 10th straight loss.

TIMBERWOLVES 82, ROCKETS 79

At Houston, Marcus Banks hit the go-ahead jumper in the fourth quarter and scored 15 points as Minnesota snapped a 14-game road losing streak.

Pistons forward and Kentucky alum Tayshaun Prince was upset when he heard of James' injury and hopes he will be back for the playoffs.

Unexpected runners emerge for UMass

By Domenic Poli
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts track and field teams will travel to Ivy League country this Saturday to compete in the Brown Invitational.

Accompanying the Maroon and White to Providence, R.I. will be Wheaton College, URI, UConn, Southern Connecticut State University and, the meet's host, Brown University.

UMass coach Ken O'Brien mentioned that the meet will be a true testament to how everyone's progress is coming along.

"Most teams have got a few meets under their belts, most individual participants are ready at a higher level to perform," O'Brien said. "I wouldn't be surprised if all the coaches were looking forward to one of the first real tests of their teams in the spring season."

Only a few weeks into the new outdoor season, important contributions have been made by athletes whose names didn't come up very often during the indoor season.

One of these names is Nathan Barksdale.

Barksdale, a sophomore, won the 400-meter dash at the Wildcat Invitational last weekend with a time of 50.58 seconds. The Indiana-native has shown tremendous speed in the sprint events, but is much more than a one-event athlete.

"Nathan has really come along in terms of a new event for him, it's the 400-meter hurdles," O'Brien said. "We've still yet to decide whether he will attempt it this week for the first time. But he's so versatile. He's a key member of both relays [the 4x100-meter and 4x400-meter relays]."

Junior Manny Harris-Lopes was just fractions of a second behind Barksdale in that 400-meter dash, finishing with a time of 50.87.

O'Brien commented that because this is Harris-Lopes' first year on the team, he does not have the perspective with him that he has with Barksdale, who competed last year.

O'Brien did, however, compliment his athleticism. He compared Lopes' versatility to that of Barksdale.

"[Manny] has got several events that he's talented in," O'Brien said. "We know he's going to be involved in both relays, [but] it's a matter as to what else he might want to do, or be able to do, successfully."

As for athletes who are merely continuing the dominance they started in the indoor season, junior Erik Hoagland is right at the top of the list.

Hoagland finished first in both the long jump and triple jump at the Atlantic 10 Championships, first in the long jump at the New England Championships and third in long jump at the IC4A Championships. He also broke the UMass triple jump record two different times.

His excellence has carried over to the outdoor season as he has won the long jump event at the first two meets and his coach doesn't expect the third to be any different.

"Erik is one of those guys who we do consider that his performances will always be close to the top of his game," O'Brien said.

The Minutewomen's coach, Julie LaFreniere, is confident in all of her athletes, but admits to the high difficulty level of the upcoming meet.

"It's going to be a very hard meet," LaFreniere said. "UConn is as strong as Brown, if not stronger. URI is right behind them. Wheaton is a Division III school, but they're very strong nationally in Division III."

Freshman shot-putter Jordan Veney has dominated the throwing events since coming on the scene at the beginning of the winter season.

LaFreniere commented that Jordan is looking good and is ready to compete, adding that she considers the chances of Veney's breaking another UMass throwing record to be "a very strong possibility."

Veney throws both the shot put and the discus and is just now learning the hammer throw.

LaFreniere has a tough decision to make regarding sophomore long-distance specialist Christina DeRosa: whether to run her in the 2,000- or 5,000-meter race. The coach is leaning towards the 5,000-meter because, as she puts it, "the longer the better for Christina." LaFreniere is still on the fence over the issue but says a decision must be made by Saturday morning, after all strategies are considered.

LaFreniere also mentioned that sophomore pole-vaulter Kristen Bakanowski's ailing take-off foot is much better and that she is good to go.

She will, however, have some tough competition this weekend, as both UConn and Brown boast some excellent pole-vaulters.

Injuries will keep freshman sprinter Dionise Miranda (hamstring) once again out of contention and will jeopardize the possibility of junior distance runner Cuisle Kierans (sprained ankle) competing.

LaFreniere will meet with the team's trainers on Friday to learn if Kierans will be fit to run.

Stripper in Duke lacrosse scandal found "passed out"

By Tim Whitmire
Associated Press

DURHAM, N.C. – A woman who claims she was raped by members of Duke University's lacrosse team was described as "just passed-out drunk" by one of the first police officers to see her, according to a recording of radio traffic released Thursday.

The conversation between the officer and a police dispatcher took place about 1:30 a.m. March 14, about five minutes after a grocery store security guard called 911 to report a woman in the parking lot who would not get out of someone else's car.

The officer gave the dispatcher the police code for an intoxicated person. When asked whether the woman needed medical help, the officer said: "She's breathing and appears to be fine. She's not in distress. She's just passed out drunk."

The black woman, a 27-year-old stripper and college student, told police she was raped and beaten by three white men around midnight at an off-campus party thrown by Duke's lacrosse team. The racially charged allegations have led Duke to cancel the highly ranked team's season and accept the resignation of its coach.

No charges have been filed, but District Attorney Mike Nifong has said he believes a crime was committed. Attorneys for the players have said DNA tests failed to connect any players to the alleged attack, and they have urged Nifong to drop his investigation.

Several of the defense attorneys say they expect the district attorney to ask a grand jury on Monday to issue charges in connection with allegations.

"Rest up on Sunday," attorney Kerry Sutton, who represents one of the team's captains, said Thursday.

There has been no official word, however, on whether Nifong intends to present the allegations Monday. His next opportunity would come two weeks later.

JACK DOGG By Xavier Kroos

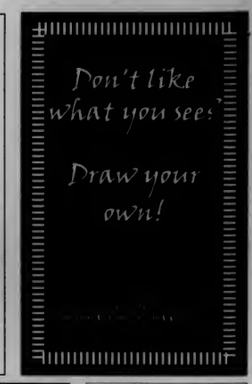
ELSIE HOOPER By Rachel D. Kaczowski

THE FAMILY MONSTER By Jason Shafer

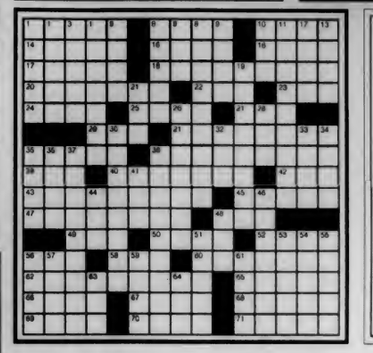
PAUL By Brian O'Keefe

A COLLEGE GIRL NAMED JOE By Aaron Warner

QUOTE OF THE DAY



"I believe that one of life's greatest risks is never daring to risk."



—Oprah Winfrey

Find today's answers online

www.dailycollegian.com

Submit your comic!

e-mail
collegiancomics@yahoo.com

HOROSCOPES

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
There is a good chance you will see a UFO tonight.

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
Don't leave home without some Gatorade.

aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
You should try to eat more fruit, and raspberry vodka doesn't count.

taurus Apr. 20-May 20
Today you will be sad, because you will break a nail.

gemini May 21-Jun. 21
Definitely take advantage of the after-Easter candy sales.

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
You will break your CD player in a drunken stupor tomorrow.

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
You will rip your favorite sweater getting dressed tonight.

virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
You will find a bag of pretzels in your room today.

libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22
You should get a milkshake before driving home today.

scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
You will kill a spider today, and it will immediately start to rain.

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
You will get an A on your presentation if you pretend to be sick.

capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
You will see a cloud that looks like you today.

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Like to play games? You can play games with me all day on April 25th. Meet me at the Ford Fusion, outside the Campus Center between 10 AM and 3 PM. Brought to you by your New England Ford Dealers.

Seniors! Full tuition scholarships GRAD School plus LEADERSHIP Plus $5,000 cash each year ARMY ROTC www.umass.edu/armyrotc

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Amherst Clean 2BR Bus Near Center $1025 Avail 6/1 413-335-5226

2 bedroom $1100 3 bedroom $1400 4 bedroom $2150 Now Accepting Applications 253-7377 mill valleyestates@winncom.com

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing, 1&2 bedroom apts. Leases begin June, July, Aug or Sep. First come, first serve. Get them while they last. www.brandywine-apts.com stop by or call 549-0600

Center of Town 1, 2, 3 bedrooms; hardwood floors. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

AUTO FOR SALE

2001 Volvo s40 T 80K miles Black, 4 door, well maintained Volvo 240 Sedan, leather, new brakes and tires, front/side air bags, winter package, CD, air, auto, $9,500 or BO. 586-7124 or Louise.Morse@comcast.net

EMPLOYMENT

Full-time summer employment at the Housing Assignment Office, $8.50/hour. Visit the HAO at 235 Whitmore to pick up application.

Furniture porter and maintenance person needed for busy auction gallery on Nantucket Island this summer. (508) 228-3942

Personal Care Assistant for woman in Northampton. Light housework. Cooking, cleaning, laundry, shopping. Must have reliable car to take client to Dr.'s appts. Part-time hours $10.84/hr. References and some experience preferred Please call before 7pm 586-0029

Bartending $300/Day potential. No experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 x162

EMPLOYMENT

Drivers Wanted. Chicago Pizza. Apply in person between 3:30-5pm

April 14th is the Last Day to Apply to become a Legal Assistant with the Student Legal Services Office. Earn 12 credits while gaining valuable experience. Call 545-1995 or stop by the Student Legal Services Office at 922 Campus Center to get your application.

PAINTERS NEEDED! Hundreds of positions available throughout New England. Work outside with your friends and family in your hometown. No experience needed, training provided. Join large student painting company this summer. Hiring now! 888-277-9787, www.collegepro.com

EMPLOYMENT

Rent us your Ears! Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu Voicemail: 545-6837

HOUSE FOR RENT

Northampton- 4 bedroom, double living room, open and enclosed porches. June, $1300 plus utilities, near park. Skibiski, Realtors 586-1827.

Hadley, close to UMass 5 Bedroom home, large yard, Oil heat, Sept occupancy. 549-4270

ROOM FOR RENT

CAPE COD Summer rooms. Hyannis area. Private pond. $150 a week includes ... (508) 428-3456

SERVICES

Legal questions? We have answers at the Student Legal Services Office. 922 Campus Center or Call 545-1995

PREGNANCY TESTING, HIV TESTING, Birth-control, and Emergency Contraception. STI Screening and Treatment. Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-0992.

Pentium Color laptops $99 We type term papers, resumes, cover letters. 413-584-8857

TRAVEL

Disney/Beach Area 7/6 nights stay. Pd $600.00 Sacrifice $199.00 Good for one year 978-444-0261

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS WEEKEND

FRIDAY, APRIL 14, 2006 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Minutewomen take two

UMass hurlers Brandice Balschmiter (left) and Jenna Busa (right) combined for 19 strikeouts while yielding just two walks and six hits in yesterday's two-game sweep of Saint Joseph's. The Minutewomen pounded the Hawks, 5-0, in the afternoon game and topped that with an 8-0 performance in game two.

Pitchers carry UM through A-10 doubleheader against lowly Hawks

By Jeremy Rice
Collegian Staff

On a very windy afternoon the Massachusetts softball team (21-12, 9-1 Atlantic 10) took two from A-10 rival Saint Joseph's (11-26-1, 2-6 A-10) on Thursday. Behind stellar pitching and plenty of hitting, UMass shut-out the Hawks, 5-0 and 8-0, at the UMass Softball Complex yesterday.

The Minutewomen will have little time to rest, as they host another A-10 rival, Temple, for a doubleheader Saturday starting at noon.

UMass	5
St. Joe's	0
UMass	8
St. Joe's	0

Game one began with the American flag flying wildly in the wind, and pitcher Brandice Balschmiter blowing away St. Joe's batters. The freshman was clocked at 71 miles per hour several times early in the game.

Balschmiter followed up Wednesday's contest against UConn, in which she fanned 12 batters, with another 12 against the Hawks. It marked the sixth occasion in which the freshman has had double digit strikeouts in a game.

As a rookie, Balschmiter has a lot on her shoulders as UMass' ace, and her coaches think she's doing just fine.

"I think she's doing great. She's a freshman, she's never seen any of this before," UMass pitching coach Kaila Holtz said. "She's handling the pressure of everything that was anticipated with her arrival really well, and we saw some big numbers on the gun today."

The Minutewomen struck early with two runs in the bottom of the first. Freshman Whitney Mollica, who started that day just seven RBIs shy of the single season RBI record, knocked one run with a bunt single that sent Candice Molinari in from third.

In the sixth, Amanda Morin scored on an errant throw to third, and Cullington hit an RBI single to score Michea Holness to put the game out of reach at 5-0. Balschmiter would finish the game in the seventh with two more strikeouts to get her 16th win of the year.

Senior pitcher Jenna Busa got the start in game two, her first appearance since a three inning, seven hit, five run outing against Fordham. She had a much better day at home against the Hawks, fanning seven of 24 batters while giving up five hits and no walks.

Holtz was happy to see the improvement of last year's A-10 tournament MVP.

"Anytime a pitcher scatters five hits and doesn't give up a run, that's a pretty good performance," Holtz said. "She threw some change ups and we've been working on her change up, so that was good to see."

UMass once again jumped out ahead early, scoring two in the first on a pair of errors. The Minutewomen were quiet on offense for most of the game until scoring three runs each in the fifth and sixth innings.

St. Joe's Lauren Cognini threw the first three innings, allowing just one hit and no earned runs, but a pitching change before the start of the fourth gave the Minutewomen an

See SOFTBALL on page 8

UMass faces best in business on Charles

By Joey White
Collegian Correspondent

The Massachusetts women's crew team is coming off its third straight Knecht Cup victory and will be hitting the water again this Saturday against stiff competition on the Charles River in Boston.

The Minutewomen will be rowing against Boston University, Brown and the University of Texas.

"I think we've got a lot of momentum coming off the Knecht Cup," UMass coach Jim Dietz said. "Beating 26 teams really boosts your confidence."

None of the Maroon and White's three opponents this Saturday competed at Cooper River in Camden, N.J. last weekend.

UMass' first varsity-eight boat that won the Knecht Cup with of time of 7:07.5 will be the same group this Saturday, which will be sophomore coxswain Dana Pulda and rowers Catherine Gariepy, Gabrielle Papineau, Hannah Brewster, Sarah Marsan, Katie Berger, Ellen Mankrey, Rachael Nealer and Stephanie Hopf.

"It's almost an easy weekend after last weekend. We're going into speed mode. We want to blast off the line," Dietz said.

It won't be that easy. Brown, according the most recent NCAA Division I Varsity Eight Coaches Poll on April 12, is ranked 10th in the nation. Under harsh conditions Friday on the Seekonk River in Providence, R.I. the Bears' varsity eight beat Rutgers with a time of 7:40.50. They rowed a 7:10.2 March 25 in Princeton, N.J.

The last time the Minutewomen raced Brown was in April of 2004, when they finished second overall, behind the Bears and ahead of Rutgers. UMass finished third in the varsity-eight race and the then No. 5 Brown squad was first.

"The last time we faced Brown they had to catch up. We're looking at a fast race Saturday," Dietz said.

Boston University, which was ranked 20th last weekend but sits outside this week with only five votes, lost to No. 3 Yale and Dartmouth in Derby, Conn.

The Terriers, under steady rain, finished the 2,000-meter race in 6:27.5. On April 1, BU beat Umass' Atlantic 10 foe George Washington by almost 15 seconds with a time of 7:16.2.

Two weeks ago in San Diego, C.A. was the last time Texas competed. The Longhorns finished fourth in the Jessop-Whittier Petite Final with a time of 6:46.95 at the San Diego Crew Classic.

"If we knock off either BU or Brown then we'll be ranked in the top 20, and that's what we're looking for," Dietz said.

The first Mid-Atlantic Region poll of 2006 is out and has the UMass crew team ranked sixth. The varsity eight boat is ranked third behind nation's-best Princeton and Columbia, who UMass lost to by only 1.2 seconds April 2.

"[I think that boosts our confidence too] for sure. Every week I think people are going to get faster," Dietz said.

With this Saturday being the last day of competition for the Minutewomen before the A-10 championships, Dietz said what he hopes to get out of it is, "to get ranked. Quite honestly I don't think anybody in the A-10 can compete with our varsity eight. The only team we haven't beaten is George Washington, whose times we're better than."

Along with the varsity eight and other varsity boats, the novices will also be competing Saturday.

"It's going to be tough for the second varsity [eight] and freshmen," Deitz said. "These teams are great programs. Honestly, I don't think anybody's going to win those. The whole weekend is about the varsity eight and how they do."

Hawks down in Philly

Typadis scores four goals to tie career high

By Brendan Hall
Collegian Staff

So this is why they call it the City of Brotherly Love.

On the first part of a two-game road swing in Philadelphia, you might say the Massachusetts women's lacrosse team's style of play worked to its advantage – that is, rough and physical. UMass coach Carrie Bolduc says the referees were more lenient than they are in the New England area or along the Atlantic coast, which means they were able to get away with a little bit more.

The Minutewomen (4-9, 1-2 Atlantic 10) then hopped on the shoulders of sophomore attacker and leading scorer Kathleen Typadis, who tied a career-high with four goals, and busted out a 5-0 run over the last 12 minutes of regulation to cap off a much-needed 10-7 win over the Saint Joseph's Hawks (4-5 1-2), last night.

UMass returns to action tomorrow at noon, when they finish their Philly trip with a game against La Salle.

UMass	10
St. Joe's	7

Typadis' four goals – including the game-winner – tie a career-high, and mark her 65th career goal in just 30 games. She also took nine of the Minutewomen's 22 shots, three times more than any other player.

"She's a shooter, she's a finisher," Bolduc said. "We really stressed finishing today, shooting well today, and for the most part we either scored or hit post. We hit the post a lot today."

Down 6-5 with time winding down in the second half, the Minutewomen had been going back and forth with the Hawks all game long. Thanks to some better shot selection, they were able to finally get the upper hand.

Sophomore Jeanette Villapiano tied it up with her 13th goal of the season, off a feed from freshman

Sophomore Melinda Zwick has five goals, two assists and 19 groundballs in her second year as a Minutewoman.

Meghan Reddy, with just over 12 minutes left to start the run. It was the fourth and final time of the game that the Minutewomen were tied with SJU.

Typadis then knocked in the game-winner two minutes later, after a ground ball by goalkeeper Lauren McCarthy was scooped up and fed to senior Kerri Connerty. Connerty then swung the ball to Typadis for her only assist of the game.

UMass then zipped off three more goals – a goal off a turnover by Kayt McCormick, Typadis' fourth and final goal, unassisted, and a free position shot by Lindsay Cassell – over the next six minutes to push its lead to 10-6 with a little over two minutes to go, effectively sealing the win for the Maroon and White.

Jenny Egan scored as time expired in the second half to cut the deficit to three.

Last night marked the first time in three games that the Minutewomen registered less than 20 fouls. Against their previous three opponents, UMass tallied a combined 76 fouls, allowing for numerous free position shots and plays to be set up.

This time around, they had just 17, to SJU's 9, down 12 from their season-high 29 two weeks ago against rival Boston College.

Bolduc cited less fouls called, not less fouling, as the reason for the low number.

"It's the region, things are a little different here," she said. "We were allowed to get away with some of the stuff we weren't able to get away with up North. The referees called a game that let us play a tough, physical game. We're grimers, scrappers, and when you have the right types of officials you can play that kind of game."

The Minutewomen will move on to play the La Salle Explorers (5-8, 1-2 A-10). The Explorers have dropped three of their last four games, including a 13-10 loss to St. Joe's on April 1. Emily Bonczek (35 goals, 40 points) and Kristen Davis (35 points) currently dominating the scoring, accounting for 42 percent of the La Salle scoring this year.

Bolduc stresses the importance of coming away from Philadelphia having won both contests, citing the need to win three of the last four games to make it into tournament play.

"Every game is big for us," she said. "The more wins we have, the better standing we're going to be in come time for the A-10 [Tournament]. If we come up with a win on Saturday, we're going to be in a very good place and we'll be that much more prepared three weeks from now."

Emotional day for Dixon and seniors ends with sweet victory

By Eli Rosenswaike
Collegian Correspondent

Wednesday was a special day in more ways than one for the Massachusetts tennis team (11-8, 3-1 A-10). The senior members of the team were honored before the match in a special ceremony on senior day. Co-captains Dorothy Iwanowicz and Lesley Fisher, as well as Susan Johnson and Jana Bartoloni, were serenaded with kind words, memories, flowers and a big hug from Sam the Minuteman.

"The presentation went really well," UMass coach Judy Dixon said. "There were a lot of tears before the match and I'm really pleased with how the seniors performed today. Losing four out of 12 players is going to be a real big loss."

Jana Bartoloni has been an invaluable part of the team for her entire four-year career at UMass. As a junior she had an impressive 28-18 record combined in singles and doubles and was named Most Improved Player on the team. Jana missed some time due to injury earlier in the year and has provided a huge lift in her return.

Susan Johnson transferred to UMass as a junior from the University of Colorado.

She has been an incredible doubles player, amassing a 22-9 record combined from last year and this fall. Also in the fall, Johnson made it all the way to the doubles finals in the Quinnipiac Invitational. Johnson was named an ITA Scholar-Athlete as a junior.

Co-captain Leslie Fisher transferred from the University of Miami, and in the short time she's been here has become one of the emotional leaders for this team. She was named Most Improved Player on the team as a junior.

The other captain, Dorothy Iwanowicz, has had an impressive four-year career for the Minutewomen. She currently ranks 7th on the all-time UMass list for doubles wins with 40. As a junior she had a combined singles and doubles record of 33-13 for an impressive 71.7 winning percentage. In 2004 she was named team MVP and was an A-10 All-Conference selection.

After the seniors were honored in the emotional ceremony, the UMass tennis team went out and took care of business with a convincing 5-2 win over Quinnipiac.

Although UMass failed to win the doubles point with losses at number two and three doubles, they won the match with superb play in singles.

Junior Michelle Spiess continued her amazing play with a 6-3, 6-1 victory at number one. Her opponent was so frustrated with Spiess' solid play that you could hear her talking to herself throughout the match. Spiess has won an unimaginable 93 percent of her matches over the last two years and will undoubtedly be named Most Outstanding Player in the Minutewomen. She currently ranks 7th on the all-time UMass list for doubles wins with 40. As a junior she had a combined singles and doubles record of 33-13 for an impressive 71.7 winning percentage. In 2004 she was named team MVP and was an A-10 All-Conference selection.

Four hard-nose seniors came up big in their final collegiate tennis match, beating Quinnipac, 5-2, in a dominant performance.

Junior Michelle Spiess continued her amazing play with a 6-3, 6-1 victory at number one. Her opponent was so frustrated with Spiess' solid play that you could hear her talking to herself throughout the match. Spiess has won an unimaginable 93 percent of her matches over the last two years and will undoubtedly be named Most Outstanding Player in the Minutewomen. She currently ranks 7th on the all-time UMass

The most exciting match of the day belonged to freshman StephanieGimenez who won 6-2, 1-6, 10-8. The third set was intense as Gimenez won clutch point after clutch point to finally take down her opponent.

"Today was a difficult day to play tennis due to the awful weather conditions," Dixon said. "Today was sort of not about tennis but about mental fortitude, footwork, and being smart out on the court. These conditions were the great equalizer and so not always will the best team win. But today, the best team won."

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY · EST. 1890

The Daily Collegian

TUESDAY, APRIL 18, 2006 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM VOLUME CXVI ISSUE 116

Insanity claim examined at murder trial

By John Fenuccio
Collegian Staff

NORTHAMPTON — The Forensic psychologist who diagnosed Bryan Johnston with paranoid schizophrenia continued answering prosecutor's questions Friday, denying suggestions that Johnston is "faking it."

"Mr. Johnston is not lingering in my opinion," said Dr. Carol Feldman, a forensic psychologist from Boston. "He suffers from paranoid schizophrenia; he's not playing to the camera at all."

Feldman believed Johnston to be suffering from the illness after her first evaluation six days after the shooting. Feldman didn't officially diagnose Johnston until Feb. 4, 2005. Johnston is on trial for the Dec. 7, 2004 murder of David "Sully" Sullivan, a University of Massachusetts student and friend of Johnston.

Feldman said the diagnosis was the result of numerous interviews.

Prosecutor Renee Steese focused on the fact that Feldman's interviews each lasted only a little over an hour, which she said could allow for Johnston to more easily fake the illness. Steese said longer interviews would make it more difficult.

"Sustained amphetamine and cocaine use could allow for visual hallucinations such as those in paranoid schizophrenia," said Steese.

While Feldman says she is aware of Johnston's history of drug abuse, when asked if she had researched the drugs while conducting her evaluation, she said she hadn't.

See MURDER TRIAL on page 4

Volunteers hold Tent State U. on UMass campus

By Daniel Magazu
Collegian Correspondent

A free dinner and open forum at the University of Massachusetts kicked off Tent State University last night on the Student Union lawn. The event, which runs all week, will feature over 140 workshops and open classes that discuss university funding and diversity issues.

"The underlying message for the week is that we need a more affordable and more accessible UMass," said Darren Griffis, a grad student and volunteer for the event. "There will be other messages that go along with that, but the main theme is funding for the university."

Highlighting the week will be a visit by Cindy Sheehan tonight at 8 p.m. Sheehan has become one of the leading voices in the anti-war movement ever since she camped outside President Bush's Texas ranch this past summer. She will be discussing a possible link between the war in Iraq and declining support for higher education.

Also speaking tonight will be Preston Smith, a Mount Holyoke Professor and the National co-Chair of the Labor Party's Free Higher Education Campaign. Smith will be discussing funding for higher education.

A number of teaching assistants and professors will be holding their classes outside on the lawn this week.

"One of the big things we wanted to emphasize is that these classes are completely open to the public," said Griffis. "We have done a considerable amount to reach out to the public for this event."

See TENT STATE on page 2

Police find living infant in trash bin

WESTFIELD (AP) — An hours-old baby boy who was found alive in a plastic bag in trash bin near the police station was in stable condition Monday in a Springfield hospital, officials said.

The baby was found by police who were alerted after the child's mother went to a hospital complaining that she wasn't feeling well but denying at first that she'd had a baby, said Denise Monteiro, a spokeswoman for the state Department of Social Services.

"They examined her and said, 'You just had a baby.' She said, 'No I didn't.' They said, 'Yes you did,'" Monteiro said.

With information from hospital officials, police checked three trash bins in an alley about 150 yards from a police station. The 9-pound baby was found early Sunday in a plastic bag, which was open, allowing him to breath, Monteiro said.

He was taken to Noble Hospital then transferred to Baystate Medical Center in Springfield, said Police Detective Lt. Michael McCabe.

"I can tell you the child was screaming and breathing and doing baby-type things," McCabe said.

Monteiro said the baby, who is not yet named, was stable in the intensive care unit Monday.

—Associated Press

Bill Cosby advises and teaches UMass audience

By Brendan Hall
Collegian Staff

University of Massachusetts alumnus Bill Cosby returned to campus on Friday to speak at a packed Student Union Ballroom.

The speech given by Cosby, who graduated from UMass with a doctorate in education in 1977, was about students suffering learning disabilities, though he refused to call it that, insisting on the more politically-correct title "learning difference."

"I've never called it a learning disability," Cosby, 68, said in his introductory remarks, which lasted less than five minutes before he opened the forum up to questions. "It's a learning difficulty...[and] it's up to you and the people with you to help understand how you learn."

Cosby, who resides in nearby Shelburne, also spoke about the learning disability suffered by his late and only son, Ennis, who was murdered while changing a flat tire at a Los Angeles highway stop in 1997. Before his death, Ennis was diagnosed with dyslexia.

"One of the greatest moments in my life was when Ennis came back from his testing and said, 'I'm dyslexic,'" Cosby said. "My wife and I said 'Thank God,' because we knew we could work from there."

Cosby then fielded questions from audience members for over an hour and a half, quipping, "I'm not a doctor, I'm not a psychologist, but I slept at a Holiday Inn once and I think that can help."

A common thread in several of Cosby's answers to questions centered around the perks of attending a junior college or community college, which he believes is a great tool for those who aren't ready to make the jump to a four-year college yet, or are struggling in college because of their learning disorder.

Cosby even went so far as to declare nearby Greenfield Community College, in Greenfield, to be "one of the best community colleges on Earth."

"Community college has a way of talking to you, lifting you, guiding you. Then you begin to feel special, like, yeah, I'm capable," Cosby said.

To one student, who Cosby urged to attend community college, he said "they're not ready for you yet. When you are, you're going to come in and bang down the door. You're going to hit the ground running, and you're going to feel good. You won't fail them, they will fail you."

Cosby was also critical of high school guidance counselors, referring to them at several times throughout the speech as being "not equipped," and "stuck in 1957." He used an example of a conversation he had with a husband and wife, both of whom were guidance counselors. When Cosby asked how their son was doing, they replied the he was "a mess."

"This is a counselor!" Cosby exclaimed. "They know nothing about ADHD, nothing."

Cosby was also asked about the difficulties in getting through to high school students, whom he

See COSBY on page 3

Alumnus Bill Cosby speaks to the students gathered in the UMass Student Union Ballroom on Friday. Cosby's speech focused on students suffering from learning disabilities.

Bill Cosby gives advice to Amherst resident Zoe Crowles during his speech at UMass. Cosby encouraged students to attend community college if they were not yet ready to attend a four-year college.

Alledged murderer commits suicide in Boston

By Glenn Adams
Associated Press

CORINTH, Maine — The fatal shootings of two convicted sex offenders prompted the state to disable its online sex offender registry and renewed the discussion over whether those registries make sex offenders into targets of violence.

The accused shooter, who was from Canada, took his own life Sunday night when cornered aboard a bus near Boston's South Station.

It's unclear whether the accused shooter used Maine's online registry to target the men. But those registries have proven popular. Before it was taken offline, Maine's registry was the most visited page on the state's Web site, an officials said.

"We don't have a link, we don't have a connection, and we have really more questions than we have answers as to what sparked this violence," Maine Department of Public Safety spokesman Stephen McCausland said Monday. "At this point, there is no known connection between the three men."

The registered sex offenders were identified as Joseph L. Gray, 57, of Milo, and William Elliott, 24, of Corinth, McCausland said.

Stephen Marshall, who lived in Cape Breton, Nova Scotia, had come to Houlton, Maine, for the first time to meet his father. He became a suspect when he was spotted leaving the scene of the second shooting in Corinth, about 25 miles from Milo, in his father's pickup truck.

Marshall also took three firearms from his father — two handguns and a rifle, McCausland said. Police have yet to find the rifle.

Gray's name was posted on a state Web site because he had moved to Maine and had a Massachusetts conviction for sexual assault with a child under 14, McCausland said. Elliott's conviction was for having sex with a girl who was under the legal age, he said.

Maine State Police have since removed a listing of 2,201 sex offenders from the Web site as a precaution, McCausland said, and a decision will be made by Tuesday at the latest about when the information will again be available.

"It will go back on line, absolutely," McCausland said. "It's the most popular site on the state of Maine Web page."

Police cornered Marshall on a Vermont Bus Lines coach that he had boarded in Bangor, said David Procopio, a spokesman for the Suffolk district attorney. The bus was on a ramp leading onto Interstate 90, a short distance from South Station.

When paramedics arrived, they found a second handgun in Marshall's possession, Procopio said.

No one else on the bus was injured, Procopio said, but five passengers who were splattered with blood were taken to area hospitals to be examined.

A sex offender registry Web site in Washington state was

See SHOOTINGS on page 3

Man accused of killing girl in plot to eat flesh

By Sean Murphy
Associated Press

PURCELL, Okla. — A grocery store stocker was arraigned Monday on first-degree murder charges in the killing of a 10-year-old girl in what authorities said was an elaborate plan to eat human flesh.

Kevin Ray Underwood, 26, was led into court with his hands and feet shackled, and spoke softly as he told the judge he needed a public defender.

McClain County Judge Gary D. Barger entered a not guilty plea for Underwood, whose court-appointed attorneys requested a gag order.

They complained that officials had made "inflammatory, prejudicial and conclusory statements" to the media that had helped fuel widespread interest in the case. A hearing on the motion will be held Tuesday, the judge said.

Authorities believe Underwood killed Jamie Rose Bolin last week after she disappeared after going to a library. Her funeral was scheduled for Thursday.

Prosecutor Tim Kuykendall said after the arraignment Monday that he would seek the death penalty.

"In my 24 years as a prosecutor this ranks as one of the most heinous and atrocious cases I've ever been involved with," he said.

During the arraignment, a man in the hall outside the courtroom yelled, "Let's string him up. Let's string him up, baby killer, and hang him." Police led the man away.

Underwood was arrested Friday and held without bail after drawing suspicion at a checkpoint set up near the apartment complex where he and the young girl were neighbors.

Kevin Ray Underwood is accused of killing a young girl with the intent of eating her body.

Ten-year-old Jamie Rose Bolin was killed and sexually assaulted by Underwood.

Authorities said he led investigators to his apartment, where they found Jamie's body in a large Rubbermaid tub sealed with duct tape in his bedroom closet.

Authorities believe Underwood lured the 10-year-old into his apartment, beat her on the head with a wooden cutting board and suffocated her with his hands and duct tape.

Police Chief David Tompkins said investigators believe Underwood sexually assaulted Jamie after he killed her and planned to eat the corpse.

Meat tenderizer and barbecue skewers found in his apartment were intended for the little girl, Kuykendall said.

According to a police affidavit, Underwood confessed that he killed Jamie, telling FBI agents: "Go ahead and arrest me. She is in there. I chopped her up."

Police said that while there were deep saw marks on the girl's neck, she had not been dismembered.

ARTS & LIVING

DANE COOK IN BOSTON

Original performances at the Banknorth Garden leave audiences laughing.

PAGE 7

EDITORIAL/OPINION

A TUITION SITUATION

Sometimes having more money makes you poorer.

PAGE 6

WEATHER

TODAY	TONIGHT	TOMORROW
High 65	Low 41	High 71
Partly cloudy windy	Cloudy	Low 45
		Partly cloudy with

SPORTS

NEXT UP: GEORGETOWN

Minutemen travel to Washington for next Saturday's matchup.

PAGE 12

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief Michael A. Busack
Managing Editor Eric Athas
Business Manager Nathan Chomsky
Production Manager Nicholas Belanger
Night Supervisor Katie Huston
Advertising Manager Kerry O'Grady
Advertising Production Lauren Egavian
Editorial Production Amanda Allen
Arts & Living Editor Ian Jones
Comics Editor Amanda Allen
Editorial Editor Kristen LaCasse
News Editor Dan O'Brien
Sports Editor Jeff Howe
Circulation Manager Thomas Hecht
Distribution Manager Nick Gleason
Finance Manager Daniel Conti
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Assistant Advertising Caren Tortorici
Assistant Business Phil Smoller
Asst. Arts & Living Morgan-Ann Rousseau
Asst. Arts & Living Alex Butler
Assistant News Megan Daley
Assistant News Matt Belliveau
Assistant Sports Dan Duggan
Assistant Sports Rob Greenfield
Assistant Editorial Tucker Merrick

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is independently funded, operating on advertising revenues. Founded in 1890, the paper began as Aggie Life, became The College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1936. Published daily since 1967, The Collegian has been broadsheet since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 3:30 p.m.

Production Crew
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Dan O'Brien

COPY EDITOR
Eric Athas

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Ginny Nielsen

PRODUCTION STAFF
Tiffany Van Langen, Jesse Sussman

If you see news happening, call us at 545-1809 and snap a photo with your cell phone, then send it to news@dailycollegian.com

Tent State U. calls for student discourse

TENT STATE from page 1

The first ever Tent State University was held at Rutgers University in 2003. This year, schools across the country are holding similar events. This is the first year UMass has participated.

The Student Government Association is one of many groups helping to coordinate the event.

"There has been a coalition of on and off campus groups coordinating this event," said UMass Student Trustee Mishy Leiblum. "The SGA sees this as a way to raise awareness about issues of affordability and access in a way that goes beyond protest politics."

"We like how this event is inclusive, as opposed to some past events the SGA has been involved in," said SGA President Elvis Mendez. "We really want to reach out to the student body."

Other events going on this week include a virtual march for contract funding being held Wednesday afternoon on the Student Union steps. People are encouraged to come and call state legislators and ask them to fund UMass Union contracts. There will also be workshops focused around race and genetics.

On Thursday, there will be a workshop on free higher education. The Massachusetts Campaign for Free Higher Education will be discussing how federal funding based on a GI Bill model would address the issue of education accessibility.

Every night during the week there will be open democratic meetings held.

"During these meetings we will talk about the issues that were brought up over the course of the day and hopefully come up with a platform of ideas," said Griffis. "This week is about more than having an educational experience. We want to use it as a vehicle for change."

If you are interested in learning more about Tent State University or seeing a schedule of all the workshops and classes being held, you can visit www.tentstateumass.org

Survey: more men entering law firms

By Heather Tyson
Daily Collegian (Penn State)

UNIVERSITY PARK, Pa. — The numbers of graduating female and male seniors enrolled in law school remain even, but more top law firm partnerships are going to men than women, according to a recent survey.

The survey, Facts About Women and the Law, published by the American Bar Association, found that law firms hire an even number of male and female associates, but those numbers drastically change when higher posts are concerned.

In 1997, 14 percent of law firm partners were women; in 2005, the number rose by only 3 percentage points, according to the National Association for Law Placement.

Penn State Dickinson School of Law spokeswoman Kelly Jones said the current first-year class is 47 percent women and 53 percent men, which is "standard."

Gicine Brignola, assistant dean for career services at Dickinson, said she is not surprised by the findings but said it is "a very complicated issue."

"In terms of large law firms, the way they generally operate is not particularly satisfactory to men and women," she said.

Law firms are successful in getting associates in the door, but Brignola said the problem is retaining employees. She added that this would typically hit women harder because there are fewer women in the business to begin with.

Brignola said that although the numbers are roughly even, national percentages for male and female enrollment were not even in law schools until almost 2002.

She added that at the moment, men in large law firms are generally in power, and senior male attorneys need to decide whether they would rather mentor a young man who may be their "legacy" or a woman who might not be sure if the career is for her.

Brignola said a large majority of women are "pipeliners – go straight from college to law school," and at such a young age, they may not consider all of the facts.

"They could come to a crossroad if and when they start a family and may decide that they don't want to have a nanny," she said.

Minority Undergraduate Law Association President Justin Storey (senior-economics) is currently enrolled in Economics 436 (Economics of Discrimination).

He notes "informal job training" as one key reason for the results of the survey.

"When you network in big companies, the social activities are usually at football games or bars ... activities that may exclude women," Storey said.

Moussaoui suffered difficult childhood, says social worker

This court sketch shows Assistant U.S. Attorney Rob Spencer questioning former FBI agent Aaron Zebley at the trial of convicted alQaida conspirator Zacarias Moussaoui in Alexandria Va.'s federal court.

By Matthew Barakat
Associated Press

ALEXANDRIA, Va. — Sept. 11 conspirator Zacarias Moussaoui suffered a traumatic childhood that transformed him from a child with a sense of humor who made friends easily to a man who spurned his family and embraced radical Islam, a defense witness testified Monday.

Jan Vogelsang, a clinical social worker, said at Moussaoui's death-penalty trial that the 37-year-old Frenchman was in and out of orphanages the first six years of his life. As a teenager, she said, he was rejected as a "dirty Arab" by the family of his longtime girlfriend, with whom he lived together briefly and won dance contests.

Moussaoui was dismissive of the social worker's analysis. He shouted "It's a lot of American B.S.," as he left the courtroom for the lunch recess.

Moussaoui was in jail in Minnesota during the Sept. 11, 2001, attacks. The jury has decided that lies he told federal agents a month earlier kept authorities from identifying and stopping some of the hijackers, making him responsible for at least one death that day and qualifying him for the death penalty.

Now jurors are deciding whether Moussaoui deserves execution or life in prison.

At the outset of her testimony Monday, Vogelsang said she did not intend to make excuses for Moussaoui's actions as a terrorist but wanted to explain how he had reached that point. She never interviewed Moussaoui herself, relying instead on interviews with 50 family members, friends and others, like teachers, who knew him.

Vogelsang said that Moussaoui's mother, Aicha el-Wafi, was beaten throughout her pregnancies – including six before she gave birth to Moussaoui. Moussaoui, born in a French town near the Spanish border and of Moroccan descent, went to an orphanage four months after his birth, when his mother was placed in a convalescent home, she said.

She added that Moussaoui's family only nominally practiced Islam and celebrated Christian holidays because his mother wanted her children to integrate into French culture.

As a boy, Moussaoui made friends and displayed a sense of humor, Vogelsang said, despite a childhood in which Moussaoui's father Omar frequently beat el-Wafi and Moussaoui's sister Jamilla. Later, when Moussaoui was 6 and Moussaoui's mother had divorced Omar, an uncle moved into the home and beat Moussaoui and other family members.

Mental illness was rampant in the family. Omar is diagnosed with bipolar disorder and is currently institutionalized, Vogelsang said. Moussaoui's two sisters have been diagnosed with schizophrenia and psychosis with schizophrenic features, respectively.

In 1992, Moussaoui moved to London in hopes of becoming an international businessman. He struggled to acclimate himself and learn English. He obtained a master's degree from South Bank University. It was during Moussaoui's time in London from 1993 to 1995 that his family noticed a transformation.

"He started shaving his head and wearing a beard," Vogelsang said. "He was fussing at his sisters for how they dressed," calling one sister a "whore" for dressing in Western clothing.

Vogelsang's testimony came after a 45-minute delay, when U.S. District Judge Leonie Brinkema held a closed hearing without public explanation.

Testimony resumed Monday with the defense in flux. Moussaoui took the witness stand in his own defense Thursday for a second time, and again did more harm to himself than good as he reveled in the death and destruction of Sept. 11 and mocked the testimony of the victims and their families.

One day after Moussaoui's testimony, the judge vacated an earlier order compelling would-be shoe bomber Richard Reid to testify in his defense. The jury may instead hear a written statement summarizing some of what the al-Qaida comrade would have said on the witness stand.

Reid is serving a life sentence in the federal government's maximum-security prison in Florence, Colo., after a failed try to blow up an American Airlines flight in 2001.

Moussaoui, who calls Reid his "buddy" from their days together in al-Qaida training camps in Afghanistan, testified last month that he and Reid were going to hijack a fifth plane on Sept. 11, 2001, and fly it into the White House.

That testimony came after Moussaoui had for years denied any specific role in 9/11.

Moussaoui's lawyers have suggested he fabricated his story about Reid and their role in the 9/11 plot in an effort to sabotage his own defense and achieve martyrdom through execution. They also say he is trying to inflate his role in history.

Defense lawyers had hoped Reid would disavow any knowledge of Moussaoui's claim and bolster their argument that Moussaoui is now lying.

Moussaoui is the only person charged in this country in the Sept. 11 attacks.

FRUSTRATED?
PUZZLED?
DO YOU HAVE:

A grade dispute?

Teacher, roomate or job concerns?

Billing problems?

...or any other University related problems?

THE OMBUDS OFFICE CAN HELP
(confidentially, of course)

students, faculty, and staff are all welcome

823 Campus Center
Office Hours: 8:00 a.m. - 5:00 p.m.
Telephone: 413 - 545 - 0867
fax: 413 - 545 - 9720
e-mail: ombuds@ombuds.umass.edu

UMass Campus Recreation

STILL TIME TO ENTER:
Weekend Flag Football (M/C)...A.S.A.P.

GET THOSE FORMS IN BY:
Tennis Doubles (M/W/C)...4/11
Whiffleball (M/W)...4/11
World Cup Soccer (M/W)...4/11

More Info: 215 Boyden, 5-2693
On the Web: http://www.umass.edu/umim

UMass Sports Night: Tips and Tales from Careers in Sporst Media

Come Hear Guest Speakers:
- Elliot Kalb - Sports Emmy winner and author of Who's Better, Who's Best in Baseball?
- Dan Wetzel - Yahoo sports columnist and co-author of Glory Road.
- Wendi Nix - Sports caster for WHDH 7 NEWS Boston
- Matt Sacco 04' - Manager of Sunrise Sports and Entertainment

Win Prizes
Team up with a speaker and play the sports trivia contest!
Prizes include Red Sox hats, autographed books, gift certificates to favorite area restaurants.

Win Free Raffle of package of 4 seats to Red Sox Game!
FREE PIZZA!

WHEN: Thursday, April 20
TIME: 7-9 pm (Pizza and booksigning begins at 6 pm)
WHERE: The Blue Wall

Sponsored by the UMass Journalism Program's Lecture Series:
"Broadcast and the Media"

Back Forward Stop Refresh Home AutoFill Print Mail
Address @www.SunraiseInc.com

Screen Printed T's
*White T's ONLY
24 minimum
1 Color, 1 side
Standard Ink
Max Size 10x13
Screen $20

$5
Your Design or Logo!

Apparel Unlimited
Screen Printers
322 Russell Street
Hadley, MA 01035

322 Russell St.
Hadley, MA 01035
413-586-7133
www.Sunraiseinc.com

*Exp. 4.30.06

Cosby stresses importance of understanding

COSBY from page 1

claimed often turn to drugs and alcohol after struggling with academics and "feeling bad about themselves."

"Kids do listen if they know what you're talking about," he replied. As an example, he told about a disruptive student who is struggling in school but given medication to keep him from acting up in class.

"Everyone's happy, then he goes to take the test," he said. "He gets an F, but everyone's happy because he's not being disruptive."

Cosby also took a shot at the behavior of professors unfamiliar with learning disorders, saying "some of these professors playing dumb need to be slapped."

Finally, he closed the morning with a story about a friend of his named Etienne, who is of African and Haitian descent and who liked to play flute, despite having a brain tumor. When the tumor was removed, Etienne became 100 percent blind.

Etienne, as Cosby went on to tell, attended Bedford Community College, where he earned a 3.8 grade point average in what Cosby called "international something-rather." Etienne then applied to prestigious Tufts University, and during the interview process was asked what it was that Tufts could bring to him.

He reportedly replied that the university could provide him everything on an international level, citing his aspirations to go to law school and return to his native Haiti.

Etienne was then asked what he can bring to Tufts, which he responded, "Courage."

Registered sex offenders killed

SHOOTINGS from page 1

cited in the deaths of two convicted child rapists last summer. Michael Anthony Mullen, 35, said he targeted the pair and posed as an FBI agent to gain entry to their home after finding them on the online Whatcom County, Wash., sex offender list.

Mullen pleaded guilty in March to two counts of second-degree murder and was sentenced to more than 44 years in prison. Whatcom County continues to list several offenders on the Internet.

All states have sex offender registries and almost all of them post the information on line, according to Blake Harrison of the National Conference of State Legislatures.

Maine's Web site contained such information as the offender's name, address, date of birth, identifying characteristics and place of employment, as well as a photograph. Depending on the severity of the crime, the offender is required to register either for 10 years or for life.

Local News in Brief

Pay raises approved for UMass faculty

Lt. Gov. Kerry Healy signed a bill on Friday that would allow overdue pay raises for over 2,000 faculty members on the University of Massachusetts Amherst campus.

Faculty, librarians, clerical and technical workers on the campus have worked under contracts that have not been fully funded since they took effect last year. The funding bill signed by Healy would give the workers two percent pay raises backdated to April 2005, and any additional pay raises would get backdated to January 2006 and would take effect in January 2007.

$30.1 million in funding was approved for the contracts and other public employee unions in Massachusetts. The money was part of a $132 million spending package, which took state legislators three hours to pass at the State House.

Union members have worked almost two years without a contract.

Wireless plans scaled back

A lack of funds has forced two University of Massachusetts professors to scale back plans to provide wireless Internet service for the entire town of Amherst. However, the remaining funds would allow wireless access for the entire downtown area, which encompasses about two square miles.

Amherst's Information and Technology Director Kris Pacunas originally estimated about $975,000 in funds from the National Science Foundation and Defense Advanced Research Projects Agency. But the UMass computer science professors organizing the project, Mark Corner and Brian Levine said they've only received about $100,000 and they're not certain of receiving more money for the project's expenses.

Only one-tenth of the project will now be completed, Pacunas told the Daily Hampshire Gazette. He says it will still give benefits to the town, including enhanced communication between public safety officials and savings on cell phone costs.

Clean-up focused on Campus Pond

Members of the UMass Water Watch began to raise awareness about the condition of the University of Massachusetts Campus Pond on Friday by kicking off its "Campus Pond Clean Up Campaign."

Groups of students picked up and raked away rubbish, such as cigarettes, bottles and paper from around the pond. Eight years ago, the Massachusetts Public Interest Research Group (MassPIRG) tested the water and found high levels of phosphorus and low levels of oxygen. Organizers say copper, lead, and mercury can also be found in the pond.

Campaign organizer Ian Haskins told the Republican newspaper there are two feet of muck and six feet of sediment at the bottom of the pond.

For more information on the Campus Clean Up Campaign, visit http://www.umass.edu/tei/mwwp/

—Compiled by Dan O'Brien

Authorites make new arrest in Holloway case

By Margaret Wever
Associated Press

ORANJESTAD, Aruba — A 19-year-old man detained in the disappearance of a young Alabama woman had never figured in the case before, lawyers said Monday, prompting speculation that authorities were taking a new approach to the case.

The announcement that someone was being held in the disappearance of Natalee Holloway nearly a year ago was the first major development in months in the case, which has featured several false leads. Before Saturday's arrest, seven people had been detained previously in the case and later released.

Lawyers for a Dutch youth and two Surinamese brothers jailed as suspects but later released due to insufficient evidence said the 19-year-old had not previously been mentioned in connection with the case.

"This may be a watershed moment," said Joseph Iacopina, who represents Joran van der Sloot, the Dutch teen who was with Holloway in the hours before she disappeared on May 30. "I don't think they are casually questioning him in this case."

John Q. Kelly, a lawyer for the Holloway family, said he was told by Aruban prosecutors that the detainee has friends in common with Joran van der Sloot and the Surinamese brothers.

"The information this individual picked up is information related to the other three suspects," Kelly said Monday on NBC's "Today" show. "I was told it's not a case breaker. It's one step in the process."

The detainee's name has been reported by some media outlets, but Aruban authorities have only released his age and initials "G.V.C." He was scheduled to make his first court appearance Tuesday, the prosecutor's office said.

Iacopina, who said his investigators had been in contact with Aruban authorities, said "G.V.C" was detained because police recovered a shirt belonging to him with "relevant forensic information" from the south side of the Dutch Caribbean island of about 72,000 people.

The prosecutor's office has declined to specify the detainee's alleged connection to Holloway — who was last seen leaving a bar with van der Sloot and the two Surinamese brothers, Deepak and Satish Kalpoe.

Natalee Holloway went missing while on a trip to Aruba. Her disappearance is still being investigated.

Joran van der Sloot is the latest in a series of arrests made regarding Holloway's disappearance.

Van der Sloot's father told The Associated Press that his son has never met the 19-year-old detainee.

"Joran did not know him at all," said Paulus van der Sloot, a former island justice official who also was detained and later released on suspicion of involvement in Holloway's disappearance.

Ronny Wit, a lawyer who represents the Kalpoe brothers, said he was not yet sure whether his clients know the detainee but he believes they will eventually be cleared of any involvement.

"There is no evidence that my clients have anything to do with the disappearance of Natalee Holloway," Wit told AP.

Iacopina, who represents van der Sloot in a civil suit filed against him by Holloway's family, said the detention of "G.V.C." was good news for his client because it suggested the investigation was heading in a new direction.

"This kid has been under an umbrella of suspicion for 11 months based on no evidence," he said. Van der Sloot has said he left Holloway, then 18, at a beach near her hotel after they kissed on the final night of her high school graduation trip.

Iranian president continues uranium enrichment program

By Nasser Karimi
Associated Press

TEHRAN, Iran — Iran's president has thrown a new wrinkle into the nuclear debate by claiming his country is testing a centrifuge that could be used to more speedily create fuel for power plants or atomic weapons.

But some analysts familiar with the country's technology said Monday that President Mahmoud Ahmadinejad could be deliberately exaggerating Iran's capabilities, either to boost his own political support or to persuade the U.N. nuclear watchdog agency to back off.

The U.N. Security Council has demanded that Iran cease enrichment work, which the United States and some of its allies suspect is meant to produce weapons. But Russia and China, two of the council's five veto-holding members, have opposed punishing Iran.

Russia's Foreign Ministry said Monday the Kremlin insists on a diplomatic solution to the standoff rather than any tough measures against Iran. A Western diplomat said officials of the U.S., Russia, China, Britain, France and Germany would discuss the matter in Moscow on Tuesday.

Ahmadinejad, in a speech to students last week, claimed for the first time that Iran is testing a P-2 centrifuge for enriching uranium. Such a device would be a vast improvement over the P-1 centrifuges that Iran says it has used to do small-scale enrichment.

Iran previously told the International Atomic Energy Agency it gave up all work on P-2 centrifuges three years ago. It was not clear if Iran has been doing work all along on the updated model, or recently restarted efforts, or even if Ahmadinejad's comment was accurate.

But his assertion is sure to raise concerns that Iran might have a more sophisticated atomic program than had been believed. The IAEA and some independent groups have long questioned whether Iran might have a parallel, secret nuclear program that is further along.

"Our centrifuges are P-1 type. P-2, which has quadruple the capacity, now is under the process of research and test in the country," Ahmadinejad told students in remarks that weren't reported by the official Iranian news agency but were later found on the presidential Web site.

Iran insists it is building up a nuclear program only for peaceful purposes — to generate electricity. But the United States and many of its allies think the Iranians want nuclear weapons.

Iran has come under pressure in recent months to halt all uranium enrichment, but Ahmadinejad is adamant it will press forward.

"He was likely posturing for his own political advantage and playing to national sentiment. We have to remember that the nuclear issue is very popular in Iran," said Khalid R. al-Rodhan, an Iran nuclear expert at the Center for Strategic and International Studies in Washington.

Anthony Cordesman, an expert also at CSIS in Washington, said there was no way to gauge if Ahmadinejad's statement was true, or if true, how significant that would be.

"Just making a claim about individual technical developments doesn't tell you a thing about what progress has really been made, or how it would change their operational capabilities," Cordesman said.

Officials at the IAEA, the U.N. nuclear watchdog based in Vienna, Austria, refused to comment.

The IAEA has believed for some time that Iran obtained the plans for a P-2 centrifuge. Some experts believe the designs were in Iranian hands as long ago as the late 1980s through a black-market network run by A.Q. Khan, the father of Pakistan's nuclear bomb.

Iran previously told the IAEA that the only work it had done on the P-2 design was carried out between 2002 and 2003 and was very limited. It also said the work was halted in 2003, when Iran went back to the P-1 design.

But the IAEA has repeatedly questioned that claim and accused Iran of not coming clean on past efforts.

"We know that they have had the drawings for P-2 centrifuge and they've publicized that," said Gary Sick, professor of international affairs at Columbia University and a former adviser to the U.S. National Security Council.

"But up till now, they have said that they were not in fact pursuing that path. If in fact Ahmadinejad said that, it is a significant change," Sick said.

A diplomat in Vienna who agreed to discuss the matter only if not quoted by name because he was not authorized to speak with reporters, said if Iran has secretly developed its P-2 program, that could mean it will be able to produce weapons-grade enriched uranium faster and in greater quantities than previously thought.

The latest estimate from the CIA and other U.S. intelligence agencies says Iran could not create a bomb before the next decade. But that analysis was based on Tehran using P-1 centrifuges.

KRT

Iranian President Mahmoud Ahmadinejad recently claimed that his country had the power to quickly make atomic weapons.

Testimony continues at trial

MURDER TRIAL from page 1

Johnston said his drug use stopped after a sexual assault in Hawaii that he believes Sullivan arranged. However, Feldman said she was aware of his cocaine and alcohol abuse upon moving back to Massachusetts.

When Steese asked Feldman why she hadn't conducted a follow-up interview regarding the drug abuse in Massachusetts, she said it wasn't necessary due to corroborating testimony from several friends and family.

"Whenever Bryan did cocaine and alcohol, the episodes seemed to come out," Feldman said while reading a statement from Johnston's friend.

Feldman also read an excerpt from her report regarding Johnston's steroid use. In the interview, Johnston had said about his steroid use, "it wasn't to get as big as possible but as a self defense because there were a lot of people out to get me." Johnston told Feldman that those people included the mafia and the IRA.

Steese was critical of Feldman's diagnosis, believing Johnston was indeed aware of the severity of the crime due to the 4 a.m. telephone call he made to his mother just hours after the murder.

Johnston allegedly told his mother he "had to flee the country because the mob was after him" and that "the police might find the body."

When Steese asked, "Does Johnston's claim to need to get out of the country show appreciation of the severity of the murder?" Feldman denied the suggestion saying, "It would indicate that David Sullivan was part of the mob and that they'd now be after him."

Johnston believes cameras and microphones were set up in his Hawaii apartment, his parent's home, as well as in a shower when he was in Albany, N.Y. Feldman says Johnston believes Sullivan said to him, "we paid to have you raped" and that was when Sullivan became the focus of Johnston's delusion.

Steese explained to the court multiple incidents when Johnston exhibited reckless and careless behavior that often involved alcohol use. Steese pointed out that, at times, Johnston would brandish a gun at a bar over something as trivial as someone being in his way. She also stated he shot a gun out the window while driving with friends in Leverett, and during a separate incident, shooting across the lanes at street signs into oncoming traffic on Interstate 91.

Johnston claimed he hadn't spoken to Sullivan since he made a comment towards his girlfriend while attending a June 2004 wedding of mutual friends until the fateful night of Dec. 7, 2004.

"I felt uncontrollable rage that I hadn't felt before," Johnston said about the last time they spoke when Sullivan hung up the phone. Something Feldman believes isn't a delusional statement when asked by Steese.

While Johnston pled insanity, the prosecution is pushing for first-degree murder charges, believing Johnston was indeed aware of the severity of the crime.

Testimony will resume today in Hampshire Superior Court, marking the tenth day of the trial, which could wrap-up as early as this week.

Survey says lack of sleep a safety risk for students

By Michelle Pope
Daily Kent Stater (Kent State U)

KENT, Ohio — Students swamped with homework and obligations are missing out on their sleep and posing a safety risk to themselves and others, according to a survey recently released by the National Sleep Foundation.

Titled the Sleep in America Poll, the survey studied young adults in high school and college to find out what their sleep patterns are like. The results found that only 41 percent of respondents claim they get a full night's sleep every or most nights, with 10 percent saying a good night's sleep is a rare occurrence.

The poll was released in relation to the National Sleep Foundation's ninth annual National Sleep Awareness Week, held March 27 to April 2. The week always coincides with daylight-saving time on the first Sunday of April.

And lack of rest may prove to be hazardous for young adults, especially if they're operating a vehicle while sleep-deprived.

According to the survey, 51 percent of young adults drive while drowsy and 15 percent claim they do it once a week.

"I do feel that sleep deprivation can seriously affect students," sophomore nursing major Jenni Gay said. "Sleepy students, especially those who commute as I do, are at a risk for automobile accidents."

Kent (Ohio) Police Lt. Michelle Lee said she hasn't noticed young adults driving drowsy and is surprised by the statistics.

"Police records don't indicate if someone was pulled over for driving drowsy, but from what I've seen, more young drivers appear to be distracted by their radio or cell phone then by lack of sleep," Lee said.

However, Lee offered tips for students who may find their eyelids getting heavy while driving.

"Pull over if you can, but if not, we recommend drivers do whatever they can to keep alert," said Lee. "Turn up the radio, roll down the windows ... we do not suggest, however, talking on the cell phone."

The poll found lack of sleep can also affect students in school. At least once a week, 28 percent admit to falling asleep while doing homework. Getting to class on time or at all is also an issue 14 percent say they face due to lack of rest.

Cassie Soehnlen, a junior psychology major at Stark campus, said it's her own time mismanagement that causes her to get to bed later.

"Even with losing time driving to school and work, I generally have enough time during the day to complete what I need for class," said Soehnlen. "However, I think the pressure in being scheduled for so much of my day tends to lead to me wanting to use what free time I have for recreation versus completing school work."

This leads to the late nights or early mornings scrambling to complete projects and not feeling well-rested on a regular basis, she said.

Gay said the issue for her is not mismanagement of time, but not having enough time.

"Waking up at the break of dawn for classes, for studying all day, and then working in the evening or being active in extracurricular activities does a number on how well I sleep at night," said Gay. "When I go to bed, I'm constantly thinking about the things I need to do for the next day and next week ahead."

Sophomore architecture major Katie Starkey said she agreed.

"I definitely feel sleep-deprived due to schoolwork," said Starkey. "If I just had studio work, I would still be busy, but you throw in physics, Structures, Architecture History and other crazy classes, and there is not enough time for sufficient amounts of sleep."

But even with all the stress and time restraints, the poll found the biggest culprit in lack of sleep is the use of electronic devices in the bedroom like computers, telephones and televisions. Almost all respondents, 97 percent, have at least one electronic device in their bedrooms.

Detainees lose their Supreme Court appeal

By Gina Holland
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The Supreme Court on Monday turned down a long-shot appeal filed on behalf of two Chinese Muslims being held at Guantanamo Bay while the U.S. government tries to find a country to take them.

The men's plight has posed a dilemma for courts and a public relations problem for the Bush administration.

A federal judge said the detention of the ethnic Uighurs at the military prison in Cuba was unlawful but there was nothing courts could do. Without comment, the justices declined to consider an unusual direct appeal of that decision.

The military agrees that Abu Bakker Qassim and A'Del Abdu al-Hakim should be freed after more than four years in U.S. custody. But with concerns they would be persecuted back in China, where?

"We don't want to put them on a boat and shove them offshore," said Robert Turner, a former high-level State Department official in the Reagan administration who teaches at the University of Virginia.

The men were captured in 2001 in Pakistan, and the following year the U.S. military shipped them to Guantanamo Bay along with hundreds of other suspected terrorists.

The military decided that the two men and 36 others — out of more than 550 prisoners — were not enemy combatants. The standard procedure is to send those people home. But Qassim and al-Hakim could not be returned to China after last year's vindication because the United States suspects they would be tortured or killed.

Lawyers for the two contend they could be released into America. A small number of Uighur refugees already live in the Washington area and have offered them jobs and housing.

The Bush administration opposes that. Supreme Court lawyer Paul Clement told justices that there were "substantial ongoing diplomatic efforts to transfer them to an appropriate country." In the meantime, Clement said, the men have had television, a stereo system, books and recreational opportunities including soccer, volleyball and pingpong.

President Bush meets with Chinese President Hu Jintao at the White House on Thursday.

A German newspaper reported over the weekend that German officials are being pressed to accept Uighurs now held at Guantanamo Bay.

Qassim and al-Hakim were captured as they fled a Taliban military training camp where they were learning techniques they planned to use against the Chinese government. They are Uighurs, Turkic-speaking Muslims who have a language and culture distinct from the rest of China.

It would have taken an unusual intervention of the Supreme Court to deal with the case now.

Lawyers for Qassim and al-Hakim filed a special appeal, asking justices to step in even while the case is pending before an appeals court. Arguments at the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit are next month.

"We knew it was a real long shot," said Boston lawyer Neil McGaraghan, one of the team of lawyers.

He said his clients, who are among 22 Uighurs at Guantaanamo Bay, have "become increasingly discouraged at the lack of progress."

"Guantanamo is at the precipice," justices were told in the appeal. "Only prompt intervention by this court to vindicate its own mandate can prevent the rule of law itself from being drowned in this intensifying whirlpool of desperation."

About 490 foreigners are still being held at Guantanamo Bay. Lawyers for more than 300 of the detainees filed a brief in Monday's case, saying that Qassim and al-Hakim "are far from the only innocent noncombatants languishing at Guantanamo."

Justices ruled two years ago that the detainees could use American courts to challenge their detentions. And the court this summer will rule on a case testing the government's plans to hold war-crimes trials at Guantanamo Bay.

The case is Qassim v. Bush, 05-892.

The Supreme Court recently turned down an appeal to release two unlawfully detained men being held in Guantanamo Bay, Cuba.

Bus plunges off cliff, many passengers killed

VERACRUZ, Mexico (AP) — A vastly overcrowded passenger bus veered off a highway emergency ramp and crashed through a metal barrier Monday, plunging more than 650 feet into a ravine in western Mexico. At least 67 people were killed, including four children.

Four people — including an 8-year-old girl — were injured in the wreck that came as the bus traveled on steep mountainous roads. It was returning from a religious gathering in the western city of Guadalajara to the passengers' home state of Tabasco, on the Gulf Coast, following Easter week.

Rescuers ended their search for victims after recovering 63 bodies, State Attorney General official Rosa Elvira Gonzalez said. She said four passengers died at local hospitals.

Officials did not provide the ages of the children killed or say whether the driver was among the dead. The bus, equipped to hold 46 seated passengers, was carrying 71, some of whom were standing up, said Federal Preventive Police Cmdr. Reinaldo Ascencio Cavazos. He said the owner of the bus was detained for questioning. Ascencio said the passengers belonged to a religious group known as The Light of the World.

Police did not immediately know what caused the crash, but said the driver had been trying to maneuver into a lane designed for vehicles that have brake or other mechanical failure as the bus descended one of the area's many winding roads. The bus fell between 650 and 820 feet before coming to rest at the bottom of a ravine, authorities said.

Federal Preventive Police official Arturo Corona told W Radio the bus was traveling at about 68-70 mph. Buses often are required to limit their speed to 60 mph.

Hundreds of thousands of Mexicans filled the highways Sunday and Monday as they returned from Easter week vacations. The holiday typically sees a large number of highway deaths.

The highway where the bus was traveling is considered to be one of the 15 most dangerous in the country, Corona said.

—Associated Press

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

EDITORIAL OPINION

TUESDAY, APRIL 18, 2006

"I may not agree with what you say but I will defend to the death your right to say it." -Voltaire

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Imposing our will in Iraq

Looking at all of the events in and around Iraq, the media doesn't seem to give enough weight to all the issues surrounding this controversial war.

Mike Sances

When hundreds of thousands of Americans poured onto the streets three years ago before the invasion of Iraq, they weren't protesting the war on the grounds that it couldn't be won. Rather, they were protesting because they knew it was an aggressive war, cloaked in the rhetoric of self-defense, and because they knew it would lead to massive amounts of unnecessary death and suffering.

Those hundreds of thousands of Americans have been largely missing in action ever since. In their place stepped first the Kerry campaign, and now the mainstream media in general. But the way the war is criticized has changed radically. With the admirable exception of Cindy Sheehan, who will speak at our campus tonight at 8 p.m., almost all discussion of the war has been confined to how well the Bush administration has been waging it.

This became strikingly clear this past week, with three days in a row of headlines describing the increasing number of current and retired generals lashing out at the Secretary of Defense Donald Rumsfeld. While it would be nice to think that the generals are really just worried about the plans for a nuclear strike on Iran, first reported two weeks ago in both the Washington Post and the New Yorker, there is no indication that they are concerned with anything other than Rumsfeld's failure to conquer Iraq.

While Rumsfeld has been unrepentant, former Secretary of State Colin Powell, a "moderate," has been more willing to admit mistakes. "What we didn't do in the immediate aftermath of the war was to impose our will on the whole country with enough troops of our own, with enough troops from coalition forces or by re-creating the Iraqi forces, armed forces, more quickly than we are doing now," Powell said back in September. Last week, he reiterated these regrets: "We made some serious mistakes in the immediate aftermath of the fall of Baghdad... We didn't have enough troops on the ground. We didn't impose our will."

The problem, of course, with this type of narrow debate lies in what gets left out: namely, morality, but also the well-being of the actual people, on all sides, who are suffering in Iraq.

And suffering they are. With the president's approval ratings down, the White House has ramped up the blame-the-messenger campaign recently, so there have been a lot of recycled sentences about no "good news" coming out of Iraq. True, we do hear a lot about the dead American soldiers, and the aforementioned nonsense about bad management, how we should be killing and conquering more effectively. The incompetence is real, and the lack of "good news" is just a reflection of facts on the ground, yet the suffering of the Iraqi people is something we hardly ever hear about.

When we do, it is almost sadistic. For example, the often repeated pro-war argument that "it is better to fight the terrorists in Iraq than here at home" is essentially an acceptance of responsibility for the car bombings and kidnappings that have killed thousands of Iraqi civilians. (It also ignores the fact that most of the terrorists in Iraq were mobilized by the invasion, and had no prior records of terrorism.)

Last summer, the Christian Science Monitor reported that the murder rate in Baghdad had increased fivefold, hitting 1,083 in July 2005. Before the war, the record was 250 a month.

Then there is the "Pottery Barn" argument, another Powellism, which dictates that by "breaking" something, e.g. a country, you either "own it" or are obligated to "fix it." We could debate the absurdity of that conclusion for a long time, but the key point here is the premise: again, an admission that the United States "broke" Iraq, and may even be responsible for the "cruel and bloody civil war," as journalist Patrick Cockburn recently described the situation there.

Cockburn has been reporting from Iraq since 1978, and writes that "for the first time, I am becoming convinced that the country will not survive." Meanwhile, the BBC, quoting official figures provided by the Iraqi government, reports that 65,000 Iraqis are now refugees in their own country, fleeing the sectarian violence triggered by the bombing, on February 22, of the Askariya shrine in Samarra. The New York Times ran a story the other day comparing the situation in Iraq to the Balkans, and other media outlets have started to run with the comparison.

It's important to note that the sectarian violence didn't start with Samarra. Last summer, the Christian Science Monitor reported that the murder rate in Baghdad had increased fivefold, hitting 1,083 in July 2005. Before the war, the record was 250 in a month. By then, hundreds of thousands of Iraqis had already fled to neighboring Jordan and Syria.

These are just some of the stories that get lost amid the debate on how best to "impose our will" on Iraq. But there is also the question of what "our will" actually is, or if "victory" is really something to be desired, let alone something we have a right to.

Many times during the 2004 campaign we were assured by Senator Kerry that "no one" wanted the president to fail in Iraq. I'm not so sure I agree. I know that a majority of Americans, including American soldiers currently in Iraq (according to a recent Zogby poll), as well as a huge majority of Iraqis, want the United States to leave Iraq now. Until the president starts to respect democracy, and our soldiers, instead of just paying them lip service, there is no reason to wish him success, and Iraq's very survival will remain in doubt.

Mike Sances is a Collegian columnist.

It's all about not having Benjamin's

UMass is helping the average-income student keep this sign going strong.

Matt Sloan

When I was in high school, I had a big argument with my dad. I was more of a bum in those days and saw no use in attending college. I had no desire for the man to be all up on me, telling me I had to pick a path, telling me I had to consume, telling me I had to work hard and get good grades.

I said to my dad, "Dad, I'm not going to college. I think I want to travel and buy a farm or build my own house in the woods and write all day. I don't need money. It's just a tool of the government meant to keep us under their control." Basically I took my history teachers and Jack Kerouac too seriously.

My dad told me to shut up and quit smoking pot. I was going to college.

So, I went through the college search process as half-assed as possible and applied to only two schools besides UMass. I got turned down from one of them and the third, Babson, was really kind of a joke because I could not imagine being a businessman. My uncles and cousins went there, so my family thought it would behoove me to apply. Like many of us here, when I found out I was going to UMass, I just kind of said, "meh."

"Oh, it is so beautiful out there! And think of all the money you'll be saving." I got this line over and over again. As it turns out, it is quite beautiful here. I love the school. There is always something to do, people to meet, classes to take and new experiences to be had. I even work as a tour guide, so as to convey my enthusiasm for the campus to prospective students. It is not an act. As for the money I'll be saving...

The snag is this, I am not poor enough to get grants and scholarships, but my family is not wealthy enough to pay for my education. It is a bit of a catch-22. When I graduate, I will have roughly $80,000 in loans, the same amount as my brother who attended Quinnipiac University. Here is the weird part, Quinnipiac costs $37,000 a year. This is strange. Very strange.

I have loans on top of loans, and my savings accounts are currently floating between $100 and overdrawn, since I am paying out of pocket for my extravagantly priced textbooks. My "Expected Family Contribution" (or EFC, as it is known in the biz), is too high for me to be eligible for any grants, even though my brother and sister just graduated from college, and my parents co-signed $175,000 in loans for them over the past six years.

What about that MCAS tuition waiver? Even though colloquially the term "tuition" is used to describe the expenses aside from room and board, in the penny-sucking world of UMass higher education, this word has been sneakily broken down into "tuition and fees." With a huge slant toward fees, as far as I'm concerned that tuition waiver knocks about $40 off the bill (really about eight percent). Sweet... Wings are on me tonight.

This next part is my favorite: Every year the cost of attendance for UMass increases. If my mom made $10,000 less a year, I would be all set. But, unfortunately, she does not. That woman needs to take a pay cut for her children's sake. My troubles remind me of Bob Cratchit, who was bumped into a higher tax bracket by his post-Christmas pay raise. Because of this, the EFC was too high and his kids were not entitled to grants, a problem that brought him into some serious debt after Tiny Tim's

With a huge slant toward fees, as far as I'm concered that tuition waiver knocks about $40 off the bill (really about eight percent). Sweet... Wings on me tonight.

untimely death, whose loans he all co-signed.

Now, obviously I will be able to pay these loans off since I am going to have millions of dollars, right? I'm going to have a Dodge Viper and a huge house with one room that has a replica Agro Crag. My chef will be someone cool, AC Slater cool. Yeah, I'm getting the shaft, big time.

As one final add-in, I am taking advantage of the wonderful "opportunity" to study abroad. This is the ingenious program wherein the college sends me to a country where the average weekly income is 78 cents and somehow I wind up paying $15,000 dollars for a semester, not including airfare. I could withdraw from school and live out my days as a drug lord, selling people like cantaloupes and needing both hands to count my wives, but for credit back home I have to shell out mad loot for a five month stay.

Now, do not mistake this rant for anti-UMass sentiment. I understand the decisions with which the administration is faced, and I realize that budget cuts and inflation put the schools between a rock and a hard place, but cut us some slack.

Perhaps when need is being assessed it would make sense to look at how much a student has already taken out in loans, and award grants to students heading down that path toward the American dream of excessive debt and exorbitant overspending. This society tells us that to make it in America we all need to go to college, but the supposedly affordable schools are now charging more than seems reasonable.

I cannot speak for anyone else, but I feel that this puts extreme pressure on me as a student, because I know every test adds in to every grade, every grade adds in to my GPA and if I fail to keep my grades up I will just be another average college graduate with absurd loans. My biggest concern is for my mother. God forbid anything terrible like the Tiny Tim story should happen to me, my mother would be stuck with thousands of dollars in co-signed loans. And she thought she made the wise, economical decision sending her son to a state university.

Matt Sloan is a UMass student.

Life on the frat lane

Melissa Garber

So it's Friday night and you're not sure what's going on. You could go to your friend of a friend's apartment in Sunderland, but then you'll have to take the bus back at 1 a.m. You'll never make it back to your dorm with those odds.

There's a bonfire in South Amherst, but by the time you get there the trusty Amherst cops will probably have broken it up.

People are always partying in the dorms, but how much fun can you have in a tiny dorm room filled with more people than the UMass policy states is legal? So what's there to do? You could watch a movie, make some tea and pass out or there's always that other option: Frat Row.

Frat Row is pretty conveniently located. It's a reasonable walking distance from most dorms on campus, so you'll make it back to your room if that's where you want to end up. Parties on the weekend are a guarantee and as long as you're a girl or have some cash, you'll get in.

The typical frat party consists of half-dressed girls grinding up against random guys or their friends, rap and hip-hop music blasting, and plenty of kegs of cheap beer to quench your thirst. Sometimes there's a theme for the belligerently drunk and the not-quite-clothed, sometimes there's not. This could be your scene.

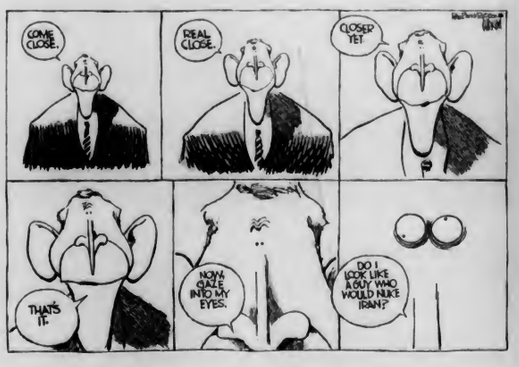
There's something about frats that motivates me to start up the hot pot and pop in a DVD if my Friday night plans are left to that option. I've only experienced the frats at UMass twice, though. Once first semester, I wandered onto frat row with a friend, unaware of what was going on. We ended up at a random frat that let us in without question. The place was kind of empty, there were just a few guys hanging around that table you spend hours throwing ping pong balls into cups on. There were dozens of thirty racks just waiting to be opened and a few girls dancing up against each other. So we left.

It seemed a nice gesture at first, but after he got me in he came up to me, put his arm around me and asked what I was up to at the frat that night.

Now, I wouldn't want to judge all frats based on that one experience, so earlier this semester I took up an opportunity to go to that other frat you know, the one not on Frat Row. Right as I got to the house, my friends and I were split up. Guys go to one door to pay a certain amount to get in, girls go to another. So my friends and I walked toward a crowd of girls surrounding a guy at a door with a flashlight. Something was strange about what was going on...

So, at the guy's door, they pay seven dollars to get in, plain and simple. The girls' door was a little more complex. Standing out in the crowd of girls vying to get in I heard shouts of "Unbutton your top," and, "You won't get in if you don't do it." The going rate for girls to get into the frat was $5 or you can flash the guy at the door. Most girls don't pay. My two friends are a little more aggressive than I am and they managed to push through into the frat. I was left on the other side already doubting why I was there. I just wanted to leave. I didn't feel comfortable.

I also didn't have $5. I wasn't about to pay to get in, but I was hesitant to leave my friends. Then some guy went up to the guy with the flashlight and was like, "Let that girl in. I'll pay for her." It seemed a nice gesture at first, but after he got me in he came up to me, put his arm around me and asked what I was up to at the frat that night. I politely thanked him for getting me in and walked away to find my friends. He muttered something, but I'll never know what.



I told my friends that I just wanted to leave. I didn't like the way I felt there. My guy friends called and said the frat ran out of beer and they didn't go in. They were leaving to go back to the dorms. We followed suit. So I spent a grand total of ten minutes in that frat. I saw what I needed to see, I think.

I'm not a feminist, but I felt completely gross. Just standing in a crowd of girls forced to objectify themselves outside so they can be objectified a little more inside made me feel uncomfortable. I guess it's not my style.

Even from what I hear about frats from my friends, regardless of whether it's good or bad, usually sounds terrible for me. My friend Ben Stein has only been to one frat. It was on Halloween. He had a great time; he got laid in one of the backrooms. If that's what you like then great. Frats are probably the best place to go. I'm not quite as eager for the random hookups. I've had friends participate in bets on who can make out with the most girls in one night. I've have had friends experience guys who expected much more from them then they were willing to put out. They didn't just want more; they projected it like it was standard fare.

I guess fun is subjective to your personality. I now know that I personally prefer to avoid the frat scene; it's not really my deal. I can't vouch for everyone, but I can't seem to find the fun in it all. I can get messed up any time I want... there's never a shortage of opportunity. But there's something special about a tea and a good movie after a long week of class. I'll save the partying for when there's a good one, not just any excuse to get blasted.

Melissa Garber is a Collegian columnist.

Write Letters to the Collegian!

We are always looking for outside opinions.

Got something to say? Write us something short and sweet.

Email us at editorial@dailycollegian.com

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

ARTS & LIVING

TUESDAY, APRIL 18, 2006

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

One man show honors infamous monkey trial attorney

By Kathy Van Meerbeke
Daily Press (Newport News, Va.)

Clarence Darrow was a man before his time — maybe a man of this time.

So says Gary Anderson, who knows "warts and all" about the most celebrated, and hated, attorney in American history.

"He spent his life campaigning against many of the very things we face today," says Anderson.

Darrow, a Columbo-looking kind of guy who wore slept-in suits in court instead of the French-cut clothes his wife bought, fought for civil liberties and against conspiracy laws. He saved 102 men from the death penalty, battled for civil rights and campaigned for separation between church and state.

The fact that those same issues are hot topics today — decades after Darrow died in 1938 — motivates Anderson to introduce the lawyer to theatergoers who want to think and learn, all the while being entertained. The actor, who lives in Redding, Calif., travels the country giving a one-man production titled "Clarence Darrow: The Search for Justice." He's already appeared as Darrow in more than 17 cities this year, and has appearances scheduled in Idaho, Ohio, Oklahoma, California and Florida through November.

On stage, Anderson wears the Darrow look — white crumpled shirt, wide tie and red suspenders. He speaks candidly about the lawyer's own jury-tampering trials and shares anecdotes to reveal his personal side. During the drama, you may even find him standing beside or in front of you, asking your opinion about some social issue. It's not unusual for people in the audience to get caught up in the moment, become mad or start crying, he says.

"It's an interactive production where I eliminate the wall between me and the audience and talk to people like Darrow," says Anderson. "You have to be prepared for anything when you make it that interactive."

Anderson's fascination with Darrow goes back almost a decade when he first began his portrayals of the controversial lawyer, who was born in 1857. About 60 to 70 biographies have been written about Darrow, but Anderson began to meet the man through his autobiography, which was simply titled "The Story of My Life."

The two best books on Darrow, he says, are "Clarence Darrow for the Defense" by Irving Stone, who also wrote "The Agony and the Ecstasy," and "People vs. Clarence Darrow" by Jeffrey Cowan.

Darrow is best known for the 1925 Scopes Monkey Trial, which in some legal circles, is called the case of all times. In court, Darrow faced off with his best friend, lawyer and Christian fundamentalist William Jennings Bryan, in a Tennessee case examining the teaching of evolution in public schools. John Scopes, the teacher in question, and Darrow technically lost the case. The case took a toll on the aging Bryan, who died in his sleep five days after the trial ended.

Throughout his career, Darrow was known for many things outside the courtroom — two wives, mistresses, big ego and volatile nature. Even so, Anderson views him as a misunderstood American hero who fought against threats to our way of life.

The actor has taken up Darrow's cause to offset the years he personally never voted in elections but always complained about what government was doing, or not doing.

"I was an armchair quarterback," says Anderson, who sidesteps personal questions about age and acting background. "Most Americans give lip service to what they think makes this country strong. I don't want to be that way anymore."

He hopes his portrayal of Darrow makes people realize there are flaws in everyone: government officials and everyday people. Flaws aren't all bad, no matter how important or unimportant you are, he says.

"You can be a flawed human and still leave a legacy," he says. "You fall down and you get up stronger."

Gary Anderson walks the walk and talks the talk as celebrated and hated attorney Clarence Darrow, who covered famous trials such as the Scopes trial of 1925, and sparked a nation-wide debate about evolution.

Digital films stampede to theaters

By Robert W. Butler
Knight Ridder Newspapers

Hollywood has gone pixel crazy.

The computer-generated "Ice Age: The Meltdown" sucked up $68 million during its debut weekend, setting a box-office record for March. It earned $34 million its second week out before dropping to second place last weekend.

Friday the animated "The Wild" hit the nation's movie screens.

And there's more on the way. Tinseltown will unleash a record 13 CGI films this year, ranging from the already-opened "Doogal" and "Hoodwinked" to this summer's "Cars" (from Pixar), the 3-D "Monster House" and the holiday season's Penguin-fest, "Happy Feet."

Computer animation seems to be a sure-fire moneymaker. Pixar's "Finding Nemo" and DreamWorks' "Shrek" franchise have ruled the box office in recent years, and the genre shows no sign of losing dominance.

But still, we've got to ask: Can Hollywood have too much of a good thing?

It's not hard to see why the movie industry is in love with animation.

Huge turnouts at the box office. Computer-animated films are almost exclusively G or PG-rated family fare. Unlike any other movie genre, CGI movies bring in the entire household — Mom, Dad and the kids.

That helps explain why Pixar and DreamWorks have routinely earned a minimum of $360 million worldwide from animated fare.

Even less successful examples of the genre — like "Robots" and "Chicken Little" — still made more than $250 million.

"Today it's easier to get the entire family to go to the movies than it is to get our traditional audience of young males," said Dickinson Theatres President John Hartley. He was referring to a survey last year that showed young men were going to fewer movies because of competition from video games, home theater systems and the Internet.

A bonus. Audiences for family films spend more at the concession stand.

International appeal. While many live action films play well only in their country of origin, computer-animated movies are invariably fantasies that easily cross oceans and national boundaries. Much of their humor is visual. And foreign versions of these films can be cheaply dubbed in the local language by no-name actors.

Staggering video sales. It's not unusual for an animated movie to make as much or more in home video sales than it did at the box office. Once children fall in love with Nemo or Woody or Donkey, they can continue to enjoy them on the small screen.

Merchandising. Far more so than live action films, animated movies have loyable characters that can be spun off into sales of T-shirts, pajamas, plush toys, key chains, bed sheets and hamburgers down at the local franchisee. And while a live star may demand his or her cut of the proceeds, computer-animated characters make no demands at all.

Sounds pretty rosy. But computer-animated films may face a thorny future.

Variety, the show-business trade paper, recently warned: "As with all successful trends in Hollywood, there's a four-letter word that brings chills to execs' glut."

With so many CGI films set to debut this year, "marketers are wondering if the business has the capacity to absorb all of them," Variety reported.

Is your average American family willing and able to take a trip to the movies every month? How about twice a month?

And there's the question of quality. Can the industry keep coming up with plots, ideas and characters that seize the public's imagination?

Disney's recent history suggests there are no guarantees.

Between 1989 and 1999 its animation division enjoyed a decade of unprecedented success with its traditional cell-animated features. Beginning with "The Little Mermaid" and continuing through "Beauty and the Beast" (the only animated movie ever nominated for a best picture Oscar), "Aladdin," "The Lion King" and "Tarzan," the company's feature-length cartoons dominated the industry.

Other studios decided to get in on the act, reviving their long moribund animation divisions or starting them from scratch.

But the cartoon renaissance ran out of steam. By the beginning of the new millennium, Disney's animation operation was on the ropes. Films like "The Emperor's New Groove," "Atlantis: The Lost Empire" and "Treasure Planet" were box-office flops.

And the cartoon features turned out by competing studios — "The Road to El Dorado," "Titan A.E.," "The Iron Giant," "Anastasia" — performed so poorly that those studios shut down their animation operations.

Could the current wave of computer-animated films suffer a similar fate?

Perhaps. If one or two of this year's big, expensive CGI titles underperforms at the box office, studios may think twice before investing too much time and money in the genre. But it's unlikely they'll abandoned computer animation altogether.

Remember, it was computer-animated features like "Toy Story," "Shrek" and "A Bug's Life" that hastened the death of cell animation. Moviegoers loved the look and the "realism" of this new form of entertainment, and CGI films are clearly the favorites of audiences all over the world.

As long as there's money to be made, you can expect the parade of animated tales to continue.

KRT (2)

A record-breaking 13 CGI films will hit theaters this year, including "Ice Age: the Meltdown," seen above and below.

All-American dining experience: The Chinese restaurant

KRT

With chinese restaurants popping up in practically every town across America, it is becoming harder to deny its presence in our culture.

By Jeff Gammage
Knight Ridder Newspapers

Today you can find a Chinese restaurant in practically every American city and town, from Absecon to Anchorage and everywhere in between.

About 36,000 dot the landscape — more than the number of McDonald's, Wendy's and Burger Kings combined.

"The Chinese restaurant," says Cynthia Little, director of interpretive programming at the Atwater Kent Museum of Philadelphia, "has really become as American as apple pie."

How that happened, what it means, and why it matters is the focus of a flavorful new exhibition at the museum that examines the Chinese restaurant and its multiple roles, only one of which is the preparation and serving of food.

The show, "Have You Eaten Yet? The Chinese Restaurant in America," reveals the humble eatery as family hub, child's playground, employment center, immigration conduit, and, perhaps most of all, intersection of white and Asian America, each one influencing the other.

On loan from the Museum of Chinese in the Americas in New York, "Have You Eaten Yet?" tells its story through oral histories, menus and other memorabilia, showing how local restaurants such as the legendary Cathay Tea Garden in Philadelphia helped introduce Chinese cuisine to the country.

"It adapted to American tastes and American desires," says co-curator Cynthia Lee, MoCA's deputy director of programs. The people who ran the restaurants were savvy businesspeople who "understood what people wanted, and how to play up certain ideas about Chinese culture."

Most of the Chinese who immigrated to the United States during the mid-1800s knew little about the restaurant business, but they quickly became acquainted with the discrimination that confined them to the jobs that white workers didn't want, laboring as launderers and cooks. By the turn of the century, entrepreneurial immigrants had parlayed those beginnings into a business niche.

Opening a restaurant required little in the way of start-up costs, and prices could be kept down through the free or low-wage labor of family members, says Grace Kao, director of the Asian American Studies Program at the University of Pennsylvania. Moreover, she says, owning a business created a means of upward mobility.

A portrait of Henry Tinchin Loo hangs at the exhibition's entrance, and in it he looks every bit the prosperous Western businessman, dressed in white shirt, tie and cufflinks. Loo opened the Little Paris in New York, started the Shangri-La in Beverly, N.J., and, by the mid-1960s, was running the Orient in Philadelphia.

Loo and his contemporaries knew that to survive, they needed to appeal to their American clientele.

First, they altered traditional Chinese recipes to cater to American palates, avoiding unusual meats and adding sweeteners. Second, knowing that customers wanted more than food — they wanted an experience — proprietors designed their restaurants to promote an exoticized vision of Chinese people and culture.

It was a delicate balance, the exhibition shows. If the unusual strayed into the strange, customers would be put off. A restaurant had to simultaneously offer mystique and accessibility.

Restaurant owners set out chopsticks — along with diagrams showing how to use them. Placemats became small billboards to explain Chinese family traditions.

Menus became more than lists of meals and prices — they became communications documents, the artwork reinforcing the idea of the exotic, the text a way for the owners to introduce themselves. Some businessmen even included their own photos and autobiographies. And some, the exhibition shows, pursued that presentation into self-parody.

Some wrote menus in pidgin English, praising their chef as a "numba one China cook" and pleading, "Please you no bling liquor to my place." One named his eatery the "Lied Looster Lestaurant." The China Doll, a New York nightclub and restaurant, sought to lure patrons with a production called Slant Eyed Scandals.

"Not everyone played that game, but some did," Lee says. "It was playing up on what they perceived as the public, mainstream view of Chinese. 'This is a touristic experience for you, and you're going to get it.'"

For the people who worked there, the restaurants were simultaneously places of toil and joy.

As a child, Florence Trinh says, she loved being in her father's restaurant, Happy Paradise in Philadelphia. That's where she got to see her parents, who worked six- and seven-day weeks.

Her father started out working at a Chinese restaurant in Baltimore, then at another in Philadelphia, saving enough money to open the Happy Paradise in the late 1960s. Several years later, he opened a bigger place a block away, Happy Garden, and the family moved into an apartment upstairs.

Trinh could operate a cash register by the time she was 6, and she worked at Happy Garden until she graduated from high school.

"I look back at it and I think it did me good, because it gave me a good work ethic," says Trinh, who now lives in Marlton, Pa. "I saw how hard my parents had to work for what we got."

Josephine Park had a similar experience. In the 1980s, when she was growing up in Albuquerque, N.M., she and her sister worked in their mother's restaurant, the Fu Shou. They did everything from washing dishes to waiting tables.

The Fu Shou had eight tables, and they were usually full.

"It was a real success," says Park, who now teaches Asian American studies at the University of Pennsylvania. "We only stopped out of fatigue."

That was the time when Chinese restaurants began to see something new. Chinese customers. They arrived from across China, part of a new wave of immigration that followed President Richard Nixon's trip to China.

As customers, these newcomers wanted authentic cuisines. As businesspeople, they began opening their own restaurants, often specializing in regional dishes. Today there's no such thing as a typical Chinese restaurant. They range from small, take-out counters in city neighborhoods to upscale restaurants that proffer Shanghai cuisine.

"Now the whole issue is 'authentic' — and what exactly is 'authentic'? And really who cares, if it's good?" says Little.

"It's a bittersweet story. I would like for people to really see this as part of the American journey."

"Thieves of Baghdad: The Journey to Recover the World's Greatest Stolen Treasure"
April 18th
7:30 PM
MAHAR 108
Matthew Bogdanos,
Author of Thieves of Baghdad (Bloomsbury 2005) Assistant DA (Manhattan) and Marine Reservist, will speak about his investigation into the looting of the Iraq Museum in Baghdad after the invasion of Iraq in April 2003

APPLICATIONS FOR THE ARTS SECTION ARE DUE THIS WEEK! EDITOR AND TWO ASSISTANT EDITOR POSITIONS ARE AVAILABLE!

Dance Stuff
Spring Sale
50% off
All Skatewear
20% off
All Leotards,
Dance Pants & Tops
April 18 – 29
220 North Pleasant St. (Rear) Amherst, MA
Tues, Wed, Fri 10-5 • Thursday 10-7 • Sat 10-2
(413) 253-5201

STUDENT LEGAL SERVICES OFFICE
UMASS, AMHERST
CALL 545-1995
or stop in at 922 Campus Center

Hoyas on tap for Minutemen

M. LAX from page 12

"My defense played great, and they gave me the shots that I needed to save," Schneider said. "I just wanted to play well, and they played well so we played well as a unit."

"He was excellent, and I thought the entire defense was excellent today," UMass coach Greg Cannella said. "Doc was as solid as he has been, and he has really been consistent."

A concern heading into this contest for UMass was the play of the face-off unit. After losing 22 of 30 face-offs in last year's win over Hobart, Cannella stressed the importance of that area throughout the week, and Jake Deane won 17-of-21 along with picking up 12 ground balls.

"This was a huge win," Deane said. "We needed to get that edge back — that look in your eye that no one is going to stop you — and we needed to get that look back in the locker room. I feel that we had a little bit of that back today, and this was a big win for us. We're looking forward to next week against one of the top-five teams in the nation, and it's going to be a tough one."

One area of the game that the Minutemen need to rectify before their showdown with the Hoyas will be ball control. They turned the ball over seven times in the game's first seven minutes and finished the game with 27 giveaways. It's been an ongoing concern for Cannella throughout most of the season, and he certainly won't sleep any better after Saturday's performance in that category.

"It's a situation that we need to right before next weekend or we're going to take it on the chin," Cannella said.

"[Cannella] has really stressed that we've got to take care of the ball and cut down on our turnovers," said sophomore midfielder Rory Pedrick, who scored once and dished out two assists. "We really tried to focus on that, but we've got to do a better job. Hopefully next week, we will cut them down."

KAREN WONG-RAYMOND/COLLEGIAN

Junior midfielder Brett Garber had two points on one goal and one assist in Saturday's 13-7 victory over the Statesmen.

Despite the turnover problems, the Minutemen led 5-0 at the 14:04 mark of the second quarter after Morris muscled and dodged his way through a double-team to pick up his first goal of the afternoon.

Hobart chipped into the lead by putting home the last two goals of the first half. David O'Quinn scored 2:12 after Morris, and Chris David — who finished with two goals — beat Schneider with a pinpoint shot to the top corner with 58 seconds remaining in the half to make it a 5-2 game.

Morris' linemates — Jim Connolly and Clay Stabert — scored a pair of goals to extend the lead to 7-2 with 8:22 to play in the third quarter, but the Statesmen ripped off a 3-1 run to cut the margin to 8-5 with 13:27 remaining in regulation.

The Minutemen proved to be too strong, though, and capped off a solid possession with Andrew Recchione's second goal of the day and then capitalized off a Hobart turnover with a goal from Pedrick to push the lead out to 10-5 with 11:52 to play.

Hobart got one back 15 seconds later with Patrick Meade's lone score of the game, but UMass went on a 3-0 run to move ahead 13-6 before James Dussich added a goal in garbage time to make it 13-7.

Minutewomen place third in Boston meet

By Joey White
Collegian Correspondent

The Massachusetts women's crew team rowed to a third-place finish Saturday in the Charles River in Boston.

With a time of 7:12.0, the third-place varsity eight boat for the Minutewomen was the highest finish of the day as they finished behind No. 10 Brown (6:56.4), Boston University (7:08.7) and ahead of the University of Texas (7:16.5).

UMass will continue action Saturday on the Cooper River in Camden, N.J. as it searches for its 11th consecutive Atlantic 10 championship.

Brown swept all events, including the main event by 8.3 seconds, to win the regatta.

"I think it was a pretty good race," UMass coach Jim Dietz said. "We were hoping to pass BU to help us look better nationally."

The Charles was heading out Saturday during competition and the crews had to face head winds around six miles per hour, which slowed down times by about 30 seconds.

"We gave up a lot pound for pound," Dietz said.

The varsity eight boat for UMass was ranked third in the Mid-Atlantic region going into the weekend and was comprised of sophomore coxswain Dana Pulda, and rowers Catherine Garnepy, Gabrielle Papineau, Hannah Brewster, Stephanie Hopf, Rachael Sealer, Sarah Marsan, Katie Berger and Ellyn Maskrey.

The second varsity eight team for the Maroon and White finished fourth in 7:47.0 with senior coxswain Natalie Solerno, and rowers Kristin Boyce, Jaime Dicke, Faith Miller, Amanda Mawn, Katie Grogan, Allison Bahn, Elizabeth Hayashida and Farrell Klein.

Arlina Burrill, Mary-Frances Heck, Emerald Shirley, Haley Fitzgerald, Katarina Karotki, Anna Welch, Karen Plevock, Kendal Peirce and coxswain Jeanine LeDoux finished the novice-eight race in 7:57.9 for fourth place.

The Bears' "B" boat, which was made up of the team's top freshmen, won the varsity-four in 7:57.55, followed by their "A" boat (8:12.67), BU (8:21.55), Texas (8:27.20) and UMass (9:01.59).

The team of coxswain Benna Cheung, stroke rower Mariah McCormick, bow rower Sarah Potts and inside rowers Stephanie Vasilchuk and Andrea Morand also finished fourth in the novice-four race for the Minutewomen.

"I'm really feeling a lot more optimistic about the overall team," said Dietz, reacting to the racing of his novice boats. "There's a good chance of them winning next week."

Besides fighting the weather conditions, there was also a three-hour layoff between races Saturday as many other schools were using the Charles. Brown, the three-time national champion, was worried about those factors and so scheduled the day and the main event to start at 6:40 a.m.

"We were going against tough competition. Within our conference is a little bit easier," Dietz said.

The Maroon and White faced seven of the other A-10 opponents in the Knecht Cup, which they came out on top out of 26 teams. UMass also saw Rhode Island in the Yankee Cup, which the Rams finished last out of four teams behind first-place UMass.

George Washington is the only A-10 foe that the Minutewomen have not raced against this season. But if this past weekend in the Charles is any indication, then it looks good for UMass as the Colonials lost to the Terriers by 14.3 seconds on the Charles April 1.

Dietz and the Minutewomen will be looking forward to preparing for the A-10 Championships as each day this week they will be dressed up according to the day's theme, starting with today's "Superhero Day."

"You're supposed to [have fun]," Dietz said.

Jeptoo said it's too soon to decide whether she'll defend her title next year.

But now she has an advantage.

"I know the course now," the beaming Jeptoo said.

Jeptoo wins despite late arrival in Boston

By Ken Maguire
Associated Press

BOSTON — If last-minute passport problems failed to stop Rita Jeptoo, Heartbreak Hill wasn't going to stand in her way, either.

Jeptoo arrived in town Friday, and never got a chance to familiarize herself with the Boston Marathon route. But her U.S. debut was nonetheless impressive.

The 25-year-old Kenyan won in two hours, 23 minutes, 38 seconds — 10 seconds better than Latvia's Jelena Prokopcuka, a strong finisher who came from behind to win the New York City Marathon in November.

"The last two kilometers I looked behind. I saw Jelena and I'm thinking, she's coming to catch me," said Jeptoo, who won marathons in Stockholm and Milan in 2004.

It was the closest finish in course history, race officials said. The previous record was set in 2000 when Catherine Ndereba beat Irina Bogacheva by 16 seconds. Ndereba, the four-time Boston champion who won last year, also won by 16 seconds in 2004.

Jeptoo cruised over Heartbreak Hill, a series of hills in Newton almost two hours into the course that over the years has been the demise of even elite runners, including Japan's Reiko Tosa on Monday.

Tosa ended up third in 2:24:11. She said the course was "much tougher" than she expected and said after the race that she didn't even know where Heartbreak Hill was.

Jeptoo almost never made it after her passport problem. She was told that her address on her passport was incorrect, but the matter was resolved in time for her to fly from Italy and arrive in Boston on Friday.

Without even driving the route, she said she was confident because she had trained hard.

"If you know the course and are not ready, it is useless," Jeptoo said.

Jeptoo and Prokopcuka tried to pull away with six miles left as Tosa fell behind. But with four miles left, the three were back together, running side-by-side along Commonwealth Avenue in Newton, headed east to Boston.

With about three miles to go, Jeptoo made her move. Her 24th mile was her fastest, at 5:07.

"I cannot wait," she said. "I decided to go."

Prokopcuka, the only one of the three with Boston experience, stayed close, but couldn't pull even.

"It wasn't possible," she said. "Rita was very strong today."

The top American finisher was Emily LeVan, of Wiscasset, Maine. She finished 13th in 2:37:01. The 33-year-old LeVan works part-time as an emergency room nurse.

"The weather was ideal today," she said of the starting time temperature of 53 degrees. "The clouds and cool temps were great."

Boston Marathon is first stop on tour

BOSTON (AP) — The Boston Marathon marked the first competition in the World Marathon Majors — a two-year challenge to crown a marathon champion. Runners earn points for their finishes in the Boston, London, Berlin, Chicago and New York marathons.

Olympic silver medalist Meb Keflezighi, who came in third in Boston's race and therefore got 10 points, said he was glad he did well in the series' first competition.

"This is what we do for our livelihood," he said. "Boston was the first one and definitely all of us here are delighted to he the indicators of that."

Alan Culpepper, who came in fifth and earned one point, said the series — and its $500,000 purse — is a great extra incentive to run the races.

"Those are the races you hope to be competitive in anyways," he said. "It's nice to have that little extra incentive there."

Dick and Rick Hoyt have carved out a unique and heartwarming place in Boston Marathon history.

Each year, the crowds along the 26.2-mile route cheer wildly as the father-and-son team pass. Dick Hoyt pushing Rick — born with cerebral palsy — in a wheelchair.

This year marks their 25th time in the race, and the first with a fundraising goal. Team Hoyt wants to raise $1 million for Easter Seals. So far, they've collected $350,000.

But the running almost didn't happen. In December, Dick Hoyt, now 65, seriously injured his knee during a race in California and for a time his doctors weren't sure he'd be healthy enough for the Boston Marathon.

He got better, and the Hoyts finished the race in three hours, 43 minutes, 27 seconds.

While their finishing time may be a little slower than in past, Hoyt says he and Rick, 44, are ready for the challenge.

"It's very special," Dick Hoyt said before the race. "When we first started we never knew we would be running marathons, never mind 25 of them."

Matthew Simms, of Langley, Wash., finished in two hours, 52 minutes and five seconds to win the second annual Iraq Boston Marathon at Base Camp Adder in Tallil, several hundred miles outside of Baghdad.

Organizers of the real Boston Marathon contribute signs and medals for military personnel who can't quite make it to Hopkinton for the start of the 26.2-mile trek to Copley Square. A total of 125 men and women ran the race in Iraq, along with 91 relay teams.

Carrie Peterson won the women's race in 3:36:11, followed by Heather Simas of Springfield, Mo., and Kimberly Riggs of Evergreen, Colo.

Simms was followed by Casey Jackson of Bend, Ore.

It was 30 years ago when temperatures topped 100 degrees and Jack Fultz came from behind to win the hottest Boston Marathon in history, dubbed "Run for the Hoses." Now, Fultz, a training advisor for Dana-Farber Marathon Challenge, is the Grand Marshal for the race.

Fultz was a senior at George Washington University in 1976 when he won the Boston Marathon after gradually making his way up through the field from 10th place at the halfway mark to first in Newton.

For the West family, the Boston Marathon means a party, friends and enjoying a prime view of the starting line from their front yard in Hopkinton. Unfortunately, it has also meant runners relieving themselves on their lawn before the race and strangers climbing their trees to get a view of the course.

But not anymore.

In recent years, the Wests have installed a fence around their property to keep marathon-watchers out.

"Before the fence, it was ridiculous," Adam West said. "It was a free for all."

Thousands of people line the route from suburban Hopkinton to Copley Square. Marathon organizers started offering fences to residents last year. They also provide additional portable toilets to the town to address the complaints.

Associated Press

Walk to Campus!
Townehouse of Amherst Condominiums
Hurry contact us now!
50 Meadow St. Amherst, MA
Tel: 413.549.0839
Fax: 413.549.8487

Bueno Y Sano
Every Tuesday is
Fat Tuesday
Grandé Burritos same price as regular burritos every Tuesday.
1 Boltwood Walk, Amherst, MA - Behind Newbury Comics
Call Ahead for Pick Up (413) 253 - 4000
Open Daily 11a m - 10p m
134 Main Street, Northampton, MA - Next to Thorne's
Call Ahead for Pick Up (413) 586 - 7311
Open Daily 11a m - 10p m

WRITE FOR SPORTS!!

START YOUR own FRATERNITY
Tau Kappa Epsilon
Participate in social, philanthropic, communtiy service and intramural activities on campus.
No Pledging! No Hazing!
World's Largest Social Fraternity
$20,000 in Available Scholarships
Instant Leadership Opportunities
Contact:
Steve Lytle slytle@tke.org 813-394-4087
Jason Fenske jfenske@tke.org 414-975-1168
www.tke.org/expansion/umass

Minutewomen deal crushing blow to La Salle

By Brendan Hall
Collegian Staff

After nearly two months of wins but mostly losses, overcomings but mostly shortcomings, 10-8's but mostly 7-16's, it appears the Massachusetts women's lacrosse team (5-9, 2-2 Atlantic 10) is finally turning the corner and sprinting its way up field.

And it couldn't have come at a better time. After handing a loss to Saint Joseph's (4-7, 1-3 A-10) Thursday night and a 16-10 slam of LaSalle (5-9, 1-3 A-10) Saturday afternoon, both in Philadelphia, the Minutewomen have evened their conference record to .500, and if they can stay above that margin in conference play – basically, if they win two of their last three games – then the fourth and final seed in the upcoming A-10 Tournament figures to be theirs to lose.

Granted, these two opponents weren't as talented as UMass' first two foes to open up conference play (No. 9 Richmond and St. Bonaventure), but they were badly-needed wins nonetheless. Prior to the win over the hapless Explorers, the Minutewomen had dropped three of their previous four decisions, including a lopsided 15-5 loss to Richmond on April 9.

Once again, Kathleen Typadis was the catalyst for the UMass scoring, tying a career single-game high mark with five goals on six shots. The attack was also led by a trip of hat-trickers, as Kayt McCormick, Jeanette Villapiano and Lindsay Cassell all registered three points on three goals.

But after a weekend in which the sophomore attack got nine points on nine goals, to earn herself A-10 Player of the Week honors, one might argue the effect Typadis has on the UMass attack is downright osmosis-like.

"We are certainly lucky to have her score the way she does," UMass coach Carrie Bolduc said. "To have a player get three points in a game is great, but four or five is phenomenal. It's great to see her really kicking it off. On top of Kath, four other kids had hat tricks, so I feel our attack is becoming more well-rounded."

KAREN WOOD/COLLEGIAN

Senior midfielder Lauren Reid got her first start of the year against Vermont on March 29, when she tallied a career-high four groundballs.

At first, though, the Minutewomen were entangled in a deadlock with the Explorers. Throughout the first half, UMass and LaSalle went practically goal for goal, with the Minutewomen spotting LaSalle a 2-0 lead before taking a 5-4 advantage into the break on three straight goals from Typadis, Villapiano and Meghan Reddy.

UMass then blew the door wide open in the second, using an 8-1 run over a 16-minute span in the half to bust out to its biggest lead of the day, 16-8, with just over four minutes left.

Villapiano started the run off with an unassisted goal at the 20-minute mark, to which Jessica Pisek responded a minute and a half later with a goal off a feed from Emily Bonczek. It would be last time LaSalle would score in the second until three minutes were left in the game.

Cassell, Villapiano and McCormick all achieved their hat tricks during this 16-minute run. Kerri Connerty (two points) and Typadis each got a goal of their own to add on to the scoring.

For anyone that saw or heard about their affair against Richmond two weekends ago – that is, a 15-5 rout, a score that Bolduc insists isn't indicative of the close game they played – this was quite the change. Rather than bring the attack to their opponents, the Minutewomen are letting the attack come to them, and feeding off of it.

"Across the board, it's not that we changed anything on attack," Bolduc said. "We're playing more of a possession-type game. In the past, we've played more of a high tempo game, now we're slowing things down a little bit. We keep saying, don't shoot to shoot, shoot to finish.

"To be honest, LaSalle wasn't one of our best games," she continued. "We just knew how to control the momentum, knew how and when to take good shot, figured out how to finish."

But the win apparently was enough for Bolduc to turn a bit prophetic. To maintain the fourth and final seed in the A-10 Tournament, a spot UMass currently holds, the Minutewomen are going to need to win at least two of their final three games. That includes this Sunday's home match against Temple, a game Bolduc says they will win.

"I know we're going to beat them," she said. "I don't think or believe [we'll win]. I know."

American men breakthrough with five finishers in top 10

By Jimmy Golen
Associated Press

BOSTON — The Kenyan national anthem got its annual airplay in the Back Bay on Monday after another Boston Marathon sweep.

It was the Americans, though, who were boasting of a breakthrough.

Robert Cheruiyot finished in two hours, seven minutes and 14 seconds to nip the course record by a single second, and Rita Jeptoo won the women's race for Kenya's fourth sweep since 2000. With five American men in the top 10 — including Nos. 3, 4 and 5 — the United States had its best finish since the addition of prize money in 1986 helped bring back the top international fields.

"It's exciting to see a lot of American guys run well," said Olympic silver medalist Meb Keflezighi, who was third behind Cheruiyot and Kenya's Benjamin Maiyo. "The crowd was just phenomenal. When they were chanting, 'Go USA! Go Meb! Go USA!' I was like, 'I'm glad I'm here.'"

Keflezighi, a naturalized citizen from Eritrea who lives in San Diego, ran with the leaders until the 16th mile and then began falling behind. Brian Sell, from Rochester, Mich., was fourth, catching Alan Culpepper around the last turn before the Copley Square finish.

"When Brian went by me, I thought he was some guy that jumped on the course," Culpepper said, evoking memories of 1980 shortcut-taker Rosie Ruiz.

"We don't talk about this anymore here," moderator Frank Shorter joked.

Culpepper, from Lafayette, Colo., was fourth last year, a performance that matched the best U.S. finish since 1987. The last American to win in Boston was Lisa Larsen-Weidenbach in 1985; no American man has won since Greg Meyer in 1983, and 12 times since then there have been no Americans in the top-10.

"For those of us who are in it and make our profession, we're probably not as surprised as other people. We've seen flats coming for a while. We've seen this building," Culpepper said. "I think it is a new day, for sure."

Cheruiyot and Jeptoo each claim an olive wreath, a bowl of beef stew and a $100,000 first prize. Kenyan men have won 14 of the last 16 Boston titles and its women have won three in a row and six of seven.

"I think we'd given in to the fact that the East Africans are supposed to dominate the race," said Kevin Hanson, whose club in Rochester, Mich., trained seven of the top 22 men's finishers. "And we haven't come up with a reason why."

Four of Kenya's women's titles belong to Catherine Ndereba, who was not in the field this year. Defending men's champion Hailu Negussie dropped out just after the halfway point with stomach problems that usually indicate dehydration.

Cheruiyot had no such troubles. He let Maiyo set a blistering pace and ran off his shoulder before taking the lead going up one of the Newton Hills. He came onto Boylston Street — the last stretch — with almost a minute to break the record, then sprinted the last 50 yards as volunteers waved for him to hurry.

"I think, 'No,'" he said. "And then I see I can make it."

AP/BOSTON

Catherine Ndereba (above) and Rita Jeptoo completed the fourth straight Kenyan sweep of the women's Boston Marathon in 2006.

Celebrity Beauty
Beauty Is Our Only Business
Bring this ad for 30% OFF any service!
Hair Cuts
Waxing
Coloring, Perms
Facial Treatments
Hours: Tuesday - Friday 11 - 6 Saturday 10 - 4
321 Main St. Amherst (Next to Brueno's)
413 256 0899

SENIORS–
GOT SOMETHING TO SAY?
Leave your mark!
The Daily Collegian is currently seeking essay submissions from graduating seniors
Write a 750 word piece about the UMass experience and how its shaped you. Bring submissions to 113 campus center basement
Top 3 will be published in the graduation edition on May 15th and 16th
All entries must be received by April 21 at 4 pm
Questions? Call 545-3500

Living in a Cloud By John Corbis

Elsie Hooper By Robert D. Kyrzkowski

Jack Dogg By Xavier Rhodes

The Family Monster By Josh Shalek

The Zoo By Gabe Strine

Quote of the Day

"Every search for a hero must begin with something which every hero requires, a villain."

—Mission Impossible II

ACROSS
1 Slightly wet
5 Short punches
9 Iridescent gems
14 Kyrgyz range
15 Tangelo variety
16 Regard highly
17 Artist Chagall
18 Toy
19 Humanoid posture
20 Inquire
22 Dugout decor
24 Strain beforehand
28 Agts
29 Classify again
31 Holy halos
35 Italian eight
36 Belonging to us
38 Warning device
39 Short life story
40 In the best of worlds
42 Simpson judge
43 Blow volcano-style
45 Blackthorn
46 Actor Estrada
47 Pick up
49 Audience member
51 Queens stadium
53 Motors stationary parts
54 Cornmeal bread
58 Period
59 One Astaire
60 Ski lift
62 Eye part
66 Dramatic parts
67 Macpherson of "Sirens"
68 Add spirits
69 Lovers rendezvous
70 Knicks great Willis
71 "Pursuit of the Grail ..."

DOWN
1 Beaver barrier
2 Chicken-king connector
3 Damage
4 "Guernica" painter
5 Not grub for a health freak
6 Ripen
7 Reveal indiscreetly
8 Indian instrument
9 Harm it up
10 Sun shield
11 Actor Guinness
12 Dame Fortune
13 Tennis unit
21 Bird's sibling
23 Oolong or pekoe
24 Examined thoroughly
25 Hit the hay
26 Partake of restaurant fare
27 Balances
30 Refrain syllables
32 Colf
33 More dilettantish
34 Cigarettes
37 Cetkino bandits
40 Most restless
41 Educated
44 Mortars counterparts
48 Involves
49 Part of AT&T
50 Corn serving
52 Change
54 Sherry-tasting
55 Fragrance
56 Count (on)
57 Qualified
61 Pub choice
63 Harsh criticism
64 Chill
65 Understand

Find today's answers online

www.dailycollegian.com

THE HARP
Irish Pub
APRIL SPECIAL!
Honey Brown, Molson
$2.00 a pint / $6.50 a pitcher
TONIGHT: • Trivia Night!
Trivia Night!
Trivia Night!
WED: • Cold Duck Complex
"Come Party Like You're Irish!"
413-548-6900 | www.theharp.net
163 Sunderland Rd. - N. Amherst
just north of the apartments
WSWH Wireless Internet
We Accept All Major Credit Cards
Open 11:30 AM

Applications for COMICS EDITOR for the 2006-2007 school year are now OPEN

Pick up an application in the Collegian offices (located in the Campus Center basement) or e-mail collegiancomics@yahoo.com for more information

HOROSCOPES

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
You accidentally grabbed your notebooks for Monday.

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
You are one of those people who thinks the iron is always on.

aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
Make sure you have change to make copies at the library today.

taurus Apr. 20-May 20
If you use the vending machine in front of you, you'll get two candy bars.

gemini May 21-Jun. 21
Don't use the Internet today. By dinner time you will be legally insane.

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
Whatever you do, don't order food tonight.

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
You will get a very sketchy e-mail chain letter sent to you today.

virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
You will eat an entire pound of provolone cheese today.

libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22
Jury duty is for suckers. You will get out of it somehow.

scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
The H key on your computer will break today.

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
You should really tip more than five percent.

capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
Your favorite color is pink and everyone knows it.

On-Line Classifieds.
Very Simple.
Very Easy.
Interested?
Go to www.dailycollegian.com
Questions?
Call 545 - 3500

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

Announcements

Like to party? I handle every curve with perfection and have a soft interior. Meet me, the Ford Fusion, outside the Campus Center on April 25th between 10 AM and 3 PM. Brought to you by your New England Ford Dealers.

Learn, Lead, Succeed Full Tuition ROTC Scholarships plus $5,000 yearly cash stipend Find out more www.umass.edu/armyrotc

Apartment for Rent

One bedroom apartment located in the center of town, $680/mo, heat and hot water included. Call (978) 771-8074

Amherst Clean 2BR Bus Near Center $1025 Avail 6/1 413-335-5226

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing, 1&2 bedroom apts. Leases begin June, July, Aug or Sep. First come, first serve. Get them while they last. www.brandywine-apts.com stop by or call 549-0600

2 bedroom $1100 3 bedroom $1400 4 bedroom $2150 Now Accepting Applications 253-7377 millvalleyestates@wlnnco.com

Center of Town 1, 2, 3 bedrooms hardwood floors. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

Childcare

Looking for 10+ hrs/week babysitter & help w/light housework. Must be reliable and trusted. Ruby 210-8155.

Employment

Drivers Wanted. Chicago Pizza. Apply in person between 3:30-5pm

Rent us your Ears! Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu Voicemail: 545-6837

Bartending $300/Day potential. No experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 x162

The best summer of your life! Live, work, and play outdoors at one of New England's best Summer Camps. Seeking staff to work as Cabin Leaders at overnight Boys Camp; 6/18 – 7/22. Teach three daily skills classes, supervise a Cabin Group, and role model YMCA values for boys 7-17. Room, Board, paid staff training and $800-1200 salary. Download application packet at www.camptakodah.org/staff/positions.html or contact Camp Director William Therrien at (603) 352-0447 / willy@camptakodah.org

Apartment Leasing Consultant – Love People? Can't Sit Still? Nat'l real estate firm has a unique opportunity for individuals this summer as leasing consultants at our 232 unit apartment community in Sunderland. We need energetic, organized, & passionate individuals to work in an environment where no 2 days are alike. Individuals w/ retail, hospitality, banking, or restaurant experience are encouraged to apply. Send resumes to erich@aspensquare.com or fax to 240-525-0058. Visit us at www.aspensquare.com

Full-time summer employment at the Housing Assignment Office, $8.50/hour. Visit the HAO at 235 Whitmore to pick up application

Furniture porter and maintenance person needed for busy auction gallery on Nantucket Island this summer (508) 228-3942

Personal Care Assistant for woman in Northampton. Light housework. Cooking, cleaning, laundry, shopping. Must have reliable car to take client to Dr.'s appts. Part-time hours $10.84/hr. References and some experience preferred. Please call before 7pm 586-0029

PAINTERS NEEDED! Hundreds of positions available throughout New England. Work outside with your friends and family in your hometown. No experience needed, training provided. Join large student painting company this summer. Hiring now! 888-277-9787, www.collegepro.com

"Tiktaalik roseae... Time is Running Out for Intelligent Design." Celebrate the discovery of the missing link between fish and land animals with fishaped clothing and gifts at http://www.cafepress.com/tiktaalikroseae

House for Rent

Northampton: 4 bedroom, double living room, open and enclosed porches. June $1300 plus utilities, near park. Skibiski, Realtors 586-1827

Room for Rent

CAPE COD Summer rooms Hyannis area. Private pond $150 a week includes... (508) 428-3456

Services

PREGNANCY TESTING. HIV TESTING. Birth control, and Emergency Contraception. STI Screening and Treatment. Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9092

Services

Have you been ripped off by a retailer? Contact the Student Legal Services Office regarding your rights as a consumer. 922 Campus Center or call 545-1995

Legal questions? We have answers at the Student Legal Services Office. 922 Campus Center or Call 545-1995

Pentium-C color laptops $99 We type term papers, resumes, cover letters. 413-584-8867

Travel

Disney Beach Area 7/6 nights stay. Pd $900/00 Sacrifice $450/00 Good for one year 978-444-0261

Wanted

Egg Donors Wanted. Established Donor Program seeks loving, healthy women 21-33 to donate eggs to infertile couples. Non-smokers only. Generous compensation! 1-888-363-9457 www.reproductivelawyer.com

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS TUESDAY

TUESDAY, APRIL 18, 2006 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Next up: Georgetown

By Jeff Howe
Collegian Staff

The premier matchup in the ECAC just got a whole lot more interesting.

The No. 10 Massachusetts men's lacrosse team made a statement against Hobart at Garber Field on Saturday by jumping out to a 5-0 lead and cruising to a 13-7 victory over the Statesmen. The convincing win set the stage for what should be an epic battle between the Minutemen (8-2, 3-1 ECAC) and the Georgetown Hoyas — who were upset by Loyola two days ago — next Saturday at 1 p.m. in the nation's capital.

Since the inception of the ECAC, the winner of the UMass-Georgetown game has gone on to win or share the conference championship each year. This time around, first place in the conference will once again be on the line.

Nine different Minutemen scored a goal in the win over Hobart, and they were paced by the nation's leading scorer, Sean Morris, who once again fought through double- and triple-teams all afternoon to score two goals and an assist. That raised his season totals to 16 goals and 29 helpers.

"This was a huge win," Morris said. "We already have one [ECAC] loss, and of course we want to defend our title. What better way to do it than go down to Georgetown?"

Reigning ECAC Rookie of the Week Doc Schneider had another impressive performance between the pipes with 13 saves against six goals, and he has quickly emerged as one of the vocal leaders on the field for the Minutemen.

KAREN WINGER/COLLEGIAN

Senior attacker Sean Morris scored two goals and added one assist in Saturday's 13-7 drubbing of the Hobart Statesmen at Garber Field.

See M. LAX on page 9

UM drops two of three to La Salle in conference series

KAREN WINGER/COLLEGIAN

Freshman second baseman Adam Tempesta was named A-10 Co-Rookie of the Week after going 10for-15 at the plate in three games this weekend.

By Danny Picard
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts baseball team dropped the ruhher match of a three-game series against La Salle (13-20, 6-5 Atlantic 10) by a score of 8-7 on Saturday afternoon in Philadelphia. The Minutemen (6-17, 4-8 A-10) suffered an 8-4 loss in the series opener on Thursday, hut were able to win their fourth conference game of the season with a 15-13 victory on Friday.

Freshman second baseman Adam Tempesta was named the A-10 Co-Rookie of the Week yesterday, after last weekend's performance against La Salle. Tempesta went 10-for-15 with three doubles and six runs scored against the Explorers. He now leads the team in batting (.347), hits (33), runs (17) and doubles (8). Tempesta is the first Minuteman to receive league honors this season.

UMass will be back in action when it takes on Boston College (18-18-1, 4-14 Atlantic Coast Conference) at 7 p.m. tonight at Fraser Field in Lynn. It will mark the opening round of the 17th annual Beanpot Tournament, and will be the second of two matchups between the two teams this week.

The Minutemen opened the weekend in the City of Brotherly Love with their second consecutive loss. Junior shortstop Lou Proietti led the UMass offense with a 2-for-4 showing, which extended his hitting streak to nine straight games. First baseman Bryan Adamski also extended his hit streak to seven games with a 1-for-4 day at the plate.

The Explorers jumped out to an early 2-0 lead and got some solid pitching from Ryan Burge, who allowed no runs and just two hits through the first five innings.

UMass made it a one-run hallgame on an RBI groundout hy sophomore third baseman Ryan Franczek in the top of the sixth.

La Salle answered in its next at-bat, scoring four runs to take a commanding 6-1 lead. UMass starting pitcher Chris Lloyd got the hook in the sixth and was dealt his second loss of the year. The junior right-hander allowed six runs on five hits while striking out seven in 5 1/3 innings.

The Minutemen scored three runs in the top of the eighth on RBI singles by Proietti and Tempesta, and an RBI double by Adamski to make it 7-4. But that was the closest they would get, as the Explorers scored another run in the bottom of the eighth to seal the 8-4 victory.

UMass' offense would not be denied the next day, however. The Minuteman bats were red hot on Friday, as they staged a six-run ninth-inning comeback to get a 15-13 win. Leading the way for the Maroon and White was catcher Bryan Garrity and Tempesta. Garrity went 1-for-2 with six RBIs on the afternoon, while Tempesta went 5-for-6 with four runs scored.

Freshman reliever Mike Dicato picked up his first win of the season, while Adamski came in to pitch a perfect ninth inning to record his second save of the year.

The Minutemen took an early 6-3 lead, thanks to a third-inning grand slam by Garrity. They held a 9-3 lead going into the seventh, but the Explorers scored six runs in the bottom half of the inning to tie the game at nine.

La Salle scored four more runs in the eighth to take a 13-9 lead, hut UMass answered in the top of the ninth with six runs of its own. Senior Derrick Durepo started the rally with an RBI single, followed by a three-run home run by Franczek to tie the game at 13.

Proietti's RBI single proved to be the game-winner, as he plated Tempesta to give UMass a 14-13 lead. The Minutemen added an insurance run and Adamski was able to mow down the Explorers to give UMass a 15-13 win.

Proietti and Adamski extended their hitting streaks at 10 games and eight games respectively.

The Minutemen lost the ruh-her match on Saturday when they let a commanding 7-3 lead slip away late in the game. The Explorers scored five runs in the bottom of the eighth inning to complete the comeback with an 8-7 victory.

The loss saw Proietti's 10-game hitting streak come to an end, while Adamski was able to extend his to nine games with a 2-for-4 day at the plate.

The game was tied at 1-1 after six innings, until UMass scored six runs in the top of the seventh. Two of its 11 hits in the inning came from an RBI triple from Franczek and an RBI double from Tempesta.

The Explorers went on to score seven unanswered runs to win the game. La Salle center fielder Dennis Burge produced the game-winning RBI in the bottom of the ninth on a walk-off single up the middle to win it, 8-7.

A record-breaking weekend

By Jeremy Rice
Collegian Staff

Saturday was a record-setting day for one member of the Massachusetts softball team (23-12, 11-1 Atlantic 10), which swept Temple (13-19, 6-4 A-10) in a doubleheader over the weekend.

The Minutewomen are back in action today in Chestnut Hill for Game 1 of a two-game season series against Boston College (16-20).

UMass defeated the Owls, 3-1 and 12-7, with two stellar performances from freshman pitcher Brandice Balschmiter. But the story of the day was freshman Whitney Mollica, who broke one school record and tied another.

Coming into Saturday, Mollica was just three RBIs away from tying the all-time record for RBIs in a season, and just two homers from the freshman single-season home run mark. She went 3-for-6 on the day, hitting two home runs and knocking in five runs to help the Minutewomen take a firmer hold on the top spot in the A-10.

Those numbers were enough to give her sole possession of the RBI record with 47, beating Kim Gutridge's 45 RBIs in 1998. Mollica also has nine home runs in her first collegiate season, tying her with Brandi Cross for the most all-time by a freshman.

With 17 more regular season games remaining, Mollica should have plenty of opportunities to break that mark as well, but UMass coach Elaine Sortino is more focused on how those numbers are turning into wins for the team.

"Setting a record is obviously an accomplishment," Sortino said. "But what impresses me more about Whitney is that she's diligent about working on her swing and being able to hit through all zones. Her work ethic for a young person is very mature. That's why she's had an exceptional year.

"Records are nice, but if we never broke an individual record and went to the Regionals, I think we'd be more than happy," Sortino continued. "If five people break records and we don't win a conference championship I don't think anyone is really going to care."

Game 1 was a defensive game that saw Balschmiter out-duel three Temple hurlers to earn her 17th victory of the season. Temple struck first, when pitcher Katie Burdeaux, trying to help her own cause, doubled to left.

Then with Nicole Lee pinch running, Danielle Fagan singled to right, driving in the only run for the Owls.

In the third inning, Candice Molinari tripled to left center and was promptly brought home by a Mollica blast over the left field wall to put the Minutewomen ahead, 2-1. Then in the fourth, Mollica tied the RBI record by knocking in Amanda Morin from second with a single up the middle of the infield, giving UMass an insurance run.

It would be all the Maroon and White would need, as Balschmiter threw seven complete innings, allowing four hits and allowing one earned run while striking out six.

The nightcap was much wilder than the matinee. Senior Jenna Busa pitcher had a rough start, giving up four runs in the top of the first inning, though all four were unearned. UMass had three errors in the inning.

The Minutewomen got all four runs back in the bottom of the inning, however. UMass scored two quick runs, and Temple starting pitcher Jennifer Nacianceno was bumped from the circle after just 2/3 innings that included a number of wild pitches and an error.

Burdeaux returned to the circle to get the final out of the inning, hut a Lesley Ferrara single drove in two more runs. All four first inning runs for the Minutewomen were unearned.

In the third, UMass pulled ahead when Stacy Cullington hit a two-run triple to left center. Morin followed with a single that brought in Kristi Stefanoni, who was running for Cullington.

The Minutewomen took a 7-4 lead into the fourth, but after Busa loaded the bases on a walk, a single and a hit batter, Balschmiter was brought in from the bullpen. She would give up three earned runs before closing out the inning, but all three runs were credited to Busa, who allowed the base runners to reach safely.

Stefanoni broke the 7-7 tie in the bottom of the fourth with an RBI single. The score remained 8-7 until the bottom of the sixth inning.

After Molinari hit a two-run triple, Mollica broke one record and tied another with a single swing of the bat. With Molinari on third, the freshman hit a two-run shot over the center-field wall, giving the Minutewomen the 12-7 lead.

The home run was Mollica's second of the day and her ninth of the year. After tying the single-season RBI record in Game 1,Mollica took sole possession of the mark with the homer, and tied the freshman mark for home runs in a season with nine.

Balschmiter had a 1-2-3 seventh inning to give her team the win and the sweep of Temple, but Sortino was still unhappy with the play of the defense in the second game.

"[We were] very erratic in our defensive play. We spent most of today's practice working on defense," Sortino said. "We probably spent an hour and a half working on ground balls. It really hurts not to be able to play solid defense."

However, she attributed at least part of the team's defensive struggles to the fact that the Minutewomen have not had a lot of work on their home field. Saturday was only their fourth regular season game at home.

"We haven't been on this field that much, and we have to get more comfortable on it," Sortino said.

UMass will challenge the Eagles today at 4 p.m. for a single contest. BC will be in Amherst on May 3 to complete the home-and-home series. The Eagles have not had a great year, with a record of 16-20. They are just 2-13 in the Atlantic Coast Conference, which puts them in last place in the league.

It is interesting to note, however, that the Eagles are in a conference comprised almost exclusively of teams in the southern part of the country, and BC has played the fewest games overall hy far. The warmer climate has certainly allowed for the other ACC teams to play more games, which may make BC's record somewhat misleading.

KAREN WINGER/COLLEGIAN

Junior first baseman Amanda Morin was 4-for-8 with two runs scored and three RBIs in a doubleheader versus Charlotte on March 9.

KAREN WINGER/COLLEGIAN

With a 3for6 showing in this weekend's doubleheader against Temple, freshman Whitney Mollica pushed her RBI total to a record-breaking 47.

KAREN WINGER/COLLEGIAN

Junior first baseman Bryan Adamski is batting .333 for the 2006 season, second only to Adam Tempesta.

New England's Largest College Daily • Est. 1890

The Daily Collegian

Wednesday, April 19, 2006 www.dailycollegian.com Volume CXVI Issue: 117

UMass students fight for increased funding

SGA President Elvis Mendez, Massachusetts senator Susan Fargo and UMass graduate and coordinator of the Student Center for Education and Reform Jamie Jee discussed the importance of supporting and raising awareness about the benefits of public higher education yesterday.

By Melissa D'Amico
Collegian Correspondent

University of Massachusetts students met with senators at the Statehouse yesterday to discuss greater funding for higher education.

Members of SCERA, the Student Center for Educational Research and Advocacy, and the Student Government Association organized with students from UMass Boston and Massachusetts Community Colleges to raise awareness on the issue of funding public higher education.

"Students from UMass Boston and Community Colleges within Massachusetts met with committee chairs on Thursday at the Statehouse to discuss how the 5 percent funding increase is too small, since we currently have a state surplus. We need to reiterate this message to senators today," said Jamie Jee, a UMass Amherst graduate student and member of SCERA.

Advocates asked that the legislature fund public higher education at the Fiscal Year 2001 (FY01) level, adjusted for inflation: $1.26 billion. Between FY01 and FY04, the total state public higher education budget was cut by 26 percent. During the same period, the University of Massachusetts budget was cut by 25 percent.

Between 1986 and 2006, the state's tax fund appropriation efforts fell 246 percent from $8.36 per $1,000 of personal income to $3.40 per $1,000. If the state funded public higher education this year at the percentage of personal income it funded it with in 1986, the higher education budget would be $2.12 billion. This year the House Ways and Means Committee has recommended $1.02 billion.

Student activists hoped to raise awareness among the senators that students are aware of the decisions made about higher education funding and that the students are acting to make their opinions heard.

"Students can complain all they want on campus, but in order to see results, we have to go to the Statehouse and meet with senators and representatives. If they see that we are aware of the issues that surround our education and that we are serious, they are more apt to help us with funding," said Matt Giancola, SGA Senator for Orchard Hill.

The students discussed Massachusetts budget cuts, cost of attendance to public universities and financial aid, number of faculty members, admission of underrepresented students and endowments.

The meeting opened with a speech by State Representative for Amherst Ellen Story. Story discussed the need for public education and working toward greater funding.

"Public education is the cornerstone of

See FUNDING on page 3

Sheehan speaks at UMass, blasts Bush

By Kira Glassman
Collegian Correspondent

Standing under a tent on the Student Union lawn last night at the University of Massachusetts before an energized crowd of all ages, prominent anti-war activist Cindy Sheehan blasted the U.S. government's handling of the war in Iraq, its military spending and patriotism. But she saved her harshest words for President George W. Bush himself.

"I know I've called the president some names. I've called him a lying bastard," said the soft-spoken Sheehan, who made national headlines last August when she camped outside Bush's ranch in Crawford, Texas and refused to leave until the President agreed to speak with her.

Sheehan's son, U.S. Army Spc. Casey Sheehan, 24, was killed in Baghdad on April 4, 2004. The 54-year-old California native has been at the forefront of the anti-Iraq war movement since and is arguably the most influential person working for this cause.

Sheehan spoke at UMass as part of Tent State University, a week-long outdoor event featuring workshops, classes and forums that address university access and diversity.

"It's important to stand up for what you believe in," said Sheehan, dressed casually in a red sweater, khakis and straw hat. "I don't think I'm brave or courageous because to be those things, you have to be afraid of something. I didn't protest the war before because I thought one person can't make a difference. I think I've kind of proven that wrong. But if you just sit on your couch drinking a beer and scratching your ass and watch-

See SHEEHAN on page 2

Cindy Sheehan, above, became a prominent American anti-Iraq War activist after the death of her son, Casey Sheehan, who was serving in Iraq.

New housing program causing stir

Students remain pessimistic on success of EPOCH

Van Meter, shown above, is one of the residence halls that is slated to host the EPOCH program this fall. The program is set to become mandatory for all incoming freshman in 2008.

By Caleb Garone
Collegian Correspondent

Distressed University of Massachusetts students took turns reading testimonials on why they think the move to make EPOCH a mandatory program for all first-year students is a mistake last Wednesday afternoon at an EPOCH housing forum put on by the Student Government Association at the Cape Cod Lounge in the Student Union.

By fall of 2008, under the current plan set forth by the UMass administration, all incoming first-year students will live in all first-year student residence halls.

Freshman Ellen Handly's qualms with EPOCH ranged from students with seniority getting forced from their residence halls to the possible isolation of first-year students from upperclassmen.

"They don't even have the option to become a full part of the University because they would be isolated as freshmen living with freshmen, doing activities for freshmen, and taking classes with freshmen," said Handly.

Residence halls that become a part of the EPOCH program make a few administrative changes.

In the Van Meter/Butterfield cluster, "administrative additions will include 15 peer mentors, who will be an addition to Van Meter and a replacement to the Butterfield LCAs, a second Assistant Resident Director, and a First Year Experience Specialist," said Marguerite Phillips, resident director of the Van Meter/Butterfield cluster.

In Van Meter, many residents are upset with the decision to turn their home into an EPOCH community.

"The culture here is amazing, the music, the hill, the people, and events like Koffee Haus [a weekly open mic night] are all reasons why there is no place I would rather live," said Van Meter Resident Assistant Justin Dowd.

Marguerite Phillips can empathize with the Van Meter residents who are being displaced by EPOCH.

"I do understand the frustration of the Van Meter residents. I think the resident allegiance to Van Meter was underestimated," she said. "I think it would have been great had the residents been able to give more of an input about EPOCH before the program was instituted."

Director of Residence Life Dawn Thompson said having all first-year students involved in learning communities would make UMass a better university.

"Research shows that students living in learning communities have stronger academic achievement, higher retention, stronger transition to college, greater civic engagement, positive peer inter-

See EPOCH on page 3

Biologists to study migration of face cells

By Melissa D'Amico
Collegian Correspondent

University of Massachusetts scientists will study the journey of migrating cells that form the face through a $1.7 million grant from the National Institute of Health.

Developmental biologist Dominique Alfandari will investigate the molecules that may regulate the migration of cells to the head to gain further understanding of what lends to abnormalities in head and face development and invasive migrations, such as those of cancer cells.

"In humans, alcohol and some genetic factors can perturb cell migration. This results in abnormal faces, but we don't know why. The more we know about these cells, the more we will be able to predict and repair these defects. Cancer metastasis uses the same process to spread cells to different organs. Everything we learn on cell migration can lead to treatment to prevent cancer from spreading," Alfandari said.

The cells that will develop into the bone, cartilage, muscle and nerves of the face must move far from their origin in the developing embryo before colonizing in the head. Proteins play a key role in the development of an organism from an embryo. A specific family of proteins, known as ADAM proteins, may contribute to the cellular migration of future face cells, called cranial neural crest (CNC) cells.

ADAM proteins are characterized by their containment of a disintegrin and a metalloprotease domain.

The ADAM proteins appear to guide the CNC cells on their migration to the head, says Alfandari. "We know that if we block one of these proteins, ADAM13, we no longer get cell movement," Alfandari said.

ADAM13 has been found on

See FACE on page 2

ARTS & LIVING

BENISE FINDS NAME IN SPAIN

Guitarist Roni Benise acquired happiness with his Spanish guitar.

Page 6

EDITORIAL/OPINION

TAKING IT LYING DOWN?

Student thinks Tent State University is just what we need.

Page 4

WEATHER

TODAY
High 69
Partly cloudy windy

TONIGHT
Low 43
Clear windy

TOMORROW
High 76
Low 41
Sunny

SPORTS

CATCHING UP

Lord talks about past and present of UMass hoops.

Page 12

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Michael A. Busack
MANAGING EDITOR Eric Athas
BUSINESS MANAGER Nathan Chomsky
PRODUCTION MANAGER Nicholas Belanger
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Katie Huston
ADVERTISING MANAGER Kerry O'Grady
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Lauren Egavian
EDITORIAL PRODUCTION Amanda Allen
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Ian Jones
COMICS EDITOR Amanda Allen
EDITORIAL EDITOR Kristen LaCasse
NEWS EDITOR Dan O'Brien
SPORTS EDITOR Jeff Howe
CIRCULATION MANAGER Thomas Hecht
DISTRIBUTION MANAGER Nick Gleason
FINANCE MANAGER Daniel Conti
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Caren Tortorice
ASSISTANT BUSINESS Phil Smoller
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Morgan-Ann Rousseau
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Alex Butler
ASSISTANT NEWS Megan Daley
ASSISTANT NEWS Matt Bellveau
ASSISTANT SPORTS Dan Duggan
ASSISTANT SPORTS Rob Greenfield
ASSISTANT EDITORIAL Tucker Merrick

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS ALOHE LIFE, BECAME THE COLLEGE SCENE IN 1901, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914 AND THE DAILY COLLEGIAN IN 1938. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967. THE COLLEGIAN'S OFFICES ARE LOCATED AT 113 CAMPUS CENTER. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL WEEKDAYS BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 5:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Ian Jones

COPY EDITOR
Meghan Murphy

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Amanda Allen

PRODUCTION STAFF
Sean Duram, Chris Martin

If you see news happening, call us at 545-1809 and snap a photo with your cell phone, then send it to news@dailycollegian.com

Amherst police log

Windows of two vehicles shot with BB guns

Friday April 14

– Alexander Leloup-Kopitzke, 21, of 65 Salem St, Amherst, was arrested for operating under the influence of liquor and a marked lanes violation Friday after he was involved in a motor vehicle accident. Leloup-Kopitzke crashed his 1995 Cadillac Deville at 40 Triangle St. at 1:19 a.m.

– Elizabeth Alison Blaisdell, 21, of 141 Rolling Acres, Lunenburg, Mass., was arrested at 1:38 a.m. Friday for operating under the influence of alcohol, motor vehicle lights violation and failing to possess registration. Blaisdell was pulled over by police at 284 North Pleasant St. and given a field sobriety test before police made the arrest.

– The owner of a 2003 Toyota Tacoma called police at 11:59 a.m. because someone shot out the driver's side window with a BB gun. One of two incidents over the weekend involving someone shooting windows with a BB gun, the owner said the car was parked outside of the Boulders apartment complex at roughly 3 a.m. and didn't know of the damage until he called police.

– Police responded to Apartment 25 of Mill Hollow at 169 Summer St. after a woman told police she believed her neighbors to be smoking crack-cocaine. When police asked if she could smell the crack-cocaine, she said she couldn't nor could she see it, but that she learned about it on the Internet. No arrests were made.

– Police were notified about two "stoned" males at 7:17 p.m. going door to door soliciting money for a trip to Ireland, according to one person who felt the situation was questionable upon seeing the two. Police found two individuals who were apparently selling magazines without a proper license. Police seized the personal checks the two had collected but there were no arrests.

– Bryan Balicki, 22, of 15 Rosalie Ln., Southampton, Mass., Daniel M. Murray, 23, of 25 Edgewood Rd., Southampton, Mass., and Edward J. Fournier, 24, of 59 Division St., Easthampton, Mass. were arrested at 11:39 p.m. after a crowd of 30+ people didn't leave a party and the noise wasn't lowered, according to police. Fournier is charged with resisting arrest and possession of a class E drug. Balicki and Murray are charged with unlawful noise.

Saturday April 15

– After Bryan Balicki and Daniel Murray were released on bail at 4:05 a.m., police noticed a wide etching of the word "Jaiones" on the cell. Police plan to review their recordings of the cell monitoring system.

– A cover from a propane tank was used to break a window to a kitchen area of Wildwood School on 71 Strong St. at 9:39 a.m. No entry into the kitchen could be seen.

Sunday April 16

– During a drive-through of the Boltwood parking lot at 2:21a.m., police observed Michael Dineen suspiciously duck behind a vehicle with a 30-rack of Keystone Light beer. Dineen told police he was not 21 and the beer was seized and destroyed.

– Police were called to The Tuttle Farm House of Amherst College at 1:10 p.m. for a breaking and entering report. Those involved apparently entered the house on the southwest window before exiting through the northeast window. Police found two to three smaller sets of footprints but have no suspects at this time.

—Compiled by John Fenuccio

Researchers to use frog embryos to study cells that form the face the surface of migrating CNC cells. This protein is capable of severing other proteins and promoting adhesion, abilities that are useful when directing cell movement. However, the specific details of the protein's actions are still unclear, and will be examined through Alfandari's research.

FACE from page 1

Alfandari and her research team will use frog embryos to study the cells that form the face. All vertebrates, including humans, have these cells. By understanding how the cells move in one species, it may be possible to understand how they function in humans.

The research team will perform "gain and loss of function" experiments using the frog embryos, according to Alfandari.

"We believe that some proteins (ADAM) are critical for the migration of the cranial neural crest cells. To test this, we can express these proteins in cells that don't normally express them and see if they start migrating.

... On the other hand, we can prevent the expression of the protein in neural crest cells and see if they can still migrate," Alfandari said.

"Our working hypothesis is that ADAM13 cuts another protein that prevents CNC cell migration until the time is right," Alfandari said.

UMass scientists will study the journey of migrating cells that form the face.

"The protein might hold the CNC cells like an anchor, or block their path in some way."

ADAM proteins continually show up where cells are migrating. A recent study found the proteins helping cancer cells invade a liver.

"Right now there is not much to be done when cancer invades organs," Alfandari said. "If we can figure out how to inhibit these proteins, perhaps we could prevent such invasions."

The National Institute of Health will award the grant over a five-year period, and Alfandari hopes the research project will be completed within that time.

Working with Alfandari on the project's research team are post-doctoral fellow Dr. Helene Cousin, graduate students Kate MacCusker and Russell Neuner and undergraduate students Mike Coyne and Carolyne Gross.

'He's a serial killer,' says Sheehan on Bush

SHEEHAN from page 1

ing American Idol, you can be 100 percent sure you will not make a difference."

Sheehan didn't waste time getting down to business.

"Bush is a pretend commander-in-chief," she declared, to thunderous applause. "He's a serial killer and a terrorist. And we're supporting that terrorism. My oldest son is dead and never coming back. My son was killed needlessly and senselessly and the government is a co-conspirator in the murder.

"Our leaders have so much blood on their hands," she continued, "and they're roaming free. What Bush and his band of crazy followers want is to destroy the middle class and keep us stupid. Because if we're educated, if we're aware, then we won't buy their bullshit. Our government wants all dissent suppressed."

Her audience rapt, she went on, "If someone had taken away the keys to the war machine from George Bush, my son would still be alive. But instead they give the keys to him on a silver platter."

Sheehan was critical of Democrats as well as Republicans.

"The Democrats disgust me almost as much as the Republicans, because they're bobble-heads and rubber-stampers. Vote for the person, not the party," she advised.

Sheehan also expressed her aversion to patriotism.

"I don't like the idea of it," she said. "Some people might say I'm spitting on the flag, but what is the flag? To me right now it symbolizes corporate greed and murder. If it symbolized freedom, compassion, honesty and integrity, I still wouldn't follow it into battle, because war is wrong. It's barbaric to kill people to solve problems.

"I might not be opposed to the war if Congress went to fight it, if George Bush rode out on his horse into the battlefield," added Sheehan, to appreciative laughs from the audience. "It's your freakin' fight, you go fight it."

"We need a new patriotism in our country," continued Sheehan. "Not patriotism, but matriotism, which is love of the human race. You don't have to be a woman to be a matriot." Surveying the crowd, Sheehan asked, "How many matriots do we have in this audience?" Dozens of hands went up.

In an interview with the Massachusetts Daily Collegian, Sheehan expressed her gratitude to college students for their activism and encouraged everyone to do more.

"I just want to congratulate you all for standing up for what you believe in," she said. "Have rallies on your campus and speak — this is your world."

CORRECTIONS

In Monday's Collegian, a photo caption read that 10-year-old Jamie Rose Bolin of Oklahoma was killed and assaulted by Kevin Ray Underwood. However, Underwood has only been charged at this point. We apologize for the error.

There was an error in Matt Giancola's April 10th column; the blog written by an Iraqi citizen, not the defense department analyst, can be found on the Web site Iraqthemodel.com. The Department of Defense analyst's blog is thomaspmbarnett.com.

Eating Disorder evaluations
February through May
Meet with a Physician and a Nutritionist at University Health Services
Mondays 12:15 - 2:15 p.m.
Tuesdays 8:15 - 10 a.m.
Call 577-5414 for an appointment

• Research indicates at least 20% of college women are bulimic. Some studies suggest this number could be as high as 50%.
• Even with highly skilled care, 30-50% of anorexic and bulimic individuals who do not receive attention early in their disorder will have chronic eating, weight, and behavior problems.
• Chronic dieters become preoccupied with food, suffering considerable emotional and physical consequences including irritability, poor concentration, anxiety, depression, apathy, fatigue and social isolation.
• 42% of American women would rather lose 10-15 pounds than have guaranteed success in careers or romance.

UMASS AMHERST
UHS Health Education Division
577-5181
www.umass.edu/uhs
411 075 02/06

Celebrity Beauty
Beauty Is Our Only Business
Bring this ad for 30% OFF any service!
Hair Cuts
Waxing
Coloring, Perms
Facial Treatments
Hours: Tuesday - Friday 11 - 6 Saturday 10 - 4
321 Main St. Amherst (Next to Bruno's)
413.256.0899

Looking for summer learning?
You're getting warm.
Your search for the perfect summer learning destination is heating up, and all signs point to UMass Boston:
• Over 500 undergraduate and graduate courses offered days, evenings and online
• Travel-to-learn programs in fascinating places like China, Amsterdam, and Puerto Rico
• Our sunny, breezy Boston Harbor campus is an ideal location for summer study
• Small classes, dedicated faculty, & affordable fees make UMass Boston a great value
Registration starts April 3
find out more:
summer.umb.edu
617.287.7900
UMASS BOSTON

Positions Open for Assistant News Editor
(413) 545-1762

Boston officers shoot at suspect who fled stop in stolen SUV

BY KEN MAGUIRE
ASSOCIATED PRESS

BOSTON — Police officers on Tuesday shot and wounded a man who fled a traffic stop in a stolen sport utility vehicle and smashed into several cars, including one containing four police officers, authorities said.

The suspect, whose name was not immediately released, was shot once in the stomach and transported to Massachusetts General Hospital after the 11:30 a.m. chase ended outside a Registry of Motor Vehicles office and the Chinatown MBTA subway station, said Boston Police Superintendent Robert Dunford.

Three Boston police officers and one from the MBTA transit police were brought to a local hospital for "well-being" checks. "They're fine," Dunford said.

According to Dunford, police had stopped the Ford Explorer a few blocks away because it was reported stolen Saturday from neighboring Somerville. As officers approached on foot, the driver sped away, and officers gave chase, Dunford said.

The Explorer drove over a busy downtown sidewalk and into oncoming traffic. Among the cars struck was an unmarked MBTA transit police vehicle containing three MBTA transit police officers and one Plymouth police officer, according to Boston police.

Police cornered the vehicle and several officers fired their guns.

"As a result of the imminent danger to citizens, pedestrians and other motor vehicle traffic in the street, rounds were discharged by Boston police and MBTA police," Dunford said.

EPOCH to become mandatory in 2008

EPOCH from page 1

action and lower levels of binge drinking," said Thompson.

Vice Chancellor Mike Gargano and Thompson have been working on a program for first-year students since the fall of 2003; EPOCH is the fruit of their labors.

This fruit apparently left a sour taste in the mouths of the vast majority of students who attended the EPOCH housing forum last Wednesday. Of the 25 who attended, all but one was adamantly opposed to EPOCH becoming mandatory.

"Whether students believe the EPOCH program is an excellent or horrible program, one thing is sure, that they don't like the idea of forcing people to be a part of it," said former SGA president Pavel Payano.

As described in a University brochure, EPOCH is a year-long, structured, residentially-based program for first-year students, designed to smooth the transition to UMass. The brochure defines EPOCH as "the beginning of a distinctive period in the history of anything," — in this case, the beginning of college life for first-year students.

Currently, EPOCH is a voluntary program that students can elect to enroll in during their summer orientation session.

The EPOCH program was set in motion in the fall of 2004 with a pilot program in the Pierpont and Moore residence hall cluster in the Southwest living area. In 2005, Melville Hall was added to the program.

EPOCH, which currently hosts about 610 residents, is set to become mandatory in 2008 for all first-year students. This number will increase dramatically this fall with the addition of Van Meter, Butterfield and Thoreau to the list of EPOCH residence halls. Webster, Dickinson, Emerson, James, Kennedy, Cance, John Adams and Wheeler are all slated to become EPOCH residence halls by 2008 under the current plan.

Mass. spending on scholarships declining democracy. If only people with money could go to school, then none of us could have a chance. Public education costs more than [it] ought to but [is] still affordable for most," Story said.

FUNDING from page 1

Public universities within Massachusetts are not viewed as having the same importance as public education within other states because of the presence of so many private universities, said Story.

Steady increases in tuition and fees at public universities, as well as low funding, have made it increasingly more difficult for people to afford public education. There has been a 22 percent decline in state spending on grants and scholarships, creating a need for students to take loans.

Students in the state are graduating, on average, with $16,000 in loan debt, said Jee. This debt, combined with the cost of living in Massachusetts, is strongly contributing to the number of college graduates who are leaving the state.

Representatives from the UMass Boston Student Government said that UMass Boston has begun losing their lower income students because the cost of attendance has become too great.

Senator Robert A. O'Leary, Senate chair of the Higher Education Committee, discussed the issues surrounding greater funding in a meeting with Jee and SGA President Elvis Mendez.

"The key element is money. The state has failed to commit to higher education, and has been underinvesting for years," said O'Leary.

A Higher Education Bill is being presented to the House to create greater funding for public higher education, O'Leary said. Many people focus on obtaining funding for K-12 education, and less focus has been aimed at higher education.

"When I was a kid, college was a discretional choice, but now college is not. You have to go to college. We need people to go on to get as much higher education as possible. We need a talent pool," O'Leary said.

O'Leary suggested that there needs to be a fundamental baseline established for funding of public higher education, as there is in K-12 education. This is what the Higher Education Bill is supposed to accomplish.

Senator Susan C. Fargo discussed the importance of supporting and raising awareness about the benefits of public higher education.

"A number of the legislators went to private universities and so may not understand the importance of supporting public education. We must press upon the importance of supporting you so that we have a talented workforce," Fargo said.

In an additional effort to raise awareness among senators, a total of 3,000 postcards have been delivered to senators and representatives by the students of UMass Amherst. The postcards, which show support for the Fund UMass effort, contain information on public higher education budget cuts.

The organization of UMass Amherst students is part of the University's Tent State University event, a week-long outdoor university created by students, workers and community members to create a positive view of public higher education.

Two lacrosse players arrested in Duke rape case

BY TIM WHITMIRE
ASSOCIATED PRESS

DURHAM, N.C. — Two Duke University lacrosse players were arrested on rape charges Tuesday in a scandal that has rocked one of America's elite campuses and raised explosive questions of race, class and the privileged status of college athletes.

The two players — both graduates of Northern prep schools — were promptly booked and released on bail. District Attorney Mike Nifong said a third player could also be arrested but has yet to be firmly identified.

"It is important that we not only bring the assailants to justice, but also that we lift the cloud of suspicion from those team members who were not involved in the assault," Nifong said.

Lawyers for the two men bitterly assailed the district attorney for bringing the charges. Other attorneys for Duke's lacrosse players said the two were not even present at the time the rape is alleged to have occurred.

Reade Seligmann, 20, of Essex Fells, N.J., and Collin Finnerty, 19, of Garden City, N.Y., are accused of attacking a stripper at a team party at an off-campus house on the night of March 13. They were charged with first-degree rape, sexual offense and kidnapping and were released on $400,000 bail each.

The district attorney would not say what evidence led to the charges. But Seligmann's attorney, Kirk Osborn, said, "Apparently it was a photographic identification. And we all know how reliable that is."

Seligmann is "absolutely innocent," Osborn said. "He's doing great." Finnerty's attorney, Bill Cotter, said: "The next jury will hear the entire story, which includes our evidence, and we're confident that these young men will be found to be innocent."

The case has raised racial tensions and heightened the long-standing town-vs.-gown antagonism between Duke students and middle class, racially mixed Durham. The accuser is black, and all but one of the 47 lacrosse team members are white.

Well before the scandal, the nationally ranked team had a reputation for a swaggering sense of entitlement and boorish frat-boy behavior that included public intoxication and public urination. After the scandal broke, the university announced an investigation into whether it put up with such behavior for too long.

The case has led to the resignation of the coach and the cancellation of the rest of the season.

"Many lives have been touched by this case," said Duke President Richard Brodhead in a statement. "It has brought pain and suffering to all involved, and it deeply challenges our ability to balance judgment with compassion. As the legal process unfolds, we must hope that it brings a speedy resolution and that the truth of the events is fully clarified."

The university would not comment specifically on any disciplinary action taken against the two men but said it is Duke practice to suspend students charged with a felony.

Duke lacrosse player Colin Finnerty, right, sits next to his father Kevin Finnerty after being arrested early Tuesday.

Photographers Wanted
(413) 545-1762

UMass Amherst
What are your Summer plans?
Register Now!
Session I · June 5 - July 13
Session II · July 17 - August 23
UMassULearn.net
545-3430
Have some fun and get things done! Take a summer class at UMass and you'll get ahead. Want to work on your GPA? Stay on track to graduate? Summer at UMass means smaller classes, with the same great professors.
Online or on campus!

walk this way
Zanna has what you want. Converse, Steve Madden, Frye, Tribeca, Vans, Dansko, Chinese Laundry, Mia, Ugg, Unlisted, Teva
ZANNA
women's clothing, shoes and accessories
downtown Amherst

UMass Sports Night: Tips and Tales from Careers in Sports Media
Come Hear Guest Speakers:
■ Elliot Kalb - Sports Emmy winner and author of Who's Better, Who's Best in Baseball?
■ Dan Wetzel - Yahoo sports columnist and co-author of Glory Road.
■ Wendi Nix - Sports caster for WHDH 7 NEWS Boston
■ Matt Sacco 04' - Manager of Sunrise Sports and Entertainment
Win Prizes
Team up with a speaker and play the sports trivia contest!
Prizes include Red Sox hats, autographed books, gift certificates to favorite area restaurants.
Win Free Raffle of package of 4 seats to Red Sox Game!
FREE PIZZA!
WHEN: Thursday, April 20
TIME: 7-9 pm (Pizza and booksigning begins at 6 pm)
WHERE: The Blue Wall
Sponsored by the UMass Journalism Program's Lecture Series:
"Broadcast and the Media"

Happy April!
Delivery: 413.549.0077
Telephone: 413.256.8923
413.256.8924
Fax: 413.253.1173
Panda East
FINE CHINESE & JAPANESE CUISINE
Featuring:
* Vegetarian Options
* Lunch Specials
* Sushi Bar
* "Light and Healthy" entrees
~We bring China Town to you~
Monday - Thursday: 11:30am - 10:00pm
Friday & Saturday: 11:00am - 11:00pm
Sunday: 12:00pm - 10:00pm
Visit us at: www.pandaeastamherst.com
103 North Pleasant Street Amherst, MA

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

EDITORIAL OPINION

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 19, 2006

"I may not agree with what you say but I will defend to the death your right to say it." Voltaire

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Rebellion's not a thing of the past

Jackie Hai

Think it's impossible these days for regular people like you and me to make a difference in what the government decides to do? Think again.

This month, high school and college students united with trade unions in France to successfully overturn legislation that would have dealt a considerable blow to workers' rights. If you don't know the story (because, surprise, our media didn't deign to cover it beyond the cursory "young rioters in Paris clash with police" headliner), then here's the scoop:

Dominique de Villepin, the prime minister of France, drafted a bill that would allow employers to fire anyone under the age of 26 within the first two years of employment for any reason at all. Formerly, stronger laws that protected the job security of workers made it difficult to fire employees after the first six months. The new bill was lauded as labor reform, rolling back heavy-handed government regulations to pave the way for neo-liberal, free market economics, and quickly pushed through Parliament.

In truth, the law was not reform at all, despite its outward spin of boosting poor young people's chance of getting a job from employers who might otherwise not take the risk of hiring them. There was little proof that making it easier to fire youth would have had any positive effect on their rate of unemployment.

High school students were among the first to react negatively, and took action by effectively closing down the schools. When this wasn't enough to get the government's attention, they called for college students to join them, and before long, universities across the country shut down as well. The movement eventually spread to trade unions; if the rights of young workers were being eroded, then what was there to stop that same erosion for all workers?

At the height of the movement, over 3 million people walked out of classrooms and workplaces to march through the streets of Paris. For weeks, public transportation came to a screeching halt, delivery of oil and electrical services was disrupted and the majority of French public opinion supported their stand. France was paralyzed. And the government caved.

This is an issue that affects every one of us — after all, how comfortable are you with the idea of being saddled with a mountain of debts from student loans after graduating?

A humbled Villepin appeared in public to announce that the new law had been rescinded, expressing only his regret that people had "misunderstood it." Millions had spoken, and for once, they were heard.

What does this story have to do with us Americans? For one thing, it's a reminder that ordinary people can, in fact, have a hand in shaping their world and their futures. The millions of immigrants here in the United States get it, just look at what they've started in the past two months.

They saw a new law about to pass through Congress as unjust, and they mobilized to fight it. Theirs is a movement that has snowballed in a matter of weeks, finally raising a voice that can no longer be ignored by our country's officials.

What about us college students at UMass? What do we have to fight for? One answer to this question will be made very visible this week by Tent State UMass, and that's the issue of public funding for higher education. This is an issue that affects every one of us — after all, how comfortable are you with the idea of being saddled with a mountain of debts from student loans after graduating?

Soaring tuition costs, curriculum fees, textbook prices, interest rates and on and on; we allow ourselves to be walked all over because we haven't been stirred enough to congregate and fight back.

If you haven't been planning on it, consider stopping by the tents outside the Student Union this week and educating yourself on some of the problems we face today, not only in funding for universities, but also in the broader economic scope, and in issues of globalization, wars, sustainability, race, workers' rights and the history and future of social progress.

The problems we face can seem vast and insurmountable, but on the flipside, there will be workshops that demonstrate how action can be taken to chip away at them. Just like action taken by our immigrants, and action taken by the youth of France.

TSU promises to be a remarkable meeting of ideas and well worth checking out to see for yourself. So come on by; the weather's great for a little revolution.

Jackie Hai is a Collegian columnist.

Democracy is a dirty term

Mishy Leiblum

Tent State UMass — the carnival/conference/Mardi Gras/social forum that has taken over the Library Lawn this week — calls for a more democratic, accessible and diverse university run from the bottom up. But what the hell does that mean, anyhow?

Envision this: a university filled with students studying subjects and taking courses that genuinely interest them; a student body diverse in age, race, class, sexuality, gender, political perspectives and life experiences. Free courses, open classes, workshops and performances all day, every day.

If I had my way, the University of Massachusetts would look like Tent State year round: education would be free, the most surrounding the Ivory Tower would be drained, decisions about all levels of the University would be made in open and transparent general assemblies and there would be free food.

Tent State is only an example. It's a vision of what our University (and world) could look like; how do we set about mobilizing and accruing the power needed to shape the University in a lasting manner? How do we turn the organizing efforts of a relatively small portion of the campus population into the kind of large-scale collective action necessary to make this example a reality?

The answer lies, in part, in understanding what is being done to the future of public higher education, and considering the effects that this will have on our lives, our families and the society in which we live. The answer lies in identifying the ways in which our views of the very world we seek to change are shaped by a specific political agenda that values profit over all else. The answer lies in then moving beyond these limited and limiting frameworks.

For example, perhaps the most insidious characteristics of our current mentality concerning the University are our tendencies to atomize students as consumers who navigate their education in pursuit of their individual success and achievement. We may challenge individual components of the way this mentality is implemented, but until we begin to question the mentality itself, we will have little success in making lasting change.

The logical outcome of this transformation of students into consumers is a university that measures its success based solely on sales, on profits and losses.

As long as we operate within this market-based mentality, our University will likely proceed along its current trajectory. And if we assume that a market-based mentality is both totalizing and inevitable, of course there is little room to envision another sort of university.

The key, then, seems to lie in recognizing that this mentality is far from totalizing; Tent State itself is proof of that. By the very act of constructing a model for an alternative university structure, Tent State proclaims that other options exist, that another university is possible.

The University we currently have – a University that considers its students consumers whose power is limited to their ability to choose what sort of classes to take, what meal plans to register for, etc. — is not inevitable. It may be the easiest option in the short term, but in the long term the costs will be tremendous. The logical outcome of this transformation of students into consumers is a University that measures its success based solely on sales, on profits and losses.

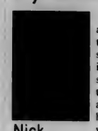
Perhaps most important, the idea that the purpose of public education is to provide individuals with the knowledge and critical thinking skills they need in order to become not consumers, but participants in a vibrant and active democracy, will come to seem as quaint as our current Attorney General seems to think the Geneva Conventions are.

How, then, do we turn the example set by Tent State into a lasting movement to bring increased democracy to our campus? We begin by understanding that democracy is not simply a set of questions about resource allocation; politics is more than who gets what, and how much.

We must remember that the purpose of public higher education should be to produce astute and educated individuals, rather than degree-wielding workers.

If we learn anything from Tent State at all, it should be that if the administration won't create this sort of a university for us, then we can, and must, do it ourselves.

Rather than challenge the premise that higher education today is the ticket to a high-paying job in a tight labor market, we gamble on which major is most likely to launch us into a career of success. Rather than confront the notion of education as a commodity, we concede that tuition and fee increases are acceptable as long as they remain in line with the rate of inflation.



Yet, what leads us to this assumption of inevitability and preponderance? After all, isn't Tent State proof that such a mentality isn't totalizing? Perhaps, then, there is still room for democracy within a constricting campus. But just what sort of democracy?

In this day and age, democracy is often a dirty term. Yet the sort of democracy I'm after looks like the Library Lawn looks this week. Ask yourself: what sort of a university would you like to attend if given the choice? Then look around and consider that — if we can develop the collective power — we can shape our University into whatever vision you may have.

These demands are interlaced: you cannot have a more diverse campus without increasing UMass's accessibility. We will never have a more accessible university until our campus governance structure shifts from top-down to the bottom-up. Contrary to de Tocqueville's claim that democracy is underpinned by homogeneity, I say that we can't bring about a more democratic university until and unless we strengthen the diversity and plurality of our campus.

Mishy Leiblum is a Collegian columnist.

FOX's best show symbolizes America

Nick Belanger

In today's day and age, it's rare that a television show ventures into any sort of social commentary. Reality TV and game shows have taken over, with a handful of crime dramas sprinkled in: CSI Miami, CSI New York and CSI Las Vegas. What's next, CSI Buffalo?

In any case, most of what's on the old boob tube is nothing short of garbage. Meanwhile, FOX, the most evil network in America, continues to pump out the best show on television: "Family Guy."

I know what you're thinking; "Family Guy" is nothing but one short, interchangeable joke after another for a half-hour. While I'll admit, on the surface, "Family Guy" is indeed catered to the ADD generation, I wish to share with you the true and deeper meaning of this show.

While I'll admit, at the surface, "Family Guy" is indeed catered to the ADD generation, I wish to share with you the true and deeper meaning of this show.

Each episode of "Family Guy" is a half-hour of subtle, ingenious social commentary. It's easy to recognize "Family Guy" as a spoof on mass media. Most, if not all the jokes are satirical references to generations of pop culture. While the writing may be commentary on America's media obsession, the characters themselves are symbolic of America itself.

I came to this conclusion because years of high school English classes ruined television for me. Books were ruined years ago when I stopped being able to read for plot, and I was forced to analyze what the car in "The Great Gatsby" represented.

I said it represented a means of transportation ... apparently I was wrong, and I was given detention for being a smart a In retrospect, I should have said the American dream. Since then I've avoided reading, but while rotting away on the couch one Sunday night, the old symbolism bug bit me again, but this time while watching Peter Griffin.

The more I watched "Family Guy," the more I realized that the main character in the show, Peter, was nothing more than a big, fat slice of symbolism. Peter not only is your stereotypical American, but his personality and appearance are a reflection on America. He's fat, lazy, arrogant and the biggest overachiever on the planet. His wife is far too attractive for him, and despite his blatant ignorance, he somehow manages to get by just fine. Dare I say, Peter Griffin represents the American dream (try to pass that off in your comp lit class).

If Peter is America, then the other characters on the show all reflect other aspects of this country. Stewie, the youngest Griffin, is hell-bent on global domination; I argue that he symbolizes American politics and foreign policy.

Chris, the oldest of the Griffin children, is a stereotypical young teenager. He's awkward, fat and a victim of poor public education. Television is rotting his brain; meanwhile, fast food is wreaking havoc on his already less than desirable body. He prefers video games to playing actual sports, and he probably should be drugged up with Ritalin.

Meg plays into all the superficial notions that we have in society. Her life, for the most part, revolves around her looks. She's unhappy because she's not beautiful. As a character, Meg has fallen victim to the media's portrayal of what it is to be beautiful, and she is miserable because of it. Like many young girls, acceptance and popularity run Meg's life, and this makes her the most pathetic of all the characters.

Lois Griffin represents sexuality and morality in the modern American woman. On the surface she's innocent, sweet and seems like your typical housewife. However, like many Americans, she possesses a large amount of repressed sexual energy. She cares tremendously about her family, yet her life doesn't just revolve around them. She gets bored with the daily routine and she's desperate for new experiences.

Glen Quagmire, the Griffin's next door neighbor, is known as the horny, creepy guy. Off the top of my head, I think Quagmire is symbolic of the 20something-year-old single male population in America; more specifically, the college-aged guys who are probably reading this right now. He's an icon for a generation, giggity giggity.

Next time you're watching "Family Guy," try to look past the jokes, and start looking deeper at the characters. Whether or not you like to admit it, "Family Guy" is making fun of America and Americans, but I for one enjoy laughing at myself. Well done, "Family Guy," well done.

Nick Belanger is a Collegian staff member.

Thankful for this University

Bonnie Solomon

Going away this long weekend taught me something important that I had not realized fully. I really do like the University of Massachusetts. Yes, there are a few problems with this school, like long lines, red tape and insufficient funding. I realized that every school has similar issues. This weekend, I went to the University of Vermont to visit one of my closest friends, and was astounded by how UVM and UMass may be similar, but are so different.

Yes, there are problems with the University, but there are so many wonderful things here that we tend to overlook.

We complain about the continuous construction at UMass, but most schools are also undergoing construction. The construction is only taking place to improve our campus; look at the wonderful new Learning Commons.

We also complain about rising tuition and lack of state funding, but many other state universities are having problems with that too, as I learned from speaking to UVM students. Hopefully, with Tent State UMass, we will be able to remedy these rising costs.

I also realized how beautiful our campus is. We have an abundance of nature: trees, grass and the view of distant mountains. UMass has beautiful sprawls of grass everywhere, especially near Upper Central and the Student Union. While I was at UVM, I noticed that most of the campus was paved. When I visited schools in the city, those were also lacking in different forms of greenery.

We have Amherst center and Northampton, both great for a day of shopping and eating. The fact that this area is so liberal and open to different ways of life and different cultures is something we need to learn to appreciate more.

We also have the wonderful Five College system. What other schools have the ability to take classes at four other colleges besides their own?

In terms of dorms, there are many complaints, but really, the rooms are no smaller here than they are at many other schools. There is something for everyone. If you want a city or party environment, then you have Southwest. If you would like to be really close to campus, then there is Northeast. Students who like a lot of grass and who are really laid back tend to choose Central. Sylvan is great for you if you want suite-style living. And Orchard Hill is a great environment if you need quiet to study and open space. Many universities only have one type of living area, not enough to suit every style of living.

The fact that this area is so liberal and open to different ways of life and different cultures is something we need to learn to appreciate more.

This school is also an excellent research institution, with hundreds of skilled and knowledgeable professors. I really do enjoy all my classes. I go to them not because I have to, but because I want to. My professors are all so knowledgeable in their subject fields and are experienced lecturers. I am here to get an education, and I realized that I'm getting an excellent one.

While at UVM, I was talking to my friends over brunch about the racial diversity at their school versus UMass. UVM, and other schools that I have visited, are mostly white and middle-class. I realized that UMass seems like these other schools when it comes to racial diversity, but in actuality, this campus is so much more diverse culturally and ethnically.

Only when I left to go to another school did I realize that I need to appreciate my own school more. We all need a 300-level course on appreciation. I love how people lay out in the sun on the library lawn. I love how people on this campus are so into activism. I love that there are so many different cultures and with that, so many cultural events. I love my dorm area and how I can always find something that I like at Franklin or Worcester. I love the big grassy expanse in front of my dorm, and I love my friends.

As you probably noticed, I only point out the positive aspects of each living area, or each aspect of campus, because appreciation is what we really need. Experiencing another university firsthand was just what I needed to open up my eyes to the positive aspects of this school.

I continually go over in my mind what it would have been like if I did not go to school here, and what my life would have been like somewhere else. I realize that I shouldn't be doing that, because if I'm happy here, that is all that matters.

I wouldn't have all the benefits of being at such a large and diverse institution with so many different fields of study. I wouldn't have met the people I did, might not have found student organizations just for me, nor found classes that suit my interests. So thank you, UMass, for making me appreciate where I am.

Bonnie Solomon is a Collegian columnist.

Medicine too expensive

Chris Reardon

Imagine walking into a cafeteria. You present a card to a person at the door, are directed to a room and instructed to wait for half an hour. Finally someone comes out and leads you to another room, gives you a piece of paper and then rushes on to the next client. You go down to another part of the building, exchange the piece of paper for a sandwich, and leave the cafeteria. For this service, the bill runs to $100, but your employer pays for $70 of that amount.

Andrew Freeman

Now let's imagine another scenario. You're hungry, but your employer doesn't help pay the costs of your food and you lack enough money to buy it outright. Knowing this, you put off eating as long as you can. Ultimately, however, you are malnourished and starving, and must be rushed to the emergency section of the cafeteria. There you wait with all the other people who have been putting off eating, until finally receiving attention an hour later. You are given a large amount of food, and billed for $1,000, sending you into the cafeteria's debt.

If such a system were employed to distribute food in this country, there would be widespread bankruptcy and starvation on the part of those without food insurance. Outraged citizens would demand change, and the government would be forced to step in and eliminate the wasteful, harmful system. Thankfully, food is not distributed in this fashion. Unfortunately, this is how our healthcare network operates.

Healthcare and food are analogous in one important way. Without food we die, and without healthcare we live far shorter lives, as one untreated disease can prove fatal. However, we tolerate enormous inconveniences, inefficiencies and inequalities in our provision of healthcare, none of which would be acceptable in the context of food.

The way our society disperses food encourages low prices. Agriculture is heavily subsidized by the government, to the tune of over $143 billion from 1995 to 2004, according to the Environmental Working Group. Moreover, the nature of government aid encourages overproduction: subsidies impel farmers to produce as much as they can, and the government insulates them against the lower prices they receive. As a result of these factors, food in this country is cheap and plentiful.

High priced drugs cause hospitals and insurers to charge more to recoup their costs, impacting consumers and companies that provide health care.

Healthcare differs in the nature of competition. The system works in the following manner: every doctor tries to raise prices and pass costs on to its clients. This starts with the major pharmaceutical companies, which create and patent drugs, then charge large amounts for them.

These astronomical costs are not fully absorbed by the consumers, with health insurers and government programs like Medicare and Medicaid shouldering much of the burden. Doctors and hospitals also try to pass many of their high costs on to insurers and government programs. Insurers pass their costs on to the companies and individuals that hold their policies, in the form of higher premiums. Consumers, particularly those without health insurance, are left holding the bag for the system's costs.

The result of all this inefficiency is massive inflation in healthcare spending. Insurance premiums have risen over 57 percent since 2001, according to an Oct. 2005 USA Today article. These towering costs have severe consequences: a 2005 Harvard University study found that half of all filings for bankruptcy stemmed in part from medical bills.

One of the chief sources of this inflation is the pharmaceutical industry, which overcharges on a massive scale. Pfizer, the largest drug maker in the world, had enormous profits last year, totaling $8.1 billion on revenue of $51.3 billion, according to the company's annual report.

Very few companies post profits that amount to nearly 16 percent of total sales. Drug companies like Pfizer claim they need to charge massive amounts for their drugs because they need funds to further research into new drugs. But much of those funds go to profits, administrative expenses and marketing — Pfizer spent $668 million in 2004 on advertising to consumers — with only $7.4 billion in 2005 going to research. High priced drugs cause hospitals and insurers to charge more to recoup their costs, impacting consumers and companies that provide health care.

This is just the most obvious form of waste in the healthcare system. A 2005 Boston University study estimated that 5ft percent of the $1.9 trillion spent on healthcare that year would be wasted on administrative expenses and corporate profits, among other expenses.

We wouldn't tolerate such corruption if it made food so expensive — why do we allow it for healthcare? We need to redesign our economy to make healthcare as plentiful, affordable and accessible as the food we eat, because both are essential to a healthy life.

Andrew Freeman is a Collegian columnist.

WE WANT TO KNOW WHAT YOU THINK!

Write a letter to the editor!

Send your letter as an attachment to:

editorial@dailycollegian.com

Please do not exceed 550 words.

Confronting ethnocentrism and bigotry

Chris Reardon

OK, I have something to confess here. Until very recently, I was one of those white people. You know the kind. The ones that think race relations are all hunky-dory because we live in a progressive society and because the civil rights movement started 40 years ago. I was too young to know anything about the Rodney King incident and the L.A. riots, and I didn't know enough about economics to understand how and why Hurricane Katrina was a disaster of racist policy. I knew that there was a problem, but I had been too brainwashed by white-controlled media and by disgustingly racist history lessons to realize just how deep the issue went.

For a number of reasons (not the least of which being the fact that I finally cracked open my Sociology 106: Race, Class and Gender textbook), I've gone through a semi-enlightenment, and I am not happy. They say that those who do not learn their history are doomed to repeat it. I'd like to annotate that proverb a little by adding that those who muddle the truth of their history are doomed to continue those practices that they wish to forget.

I'd like to start with slavery. As explained by Robert B. Moore in his article "Racist Stereotyping in the English Language," the fact that we still think of the African people who were kidnapped and exploited for centuries as slaves who had masters is clear evidence of white ethnocentrism in the history lessons still taught to our children today. "The term slave connotes a less than human quality and turns the captive person into a thing," Moore says.

The psychological impact of learning about how slaves were beaten and raped is lessened because we still think of slaves as property, not people.

That we still refer to black people who were forced to work for no pay as slaves is simply a means of minimizing the damage done by aristocrats at the time. The psychological impact of learning about how slaves were beaten and raped is lessened because we still think of slaves as property, not people.

I doubt you'll see a change any time soon, however, because our history is written by the descendents of the people who exploited Africans and by the people who are currently exploiting millions of overseas laborers. Sweatshops and child labor have a minimal impact on the lives of U.S. citizens — except the fact that the products that come from overseas are substantially less expensive than U.S.-made merchandise — simply because we don't have to see it.

Near-slave labor policies of companies like Coca Cola and Nike get little attention in the media and are somewhat rare within this country's borders. So ignorant white middle-classers, like myself, don't ever have to think about the exploitation of these people.

What if you or I had been born in a Third World country and forced to work 12 hours of back-breaking labor for 50 cents a day? (I should mention here that even the term Third World has racist connotations because the reason these countries are stricken with poverty is that the First World countries in the west exploited all of their resources).

The next issue to be examined is that of Native Americans. Frankly, I'm disgusted by the fact that we have a federal holiday that celebrates a man who discovered a nation simply by paving the way for entire societies of people to be destroyed. Everyone knows that Columbus didn't discover anything. Why do we still celebrate his accomplishments, which amounted only to millions of lost lives and homes? Do kids in Germany have Hitler Day off from school? I don't think so.

Again, this is a problem with the way our history is written, and here it's an even more blatant ignorance of the truth. As Moore explains, settlers who ravaged Native American lands are glorified, while those Native Americans who had the means to defend themselves are vilified.

"Euro-Americans are not described in history books as invading Native American lands," he says, "but rather as defending their homes against 'Indian' attacks. Since European communities were constantly encroaching on land already occupied, then a more honest interpretation would state that it was the Native Americans who were 'warding off,' 'guarding' and 'defending' their homelands."

These are just a sore few of the examples of racism present in modern day culture. I gladly offer up an apology on behalf of my race, though I suspect that my remorse will do little to change what has happened. While I'm not exactly sure how to actually fix the problem, I do know that the solution begins with education and ends with the truth. What happens in between will involve a veritable revolution in ethnocentric policies.

Chris Reardon is a Collegian columnist.

Think before passing legislation

Adam DeSimone

I'm pro-life. There, I said it, but keep reading; there's more to this article than senseless comparisons to the Holocaust, mud throwing or any other unproductive avenue of engaging this issue. Abortion is not a lighthearted procedure that we should approach from a partisan perspective.

Nevertheless, on this campus, and in the country as a whole, we attack this issue with personal vengeance and a clouded heart. Doing this only hinders the quality of discussion and proves to be utterly fruitless in settling this social dilemma. As a result of these attitudes we have seen legislation being passed that has not been thought through to its logical conclusion and will soon lead to an obstruction of social justice. The issue of abortion must be addressed in a well-rounded fashion that will breed solutions to serious problems and not just create obstacles to overcome.

Thus, the question arises, as a nation, how should we approach this issue? Recently, South Dakota addressed the conundrum by outlawing most forms of abortion by passing the Women's Health and Human Life Protection Act. The elected state government held a vote, which passed easily, and was then signed into law by the governor. The fact that this happened shouldn't be too surprising since the government acted as a democratic one is supposed to. The constituents wanted something done and it was. Furthermore, if the people of South Dakota are unhappy with their representatives' actions, they can vote them out of office or launch an initiative to have the law changed.

After this law was passed the state should have followed through by writing supplemental legislation that expanded the capacity of the state's adoption agencies, increased their discretionary budget and improved their overall quality and efficiency. After all, Republicans who passed the new restrictions offer adoption as an alternative to abortion.

However, there are several issues that this legislation failed to take into account that make the law unusually egregious even if you identify as being moderately pro-life. For example, after this law was passed, the state should have followed through by writing supplemental legislation that expanded the capacity of the state's adoption agencies, increased their discretionary budget and improved their overall quality and efficiency. After all, Republicans who passed the new restrictions offer adoption as an alternative to abortion.

Accordingly, if they seriously expect pregnant women to be OK with giving their child to the state, then they must be assured that they have not sentenced their child to a life of squalor and neglect. Since South Dakota reported 800 abortions annually, the state should experience an influx of newly born children being sent to these facilities. However, since no additional funding has been sent to these clinics, the quality of their existence will be in question.

Another area that the South Dakota law failed to address is in the area of sex education. Several studies have shown that the more students are educated about safe sex, the less likely they will be to contract STDs and to become pregnant. Thus, investing in education would have serious long-term benefits. However, in South Dakota, sex education is encompassed into their Character Education program.

The purpose of this curriculum is to teach children six character building traits of "trustworthiness, respect, responsibility, fairness, caring and citizenship," according to charactercounts.org. Somewhere amongst this program's agenda, an abstinence crash course is included. While the morals of the Character Education program are undoubtedly worthwhile, they only teach abstinence and neglect. South Dakota's government should expand their sex education curriculum to provide a more well-rounded and realistic education.

Failing to change the system as it exists ensures that the 800 people who look to get abortions every year will continue to do so. If South Dakota is sincere in its commitment to end unwanted pregnancies, then change in their education system cannot be ignored.

Whether or not these changes will occur is uncertain. Currently, South Dakota is prepping for a lawsuit by Planned Parenthood, whose aim is to strike down the state law as being unconstitutional as provided by Roe v. Wade. This challenge could result in several uncomfortable consequences.

In the event that the South Dakota law is eventually brought to the Supreme Court, there is a serious possibility that the new conservative members of the judiciary could find a legal premise to declare abortion as not being constitutionally protected. If this were to happen, the political climate of this country would be thrown into havoc. Every state would have to scramble to draft new laws either allowing or prohibiting abortions while trudging through the sensitive complexity of the issue. This would undeniably result in more limited objective style legislation.

As a result, in order to maintain some sort of sanity in this issue, it may be in everyone's best interest to approach abortion as a states' rights issue. Rather than letting the cards fall where they may after a judicial battle, the pro-choice groups of South Dakota would probably best serve themselves and the nation by pushing for change through the legislative branch.

Of course, this would be a longer process, but working via this venue would not result in a deathblow for either side. Furthermore, by pushing for legislation that has been properly thought through, the laws would be slightly more tolerable for both sides of the issue.

Regardless of these possibilities, South Dakota should not merely concern itself with the simple outlaw of abortion. Instead, the state needs to pass supplemental laws if they expect the pro-life position to be accepted either in their state, or by the nation as a whole.

Adam DeSimone is a Collegian columnist.

White House agenda

Luke Bloomfield

Secretary of Defense Donald Rumsfeld dismissed speculation of a military strike in Iran where its uranium enrichment program has recently made significant steps towards having nuclear power. He was quoted in the online journal Voice of America as saying, "It is simply not useful to get into fantasy land," which was possibly in reference to Seymour Hirsch's New Yorker article, in which Hirsch suggested the U.S. administration was preparing for an air strike in Iran.

Only days after Hirsch's article was published, Iranian President Mahmud Ahmadinejad announced that Iran had "joined the nuclear countries of the world" by successfully enriching a small amount of uranium, according to the New York Times. In light of this announcement, the Bush administration has maintained that it will continue to pursue all diplomatic channels with Iran in an attempt to discourage further uranium enrichment.

However, a statement by the National Security Council in a New York Times article suggested that the White House would take strong steps in dealing with "the significant threat posed by the regime's efforts to acquire nuclear weapons."

Where have we recently heard that word, regime, before? Perhaps the Iranian government is a regime, in a sense, similar to that of Saddam Hussein. Will that necessitate a similar course of action by the Bush administration in regard to Iran? We know that when that word is bandied around the White House it takes on whole new depths of implication.

However, despite the announcement made by Iran, nuclear analysts have said the country was still years away from producing nuclear weapons. Assuming the U.N. Security Council does its job — and, from what has been reported recently, it is — Iran will be restricted to peaceful nuclear proliferation, and the threat of a nuclear bomb landing in the White House seems perversely out of place.

One must therefore read between the lines and wonder what the Bush administration's agenda actually is. It has already shown itself willing to assist another country in imposing a regime change. Who is to say that is not the White House's real aim? And to what end in Iran? Bear in mind that Iran controls immense quantities of oil that could easily by redirected if its government were toppled.

Bear in mind that Iran controls immense quantities of oil that could easily by redirected if its government were toppled.

In his New Yorker article, Seymour Hirsch quoted a former defense official as saying "a sustained bombing campaign in Iran will humiliate the religious leadership and lead the public to rise up and overthrow the government." And then what? U.S. soldiers will entrench themselves there for the next decade? The money it would take to support yet another Middle East war would effectively secure the U.S. economy a place in the Third World, despite the oil it may or may not gain.

I dread that history, recent or otherwise, repeats itself. Speculation of a preemptive military strike draws some ominous conclusions. Suppose the U.S. is led to genuinely believe that Iran has nuclear weapons and poses an immediate threat to national security. The last country to preemptively attack another country from fear of atomic weapons was Japan when it struck the U.S. Navy at Pearl Harbor. I ask what happened to Japan.

Alternative speculation is no more heartening. Iran's main centrifuge plant, Natanz, is buried 75 feet below ground. This is one of 400 known plants that would need to be targeted in order to complete a successful air strike. According to military officials, the United States would have to use nukes for the underground labs to be effectively destroyed.

In an interview on NPR, Hirsch pointed out that no one has really considered the number of civilians casualties if the White House decided to take "strong steps" against Iran. In Iraq, thousands of civilians are dead as a result of the regime change the Bush administration facilitated and from ground warfare over the course of several years. Imagine how many Iranians would die, just in the first hour, from a nuclear attack.

At this late point in the current administration's reign, there can be little doubt of its agenda. The bottom line is Iran has vast oil resources, if a "change of regime" occurred in Iran, one can be sure that the White House will do so in a way such that it is in its own interest. Would its approval rating go up if gas prices went down? What about at the expense of thousands of Iranian lives and, I need not stress, the overall gravity of the use of a nuclear weapon, and the fallout America would inevitably suffer with the international community?

Luke Bloomfield is a Collegian columnist.

Ed/Op Poll

Do you think sleeping in a tent will bring about change?

a.) Absolutely.
b.) Maybe, if enough people are involved.
c.) Depends on how much media coverage there is.
d.) Not at all. It's a stupid idea.

Go to dailycollegian.com to vote.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

ARTS & LIVING

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 19, 2006

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Roni Benise finds fame in Spain

By Justino Aguila
The Orange County Register

As a teen living on a small farm in the Midwest, Roni Benise fantasized about being a rock star.

"When you're growing up in the cornfields of Nebraska, you're always dreaming of exotic places," Benise said recently. "I knew the guitar was my passport. I just had to practice."

He moved to Hollywood in his 20s and played the electric guitar in countless bands, but after toiling in rock's trenches and cleaning pools on the side, he realized his dream might never materialize.

The low point came in the late 1990s. His music career was stalled, he was coming out of a failed relationship and no one seemed to care about him or his music.

"I was just frustrated with the music scene," he said. "Then one day I heard the Spanish guitar, and something clicked."

The life-changing moment happened while Benise was driving to the grocery store. He was flipping through radio stations and heard the sound that would become his trademark.

"I think there are times in everyone's life when everything changes," he said. "Hearing the Spanish guitar in the car was that moment for me because the sound takes you away to an exotic place, and it was a perfect fit, especially when I was in this crossroads of my life."

Benise retired his electric guitar and focused exclusively on his new instrument. By meshing his rock background and the Spanish guitar, a combination he calls "rockmenco," he stood out. Clubs liked the combination, and soon he and his band were getting noticed.

"Before I knew it, people would line up on the street for our performances," Benise said. "It's been seven years since I started with the Spanish guitar. We started playing for tourists, then we began renting out theaters and building on that momentum."

Now, the entertainer is embarking on his first national tour featuring his rock-flamenco style in "Benise: Nights of Fire!"

"We're going to take audiences on a journey around the world," Benise said. "There are dramatic moments with flamenco dancers and songs that are really a soundtrack to an adventure."

Benise found his niche, but that didn't mean he abandoned his rock roots completely. Although he exclusively entertains with the Spanish guitar, his band adds the element of rock in a show that's filled with dancers in colorful flamenco garments.

Between performances (he gives more than 200 annually), the guitarist traveled to places such as Spain, Cuba and Brazil to learn different styles of music.

"One of the best things about my shows is that they're for the entire family," Benise said. "My show is like a roller-coaster ride with five-minute songs that move you through a movie. There are costumes, street scenes and ballads."

The Las Vegas-style show, which will also likely go to Europe, requires four buses, two trucks and a cast of 26. A televised version, which was taped in Santa Barbara last year, airs on several PBS stations across the country.

Some flamenco purists have criticized Benise for combining it with rock. But he didn't set out to be a traditionalist, he said. He set out to do something different, entertaining and of his own creation.

"I didn't want to compromise the music. So many people have their vision, but I was able to find those who supported what I wanted to do."

The big break came about a year ago, when Benise met entertainment-manager brothers Scott and Doc McGhee.

Doc McGhee manages many musicians, such as Kiss, and has worked with James Brown, Diana Ross and Motley Crue.

"I think Ron[i] is going to captivate audiences around the world," said McGhee, who has invested some of his own money in the $2 million production. "He's able to connect with people, and I've seen him do that many times."

Local flamenco guitarist Emilio Castillobas worked many of the same venues as Benise.

"I think Roni Benise is a fantastic entertainer," Castillo said. "... I have a lot of respect for him."

Castillo, whose shows are strictly based on traditional flamenco, is familiar with Benise's compositions, which incorporate influences beyond Spanish music.

"I've seen him grow," Castillo said. "He's a fantastic showman who uses his guitar to put his show together."

These days, Benise can't wait to get on the road. After about 15 years of paying dues, he's finally getting the chance to bring his music to people on a much bigger scale.

"If you don't have a purpose in life, why live?" Benise said. "It's really about chasing a dream, and that's what this show is about."

Midwest native and guitarist Roni Benise finds a more fitting audience for his flamenco music in Spain.

LL sounds aged on 'Todd'

By Amanda Andrade & Kimberly Choe
Michigan Daily (U. Michigan)

ANN ARBOR, Mich. — "My 12th album launch/ Now everything is carte blanche," bellows LL Cool J on the opening track of "Todd Smith," featuring Juelz "Back I like Cooked Crack" Santana. Carte blanche for suck-cess? Not quite, but one would expect more from the self-proclaimed "Greatest Of All Time."

Even an uninitiated hip-hop listener should be able to discern the now-tired beats and contrived rhymes on LL's latest effort. His 12th, as he constantly reminds us, features no less than 12 guest stars.

LL displays an extraordinary reliance on his presumed inferiors here, calling on artists from Ne-Yo to Mary J. Blige to sing his hooks. Giving him the benefit of the doubt, though, we might suppose that LL was simply calling in reinforcements to make time for his side gig as a C-list action star and the occasional moonlighting stint as Queen Latifah's supporting man.

Still, it's impressive that LL has made it to a dozen albums, with the shelf life of an average rap career being relatively short and listeners notoriously fickle.

Already a radio hit, "Control Myself" is the strongest single track on the release. Boasting deft Jermaine Dupri production and coquettish vocals from Jennifer Lopez, the track allows LL to do what he does best at this age: Coast. He spits simple flows over a bullet-proof sample with the comforting back-up of J.D. and the too-long-M.I.A. J-Lo; it might be his album, but LL knows when to drop the mic and let the song become bigger than him.

LL needed a track with a guaranteed audience to get him back on the charts, and "Control Myself" suitably serves its purpose.

Also notable is the love-it-or-loathe-it "What You Want," mixed in between the CD's R&B slow jams and schizophrenic guest verses. The rap cleverly cops the melody from Gwen Stefani's "Hollaback Girl" and runs it over blaxploitation bass and strings. With his guttural vocals, LL tries to duplicate the toughness reestablished with his original comeback, "Mama Said Knock You Out." But it's 2006, and he's an established family man and elder statesman of rap. Punchlines from that demographic generally don't work as well.

"Preserve the Sexy" features Roc-a-Fella nymphet Teirra Mari strutting in and out of the call-and-response vocals. "Sexy" rides a dependable horn-based beat, but it's difficult to tell: Is LL instructing Teirra to "preserve the sexy," or is she just advocating a general preservation of an ill-conceived Diddy catchphase? Confusing, to say the least.

Make no mistake, the album contains several decent songs — particularly among the middle tracks. They just don't tie together well. LL bounces from a sentimental R&B exposition of matrimony, rapping, "You walking down the aisle/ My heart skips a beat/ Emotions run wild," and back to dishing out old jabs at young rappers he believes are jacking his style. Not that he'd call out anyone specifically; he's far too big a man for that.

On "Todd Smith," LL is doin' it, doin' it and doin' it pretty well for the most part. For a once-ground-breaking artist, you would wish he'd be doin' it a little better.

LL Cool J's new musical attempt, though containing a few decent songs, doesn't flow together well.

Andre Braugher sees a big score in 'Thief's' complex crook

By Marisa Guthrie
New York Daily News

Andre Braugher is a bit of a masochist.

Of course, he's an actor, and actors (the real kind, not spotlight-grabbing, red-carpet junkies) have a refined sense of self-flagellation due to the precarious nature of their business.

But Braugher really feels his character's pain. In "Thief," Tuesdays at 10 p.m. EDT on FX, he plays Nick Atwater, a professional burglar whose dark life gets even darker when his wife Wanda (Dina Meyer) is killed in a car accident and he's left to raise her 14-year-old daughter. Not since his defining role as the intense, taciturn Det. Frank Pembleton in "Homicide" has he found a character with more melancholy to inhabit.

"I have a wife I'm mourning for," says Braugher.

That grief stretches back to the summer of 2004, when the pilot for "Thief" was shot. The cast and crew filmed the remaining five hours late last year in Shreveport, La.

"I've carried Dina Meyer with me for almost two years now. I have more than a trillion fake memories with Dina Meyer. Now, of course, she's moved on. She's living her life in Los Angeles and I have her in my dreams. But that's how I do it. Because that's how I have to do it. Nick cares deeply for her."

And so Andre must care deeply for her.

"That's my method."

Like many Mafia dramas, "Thief" mines the pathos and ambivalence of men who attempt to divide their time and their psyches between a life of crime and ... a life — family, friends, children. On paper, Braugher's Atwater is a vintage car dealer in New Orleans. But his worlds collide when his wife is killed and he becomes the primary caretaker for his stepdaughter, Tammi (Mae Whitman). But witnessing your stepdad shoot an associate in the backyard on the same night your mother is killed can undermine even the healthiest father-daughter relationship.

"Thief," says executive producer Norman Morrill, "is a story about what men choose to be responsible for. And what informs the story is that these guys are criminals. But [they] have lives like yours, homes like yours, kids that need to go to school."

Nick's associates include Yancey Arias, Clifton Collins Jr. (who starred opposite Philip Seymour Hoffman in "Capote") and Malik Yoba, an indomitable, wisecracking family man who bristles under Nick's authority. The crew has embarked on their biggest ripoff to date — a $40 million heist from a plane. But internal strife, the feds, the Chinese Mafia (in the form of Will Yun Lee) and extortion attempts by a crooked cop (Michael Rooker) have collided to make this the most dangerous of jobs.

All the while, Nick attempts to be a real father to a daughter who isn't his, but to whom he can't help cling, despite her disdain for him.

"Families, it seems to me, are joined together by a spirit that transcends niceness. We're joined together by our desire to be together. She's a real teen," he says. "If you've been around teenagers, you know what I mean. Everybody in the world has these teens and it ain't that nice. But we're dealing with real people who have real desires and real longings. These are two unlikely people who are brought together. We look up and we say to ourselves, 'This is best that we can do.'"

Braugher and his wife, actress Ami Brabson, are just embarking on their own adventures in teenage angst. They're raising their family — three boys, ages 3, 8 and 13 — far away from the Hollywood hustle in South Orange, N.J. So far, his teenager has avoided many of the pitfalls that Braugher didn't when he was young.

"I remember what it was like [to be a teenager]," he says. "It's a hell of a time, without a doubt. But you know, he's a better kid than I was, so I have to celebrate that."

Andre Braugher fits perfectly with his new television role as a professional burglar on FX's "Thief."

Sophomore keeps things balanced

By Andrew Ryan
Associated Press

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. (AP) — Kaavya Viswanathan stumbled into her college bookstore one lazy Saturday and came face-to-face with a startling sight: a book-sized picture of herself.

The 19-year-old Harvard University sophomore's debut novel wasn't supposed to come out for another three weeks, but there sat dozens of her published work, each slapped with a head shot that took up the entire back cover.

"I started to hyperventilate, and I burst into tears," says the petite teenager, the youngest author signed in decades by Little, Brown and Co.

A friend pointed at Viswanathan and screamed: "She's the one who wrote that book!"

With her face as bright as her book's fuchsia-colored binding, Viswanathan scribbled a few autographs, not knowing what to write.

Such is the life of an author who signed a hefty two-book deal when she was 17, and has already sold the movie rights of her first novel to DreamWorks.

The 320-page book is titled "How Opal Mehta Got Kissed, Got Wild, and Got a Life." It tells the story of Opal, a hard-driving young woman who earns all A's in high school but gets rejected from Harvard because she forgot to have a social life. Opal's father concocts a plan code-named HOWGAL (How Opal Will Get A Life) to get her past the admissions office.

The heroine bears similarities to Viswanathan: Indian heritage, New Jersey upbringing, Harvard and both her father and Opal's father drive Range Rovers. There's also a teenage boy in the book who has a striking resemblance to a classmate for whom the author had an unrequited crush.

But those are just superficial details, the author says, Opal is pure fiction.

A month after the bookstore episode, Viswanathan schedules media interviews between exams. ("I'm stuck reading Shelley for this stupid midterm, which is killing me," she says.)

Viswanathan tucks a stray lock of her inky-black hair behind an ear and flashes a smile that shows off her high cheek bones, as she sits in a cafe near school sipping cocoa. She seems like any other 19-year-old at Harvard: She's smart, worldly and confident, but still has teenage idiosyncrasies, occasionally biting her lower lip, fidgeting in her chair and talking too fast when she's excited.

"Well, yeah, I mean I always wanted to be a writer eventually, but I wasn't ever really thinking like in terms of this young," Viswanathan says without a breath. "I mean I always fantasized about when I'm 30, I'll go become a British citizen and win the Man Booker award. That's still my big goal."

No matter how old, Viswanathan's success is no mistake, says Amitav Ghosh, a visiting professor who teaches creative writing at Harvard and didn't see his first book in print until he was 30.

"She has astonishing poise," says Ghosh. "At Harvard, there are many, many very fine writers. Her writing has a kind of a pitch-perfect novelist's diction. At her age, that is very unusual."

Born in Madras, India, Viswanathan and her family immigrated to Scotland when she was 3. They moved again when she was 12 and landed in Millburn, N.J.

She was always a voracious reader, gobbling up children's books, classics and works by writers such as Margaret Atwood and Kazuo Ishiguro. Like all readers, Viswanathan also has hidden, guilty pleasures.

"I really like trashy romance novels," she says, her face reddening. "I don't know if my mom should see that in print."

Writing has always been a hobby. Summers during high school, Viswanathan took fiction and poetry writing classes at Johns Hopkins University for fun. She showed a few short stories to her high school college counselor when she was applying to Harvard. The counselor, an author, was impressed, and showed the work to her agent.

The stories Viswanathan shared with her counselor eventually made it to Little, Brown. She pitched a book in a chatty e-mail, and they inked a deal before she began her freshman year. Neither Viswanathan nor Little, Brown will discuss the size of her advance.

Working with the teenager was refreshing in some ways for Asya Muchnick, a senior editor at Little, Brown.

"Not all authors actually meet their deadlines," Muchnick says. "She did."

But it wasn't just the teenager's composure and professionalism that caught the publisher's attention.

"This book is great, the idea is great and her voice is great," Muchnick says. "She has tremendous talent."

Viswanathan spent whatever "free time" she had freshman year in Lamont Library, clicking away on a laptop. She didn't tell a soul about Opal.

"I'm sure people just thought I wrote more papers than anyone else at Harvard," she says.

She looks away, and thinks about her noon midterm.

"It's all a bit surreal to me still," Viswanathan says as she excuses herself to go to class.

Morrissey surprisingly dull

By Evan McGarvey
Michigan Daily (U. Michigan)

ANN ARBOR, Mich. — The two most overhyped parts of growing up? Easy: losing your virginity and going to college.

Morrissey, the maudlin, sarcastic and delightfully puffed-up bard of Manchester (feeling slighted by Prince's apparent lyrical emulation, he once referred to The Purple One as "Ponce") and the progenitor of every contemporary literate, melodic troubled boy singer, is famously celibate. It's his hook as a songwriter. It was the main hook of The Smiths.

In interviews he'd say things like "the last person to see me naked was the doctor who brought me into this cruel world." He'd reference Keats and Yeats while guitarist Johnny Marr would stir up digital flakes with delay pedal abuse. Then The Smiths broke up and he stayed bitter, churning out dependable albums of ennui and grief, guilt and literary obsessions.

But all the while, he stayed innocent. Miserable and over-the-top, but as of yet physically untouched.

"The Ringleader of Tormentors," the 10th solo album from Moz, could finally be the exit ticket from Morrissey's dark little exile. Two songs into the album, he starts singing about "explosive kegs between my legs." For the early stretch of the disc he actually sings happily about thighs, glances and sweet, sweet release.

Wait.

Did he finally give in? Is it over?

It sure sounds like it. The rich, dappled production of "Tormentors" was all made during Morrissey's extended stay in Rome with help of famed post-punk producer Tony Visconti and even legendarily lush Italian producer Ennio Morricone. The melodies themselves certainly sound a bit more experienced: guitar solos lashing out, drum fills snapping. Musically, at least, the album shows portions of uninhibited punch.

New Morrissey is loose, loose-lipped and already a little sappy: "I entered nothing/ And nothing entered me/ Till you came/ With the key."

Damn, that's some revelatory love.

But right after the halfway point, right after Morrissey has torn through surprisingly up-tempo, sunny licks like the earnest, almost arena-ready stomp of "In The Future When All's Well," the old pope of mope comes calling.

Even this beautiful Roman holiday comes crashing down around Moz's inner demons. The dependable upbeat backing band on the album — Jesse Tobias on guitars, Matt Chamberlain on drums and the pleasingly indispensable Michael Farrell playing everything from piano to trombone — only makes the fall from sunny, sexual, liberated Moz to the old-hat, dry, moody Manchester boy a little more forced.

We liked "Tormentors" when Morrissey was happily playing in the Roman sunshine, we don't need him to chime in with old hook-y morals like: "Dear God when will I be/ Where I should be?"

Morrissey, seen above, fails to live up to expectations with his new album, "The Ringleader of Tormentors."

Writing book on son's suicide helps senator cope with grief

By Brad Cain
Associated Press

PENDLETON, Ore. (AP) — It's unusual for U.S. senators to publicly shed a tear over personal problems, but Gordon Smith did so in July 2004, when he spoke in the Senate about his 21-year-old son's suicide.

The Oregon Republican's testimony was remarkable for its emotional intensity and frankness, moving other senators to tears.

Smith recounts the tragedy in his new book, "Remembering Garrett," an often wrenching account of the life and death of Garrett Lee Smith, a popular kid with a big smile who quietly struggled with learning disabilities and clinical depression for most of his life.

On the day before his 22nd birthday, on Sept. 8, 2003, the Utah Valley State College student dimmed the lights in his apartment, put on soft music then swallowed a large quantity of sleeping pills and whiskey. Before passing out, he knelt alone in his closet with a noose around his neck.

The suicide devastated Gordon and Sharon Smith, who adopted Garrett as a newborn. Gordon Smith especially was consumed with guilt because of the large amount of time he spent away from home pursuing his business interests and political career.

Smith hopes that his book will help other parents with similar experiences. Writing the book has been "cathartic" for him and has helped ease sorrow that for a time was so deep that he "envied the dead."

In his book, Smith vividly recalls the night police came to his Washington-area home to give him the news about Garrett.

"In an instant, it all seemed meaningless, even vain," Smith says of his political career and his success in the frozen food business, which has made him a multimillionaire. He writes that he "staggered up to Garrett's room, fell on his bed and spent a night in hell crying out to him ... and pleading with God for understanding, for forgiveness, for the strength to go on."

In an interview in the couple's home in the eastern Oregon town of Pendleton, Gordon and Sharon Smith said their Mormon faith and help from family and friends have helped them recover and have helped Smith make a full return to politics, where he's become an advocate for suicide prevention programs.

Smith has somewhat come to terms with his guilt and understands that his son did not kill himself because Smith often was away from home. "It's not that I'm emotionally unwell in any way, but I'll never get over this," Smith said, his voice cracking. "There's nothing like burying your child to acquaint you with grief."

In these politically fractious times, it's noteworthy that Smith won support from Democrats and Republicans alike in 2004 for his bill, called the Garrett Lee Smith Memorial Act, which increases federal funding to combat the problem of youth suicide.

There's also a show of bipartisanship in the book itself.

The introduction to "Remembering Garrett" was written jointly by Sens. Edward Kennedy, D-Mass., and Orrin Hatch, R-Utah. The promotional blurbs on the book's back cover are written by Sens. John McCain, R-Ariz., and Hillary Clinton, D-N.Y.

Smith, in his book, praises his Oregon colleague, Sen. Ron Wyden, a Democrat, whose brother Jeff died in 2002 after a 30-year battle with schizophrenia. Smith said that he and Wyden are part of a "fraternity of sorrow" — people who have lost loved ones to mental illness — and that Wyden has offered him a lot of personal support.

Wyden, who narrowly defeated Smith when the two ran in a hard-fought 1996 special election for an open Senate seat, said he's glad Smith wrote "Remembering Garrett."

"Not a day goes by when Gordon and Sharon don't spend a lot of their waking hours thinking about Garrett," Wyden said. "This book is going to give them some relief."

The book, published by Carroll & Graf, retraces Garrett's life leading up to his suicide.

Most of the book was written in a two-week period in August 2005, when Smith holed up in the family's cabin in the Blue Mountains of Eastern Oregon. He wrote the entire story by hand, working for hours at a time, then calling his wife to read her his latest work.

Smith said the book has helped him though he thinks about Garrett all the time.

"It's sort of a chapter that never ends. There's a hole in your heart that never closes."

LOOKING FOR A PLACE TO LIVE?

KAMINS
SPECIALIZING IN HOUSE AND APARTMENT RENTALS

- PRESIDENTIAL APTS
- COLONIAL VILLAGE APTS
- PERRY APTS
- 177 N. PLEASANT ST
- COLLEGE INN APTS
- LANTERN COURT APTS
- MILL HOLLOW
- CRESTVIEW APTS.

55 S. PLEASANT ST. 253-2515 AMHERST

LARGEST SELECTION OF APARTMENTS IN TOWN

On-Line Classifieds...

Simple & Easy!

Interested?
Go to
www.dailycollegian.com
Questions?
Call 545 - 3500

START YOUR own FRATERNITY

Tau Kappa Epsilon

Participate in social, philanthropic, communtiy service and intramural activities on campus

No Pledging! No Hazing!
World's Largest Social Fraternity
$20,000 in Available Scholarships
Instant Leadership Opportunities

Contact:
Steve Lytle — slytle@tke.org — 813-394-4087
Jason Fenske — jfenske@tke.org — 414-975-1168

www.tke.org/expansion/umass

Latin jazzman wants to 'let it rip'

By Michael Deeds
Knight Ridder Newspapers

Poncho Sanchez is known as a Latin jazz musician, but the man digs his funk.

Before he became an internationally respected conga player, a Grammy Award winner, a jazz festival headliner, Sanchez was the vocalist in a high-school band that grooved to James Brown covers.

That's why on his latest CD, "Do It!," Sanchez left right at home singing a tune by underrated '60s act "Dyke and the Blazers," one of the first bands to get funky other than the Godfather of Soul himself.

"Man, 'Dyke and the Blazers,' that is the shit, man," Sanchez, 54, gushes enthusiastically. "I put it on, and I go, 'Goddamn that band was funky.' You know what I mean?"

You will if you see Sanchez in concert. (And excuse the language, but that's what real funk does to a man.) When Sanchez and his seven-piece band take the stage, they blow through myriad styles while wearing smiles. Sanchez attacks his congas with his entire physique — hands, elbows, the works. And his band — four rhythm musicians and three horn players — are gifted, adaptable veterans honed by high-profile gigs at clubs, concert halls and festival venues.

"I love to start off [a concert] with nice-strong Latin stuff," Sanchez explains by phone from his home in California. "I love Latin jazz, mixing the melodies and harmonizing with the Latin flavor and Latin rhythm — create a little excitement right away. Then, somewhere in the middle of the show, we'll hit them with some salsa, dance stuff. And then I like to throw in the Latin soul."

If it sounds like a melting pot of traditional genres, well ... it is. That's the way Sanchez grew up. Born in Laredo, Texas, he moved to Los Angeles as a child, then back to Laredo, and, finally, back to Los Angeles again for high school. Along the way, he learned about Tex-Mex and Mexican music, then soul and Latin jazz.

Sanchez tried different instruments before settling on percussion, which he was inspired to play by Cuban master conguero Santamaria. Sanchez's big break came at 23, when he joined the band of late great vibraphonist Cal Tjader. Sanchez recorded his first solo album in 1979, and he chuckles when he describes taking a copy to his boss.

"Cal was very cool about it," Sanchez remembers. "He goes, 'It's your first record, right? All right, you got about 78 more to go.' To catch up to him. He was great. I really miss him."

One year after Tjader's death in 1982, Sanchez signed to Concord Records, where he's enjoyed a remarkable career in the Latin jazz-flavored Picante division. Sanchez has released a couple dozen CDs, won a Grammy and been nominated for many more. At this point in his career, he says, Concord essentially lets him run free. While recording "Do It!" he brought the entire funk group "Tower of Power" into the studio for a session.

"That's where we're at," he says proudly. "We're open."

Sanchez will be honored in May at the Heineken Jazz Festival in San Juan, Puerto Rico, which he'll also headline. Concord plans to turn the concert into a live CD and DVD.

"I said, 'Wow. Not a bad idea,'" Sanchez chuckles, adding that he hopes to invite a few guest musicians to make the gig extra special.

One thing is certain: Fans should expect a Latin jazz bonanza with as many flavors of music as Puerto Rico has rums.

Poncho Sanchez, Grammy Award winner and jazz headliner, tries to reach a more expansive audience with the Heineken Jazz Festival in San Juan, which will soon become a live CD and DVD.

Electro-pop pioneer returns

By Ben Wener
The Orange County Register

It has been a dozen years since electronic music pioneer Thomas Dolby issued anything resembling a proper album, and two more than that since 1992's exceptional "Astronauts & Heretics."

Yet the man known primarily for two striking yet very '80s novelties, "She Blinded Me With Science" and "Hyperactive," says "I never really intended to take 10 years away from the music business."

Ever intrigued by new technology, Dolby (born Thomas Morgan Robertson; "Dolby" was a nickname that eventually led to a lawsuit from Dolby Laboratories) grew fascinated in the advent of the Internet as the '90s began. Crafting albums seemed an antiquated notion; pursuing the promise of artistic independence that the Net held became paramount.

"I'm not the sort who needs to be in the limelight in order to get satisfaction out of what I'm doing," Dolby, 47, said by phone from his Northern California home as he was preparing to launch his Sole Inhabitant Tour, his first (mostly) headlining jaunt in ages.

"I like to be where I can make the biggest impact, and I'm naturally drawn to areas that are still unexplored."

Recognizing a power shift was imminent in the stagnating music biz, Dolby, an Egyptian-born Englishman living stateside since 1987, formed Beatnik Inc. in San Mateo to make the most out of burgeoning cyberspace, just as he had with the music-video explosion that transformed pop music in the early '80s.

But for years, he says, Beatnik was in a holding pattern — "neither an abject failure nor a runaway success. If either of those had happened earlier, I'd have been back making music sooner. But there was always something around the corner."

Ironically, it was only after the company rode out the Internet's boom and bust that Beatnik found its true calling: creating audio for cell phones. Today, the company is the world's top provider of such software, including ringtones.

"We're now in over half the world's cell phones," he notes. "That's a lot of cell phones."

Achieving that prominence, however, means the services of a maverick are no longer required on regular basis. Beatnik runs itself, and Dolby, still the company's largest shareholder, has time to resume a music career that in certain circles is considered among the most acclaimed of his era.

Most people's knowledge of Dolby begins and ends with "She Blinded Me With Science," a sly slice of synth-funk from a superior album ("The Golden Age of Wireless") whose variety and depth went far beyond its artificial surface. Indeed, for those who sought him out — certainly for scores of electronica acts who routinely cite him as an influence — Dolby was one-of-a-kind, a do-it-yourself electro wizard whose work conjured warmth and soul from machines whose output in other hands was pure digital chill.

But after Dolby took a deliberate detour off his pop-stardom trajectory with 1984's "The Flat Earth" — an introspective, atmospheric masterwork, one of the best albums of the '80s yet currently out of print — the writing was on the wall: He would never be more than a cult figure, revered by few, misunderstood or dismissed by most.

Sure enough, he retreated to production work (notably for Brit band Prefab Sprout) and film composing (lamentably for the mega-flop "Howard the Duck"), and his albums, though unusual and clever, rapidly sank into obscurity.

In those days, as it often still is today, "There was this narrow window where if your music didn't catch fire, you basically went back to the drawing board. Now I can put stuff out and it doesn't have to sell right off the bat. It's an annuity that sits there and might spike two years from now when a piece gets used in a movie." (Coincidentally, Dolby has an instrumental in "Mission: Impossible III" that he co-wrote with its director and erstwhile electronic-music artist, "Lost" creator J.J. Abrams.)

Dolby, however, doesn't foresee a new album in his immediate future — why bother with that promotional model when he can enjoy more freedom and immediacy by recording and releasing what he wants via his Flat Earth Society site (version.thomasdolby.com)?

"I care less about that than the fact that I'm free — that if I choose to push a button at any time I can release [a song], have it accessible by anyone. There's no rigmarole of A&R men and radio promoters to get around anymore."

And more important than penning new songs, he says, is this opportunity to "retrace my roots, now that I'm able to re-explore my music with new technologies. I've definitely got that bug now."

Worry no more: Touch barriers

Lovers Only
Hannah Drake

There's a certain nervousness about hanging out with a new guy or girl, especially when you already know you like them. The big question is about breaking the touch barrier.

Most advice says to casually touch his arm during conversation. I think that's a little unnatural; when at any time do we feel the need to touch someone's arm normally? My preference is to go for the stomach. If the hardcore flirting vibes are there, he's probably not going to like it. So, my move is to walk by and poke him in the side or stomach area, without looking, and then after I've passed him look back to see him staring after me, flash the smile, possibly a flick of the hair, look away, and by the time we're back talking face to face, it's on. Also, the stomach isn't too difficult of an area to touch — you don't have to make it obvious that you're touching them.

Guys usually attempt to break the touch barrier slightly differently. They'll put an arm around you if you're sitting next to him, or if the guy's playful, he'll go to tickle you when the moment is right. It's kind of like a mini-game of tag. You touch for a second, watch how I react, I touch you, see how you react, and with some more touching, by a few drinks later, there'll be some major making out going on.

But then there's the question of who touches first. I think it's up to the girl. If you want to try touching first, go for it. The only drawback is, he may respond, but you'll never know if he was interested in you initially. That's why 90 percent of the time I stay pretty aloof (even though I know exactly what's going on) until the guy makes his move. The other 10 percent of the time I'll make the move first if I can tell he's a little shy. That guy will accidentally be in the same room as you at most times during a party, hold conversations with you and generally seem interested.

But there are times when you don't yet have the opportunity to figure out when and how to break the touch barrier. Sometimes, even the most beautiful of girls can't get the attention of the guy she wants. When this happens, you'll notice you're the one making sure you're in the same room as him at the parties, pretending like you don't notice he's there when you're really aware of every movement he makes and anyone he's talking to.

It'll probably drive him a little nuts that you're not talking to him or looking over his way, because the typical male wants you to want him, even if he doesn't want you. And then when you change your interests to anything or anyone else but him, he'll become interested again — it's that competitive instinct. His thoughts can be translated to, "I don't really want her, but I don't want anyone else to want her either. She's supposed to want me." As long as you know the type of game you're getting into, it's okay to play — then when you lose (because you will in this situation; if a guy wants a girl, he makes it known) you won't have gotten hurt. Like Missy Elliot says, "Ain't no shame, ladies do your thang, just make sure you ahead of the game."

But is it worth it to play that particular game? It may seem tempting at the time. If you're more about hooking up than exploring your feelings for him, it's safe to go for. Otherwise, you're just dragging out the inevitable and taking time away from meeting someone else who actually wants to spend time with you.

When you do decide to shift your interests and hook up with a more worthwhile guy, be prepared for his sudden "What happened?" Ladies, he doesn't really mean it. Of course there's exceptions to everything, but I can tell you it's more about jealousy than, "Wow, I didn't realize I'm crazy about you."

And if he does try to convince you he didn't realize his feelings for you, this, that, and the other thing, don't give him a long, drawn-out answer of why you moved on. Just say, "You dropped the ball." He may play innocent and dumb and come up with ten thousand explanations, but the truth is he knows exactly what he's doing when he's doing it.

BOSTON UNIVERSITY
School of Public Health Summer Course
Antiretroviral Program Management Issues in Low Resource Settings

August 7 – August 18, 2006
Boston University

Until recently, medicines for HIV/AIDS were unavailable to people living in Africa, Asia, and most developing countries. While donors provide funding for purchase of medicines, there is limited capacity to distribute, prescribe, and dispense AIDS medicines in these countries.

This course brings together policy makers and program managers from around the world to discuss issues related to ensuring successful HIV/AIDS treatment programs; consistent uninterrupted supplies of ARV's, appropriate ARV prescribing, and adherence by consumers.

BOSTON UNIVERSITY SCHOOL of Public Health

To request an application e-mail spetty@bu.edu

www.bu.edu/sph/siih

An equal opportunity/affirmative action institution

Ford talks about past, future of UM hoops

FORD from page 12

all bring in a significant need. I think next year we will be an improved basketball team.

RG: A lot of people were skeptical about James Life's shot selection. Was that ever frustrating for you during the season?

TF: I'm a big believer that people have to play to their strengths, whatever they are. James Life doesn't need to be here if I'm not going to let him shoot it.

And you can ask any coach in America, the history of junior college players is they won't hit their stride until their second year. They can contribute their first year and there are some things that they can help you with. But if they can really play the game, they don't hit their stride until their second year or so.

I expect that this will be a different year for him. He shot it quicker than I wanted to at times but he has the potential to get hot, so I let him jack 'em up a little bit.

RG: Who would win in a three-point contest, you or James Life?

TF: I would definitely win in a three-point contest — as long as it was stand-still. That's been proven. That's a fact.

RG: How does your first year at UMass compare to your first year at Eastern Kentucky?

TF: As far as introducing a new style, it's the same thing — guys not understanding the system. I wouldn't say I have the most difficult system in America, but it's definitely not the easiest. It was a typical transition year where you don't know what to expect from your team. Right now we're in postseason workouts and I'm so excited because I know what we need to work on. When I first got the job you don't really understand what to work on and what your team's strengths and weaknesses are.

RG: What's the most important thing you learned from Rick Pitino?

TF: How hard you have to work at it. Don't leave any stone unturned — that's in recruiting, preparation for your games, in practice. Never sit back at night and say, "I wish I had worked at this harder." Put all of the time and effort into it that you can to give your team an advantage to be successful on and off the court. That's what I saw in him every day and learned from him.

RG: You moved from Kentucky to Massachusetts last year. How did you and your family deal with that adjustment?

TF: I tell people that it's not all that different. It really hasn't been. Amherst is a rural area and Kentucky is pretty much a rural area. Richmond and Amherst are very similar. And we had a Kentucky winter here. People kept warning me about the winter, but I was like, "This is not bad. This is like Kentucky. I can handle this."

I've had either family or friends at every single game, so it's not what people would probably think. My family and kids love it here. They really do.

RG: Do you have any favorite places to take your kids around here?

TF: We go to Kids Sports [on Route 9] all of the time. We ride the bike trail in the summer. They go over and take ice-skating lessons from Laurie Leaman. My son started taking hockey lessons but it lasted about a week. (laughs) He didn't last in the hockey part.

RG: What is your favorite movie, besides "6th Man"?

TF: (laughs) I heard that I was going back into acting. That's always such a hard question. I love movies. That's something I don't do as much as I used to. That's one thing I love doing. I love going to the movies. I love going to the movies because it seems like I can forget about everything else. I have so much on my mind, so I tell my wife, "Let's go to the movies," because I can forget about everything.

Some of my favorite movies are pretty cheesy, to be honest with you. One of my favorite movies, and I'd forgotten about it until the other day, is "The Game," with Michael Douglas. I was up at 2 a.m. the other night and "The Game" came on and I stayed up 'til 4 a.m. watching that thing. That is a great movie. I like Michael Douglas. "American President" may be my favorite movie. I love the basketball movies too.

RG: Did you see "Glory Road?"

TF: I've seen "Glory Road" and I enjoyed "Glory Road." I'd heard all of these things about how it was killing Kentucky, but I didn't see that at all. I thought "Glory Road" was very, very good. I enjoyed watching that. I took the team to see it the night before the Temple game here, so I guess it must've worked.

RG: What about music? I saw a picture of you with Tim McGraw when he came to the Mullins Center.

TF: I've turned into a country music fan over the last four or five years, and it started when I was invited to a Kenny Chesney concert. Now I am a country music fan, believe it or not. I wouldn't say I'm die-hard. I'm not a die-hard music fan. I didn't listen to music much before they came out with those iPod things.

RG: Is there a role model, on or off the court, who you've taken after?

TF: I look at different people. I've learned so much from my mom and dad about what type of person I should be. I think they did a really good job of trying to teach me right from wrong and how to treat people. My mom sacrificed a lot for the kids. My dad always worked extremely hard every day to try and give us a little bit more.

My dad taught me the game of basketball. But as far as coaching is concerned, Rick Pitino has been my main influence. I love everything about him as a coach as far as how hard he works at it and the system he plays and what he represents as a coach. I really look up to him. I watch every game that his team plays, same thing with Billy Donovan and those guys, people who I can connect with.

RG: Did you always know that you were going to be a coach? Or was there a moment when it clicked for you?

TF: I did want my job to have something to do with basketball. Basketball has been my whole life. I grew up around it. My father was a high school coach. He has always been involved with basketball. I've always been around it. It's pretty much taken up most of my life. As time went along I knew that I enjoyed playing for coach Pitino and it quickly became apparent that I wanted to be a coach. Basketball's pretty much been my life.

RG: Did you have any reservations about taking the UMass job?

TF: There are always reservations. There is always good and bad. When my wife and I came and looked at the job, we wanted to do it. I'm a guy that's big on lists — good, bad, to-do lists. There are always positives and negatives and I thought that the positives outweighed the negatives.

The greatest thing was that I do enjoy a challenge. I love a challenge. That's what my career was based on: people saying that I couldn't do it, that I was too small, too slow, couldn't play. That was my greatest motivating factor to work hard every day.

RG: What was the greatest college basketball game, coaching or playing, that you were ever a part of?

TF: It may not be my most exciting or my best game, but it may be the most memorable game: the game against Florida State in the Elite Eight to get us to the Final Four.

Making it to the Final Four is really what you want. Once you get there, if you win it that's kind of a bonus. That game, we won it, and just knowing that we were going to the Final Four in New Orleans in the Superdome in the one of the best Final Fours ever — us, North Carolina, Kansas and Michigan, big time basketball schools — was absolutely ridiculous.

RG: If Louisville and Kentucky met in the NCAA finals, where would your allegiance be?

TF: It would be with Kentucky, no question. And I think that [Pitino] would be the first one to say "pull for Kentucky," and he would understand. I would definitely pull for Kentucky but hopefully it'd be a great game and Kentucky would pull it out at the end. I have a lot of respect for coach Pitino, obviously. But I graduated from the University of Kentucky and it gave me four tremendous years.

RG: I have to ask. What kind of car do you drive?

TF: Ford Expedition. Absolutely. I'm an SUV guy.

SENIORS–
GOT SOMETHING TO SAY?

Leave your mark!

The Daily Collegian is currently accepting essay submissions from graduating seniors

Write a 750 word piece about the UMass experience and how its shaped you. Bring submissions to 113 campus center basement

Top 3 will be published in the graduation edition on May 15th and 16th

All entries must be received by April 21 at 4 pm
Questions? Call 545-3500

Mediocre results for UMass track teams

TRACK from page 12

has broken a throwing record. Her heave of 44 feet, 10.25 inches was not only almost a foot farther than her previous school record, which she set last weekend at the Wildcat Invitational, but also qualifies her for the ECAC Championships.

She fell just three feet short of qualifying for another ECAC spot — this one in the discus event. She finished third with a season-best throw of 136 feet, one inch. The toss was the fifth-best in school history.

Veney also competed in the hammer throw, but she did not place. Her coach is not worried, however, because Veney is still learning the event.

"It'll take a little time to get that rolling," UMass coach Julie LaFreniere said.

A long-distance specialist, took third in the 5,000-meter event with a time of 17:31.63. Her time knocks Chris Pratt, who ran a monumental race in 1985, off of the all-time list.

Callahan made her invasion into the all-time list by way of the triple jump. Callahan's personal record (PR) of 37 feet, 11.25 inches moves her into fourth on the prestigious list. She fell just shy of automatically qualifying for the ECAC Championships.

The Minutewomen had one more event-winner in sophomore pole-vaulter Kristen Bakanowski.

Bakanowski won the pole vault event with a height of 11 feet, 11.75 inches — over one foot higher than her previous season-best performance. She finished a mere quarter of an inch shy of tying her career-best height.

Senior Elisabeth Budd came in third place in the 400-meter hurdles with her season-best time of 1:04.18.

"She did very well. [It was] the best I've seen her look in a long time. I could tell she felt better too," LaFreniere said. "She got out [of the starting blocks] hard and fast and she was strong. She held on."

Senior Ashley Creel added yet another third place finish to the Minutewomen's day. Her PR of five feet, three inches was good enough to give her third in the high jump.

Kendra Leighton was not able to compete due to a sprained ankle she suffered under the bleachers before her race.

Another UMass casualty was junior Cuisle Kierans. Last week LaFreniere said that Kierans had sprained her ankle during a practice and was going to be evaluated by the team's trainer who would tell her if she could run. LaFreniere was sad to report, however, that Kierans was not cleared to compete over the weekend.

Despite the injuries and a fifth place finish, LaFreniere expressed satisfaction with the meet.

"I think it went pretty well, overall," LaFreniere said.

The final order of finishes in the women's meet was UConn (229.5 points), Brown (167 points), SCSU (106), University of Rhode Island (72), UMass (52.5), Wheaton (42) and Columbia (37).

Hanson, Americans make statement and Peter Gilmore (seventh). The United States hasn't won the men's race since Meyers did it in '83, and they haven't had so many top finishers since the addition of prize money lured back the top international runners.

HANSON from page 12

"Another American Revolution has begun," said Guy Morse, the executive director of the Boston race. "It began here in Boston, and we'll see more of these American athletes in the future."

Temperatures in the 50's kept the runners cool and allowed 97.9 percent of the 20,117 starters to finish. Only 70 runners were transported from the course, and the finish line medical tent was also relatively quiet.

"We just weren't tested the way we have been in the past," race director Dave McGillivray said.

McGillivray also said there was not one phone call to the hotline established so homeowners abutting the course, especially at the start in Hopkinton, could complain about runners going to the bathroom on their lawns.

One reason was probably the two-wave start that allowed runners to spend less time at the starting line waiting for the gun. Near the end of the race, a course change that took the field under an overpass instead of on it didn't seem to be a problem, even though it meant one more late hill.

"He got a course record and he went under the overpass," McGillivray said, after thanking Cherukiyot effusively for not making a villain of the organizers. "So our plan worked out pretty good."

Martinez picks up 200th win in 4-3 triumph over Atlanta

(AP) Pedro Martinez picked the perfect time to get his 200th win.

Martinez pitched into the seventh inning to become the seventh active pitcher with 200 victories, and New York edged the Atlanta Braves, 4-3, on Monday night in the first of 18 meetings this season between the NL East rivals.

"It's a great accomplishment," the slender Martinez said in front of a large banner commemorating his milestone.

New York Mets hurler Pedro Martinez notched his 200th win in a 4-3 victory over the conference-rival Atlanta Braves.

"This is probably one of the biggest things that's happened in my career, because of how far I've come from the first day and all the doubts about my body type."

Carlos Delgado and Xavier Nady each homered and drove in two runs for the Mets (10-2), who improved the best record in baseball and extended the fastest start in franchise history.

In other NL games, it was: St. Louis 2, Pittsburgh 1; Cincinnati 9, Florida 1; Houston 8, Milwaukee 7; San Diego 5, Colorado 2; San Francisco 10, Arizona 9; and Chicago Cubs 4, Los Angeles Dodgers 1.

Andruw Jones hit his fifth homer and second in two days for the Braves, missing injured third baseman Chipper Jones and shortstop Edgar Renteria. Jorge Sosa (0-3) lasted only four-plus innings.

Nady and Paul Lo Duca finished with three his apiece for the Mets, who have been chasing Atlanta for years. This season, they think they have the talent to finally end the Braves' record run of 14 consecutive division titles.

"It's a big win. This is a big series. For April, this is as big as it's going to get," Lo Duca said. "We've got to dethrone these guys.

"When somebody has your number, you've got to play extra hard," he added. "We need to turn the tide."

Martinez (3-0) struck out eight in 6 2/3 innings, allowing three runs and six hits. He left to a loud ovation and waved his arms to the crowd of 36,867. The three-time Cy Young Award winner is 200-84, the fewest losses for any of the 103 pitchers with 200 wins.

Billy Wagner worked the ninth for his fourth save.

CUBS 4, DODGERS 1

Greg Maddux threw eight innings of three-hit ball in his first start since turning 40, leading the visiting Cubs to the win.

Off to a 3-0 start for the first time since 1994, Maddux struck out six and didn't walk a batter. His landmark birthday was Friday.

"I heard Julio Franco say a million times, 'Age is just a number,'" Maddux said. "I'm finally starting to understand what he meant by that. I used to laugh at him 10 years ago, but I know what he means now."

Ryan Dempster pitched the ninth for his third save of the season. Todd Walker had a solo homer and a sacrifice fly.

Brett Tomko (1-1) allowed four runs and seven hits for the Dodgers.

CARDINALS 2, PIRATES 1

Albert Pujols tied a major league record with a home run in his fourth consecutive at-bat, Jason Marquis pitched eight innings of three-hit ball and St. Louis won its third straight.

A day after hitting three homers, including a game-winner, Pujols homered to center off Pirates starter Paul Maholm (0-2) in the top of the first to give the Cardinals a 2-0 lead in Pittsburgh.

It was the 35th time in major league history that a player has homered in four straight at-bats.

Marquis (3-0) retired 14 in a row in one stretch and Jason Isringhausen worked the ninth for his fourth save.

REDS 9, MARLINS 1

Adam Dunn hit his eighth homer and Brandon Claussen (1-1) pitched seven shutout innings, leading Cincinnati to the win.

Austin Kearns also had a solo shot, and Brandon Phillips drove in four runs with a double and a pair of singles.

Brian Moehler (0-3) gave up eight runs in five-plus innings for visiting Florida.

The Reds also placed Ken Griffey Jr. on the 15-day disabled list after a test found inflammation in a tendon behind his right knee.

PADRES 5, ROCKIES 2

Chris Young pitched seven strong innings and Josh Barfield hit his first career homer to lift San Diego to the win.

Young (2-0) allowed two runs and five hits to win his second straight start after coming to San Diego in a trade with Texas in the offseason.

Trevor Hoffman pitched the ninth for his second save in two tries.

Garrett Atkins homered and drove in both of Colorado's runs. Jeff Francis (0-2) gave up five runs in six innings at Coors Field.

ASTROS 8, BREWERS 7

Jason Lane hit a three-run homer to help the Astros rally for the win at home.

Houston scored five runs in the seventh. Lance Berkman and Morgan Ensberg had back-to-back RBI singles before Lane hit his third homer deep into left-field bleachers off Matt Wise (1-1) to put the Astros up 8-6.

Brad Lidge worked the ninth for his fourth save. Ensberg also had a solo home run in the sixth inning, his third in three days.

Carlos Lee, Geoff Jenkins and Gabe Gross homered for Milwaukee.

Ezequiel Astacio (1-0) retired one batter to get the win.

GIANTS 10, DIAMONDBACKS 9

Mark Sweeney hit a tying two-run homer in the eighth and Steve Finley hit a sacrifice fly in the ninth to lift San Francisco to the win.

The Diamondbacks overcame a seven-run deficit to go up 9-7 on Luis Gonzalez's three-run homer in the sixth.

Barry Bonds was 1-for-3 with two walks, extending his homerless streak to 12 games — the longest he has gone into a season when healthy without a homer since 1998, when he didn't hit one out until San Francisco's 13th game.

Steve Kline (1-0) pitched a scoreless eighth for the win, and Tim Worrell worked a perfect ninth for his sixth save.

Closer Jose Valverde (0-1) allowed two runs in 1 1/3 innings.

—Associated Press

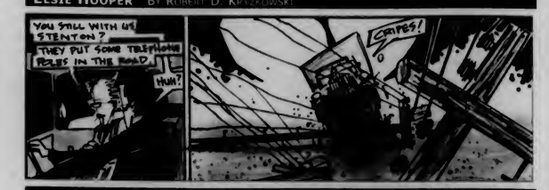
Cleveland slugger Travis Hafner, while leading the Indians in batting average, is setting the home-run pace in the American League with seven round-trippers on the young season.

TAVERN
On The Hill
NOW ACCEPTING RESERVATIONS FOR GRADUATION
Open for Dinner 7 Nights a Week
413 · 493 · 1700
100 Mountain Road · Easthampton, MA

Write for sports!
e-mail:
sports@dailycollegian.com

A grade dispute?
Teacher, roomate or job concerns?
Billing problems?
...or any other University related problems?
THE OMBUDS OFFICE CAN HELP
(confidentially, of course)
students, faculty, and staff are all welcome
823 Campus Center
Office Hours: 8:00 a.m. - 5:00 p.m.
Telephone: 413 - 545 - 0867
fax: 413 - 545 - 9720
e-mail: ombuds@ombuds.umass.edu



EAST HEAVEN HOT TUBS
STUDENT DISCOUNT!
L. SCHWALL '04
$15 OFF ANY HOT TUB RENTAL FOR TWO
(one discount per rental)
Student Discount only good Mon-Thurs or any day after 11pm
Weekdays 11- Midnight Weekends 11 - 1am
413-587-0000 • 33 West St. Northampton • www.eastheaven.com

Where are YOU living next semester?
Apartments Available!
CHECK OUT
PUFFTON VILLAGE!
Excellent location...1/2 mile from UMass
Spacious Apartments--1,2 and 3 Bedroom Townhouses
All rents include heat, hot water and cooking gas
On site laundry, off street parking.
Basketball and Tennis courts.
PUFFTON VILLAGE
1040 N. Pleasant St. #410
Amherst, MA 01002
413-549-0145
www.pufftonvillage.com

LABRAT By Richard Martelly

ELSIE HOOPER By Robert D. Krzykowski

THE FAMILY MONSTER By Josh Shalek

PAUL By Billy O'Keefe

TWO DUDES By Aaron Warner

QUOTE OF THE DAY

"If you live to be 100, I hope I live to be 100 minus one day, so I never have to live without you."

—Winnie the Pooh

ACROSS
1 Spot the beans
5 Hacks
9 Get outta here!
14 Ms. Moreno
15 Chills and fever
16 ___ Loa volcano
17 Unsightly fruit?
18 Lay down some cards
19 Oneness
20 Dare
22 Units of force
23 UFO crew
24 Other self
26 Bother
27 Seller (alt)
31 Office aides
37 5th or 1ax
38 Powdery substance
39 Director Howard
40 Part of a plan
41 Dos Passos opus
42 Game officials
45 Pocketranked
46 Actor Aldo
49 Nuclear power sources
53 City near Bayonne
56 Poppy product
59 Sites
61 "Mama's Family" character
62 The last word
63 Sound of relief
64 Giant
65 Lake near Las Vegas
66 Wight or Pines
67 Borneo ape, briefly
68 Attaches temporarily
69 Fortuneteller

DOWN
1 Actor Willis
2 Fire up
3 Mac collection
4 Security for freedom
5 King Arthur's court
6 Emissary
7 Protuberance
8 Palaovec least
9 Dirty spots
10 Grand gorge
11 Bankruptcy
12 Chip in a chip
13 Write off baseball
21 Put on cargo
25 Adam's mate
26 Circle part
28 See socially
29 In perpetuity
30 D.C. bigwigs
31 Sort of poker
32 Let off steam
33 Extended family
34 Provide weaponry
35 Fish eggs
36 Squid defense
40 Mess Harr or 007
42 Abounding
43 Mrs. Cantor
44 Some honeydos
45 River of NYC
47 "In Cold Blood" author Capote
50 Holding device
51 "My Cousin Vinny" Oscar winner
52 Watery expanse
53 Composure
54 Slant
55 Theater worker
56 Not bamboozled by
57 Tengo team
58 Greek letter
60 Osiris' wife/sister

Find today's answers online

www.dailycollegian.com

THE HARP
NEW!! Wireless Internet
OCMP & All Credit Cards accepted
Irish Pub
APRIL SPECIAL!
Honey Brown, Molson
$2.00 a pint / $6.50 a pitcher
TONIGHT: · Cold Duck Complex
THURS · Turbine
FRI · Irish Seisiun
SAT · Tycoon Dog
"Come Party Like You're Irish!"
413-548-6900 www.theharp.net
163 Sunderland Rd. · N. Amherst
Just north of the apartments

BEST BAR AROUND
Seven O's
KARAOKE
EVERY WEDNESDAY
LIVE BAND
SATURDAY
4-22-06
STRANGE BREW
at 9:00 p.m.
ROUTE 116, 330 AMHERST ROAD
SUNDERLAND, MA 01375
(413) 665-8788
2PM TO 1AM M-F
12PM TO 1AM SAT & SUN
NEXT TO CLIFFSIDE APTS.

HOROSCOPES

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
You should go do your homework outside today.

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
You forgot to pay your cell phone bill again.

aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
Your shirt buttons are buttoned unevenly.

taurus Apr. 20-May 20
If you put that CD in your computer you will never see it again.

gemini May 21-Jun. 21
Maybe you should try not to fail any more tests this semester.

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
That hat makes you look wicked sketchy.

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
Don't click on that link, it will give your computer a virus.

virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Make sure you catch a re-run of last night's 10spot.

libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22
You will get all your work done for this week amazingly fast.

scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
Someone will give you a free candy bar today.

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
You will nearly get blown over walking to class today.

capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
Try not to step on anybody's toes today.

Amherst Brewing Company
Jukebox Downstairs & Upstairs!
THE PATIO IS OPENING SOON!
Get more info about our hand-crafted beers, food menu & event calendar at amherstbrewing.com

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Want a hottie for the coming summer? I'm bold, sleek, and sporty and I always bring the heat. Meet me, the Ford Fusion, outside the Campus Center on April 25th between 10 AM and 3 PM. Brought to you by your New England Ford Dealers.

Our NURSES call the shots! Guaranteed 3 to 2 year Full ROTC Scholarships plus $5,000 yearly. www.umass.edu/armyrotc

APARTMENT FOR RENT

One bedroom apartment located in the center of town, $680/mo, heat and hot water included. Call (978) 771-8074

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing, 1&2 bedroom apts. Leases begin June, July, Aug or Sep. First come, first serve. Get them while they last. www.brandywine-apts.com stop by or call 549-0600

APARTMENT FOR RENT

2 bedroom $1100 3 bedroom $1400 4 bedroom $2150 Now Accepting Applications 253-7377 millvalleyestates@winnco.com

Amherst Spacious 2 BR Bus Laundry Near Center 6/1 $1025 413-335-5226

Hobart Condos 3 bedroom, hardwood floors, study area in basement. Cable, telephone (internet access) In all bedrooms and study. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

CHILDCARE

Amherst Center family looking for parents helper in exchange for housing everything included. Call 413-687-2710

Looking for 10+ hrs/week babysitter & help w/light housework. Must be reliable and trusted. Ruby 210-8155

EMPLOYMENT

Apartment Leasing Consultant – Love People? Can't Sit Still? Nat'l real estate firm has a unique opportunity for individuals this summer as leasing consultants at our 232 unit apartment community in Sunderland. We need energetic, organized, & passionate individuals to work in an environment where no 2 days are alike. Individuals w/ retail, hospitality, banking, or restaurant experience are encouraged to apply. Send resumes to erich@aspensquare.com or fax to 240-525-0058. Visit us at www.aspensquare.com

Bartending $300/Day potential. No experience nces. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 x162

Furniture porter and maintenance person needed for busy auction gallery on Nantucket Island this summer. (508) 228-3942

EMPLOYMENT

The best summer of your life! Live, work, and play outdoors at one of New England's best Summer Camps. Seeking staff to work as Cabin Leaders at overnight Boys Camp, 6/18 – 7/22. Teach three daily skills classes, supervise a Cabin Group, and role model YMCA values for boys 7-17. Room, Board, paid staff training and $800-1200 salary. Download application packet at www.camptakodah.org/staff/positions.html or contact Camp Director William Therrien at (603) 352-0447 / willy@camptakodah.org PAINTERS NEEDED! Hundreds of positions available throughout New England. Work outside with your friends and family in your hometown. No experience needed, training provided. Join large student painting company this summer. Hiring now! 888-277-9787 www.collegeprocam

EMPLOYMENT

Rent us your Ears! Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umassedu Voicemail: 545-6837

1000 Envelopes = $5000. Receive $5 for every envelope stuffed with our sales materials. Guaranteed! Free information: 24 hour recording 1-800-796-6567

HOUSE FOR RENT

Northampton- 4 bedroom, double living room, open and enclosed porches, June $1300 plus utilities, near park. Skibiski Realtors 586-1827.

ROOM FOR RENT

CAPE COD Summer rooms. Hyannis area. Private pond. $150 a week includes ... (508) 428-3456

SERVICES

Legal questions? We have answers at the Student Legal Services Office, 922 Campus Center or Call 545-1995

PREGNANCY TESTING, HIV TESTING, Birth-control, and Emergency Contraception. STI Screening and Treatment Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst, 548-9992.

Pentium Color laptops $99 We type term papers, resumes, cover letters. 413-584-8857

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Disney/Beach Area 7/6 nights stay. Pd $600.00 Sacrifice $199.00 Good for one year 978-444-0261

CLASSIFIEDS ARE NOW ONLINE!
www.dailycollegian.com

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS WEDNESDAY

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 19, 2006 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Catching up: Ford on UM hoops

By Rob Greenfield
Collegian Staff

"I love a challenge. That's what my career was based on: people saying that I couldn't do it, that I was too small, too slow, couldn't play. That was my greatest motivating factor to work hard every day."

— UMass basketball coach Travis Ford

Travis Ford is a busy man. From recruiting trips, to family vacations, to a trip to the Final Four, the born-and-bred Kentuckian has been a man in perpetual motion.

Last week, I finally caught up with him, a day before he departed on a two-week hiatus from Pioneer Valley.

He took shelter in his office, on the third floor of the quiet Mullins Center. Pictures of the little Fords peppered the room, along with a rousing photo of a baby-faced Kentucky point guard cutting off a piece of the basketball net on his way to the Final Four.

Ford is fiery, ebullient and ultra-intense, but when he isn't fuming over a turnover or a bad shot, the UMass head man is affable, calm and ready to talk basketball.

Like all basketball lifers, the offseason eats at him. He longs for November, when his Minutemen can take the UMass stage once again and compete for a now-tangible Atlantic 10 championship.

Last week, Ford finally had some down time, and he reflected upon topics ranging from the turbulence of last season to his newfound preference for country music.

Rob Greenfield (RG): First of all, you must have been happy about Florida winning the NCAA Championship.

Travis Ford (TF): I lated. I was coached by Billy [Donovan]. Billy was the assistant coach at Kentucky the whole time I was there, and he and I built a relationship. He mentored me, being a point guard in coach Pitino's system. In some ways I had a closer relationship with him [than with Pitino]. He's somebody who I've always admired who's climbed up the coaching ladder.

My associate head coach Tim Maloney coached with [Donovan] for six years and helped him get started there, so there are all kinds of connections to Florida.

RG: Last season was a roller-coaster year for your team. Have you caught up on some sleep since the season ended?

TF: I'm just glad I didn't get fired. (laughs) I woke up that morning [after the Xavier game] and thought I was fired. So that's a positive I guess.

Things are about on track, to be honest with you. This was my third head-coaching job and the first years are always tough. Transition years are never, ever easy. We got in here and we had roster changes before the season started. We had roster changes while the season was going on.

And then there's the schedule we inherited. The year before I got here they had 18 home games. That's unheard of for anybody. We had to return all of those games.

If you look at our road record, it's not good and we're disappointed. But the next phase is winning road games. If you think about it, in almost every one of those games we were the underdog. That's tough for a team that's trying to understand a new system.

RG: You played for Rick Pitino, who liked to get his team up and down the court. Was that tough for your team to do this year?

TF: It was tough in that, from October to November we practiced pressing every single day. We practiced running our offense the way we wanted, getting up and down every day. Then in the second game of the season we lose a player. I said this from the start: we are a team with a very small margin for error — if we lost one player, any of the nine guys we had, it's going to change the way we're going to play.

Then we lost a player [Artie Bowers] the second game of the year who was starting. I had to scale it back a little bit. Then we lose Maurice [Maxwell], and I had to scale it back even more. We had spent a month and a half on [pressing] and then we didn't even get to do any of that. It was a setback.

RG: And Chris Lowe was playing 40 minutes a game.

TF: That added a lot of pressure. We were not a strong offensive basketball team, plain and simple. We were not. And even though defense and rebounding wins, offense makes those things that much better. We didn't have the bodies to press. We didn't have the personnel to press, so hopefully we can get back to that as much as we can.

RG: It seemed like you had to deal with a lot of situations off of the basketball court — Bowers, Maxwell, Stephane Lasme had some issues later in the year. Did that affect you at all as a coach?

TF: What affected me the most was Artie and Maurice leaving — two guys that I respect tremendously. Those things hurt because it's just roster changes and you're losing something.

I'm dealing with 18-, 19-, 20- and 21-year-olds every single day. Things like that are going to happen. What's bad about it is that people don't understand the whole story. People hear one side of it where I see all of the facts of it, exactly what happened, good and bad.

That doesn't set me back as far as my coaching ability. I can be disappointed in players for doing certain things. But I understand the full truth of what's happened. The public doesn't have the full understanding of what went on.

RG: You played point guard at Kentucky and Chris Lowe is playing that position for you now. Is there anything that you would like him to do differently as he develops?

TF: I would like for him to continue to work on his leadership abilities. It's an ongoing process for him, learning to be more outgoing and holding his teammates more accountable. As a point guard you have to make sure your teammates are in the right place at the right time. He's becoming more outgoing, but in order for him to do that he has to gain the respect of his players.

We're going to work on his jumpshot more. He's got a good jumpshot. I think he's hesitant sometimes to take it, not because he doesn't think he's going to make it. I think he thinks, 'I have to pass all of the time.' But he needs to keep the defense honest by making some shots.

The third thing would be getting to the hole. A lot of times, since he's at the front of our defense, he gets some steals. And he needs to be able to go one-on-one with somebody and get inside, create some fouls and get to the foul line a little bit. For a freshman, playing 40 minutes a game and doing what we asked him to do and the pressure we put on him, I'm proud of Chris. He has a long, long way to go to reach the potential that I expect of him, but it was a good start for him.

RG: If you had to do something different as a coach from this past season, what would it be?

TF: I probably would have stuck with our system. It probably would have cost us a few games. But I probably would've said, "Let's keep running the ball, let's keep pressing and doing what we want to do." At the end of games we would have been very tired probably and by the time February got here we'd all be dead.

But I probably would have done that a little bit more because it's just agonizing to score in the 50s and 60s. Defense was our greatest strength. We were one of the top teams in the league in defense and rebounding. We just couldn't score.

RG: What type of players are you recruiting?

TF: We really don't have a guy who can shoot. So if I could have one thing I probably would get a player who can shoot the basketball. But I like our team. I like the players that are in place right now. If you look at the guys that we're adding — Gary Forbes, Luke Bonner, Etienne Brower, Tiki Mayben — they

See FORD on page 9

Minutewomen down Eagles

By Eric Athas
Collegian Staff

Yesterday's match-up between the Massachusetts softball team and the Boston College Eagles was more of a demonstration by two members of the UMass squad. Two players who have very different resumes and duties, but have an equal amount of potential, took control of the contest Rookie Brandice Balshmiter held the Eagle offense at bay all afternoon, and senior offensive threat K.J. Kelley produced enough at the plate to defeat B.C. 6-0.

With that win, the Minutewomen (24-12, 11-1 Atlantic 10) have now been victorious in 15 out of the last 16 contests, and will take on Harvard tomorrow afternoon at the UMass Softball Complex for a double-header beginning at 3 p.m.

Sophomore infielder Stacy Cullington went 1-for-2 with a two-run triple against the Temple Owls on April 15.

Against the Eagles, Kelley didn't hold back. The senior knocked her 40th home run out of the park, while driving in three RBIs. The first two RBIs came right at the start of the contest. After Amanda Morin got things started with the first at-bat, singling to left center field, Candice Molinari was walked after the full-count went her way. Kelley then picked up her first RBIs of the afternoon, with a single down the left field line, which brought in Morin and Molinari.

Sophomore Lauren Proctor then increased the UMass lead to 3-0 with a single to cap off the opening inning.

Kelley's homer to left field in the third inning made it 4-0 UMass. So far this season, the UMass home run queen has registered five homers and 26 RBIs.

Proctor and Molinari kept the game out of reach for B.C. with RBIs in the fifth and sixth innings, as the Minutewomen went on to win 6-0. The offensive production forced the shell-shocked Eagles to go through three different pitchers throughout the game.

The UMass pitcher, on the other hand, had no problem shutting down B.C. Balshmiter made things difficult for the Eagles, allowing no runs, striking out seven batters and allowing just five hits.

The win was her 19th so far this season and she currently holds an ERA of 0.73. With a chunk of the season still left, Balshmiter still has some time to build on her impressive rookie season, as her season strikeout count of 193 is already fifth all-time, just behind Kelly Daunt's 194.

Balshmiter, along with fellow freshman Whitney Mollica, were recently honored once again by the A-10, as the two continue to rack up weekly conference awards. It was announced Monday that Balshmiter is the A-10 Pitcher of the Week, while Mollica is the Rookie of the Week.

It is the seventh time Balshmiter has been awarded by the A-10 and the eighth time for Mollica, who recently broke the school's single-season RBI record. Her 2006 home run total of nine is a team high, with Amanda Acampora behind her with six.

As a team, the Minutewomen now have an even stronger grip on the A-10, losing only once in conference to Charlotte, 2-1, on April 9. They also lead the A-10 in several categories, including team batting and team pitching.

UM track teams place fifth of seven in Rhode Island

By Domenic Poli
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts track and field teams took a trip to Providence, R.I. to compete in the Brown Invitational on Saturday.

It was UMass's third meet of the outdoor season.

Both the Minutemen and Minutewomen placed fifth out of seven teams.

Both head coaches commented that the opposing teams at Saturday's meet were chock-full of talent in every single event, but also that they were pleased with how their respective teams performed against such tough competition.

"I think the meet went very well in the fact that we had some outstanding performances near the top of our order and also some performances from people who didn't place as high in the meet as others," UMass coach Ken O'Brien said. "But at the same time they had improved their performances from the two meets earlier this year."

Such improved performances came from sophomore Kevin Murphy and senior Paul Noone.

Though he finished outside of the point scoring range in his event, the 800-meter, Murphy led the race, according to O'Brien, "all the way through 700-meters. [He] showed a willingness to take the lead at the 500-meter mark and stretched the whole field out through 700m. [But] he got some fatigue on the last straightaway and started to lose his position.

"He was not one of the top-seeded people," O'Brien continued. "But [he] showed the fortitude to take the race over when he wanted to make his move and try to put it away. He came up 100 meters short, but the next time he runs I'm sure he's going to be a lot closer [to finishing first]."

Murphy ended up finishing seventh out of 38 runners.

Noone, a specialist in the steeplechase event (though he also does the mile), missed the entire indoor season due to injuries.

At Saturday's meet, however, he ran his specialty for the first time this spring, recording a time of 9:49.56.

"[His time was] about fifteen seconds off his best," O'Brien said. "But with the lost time during the indoor season, it shows that he's right back on track and hopefully by the time the end of the year comes he'll round into the form that he showed last year as a junior."

The big surprise of the Brown Invitational for the Minutemen was when junior Erik Hoagland's winning streak in the long jump event was snapped. He had claimed victory in the outdoor season's first two meets, but dropped down to fifth place on Saturday with his leap of 22 feet, nine inches. His unexpected drop does not concern his coach, however.

"He's just coming back from an [ankle] injury that he suffered toward the end of the [indoor] season and he obviously couldn't use that month [in between track seasons] to train as hard as he had in the month prior to that," O'Brien said. "It does take time to develop some consistency when you've had a month off."

The other event winner for the Minutemen was sophomore Nils Fischer, who won the 5,000-meter race with a time of 14 minutes, 50.96 seconds, which set the team's new season-best time by over 15 seconds.

The order of finishes at the men's meet was Brown University (249 points), Yale (149 points), South Connecticut State University (137.50), UConn (62), UMass (53), Columbia (25) and Wheaton College (24.50).

Though the brutally tough competition kept the women's team to a fifth place finish, three individual Minutewomen (freshman Jordan Veney, sophomore Christina DeRosa and senior Marissa Callahan) posted performances that rank among the all-time top-5 in school history.

For the second straight meet Veney broke the women's outdoor shot put record. This marks the fifth time this school year that she

See TRACK on page 10

Hanson leads Americans in '06 Marathon

By Jimmy Golen
Associated Press

BOSTON — Far enough outside Detroit to find the hills he needed, Kevin Hanson hung a replica of the landmark neon Citgo sign that hovers over Kenmore Square — part of a "course simulator" designed to train runners for the Boston Marathon.

It was just a poster produced by the running coach's seven-year-old daughter. But when Brian Sell passed under the real sign in this year's race, he knew immediately that he had one mile to go.

"When you're half out of it and you don't know where you are, you see that Citgo sign and I know," said Sell, whose fourth-place finish was part of the best American showing in the event's prize money era. "It trains the mind, I guess."

Sell trained with the Brooks-Hansons team that put seven runners in the top 22 in Monday's Boston Marathon, which was won by Kenyans Robert Cheruiyot and Rita Jeptoo. No American man has won since 1983, but this year the U.S. put five in the top 10, including Nos. three, four and five.

"That proves that it can be done by an American. But we still don't have any Americans sitting up at that table, yet," said Hanson, who established the training camp in Rochester, Mich., with his brother, Keith.

"We're pleased with today, but for today only," Kevin Hanson said. "The goal wasn't to be a good human interest story. The ultimate goal is to have the wreath put on an American's head."

The Hanson brothers decided to open the camp after watching the Kenyans take one of their 14 men's races in the past 16 years. Coaches who own a chain of running stores, they bought three houses in the same neighborhood, with 17 bedrooms for runners to rent.

"We would be watching the Boston Marathon and waiting for the first American to cross the finish line. And we said, 'Why is this happening?'" Hanson said. "We don't believe the usual reason people give, which is that East Africans are genetically superior at running marathons. It's not what the East Africans are doing well, but what Americans are doing poorly."

The Hansons thought about what worked for running clubs in the past — notably the Greater Boston Track Club that produced champions Bill Rodgers and Greg Meyer. Those clubs ran together every day, and they ran on the course where they would be competing.

"They ran on Heartbreak Hill. They knew every crack, every crevice of the course," Hanson said. "But we didn't want to run the Boston Marathon before we ran the Boston Marathon."

Because it would be impossible to commute to Boston every morning for training, the Hansons set up the "Boston simulator," a 26.2 kilometer course — that's kilometers, not miles — with all the relevant landmarks but a more manageable training distance.

About halfway through was a Wellesley sign, with pictures of girls cut out of magazines by Samantha Hanson; at 20K, there was a hill to give runners practice for Heartbreak Hill; and, of course, the Citgo sign welcomed them to the last kilometer.

Sell said the practice helped prepare him for one of the distance's more grueling races.

"Running is a lot physical and a lot mental," Sell said. "It's about building your fitness and your confidence, too.

"Every day, we go out and push each other. The big thing is, these guys train with me every day, and they say, 'Hey, I locked that guy's butt in training. I can do that, too.'"

Seven members of the Hansons were joined by fellow Americans Meb Keflezighi (third), Alan Culpepper (fifth)

See HANSON on page 10

New England's Largest College Daily • Est. 1890

The Daily Collegian

Thursday, April 20, 2006 www.dailycollegian.com Volume CXVI Issue 118

A reason to raise funds

The Sigma Phi Epsilon fraternity camps out to raise money for cancer research. One frat brother and another brother's mother were diagnosed with cancer, giving the group an extra reason to raise the funds. Sig Ep has raised $500 already, but doesn't plan on packing up their tent until they raise $2,000.

Defendent's mental state questioned

By Megan Daley
Collegian Staff

Bryan R. Johnston's symptoms of a delusional mental state came under question as testimony continued at yesterday's murder trial.

Attorney Renee Steese questioned Dr. Martin Kelly, a lead psychiatrist at Brigham and Women's Hospital in Boston, regarding his and other doctor's statements that concluded Johnston was in an "active delusional state" at the time of David E. "Sully" Sullivan's murder.

On Dec. 7, 2004, Johnston allegedly went to Sullivan's home and shot him to death. Though Johnston's defense does not deny that Johnston was the murderer, they are now trying to prove that he was mentally unstable at the time.

Kelly, who conducted two personal interviews with Johnston, had also spoken to other doctors who had evaluated Johnston before his commitment to the Bridgewater State Hospital psychiatric ward.

Steese asked Kelly if he thought there was chance that Johnston was "malingering," or faking his delusional mental symptoms. Kelly indicated that he had thought Johnston's problems were sincere.

Steese, however, pointed out that Johnston did have information about the symptoms of schizophrenia at his fingertips. She pointed out that Johnston had taken several psychology and criminal justice courses. Steese also said that on Dec. 5, two days before Sullivan's murder, one of Johnston's classes required him to read a chapter called "Mental Disorders" from the book "Sociology of Deviant Behavior."

In this chapter, the symptoms for mental disorders such as schizophrenia were discussed. The chapter also referred to a case study in which people with no mental disorders checked into the psychiatric ward and fooled the staff of the ward.

Kelly, however, countered that the book does not go into great detail as to the specific symptoms of schizophrenia and that there is no proof that Johnston even read the chapter. Kelly also said that even if Johnston had read the chapter, it would not have affected his evaluation of Johnston's mental state.

Steese also asked Kelly if he had any proof that Johnston's fixed delusional state was active at the time of the murder, saying that Johnston's history of mental illness was not as important as his mental state when he shot Sullivan. Kelly admitted that he had no specific evidence of Johnston's mental states on those two nights.

However, Kelly also said that

See TRIAL on page 2

Senators urge Congress to cut student loans

By Zach Ahmad
UWire (D.C. Bureau)

WASHINGTON — Two key Democratic lawmakers are promoting a bill to cut the interest rates for student loans in half in response to large budget cuts made to student aid earlier this year.

The "Reverse the Raid on Student Aid Act," introduced April 13 by Rep. George Miller and Sen. Dick Durbin, would lower interest rates on federally subsidized student loans from 6.8 percent to 3.4 percent and cut parent loans from 8.5 percent to 4.25 percent.

Given estimates showing that the average college student will graduate with roughly $17,500 of debt, the lawmakers said the bill would save the typical student $5,600 over the life of the loan.

In a conference call with several media outlets last week, the congressmen said it is important for Congress to affirm its commitment to making higher education affordable to anyone who seeks it.

"We think this is important at a time of year when students and families and others are filling out applications, visiting campuses, trying to figure out who's going to pay for that education when their students get accepted by a school to go to next year," Miller said. "It is a critical time of the year, and we should send a signal that [they] will be able to afford that education and not be crushed by debt."

The proposal comes after Congress passed more than $12 billion in student aid cuts — largely by means of increased interest rates — as part of a comprehensive budget reconciliation bill that will go into effect July 1. Debate over the issue was largely split along party lines.

Durbin and Miller have also established an online forum for students to post anecdotes and commentary about their struggles to cope with college costs, and urged students and parents alike to urge their Congressmen to support the new bill.

Durbin said the bill is critical to counter the constantly rising cost of a college education, which he said is forcing more and more young people to forgo college entirely rather than be saddled with substantial student loans.

"They have to take the best paying job ... and sometimes that may not be the job they want or the best job for America," Durbin said. "I think that if we're committed to our students and future generations and giving them the options they need to make this a better nation, we need to undo the harm that's been done to this bill."

The lawmakers said it will be difficult to bring the bill to the House floor, but that they are hopeful they will receive bipartisan support for the measure as attention on the issue increases.

SGA funds area governments' Spring events

By Matt Bellveau
Collegian Staff

The Student Government Association of the University of Massachusetts passed two motions to allocate funds for both the Central and Orchard Hill area governments for productions of their Spring events.

Orchard Hill, which has had a Spring event called Bowl Weekend for over 40 years in a row, had originally asked the Finance committee for $8,000. They were given only $6,212, $2,400 of which went towards a giant outdoor movie screen and projector and $800 towards necessary movie licensing fees to obtain permission to show certain films.

The SGA also awarded the Central area government $1,310.

"This is the first time in four years that the Central area government has had their own Spring event," said Central area governor Zach Caunter.

Officials from Orchard Hill attributed the need for additional funds to the adding of two extra days to the originally two-day event.

Some senators were vocally upset that Orchard Hill received nearly five times as much funding as Central.

"I'm not against spring events," said Senator Jenn Kennedy. "These events should be funded by per student ratio. Central has a much larger student body then Orchard Hill and they're getting substantially less funding."

"They're spending more money in two days than Sylvan spends on their entire weekends," said Senator John Williams.

Chairman of the Finance Committee Peter Barros explained the funding gap, stating that Central representatives had received exactly what they had asked for in their proposals.

"Central governors asked for $1,310, and that's what we gave them," said Barros. "Orchard Hill wanted $8,000 and we had to knock that down to $6,212. If Central had asked for more money, I think they would have gotten it."

Eric Robbie, a member of the SGA's Public Policy and Relations Committee addresses the Senate as the group votes to allocate funds to area governments.

SGA Chairwoman Mallary Kohlmeyer addressed Orchard Hill's ability to hold successful events while questioning Central's events' past success.

"Orchard Hill has had successful events for over 40 years," said Kohlmeyer. "Besides their 'Middle School dance' this year, I can't remember the last time Central had a successful event."

Secret program to hide reclassification revealed

By Alexandra Aaron
UWire (D.C. Bureau)

WASHINGTON — In response to a Freedom of Information Act request, the National Archives and Records Administration has released two "Memorandum of Understanding" documents detailing a program to secretly withdraw and reclassify documents held by the federal government. The memos were themselves reclassified in 2001 and 2002.

Government archivists began reclassifying thousands of pages of public documents during the Clinton administration in cooperation with the Air Force, CIA, Defense Department and other federal entities. The recently re-released memos said the reclassified documents contain information that could "harm the national security interests of the United States by revealing sensitive sources and methods of intelligence collection."

"It is in the interests of both [deleted agency] and the National Archives and Records Administration to avoid the attention and researcher complaints that may arise from removing material that has already been publicly available from the open shelves for extended periods of time," said the memo.

The request for the first memo was put forward by the National Security Archive, a non-governmental group at George Washington University that works to declassify historical federal documents under the Freedom of Information Act. Archive analyst William Burr requested the first memo Feb. 1, after archive staff and historian Matthew Aid made complaints to the National Archives and Records Administration about the reclassification of documents.

"The secret agreement reveals nothing less than a covert operation to white-out the nation's history aided and abetted by the National Archives," National Security Archive executive director Thomas Blanton said of the government's secret program to classify the already public documents.

In a House Government Reform subcommittee hearing chaired by Representative Christopher Shays, R-Conn., Shays said the program was not in the nation's best interest.

"This absurd effort to put the toothpaste back into the tube persists despite growing consensus — supported by testimony before this subcommittee — that from 50 to 90 percent of the material currently withheld should not be classified at all," he said.

National Security Archive Executive Director Thomas Blanton spoke out against reclassification.

ARTS & LIVING

NEW MUSIC THURSDAY

New music from Built to Spill and Eagles of Death Metal reviewed.

Page 6

EDITORIAL/OPINION

OUR NEW EDITOR-IN-CHIEF ELECT

Find out who he is and how he plans to change the Collegian.

Page 5

WEATHER

TODAY
High 75
Sunny

TONIGHT
Low 40
Mostly Clear

TOMORROW
High 65
Low 35
Mostly Sunny

SPORTS

CLASH OF ECAC TITANS

UMass squares off against rival Georgetown on Saturday.

Page 14

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Michael Busack
MANAGING EDITOR Eric Athas
BUSINESS MANAGER Nathan Chomsky
PRODUCTION MANAGER Nicholas Belanger
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Katie Huston
ADVERTISING MANAGER Kerry O'Grady
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Lauren Egerian
EDITORIAL PRODUCTION Amanda Allen
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Ian Jones
COMICS EDITOR Amanda Allen
EDITORIAL EDITOR Kristen LaCasse
NEWS EDITOR Dan O'Brien
SPORTS EDITOR Jeff Howe
CIRCULATION MANAGER Thomas Hechi
DISTRIBUTION MANAGER Nick Gleason
FINANCE MANAGER Daniel Conti
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Caren Tortorici
ASSISTANT BUSINESS Phil Smoller
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Morgan-Ann Rousseau
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Alex Butler
ASSISTANT NEWS Megan Daley
ASSISTANT NEWS Matt Bellheau
ASSISTANT SPORTS Dan Duggan
ASSISTANT SPORTS Rob Greenfield
ASSISTANT EDITORIAL Tucker Merrick

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS AGGIE LIFE, BECAME THE COLLEGE SIGNAL IN 1901, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914 AND THE TRI-WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1956. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967, THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN BROADSHEET SINCE JANUARY 1994. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL 545-3500 BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 3:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Nick Belanger

COPY EDITOR
Meghan Murphy

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Amanda Allen

PRODUCTION STAFF
Tiffany Van Langen, Jesse Sussman

If you see news happening, call us at 545-1809 and snap a photo with your cell phone, then send it to news@dailycollegian.com

Boston archdiocese releases audit showing deficit

By Denise Lavoie
Associated Press

BOSTON — The Boston Archdiocese, responding to calls for financial accountability in the wake of the clergy sex abuse crisis and widespread parish closings, on Wednesday released the results of a two-year audit that shows a deficit that threatens programs and ministries.

The audit, which covered the 2004 and 2005 fiscal years, shows a $46.3 million deficit, despite assets of nearly $330 million. Most of that money is restricted or earmarked for specific purposes.

Cardinal Sean O'Malley warned the church's finances are jeopardizing its work in the community, though he did not give specifics, and said the numbers also reflect anger over the clergy sex abuse scandal and recent church closings.

"When we look at the decrease in revenue over previous years, we see clearly that our programs and ministries are at risk," O'Malley wrote in a letter to parishioners that accompanied the audit, which was released at a news conference.

"It is also clear that the revenue numbers reflect the painful experience of our recent past, the anger over the sexual abuse crisis and the closing of parishes," O'Malley wrote. "These numbers are one response of a wounded community, an expression of deep hurt and a measure of our need to remain focused on the long process of healing that lies ahead."

The archdiocese plans to reduce the number of cabinet secretaries from 12 to eight and reorganize its administration with a goal of a having a balanced budget by fiscal 2008.

"You can't really fix the operations unless you fix the management," said James O'Connor, chairman of a committee looking at the archdiocese operations and management, who accompanied O'Malley at the news conference.

O'Malley sought to reassure parishioners that donations and money from church closings were not used to defray the $150 million in lawsuit settlements and other costs related to the sex abuse scandal.

O'Malley stressed those funds came from a variety of sources, property sales including part of the Brighton property to Boston College, insurance coverage and specific donations to fund therapy for survivors.

In his letter, O'Malley noted recent decades have seen drops in Mass attendance, the number of priests and students at Catholic school, and said the trends must be reversed to create new Catholic leaders in the church and society at large.

"While our revenue is inadequate to fund our ministries, cultural and demographic trends show that those ministries have never been more needed," he said.

The release of the financial information seeks to satisfy critics and parishioners who had demanded to know more about the archdiocese's finances since it spent $85 million in 2003 to settle claims from more than 550 people who were sexually abused by priests. The following year, as O'Malley began a massive restructuring to close more than 80 churches, angry parishioners again called for an accounting of how their donations were being spent.

Annual appeal donations that totaled $15.5 million in 2001 dropped to $11.6 million in 2005, according to the audit. The archdiocese has been selling property to help cover costs, and has little property left to sell.

The audit, and the letter accompanying it, are available at the archdiocese's Web site and will be published in a special edition of the archdiocese's newspaper, The Pilot.

The release of the information completes a promise O'Malley made for better financial disclosure last fall, when the state Legislature was debating a bill that would have required all religious organizations to file annual financial reports with the state. Critics saw his pledge as a tactic designed to kill the legislation while allowing the archdiocese to release only limited financial information.

The bill was defeated in the House of Representatives in January.

O'Malley was scheduled to meet Wednesday afternoon with priests of the archdiocese to discuss the financial results.

A.S.K./Reist Associated Press

Cardinal O'Malley has assured parishioners that their church donations will not go to fund deficits caused by the sex scandal.

Sullivan central to Johnston's delusions, says witness

TRIAL from page 1

Johnston's disease is not one that comes and goes, and only the intensity of it may vary. Kelly said that Johnston's paranoia and belief that "people were out to get him" was also the only credible reason for Johnston to shoot Sullivan.

Sullivan was a central part of Johnston's delusion and one that Johnston often revisited, saying that Sullivan was after him and that he had ordered people to rape Johnston in Hawaii.

Steese countered that homicides are committed for all reasons, great and small, saying that there was a demographic of young males that had committed murder because the victim was "disrespecting them." Steese wondered if that might also be the case for Johnston and Sullivan, pointing out that reports indicate that Sullivan had often stood up to Johnston, even taking away his gun at one point.

A statement from Johnston and Sullivan's friend also stated that if Johnston were to kill anybody, it would be Sullivan, because "they had the most friction between them stemming from arguments when they were drunk."

Kelly maintained, however, that he believed that the reason Johnston killed Sullivan was because of Johnston's delusional belief that Sullivan was setting him up and possibly plotting to kill him.

Kim Johnston, Johnston's sister, also testified yesterday. Kim, who is a 32-year-old psychiatric nurse, said that she had tried to convince her brother to seek help for his delusions, but had never reported his behavior or recommended that he be involuntarily committed.

Jeremy Lebernoch, a friend of both Sullivan and Johnston, was asked about Johnston's previous accusations and assaults on friends. Lebernoch related an incident in which Johnston had attacked him for wearing a red shirt, believing that he was a member of the Bloods, a gang.

Evan Donovan also spoke about Johnston's attack on Lebernoch, remembering the time that Johnston came to his house, armed, planning to shoot Lebernoch. Donovan managed to calm Johnston down at the time, but never reported the incident to the police or contacted Johnston's parents.

Judge Bertha Josephson encouraged jurors at several points during the trial to use the testimony offered by doctors about Johnston only to judge his mental state at the time of the murder and not to use that testimony to judge the character of the defendant.

The jury also lost juror #14, leaving them with a 15-person panel. Judge Josephson told the court that the juror had left due to "unforeseen circumstances" and encouraged the jurors not to dwell on the fact, but to continue to pay attention to the case.

SENIORS-
GOT SOMETHING TO SAY?

Leave your mark!

The Daily Collegian is currently seeking essay submissions from graduating seniors

Write a 750 word piece about the UMass experience and how its shaped you. Bring submissions to 113 campus center basement

Top 3 will be published in the graduation edition on May 15th and 16th

All entries must be received by April 21 at 4 pm
Questions? Call 545-3500

U.S. asks U.N. nuclear agency to pressure Iran

By George Jahn
Associated Press

VIENNA, Austria — The United States may turn to the U.N. nuclear watchdog agency to exert more pressure on Iran out of frustration with Russian and Chinese opposition to firm Security Council action, diplomats said Wednesday.

The diplomats told The Associated Press that the U.S. delegation to the International Atomic Energy Agency has contacted other nations over the past few days to gauge support for a special IAEA board meeting on Iran's nuclear program.

The envoys, who were familiar with the discussions but spoke on condition of anonymity because they were not authorized to reveal the American initiative, emphasized that no decisions had been made.

Adam Ereli, a State Department spokesman, said the United States was waiting for a report later this month by IAEA chief Mohamed ElBaradei about Iran's nuclear program.

"We will study that report carefully and decide on next steps at that time," Ereli said.

Still, diplomats' statements that Washington might consider such action were significant.

U.S. officials have for weeks been publicly in favor of shifting international attention over Iran's nuclear program from the Vienna-based IAEA — which has no enforcement authority — to the Security Council, which has the power to impose sanctions backed by the threat of military force.

Years of U.S. lobbying paid off in February, when the IAEA's 35-nation board agreed to refer Iran's nuclear file to the Security Council. But since then, the council's five veto-holding members have been divided, with Russia and China opposing efforts by the U.S., France and Britain to move from requesting Iranian compliance to demanding it.

The split appeared to persist Wednesday.

Russian Foreign Minister Sergey Lavrov urged Iran to halt all uranium enrichment after a meeting in Moscow among senior officials of the five permanent council members plus Germany, but he acknowledged the talks produced no decision on how to proceed if Tehran failed to comply.

U.S. Undersecretary of State Nicholas Burns told AP in Moscow that the possibility of sanctions had been discussed but indicated more talks were needed.

"What is new is a greater sense of urgency given what the Iranians did last week," Burns said later to reporters, alluding to Iran's announcement that it had succeeded in enriching uranium.

Burns, echoing a statement Tuesday by President Bush, did not reject the possibility of a military response.

"Obviously, the United States always keeps all options on the table ... but we're focused on diplomacy," he said.

In Paris, French President Jacques Chirac and Egyptian President Hosni Mubarak said they opposed military intervention in Iran.

"We have to explore all the possibilities offered by a diplomatic option in order to avoid a destabilization of the Middle East, and probably of the rest of the world," Chirac said at a joint news conference.

Military strikes on Iran "would have very grave effects" on the region, Mubarak said.

British Prime Minister Tony Blair, Bush's closest ally in the invasion of Iraq, told his Parliament that "nobody is talking about military invasion" of Iran.

But he also urged the international community to send a strong, unified message to Tehran. "I do not think it is time to send a message of weakness," he said.

Lavrov said no decisions had been expected at Tuesday's meeting because the nations were waiting for the IAEA's report. He said Russia wants the report to be reviewed by the IAEA board before it goes to the Security Council.

Rove gives up key administrative policy role

By Terence Hunt
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — White House political mastermind Karl Rove surrendered a key policy role Wednesday and press secretary Scott McClellan resigned in an escalation of a Bush administration shake-up driven by Republican anxieties.

Rove gave up his responsibilities as chief policy coordinator, a position he assumed just over a year ago that strengthened his influence over matters ranging from homeland security and domestic policy to the economy and national security. The promotion had left him stretched too thin in the eyes of some officials, as the White House grappled with mounting problems.

With Wednesday's change, Rove will be able to focus more on politics, fundraising and big-picture thinking with the approach of the November congressional elections, officials said.

A major force in the administration from the start, Rove still is expected to have a big voice in policy but not the day-to-day oversight. Those responsibilities will shift to Joel Kaplan, who was promoted to deputy chief of staff from the No. 2 job in the White House budget office where he had served as Joshua Bolten's lieutenant.

Bolten took over Friday as chief of staff with authority to do whatever he deemed necessary to stabilize Bush's presidency, and he has moved quickly with changes.

With the Iraq war hanging over Bush, the White House has been rocked by mistakes and missteps — from an ill-fated Supreme Court nomination to a bungled response to Hurricane Katrina — that have resulted in the president's plunge in the polls to the lowest point since he took office. Nervous Republicans told Bush he needed fresh people with new ideas.

McClellan, the press secretary for nearly three years, was the public face of the White House and a vulnerable target in an administration trying to show off new people. He had been bloodied by contentious press briefings and media criticism about an administration loath to give up information.

"The White House is going through a period of transition. Change can be helpful, and this is a good time and good position to help bring about change," McClellan said, his voice choked with emotion as he stood alongside Bush outside the White House. "I am ready to move on."

In recent months, McClellan had told people he enjoyed his job and wanted to stay for the long term. He said Wednesday he started to think about leaving in the past few weeks and concluded, with a new chief of staff, that it was a good time to go. He and Bush came to a decision in a meeting Monday in the Oval Office.

"I have given it my all, sir, and I have given you my all, sir, and I will continue to do so as we transition to a new press secretary," McClellan said.

"It's going to be hard to replace Scott," Bush said. "But, nevertheless, he's made the decision and I accept it. ... Job well done."

Bush patted McClellan on the back and they walked together across the South Lawn to the president's helicopter to begin a trip to Alabama. But the aircraft couldn't get off the ground because its radio failed, and they had to take a motorcade.

McClellan will remain until a successor is named. Possibilities mentioned include Tony Snow, host of a program on Fox News Radio, Dan Senor, former coalition spokesman in Iraq, Trent Duffy, former White House deputy press secretary and former Treasury spokesman Rob Nichols.

More changes are expected. White House officials have done nothing to discourage speculation that Treasury Secretary John Snow is leaving. Bush's communications chief, Nicolle Wallace, also is expected to depart because her husband has taken a new job in New York. Changes also are expected in the White House lobbying shop run by Candida Wolff.

The shake-up began with the March 28 resignation of Andy Card, Bush's longtime chief of staff, and his replacement by Bolten. Just this week, Bush has named a new budget chief and a new trade representative and is moving toward choosing a new domestic policy adviser.

Kaplan, the new deputy chief of staff, will take over from Rove as coordinator of policy developed within the Domestic Policy Council, the National Economic Council, the National Security Council and the Homeland Security Council. A trusted aide to Bolten, he will be the new chief's right-hand man.

"Joel Kaplan is a man of great talent, intellect and experience who possesses a deep knowledge of policy and budget processes," Bush said in a written statement.

Rove and Joe Hagin, who oversees White House administration, intelligence and national security, will remain as deputy chiefs of staff.

Rove still is under investigation by Special Counsel Patrick Fitzgerald for his role in the leak of Valerie Plame's CIA identity.

The episode also brought problems for McClellan. He at first denied Rove had played any part in the leak, saying he based his account on Rove himself. But later it was revealed that Rove had been a source for at least two reporters.

McClellan said Kaplan would focus on the day-to-day management of the policy process. "And so this really frees Karl up to focus on bigger strategic issues," the spokesman said. "He will continue to be a crucial voice and trusted adviser on policy ... as he has since the beginning of this administration."

AP

Karl Rove recently gave up his responsibilities as chief policy coordinator of the Bush administration. However, Rove is still an active member of that administration.

Scott McClellan resigned as the Bush administration's press secretary. He says that he plans to remain on staff until is replacement is trained.

UMass Sports Night: Tips and Tales from Careers in Sports Media

Come Hear Guest Speakers:
- Elliot Kalb - Sports Emmy winner and author of Who's Better, Who's Best in Baseball?
- Dan Wetzel - Yahoo sports columnist and co-author of Glory Road
- Wendi Nix - Sports caster for WHDH 7 NEWS Boston
- Matt Sacco 04' - Manager of Sunrise Sports and Entertainment

Win Prizes
Team up with a speaker and play the sports trivia contest!
Prizes include Red Sox hats, autographed books, gift certificates to favorite area restaurants.

Win Free Raffle of package of 4 seats to Red Sox Game!
FREE PIZZA!

WHEN: Thursday, April 20
TIME: 7-9 pm (Pizza and booksigning begins at 6 pm)
WHERE: The Blue Wall

Sponsored by the UMass Journalism Program's Lecture Series:
"Broadcast and the Media"

RUTGERS
New Brunswick/Piscataway
The State University of New Jersey

SUMMER SESSION 2006

• Undergraduate & Graduate courses • Morning, afternoon and evening classes • Saturday morning classes
• Outstanding faculty • Off-campus courses

REGISTER NOW!

SUMMER SESSION I May 30 - July 7
SUMMER SESSION II June 26 - August 4
SUMMER SESSION III July 10 - August 16

THE STATE UNIVERSITY OF NEW JERSEY RUTGERS

summersession.rutgers.edu

BROUGHT TO YOU BY YOUR NEW ENGLAND FORD DEALERS

MASS FUSION

Come join us at Mass Fusion from 10am - 3pm on Tuesday April 25th at the Campus Center Lawn and you could win Red Sox Tickets and other great prizes

Government plans to kill infected flocks

By Libby Quaid
Associated Press

KNT

Bird flu can make people sick only if they've been directly exposed to infected birds. However, the strain of bird flu could change itself into a brand-new strain that allows it to jump from human to human.

WASHINGTON (AP) — Free-ranging chickens and small, backyard flocks will be at greatest risk if deadly bird flu reaches the United States, officials said Wednesday.

They also said they would begin killing off flocks large or small if they are suspected of having the virus — even before tests are completed.

Authorities say bird flu is likely to arrive in the United States this year.

If and when it does, "quick detection will be key to quickly containing it and eradicating it," Ron DeHaven said in an interview with The Associated Press. He is head of the Agriculture Department's Animal and Plant Health Inspection Service.

Most of America's chickens come from big commercial farms that keep birds indoors and are well-protected against the spread of disease. Yet there are many flocks in people's back yards — as many as 60,000 in Los Angeles alone — as well as free-range flocks that are outdoors and could mix with wild birds or their droppings.

Officials encourage those producers to bring flocks inside and watch for signs of flu — dead birds; lack of appetite; purple wattles, combs and legs; coughing or sneezing; diarrhea — and report them immediately to state or federal authorities.

"We can't afford for this virus to be smoldering six months before we find it," DeHaven said.

The U.S. has a poultry industry worth more than $29 billion that produces more than 9 billion chickens and 250 million turkeys a year, more than any other country.

Owners will want to report sick birds because they will be paid fair market value for destroyed flocks, DeHaven said. Stopping the spread of bird flu has been more difficult in countries that can't afford to compensate farmers, he added. To target owners of small flocks, the Agriculture Department has an outreach campaign that uses Spanish and Vietnamese as well as English in materials and ads.

The virulent strain of bird flu spreading through Asia, Europe and Africa has killed 110 people, and more than 200 million birds have died from the disease or been slaughtered in efforts to contain it. Scientists fear it could mutate into a form that spreads easily among people, sparking a worldwide epidemic.

The government will be testing more wild birds than usual this year, as many as 100,000, as birds begin arriving next month in Alaska and then fly south along migratory pathways. Chicken and turkey companies are testing nearly every flock for the virus.

"If the virus does arrive in the U.S., we think we'll find it quickly," DeHaven said. "We don't think that it would ever make it into the food chain."

Regardless, poultry is safe to eat if people cook it to 165 degrees and follow basic kitchen safety rules, he said.

If the virus turns up in commercial chickens or turkeys, the government plans to quarantine the farm, restrict bird movements within about two miles and boost testing within about six miles.

If screening tests suggest a potentially virulent flu virus is present, and the birds show signs of flu, they'll be killed immediately, even before more detailed testing is finished, DeHaven said. Flocks would be confined and killed with carbon dioxide gas, essentially putting them to sleep, DeHaven said. Authorities refer to this as "depopulation."

Disposal of dead birds is tricky, because they still may carry the virus. In the past, large numbers of birds have been buried, put in landfills or incinerated, but those procedures can be expensive and cause bureaucratic hassles.

Relatives of 9/11 victims testify at trial

By Matthew Barakat
Associated Press

ALEXANDRIA, Va. — Two relatives of Sept. 11 victims testified for the defense Wednesday in Zacarias Moussaoui's death-penalty sentencing trial. One told the jury her family does not want to "get caught in a whirlpool of sadness and anger."

Medical sociologist Marilynn Rosenthal, whose son Josh was killed at the World Trade Center, said her family feels strongly "Something good has to come out of what happened" and family members have endowed an annual lecture on 9/11 at the University of Michigan, where she teaches.

Robin Theurkauf, whose husband, Tom, died in the South Tower, also testified that "the Bible attempts to explain that we are all sinners, all broken people, but all children of God and loved by God."

Several members of the jury, which heard heart-rending tales during the prosecution case from almost four dozen victims and their relatives, leaned forward when they realized relatives were there to testify on behalf of the team trying to save the 37-year-old Frenchman from execution.

Earlier a second defense expert to diagnose Moussaoui as a paranoid schizophrenic testified that mental illness probably afflicted Moussaoui throughout his time as an al-Qaida operative.

Psychiatrist Michael First, who edits the diagnostic manual used by the psychiatric profession, described for jurors how Moussaoui's mental illness apparently affected his ability to function within al-Qaida and his ability to prepare a defense for his death penalty trial.

First said Moussaoui's schizophrenia manifests through paranoid delusions and through disorganized thought and speech.

He said this is consistent with earlier trial testimony that al-Qaida leaders considered Moussaoui paranoid and even "cuckoo," and was unable to follow basic orders, like minimizing phone contact with others in al-Qaida. Sept. 11 mastermind Khalid Shaikh Mohammed said in a written summary given to jurors that he wanted to dismiss Moussaoui from the planned hijacking operations altogether.

The illness has also affected Moussaoui's ability to defend himself at trial. Specifically, his delusion, fueled by a dream, that President Bush will free him from prison, has left him indifferent to what the jury thinks of him.

"It has allowed him to act in a way that is self-defeating and harmful," First said, referencing the two times Moussaoui has taken the stand in self-defense and done his case more harm than good.

First is the second defense expert to conclude Moussaoui is a schizophrenic, but First was able to more clearly relate Moussaoui's illness to his often bizarre and self-defeating actions.

Also on Wednesday, an expert on cults testified that Moussaoui's isolation from family and social support networks left him vulnerable to recruitment by al-Qaida, the terrorist network.

Psychologist Paul R. Martin, a former cult member who now runs a treatment center for cult victims in Albany, Ohio, said French Moroccans like Moussaoui generally feel alienated from Western society and his state of mind suffered even more when he left France in 1992 to study international business in London.

"He's away from his family. He's lonely. He's complained about racism. He's in a new country, and he doesn't have any support group," Martin said, describing Moussaoui's embrace of radical Islam in the mid-1990s.

On cross examination, Martin acknowledged studies exist that find most al-Qaida terrorists come from stable families, middle-class backgrounds and have a college education.

Martin's testimony was allowed by U.S. District Judge Leonie Brinkema, but at the insistence of prosecutors, the judge barred any suggestion from Martin or others that Moussaoui had been brainwashed by al-Qaida.

While not specific to Moussaoui, defense lawyers introduced information from a 2003 CIA report that stated al-Qaida training camps in Afghanistan "used brainwashing techniques to cement loyalty" among recruits.

Moussaoui said as he was led out of the courtroom at a recess, "Moussaoui fly over the cuckoo's nest," the latest Hollywood-inspired interjection mocking those who question his sanity.

Much of the mental-health testimony has revolved around Moussaoui's belief Bush will set him free. Prosecutors and defense lawyers differ on whether that belief is a schizophrenic delusion or a fundamentalist Muslim's article of faith.

Moussaoui's defense team contends his belief about Bush shows he has lost touch with reality. They hope evidence that Moussaoui suffers from mental illness will persuade a jury to spare his life.

Moussaoui is the only person charged in this country in the Sept. 11 attacks. The jury deciding his fate has already declared him eligible for the death penalty by determining that his actions caused at least one death that day.

Even though Moussaoui was in jail in Minnesota at the time of the attacks, the jury ruled that lies he told federal agents a month before the attacks kept authorities from identifying and stopping some of the hijackers.

They must decide whether to sentence him to death or to life in prison.

Passengers remain calm, wait for rescue

By Tom Hays
Associated Press

NEW YORK — Stranded in cable cars hundreds of feet above the East River, the passengers kept calm by telling jokes and playing cell phone ringtones. All the while, police scrambled to get them down, at one point hoisting baby formula, diapers and snacks into a car containing two babies.

It was one of several improvisations police and engineers were forced to perform Tuesday night during a painstaking rescue mission that took nearly 12 hours. Officials Wednesday were focused on why the tram, now shut down, malfunctioned for the second time in less than a year.

Some of the 69 people rescued, however, felt good enough to marvel at their unnerving adventure after emerging unscathed from the two stuck cars.

Dax Maier, 12, said the mood in his car was almost festive, with people singing and joking to pass time.

"Sometimes you can find great people in New York," Dax said in appearances on morning television shows.

Not that there weren't problems.

"Well, there was this one kid who peed in a cup," he said.

Police were forced to mount a daring midair rescue using a diesel-powered rescue bucket, capable of holding 12 people, that moved along the tram line. It wasn't until 11 p.m. — more than five hours after the cars stalled — that the first batch of passengers from the car nearest Roosevelt Island was slowly pulled into the bucket.

Dax recalled telling himself not to look down while being rescued.

On the Manhattan side, an industrial crane was summoned to save passengers in the second car, including 13- and 14-month-old infants who slept through their rescues.

"New Yorkers are resilient," said Detective Michael Fiol, one of the rescuers with the police Emergency Service Unit. "We all know that."

The last passengers were pulled out at 4:07 a.m., police said. A dog also was among those rescued.

The incident raised questions about the safety and reliability of the 30-year-old tram, which its operator says is the only commuter cable car system in North America. Normally, thousands of New Yorkers and tourists take the five-minute ride between Manhattan and Roosevelt Island every day.

"I've been assured by the state that that tram will not go back into service until everything is known about what happened and why, and the appropriate steps are taken to make sure that it doesn't malfunction in the future," Mayor Michael Bloomberg said.

The Roosevelt Island tram, operated by a corporation and overseen by the state, remained closed Wednesday while undergoing an inspection by the state Labor Department.

Gov. George Pataki said the tram had passed recent inspections and "was in good working order" when a possible power surge caused it to stall at 5:30 p.m. Tuesday.

Mass. lawmakers discuss new issues

BOSTON (AP) — Last week's signing of the state's landmark health care reform law not only ended months of tense negotiations on Beacon Hill, it also opened the floodgates for dozens of bills stuck in the legislative pipeline.

Lawmakers are now free to pick from a grab bag of pending issues, from allowing the purchase of hypodermic needles without a prescription and increasing the state's minimum wage to toughening teen driving laws and overhauling the state's welfare rules.

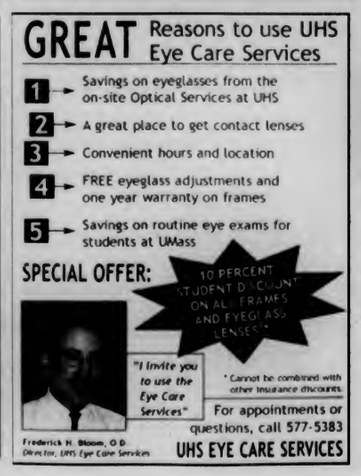
But the Statehouse clock is ticking.

The Legislature's formal session ends July 31 and the House and Senate still must debate and approve a final version of the hefty state budget by the end of June.

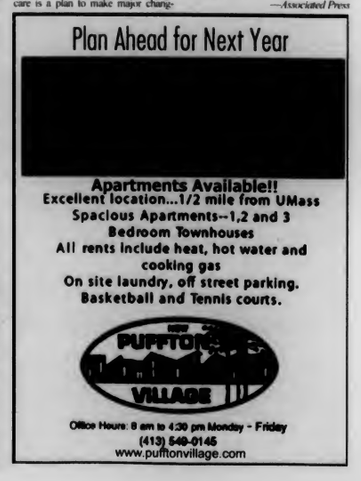
One of the bills hung up by the months-long haggling over health care is a plan to make major changes to Massachusetts' welfare system designed to bring the state regulations closer in line with federal rules. About 14,000 people in Massachusetts who now receive benefits wouldn't get them under the federal rules.

Gov. Mitt Romney has pushed for state regulations that closely mirror the federal rules, but Democratic lawmakers have pushed to create a small, parallel system that keep benefits in place for recipients who don't qualify under federal rules.

The single biggest bill moving forward now that the health care bill is finished is the annual state budget.



The House plans to start debating the bill next week. Lawmakers will have to wade through 1,600 proposed amendments to the spending plan before approving the budget and sending it to the Senate.



—Associated Press

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

EDITORIAL OPINION

THURSDAY, APRIL 20, 2006

"I may not agree with what you say but I will defend to the death your right to say it." Voltaire

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

New Editor-in-Chief Elect has big plans

Adam McGillen

What should a college student body expect from its newspaper? Campus-related stories? Reliable delivery to student housing, dining commons and lecture halls? Entertaining stories and editorials that are actually of some interest to the students? A Web site that delivers audio and video, giving students a much deeper understanding of what is going on around the very University of Massachusetts campus they live and breathe on?

Editor-in-Chief Elect Nick Belanger would like you to think so. In the coming semester he will take over as the head of the Massachusetts Daily Collegian, and in a recent sit-down that I, and renowned artist Greg Kleciak, had with him, he told us that he was the man for the job, and he would bring some drastic changes that would make the newspaper better for the readers.

Better? Is that really a step in the right direction? In a day where everything is spiraling towards better quality of life and easier access to information, perhaps it is time to be more conservative and enjoy some of the hardships of life. In fact, it should be next to impossible to even find a newspaper in the morning.

When Nick takes over, one of his central goals will be to bring some integrity to the delivery service. But what will happen to the fun of scavenging for a copy of the paper, as if it were Easter every day of the year? Currently, students are put to the job of delivering the paper — a task that I can guarantee 99.9 percent of this campus is not up to doing in the wee hours of the morning. In one instance, a student shied away from his duties, dropping his papers off behind the Mullins Center and scurrying back to bed.

Nick related these troubles to me, and gave his solution: outsource the delivery service to an entirely reliable company. I don't know if I am comfortable with the idea of actually waking up to a real paper sitting outside the front door of my residence hall every morning. It would change the regimen of my day.

I think I would much rather peruse all of the papers to be dropped in a messy pile behind the Mullins Center. Every student can dive into the freshly raked papers and piece an issue together themselves, a formidable task to warm the mind and body before tackling the crossword puzzle.

But what will happen to the fun of scavenging for a copy of the paper, as if it were Easter every day of the year?

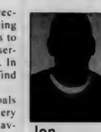
The radical solutions don't stop there, though. Nick seemed really excited about using the Internet to deliver news and interactive multimedia to the student body. Why hire a student to be the Webmaster? This would only create a dynamic place where students can access all the campus-related news they ever dreamed of, learning about upcoming events that could actually get them out of the pattern of drowning in booze every weekend in their dorm room, and we wouldn't want that.

"The Arts and Living section needs more living," Nick said in the interview. The Editor in Chief Elect wants to make the Collegian more accessible to the student, taking steps away from a snobby New York Times-spue presentation. He wants to reach out, giving the paper new sections that will appeal to fun-loving students who actually enjoy smiling.

News that is fun; a bit of an oxymoron in this day and age. Living is suffering, and if the paper needs more living, then it should talk about nothing but suffering: abortion, war, murder, disasters, etc. In fact, the entire Sports and Arts section should be removed and replaced entirely by Debbie Downer stories and Funky Winkerbean comics. Horoscopes should do nothing but predict the day of your death, and the quote of the day should always be a verse from the Necronomicon.

Do we really want someone in charge of our college newspaper that is going to bring a lot of new ideas that will not only make the paper more enjoyable for students but will also make the Collegian a more efficient business? New ideas, like a section dedicated to covering the weekend scene and giving students the low-down on the best places to spend their time off; or a section dedicated to videogames and tech news, the second biggest pastime on campus other than binge drinking. No, it is time for the paper to take a step in the regressive direction.

Using hardened recycled DC meat instead of paper will make for a much more solid reading experience, eliminating that incredibly humiliating experience of being unable to turn the paper inside-out while making the newspaper a more environmentally friendly product.



The Web site should be loaded with nothing but viruses, creating more jobs down at OIT. Delivery shouldn't be improved, it should be eliminated altogether, and the news should be so irrelevant and depressing that it leaves you scratching your head in a stupefied awe.

Nick did have one idea that I could completely agree with: easy access to papers on the Orchard Hill chair-lift; that is the sort of realistic idea we need at the top. Other than that, I have to ask: why start your day off with an enjoyable and campus relevant newspaper at your door, as Nick would want it, when you could spend your morning hours scrounging for a slab of sausage with a sad story on it?

Adam McGillen is a Collegian columnist.

We're all illegal aliens

Jon Brandt

Last week was Patriots Day, a holiday that is unique to Massachusetts, yet could be celebrated by anyone who loves America. Having a three-day weekend is a welcome relief, but this holiday is relatively unimportant to most people, and I can't count the number of times I had people ask me what this holiday was about.

Patriot's Day is in honor of the Minutemen and soldiers of the Continental Army who fought in opposition of the British. It's sad that most people overlook this holiday and don't know what it's about, but what's sadder is the fact that over 200 years later, we are still fighting for those rights we fought for back then.

In the past few weeks the issue of immigration reform has been streaming across headlines as liberals and conservatives argue over the problem. President Bush is trying to pass legislation that would make it harder for aliens to be granted American citizenship. Those who are illegal aliens would face harsher penalties if they were caught, and the wait list to be accepted into this country would go up. There has even been talk of putting up a wall, similar to that which used to be in Berlin, along our border with Mexico.

For those who claim to only bleed red, white and blue, and want illegal aliens out, or just don't know what to think, allow me to shed some light on this topic. Claiming that illegal aliens are ruining this country is absurd. Immigrants are generally one of the hardest working groups of individuals, who go through their lives without complaint or bitterness.

If you believe that immigrants are taking away jobs from Americans, then you need a reality check. Immigrants aren't taking dream jobs like weathermen or ski instructors; they are doing the jobs that most people don't want to do. Working sometimes for wages that wouldn't have been acceptable 30 years ago, they go about their lives with one goal — providing a future for their family, which they didn't have in the homeland.

This country has always had a problem with illegal aliens, just ask any Native American. If you claim to be pure American with roots back to the Pilgrims, then all you are proud of is having border-hopping ancestors. The Native Americans took in the original immigrants of this country, and how were they repaid? Genocide and a holiday that hides the fact that Pilgrims invaded and took over land which wasn't theirs.

Now that these modern-day

Claiming that illegal aliens are ruining this country is absurd. Immigrants are generally one of the hardest working groups of individuals, who go through their lives without complaint or bitterness.

Pilgrims are risking their lives so they can make below minimum wage in the hopes of finding the American Dream, we're just supposed to close off the borders and pretend we're angels? They aren't trying to claim land for Mexico. They aren't trying to infiltrate our government. They just want the same rights every human should be entitled to: the right to life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness. Have we forgotten that?

I understand the concerns for security in our post-9/11 world, but turning away immigrants simply because of concerns over terrorism is un-American. This country has been built off of the sweat and tears of immigrants throughout its entire history. This issue is not new, of course. Throughout our country's history there have been many immigration reforms meant to limit certain groups from emigrating.

At times it was against the Irish, then Asians and now it seems as though President Bush is trying to cut off the Latino immigrants. Is a wall along our southern border what we really need? As a history major, the last time I checked, history always looks down on these immigration reforms.

At the time, people get caught up in the fervor and don't care who they hurt, as long as they feel warm and safe. Fifty years later, Congress decides to change it up and issues a mumble of an apology to the groups they discriminated against, before moving on like nothing happened.

I know there are a lot of immigrants at this school, and many first and third generation Americans. Think of how great our school is with the diversity brought in because of these cultures. How bland would this place be if everyone had the same story to tell? My mother came to this country in the 1950's from Argentina, as she likes to say, "without a pot to piss in."

While her family struggled and didn't have much, she put herself through college, and today I am privileged enough to have gone to a good high school in a good town and can go to this university. My father is a first generation American who didn't have much growing up and had to put himself through college. My parents don't have dream jobs, but they worked hard enough for me to get the opportunity to go to a good university so I could do what I want with my life. I get to live the dream of immigrants.

If we limit immigration and prevent those who are oppressed from being able to pursue lives they dream of, we are no better than those who use terror to get what they want. America's culture has always been one consisting of immigrants, and to close the doors would be equivalent to taking something away from our culture and our nation's backbone.

Jon Brandt is a Collegian columnist.

UMass presents: real men of genius part deux

Matt Brochu

Ask anyone's parents, and they'll be the first to tell you how smart their kids are. Sure, the little tikes may have needed three tries to get through first grade, but it wasn't their fault. They're abstract thinkers (can't color inside the lines) who conceptualize concepts (pick their nose and eat it) rather than focusing their energies upon academic trivialities (peeing in some place other than their pants).

I've been at this university long enough to feel like one of those proud parents. Each and every one of you is a real man (or woman) of genius in some way, and don't let any professor, dean or letter of expulsion tell you any differently.

To celebrate the random strokes of genius that you collectively bless me with on a daily basis, I've decided, once again, to blatantly rip off those "Bud Light Presents: Real Men of Genius" ads that were so popular two years ago.

READER'S NOTE:

1) If you haven't seen or heard these commercials, then download them immediately.

2) Words within the parentheses indicate outbursts from that amazingly talented backup singer (who just so happens to be the lead singer of Survivor, the group that inspired us with "Eye of the Tiger").

UMass presents: Real Men of Genius (Real Men of Genius). Today we salute you, Mr. Caped Outside the Bars Singer and White Bucket Player (Mr. Caped Bucket Player). Through rain, sleet, and finger-numbing snow, you provide Bel Biv Devoe-quality entertainment to the poor kids waiting in line to pay way too much to get into the Monkey Bar (I'd rather wait in line at the DMV).

Armed with Super Grover's red cape and a set of pipes that could make doves cry, you spit hot fire to the tune of six Motown classics that simply scream, "I don't want to work." (You just want to bang on the drum all day.) It truly seems as though God pressed the repeat button on your soul (Yeeeah, you're a soul survivor).

So crack open an ice cold Bud Light, oh Sultan of the Slow Jam, because we heard it through the grapevine that you don't want to know our names. You just want to bang bang bang, and you know what? We're OK with that.

Today we salute you, Mrs. 48-year-old Dumb Question Asker (Mrs. 48-year-old Dumb Question Asker). Stationed in the front row with a sexy set of

So crack open an ice cold Bud Light as you sit down to watch "Fried Green Tomatoes" again, oh Queen of Questions, because without Curves members like yourself, our final exam wouldn't have a curve at all.

bifocals and a backpack sporting your initials, you figured the best way to get back at your husband for sleeping with a college student was to go back to college yourself (Midterm Momma). Like a vicious, pre-menopausal predator, you silently take hundreds of pages of verbatim notes, patiently waiting for your opportunity to strike.

Your defenseless prey? The professor. Your weapon of choice? Pointless, irrelevant, time-wasting questions that excite you in some weird way. (I'm so excited. I'm so ... scared). So crack open an ice cold Bud Light as you sit down to watch "Fried Green Tomatoes" again, oh Queen of Questions, because without Curves members like yourself, our final exam wouldn't have a curve at all.

Today we salute you, Mrs. Library MySpace Updater (Mrs. Library MySpace Updater). While we run laps in the library basement searching for an empty computer to print out a trivial assignment worth 40 percent of our final grade, you hog a valuable PC cubicle with a much more important task at hand — your MySpace background is five days old, and good God, it needs to be changed (Louis Vuitton backgrounds are so last week)

Sure, the real world is cool to live in every once in a while, but (cue up the Cheers theme song) sometimes you want to go where everybody knows your name, as well as your eight best friends' names, whether or not you're scared of thunderstorms, and if you happened to be a mixed drink, which one you would totally be (You're a fuzzy navel) ... all without having to go through the hassle of actually meeting people.

So send Tom a comment with a picture of an ice cold Bud Light, oh Wench of the Web blog, because this isn't just anyone's space, it's your space damn it, and while we have no problem with you living for the nights you can't remember with the MySpace friends you'll never forget, we would appreciate it if you could do so in the privacy of your own dorm room.

Today we salute you, Mr. Dyslexic Beer Pong Consolidator (Mr. Dyslexic Beer Pong Consolidator). Through the magic of Natty Light and Constantine Gianacopolos (the 28-year-old Greek man you claim to be twice a week at Liquors44), you move those cups around with all the grace and efficiency of a thumbless man trying to unhook a bra (Set those babies free, yeah).

While the rest of us rack our brains with calculus and chemistry, you find it impossible to rack three cups into the shape of a triangle in under 20 minutes (Corresponding Parts of Congruent Triangles are Congruent). So crack open an ice cold Bud Light, oh king of the Re-rack, and pass one to your friends, Mr. Compulsive Beer Pong Leaner and Mrs. Feeling Up My Teammate's Boobs Beer Pong Distracter, because even though those Solo cups may represent your own personal Rubik's Cube, they certainly aren't going to drink themselves.

Matt Brochu is a Collegian columnist.

LETTER TO THE EDITOR

COLUMNIST CONTRADICTED HIMSELF

Oelschlegel told us how the number of females helping out with the Katrina reconstruction efforts is much greater than the number of males. From this, his personal observation, he draws the conclusion that the reason for the lack of men in the rebuilding efforts is that men are behaving like women now.

The flaw in Oelschlegel's logic is obvious even without putting it into syllogistic form. As a matter of fact, there is no valid form for his argument; he's using two particular premises (some women helped out, some men did not help out) to support a universal conclusion (all men are acting like women) and you can't there from here. He's saying men are acting like women because they're not doing what women are doing. What the hell is this?

Oelschlegel claims the problem is that "society teaches men to be nice, feminized guys." If this were true, then there would be more men doing the nice, empirically feminine thing and helping out. Of course it's not true, not by a long shot.

Most boys still get taught to be selfish; to yield to their impulses and not think of others. That is why they are usually the ones who disrupt classes and have higher drop-out rates.

There was much less tolerance for conduct problems in all students in the 1950s and '60s, yet kids came out of high school getting better scores on the SATs. Also, nearly everyone thinks more clearly after rigorous physical activity.

This notion that girls like to sit still and quiet for hours on end is only around in this day and age due to Christina Hoff-Summers sublimating her masochistic tendencies in books that ought to have conveniently perforated pages. As for the issue of cognitive sex differences, there is still no way to control for socialization, and that means all the expensive MRI studies aimed at showing biologically predetermined differences in cognitive abilities are ultimately equivocal.

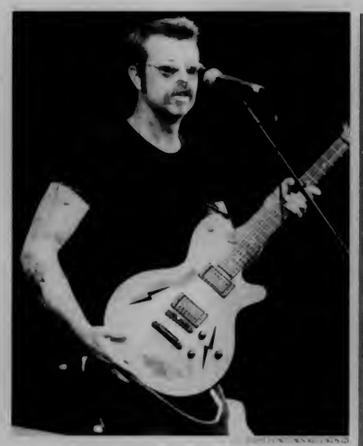
There is no war on boys. If there was, then calling someone the man wouldn't be a compliment — but it is — and likening someone to a girl or a woman wouldn't be an insult — but it is. Just look at what Oelschlegel did. He was disappointed by his sen's lack of charity and dimmed scholastic standings so he claimed that all these unmotivated men had been turned into women, even though all the women around him were behaving in a highly motivated manner.

Oelschlegel is a product of a sexist society and he's so intent on labeling what's associated with women as bad, less or weak and reserving all that is good for manliness, that he doesn't seem to notice or care that he's contradicting himself.

Contradictions usually result from rhetorical U-turns, and that's definitely the case here. The hidden supposition steering Oelschlegel's rhetoric is this: if anyone dares to challenge notions about boys getting to be selfish, loud, inconsiderate and just generally not expected to develop the same self-restraint as girls, then boys will sulk, do nothing and grow up to be apathetic dullards. Deep down inside everyone wants to be selfish, aggressive and inconsiderate. Getting a grip on those urges is called growing up — not "feminization."

Oelschlegel's implied message, that boys will spend their lives sucking their thumbs if they don't get their way all the time, might be true. I myself have seen evidence of it. However, assuming that all men will act like babies (please note the gender neutrality here) based on particular instances of this being so, wouldn't be right. It would shortchange the men who have done the work that we all must do to be competent, mature adults.

It would crush my own hopes for equity between the sexes, and it would be the employment of flawed logic. You can't get to universal conclusions from particular premises, but you can get to a particular conclusion from a universal premise.



Amelia Sabadini
An Amherst College student

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

ARTS & LIVING

THURSDAY, APRIL 20, 2006 ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Eagles of Death dissapoints while Built to Spill fulfills

Songwriter Jesse Hughes says his music is influenced by Elvis and Chuck Berry.

On their 2004 debut "Peace, Love, and Death Metal," the Eagles of Death Metal emerged out of mysterious origins with an old-fashioned, high-energy take on rock 'n' roll. While the two-man band came to attention based on the fact that Queens of the Stone Age frontman Josh Homme was behind the drum kit, not soon as the music was released it was clear that EODM was far from a side project. Led by Jesse "The Devil" Hughes, the songwriting is influenced by hip-shaking Elvis vocals and grinding Chuck Berry guitars more than it is by stoner rock.

On "Death By Sexy," Hughes and Homme take the formula that made "Peace, Love, and Death Metal" a fun, enjoyable record, and take it to the next level. Everything is better, from the songwriting to the production. The songs, while still delivered with a wink, are stronger and seem far fresher. Even the guitar solos seem less like goofs on familiar conventions; the raw production lets them unleash in blasts of furious buzzes.

Lyrically, Hughes treads familiar grounds. Sex, drugs, and rock 'n' roll is most certainly Hughes' credo and, while it may have become a cliché to many, EODM knows exactly how to make it work. "Death By Sexy" is funny, but the joke is on neither the audience nor the songs themselves. The lead single "I Want You So Hard" (Bad Boys' News) is a supercharged start to the album; a perfect capsule of what Hughes and Homme have in store. Elsewhere, "I Like To Move In The Night" is dirty Stones blues that may not match the originators of the sound but certainly makes for a pleasant tune. "Solid Gold" brings out an acoustic guitar but, fear not, Hughes maintains the high-rolling energy instead of sinking into a ballad.

EODM don't set out to reinvent the wheel, they seem far more content to just rock like the legends. And while "Death By Sexy" is unlikely to ever be considered a great album, it is no doubt a collection of inspired and inventive — despite the fact that it breaks no actual new ground — songs that seems destined to brighten many days and provide the soundtrack to many a rocking occasion.

BY NICK ROMANOW
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The band maintains a sex drugs and rock 'n' roll image. Their new album features an energetic and humorous opening song.

Eagles Of Death Metal
6/10
Death By Sexy
Downtown Records

Built To Spill
8/10

You In Reverse
Worner Bros Records

The indie-band Built to Spill released a new album that features acoustic guitar along with spiraling guitar leads.

Five years after the release of "Ancient Melodies Of The Future," indie-stalwarts Built To Spill have returned with "You In Reverse," a collection of songs that is more then able to stand next to the best work in the band's catalogue. From the opener "Goin' Against Your Mind," it is clear that five years was time well spent for Doug Martsch and company. Exploding with a slice of psych-pop, the eight-plus minute song eventually settles into a spacey, folk-influenced groove where sheets of noise push and pull against delicate, glittering melodies, before picking back up with a furious guitar strum giving way to verse that started the song.

Mixing the band's key influences — indie-heroes of guitar rock like Pavement and Dinosaur Jr. with elements of the eccentric psychdelia of the Flaming Lips, with a inimitable sound Built To Spill have garnered a loyal cult following and a lot of critical acclaim and "You In Reverse" proves why. While the songs and the band feel more mature then prior work, it is far from a middle-aged album. Tracks like "Traces" that heavily feature acoustic guitar and seem like straight-forward autumnal numbers, are layered with smart songwriting and meticulous musical crafting that make sure the songs never become complacent with themselves.

Elsewhere, "Conventional Wisdom," is a rocker with guitar that is heavily reminiscent of J. Mascis' best work in Dinosaur Jr., proving that Built To Spill is far from settled down. "Saturday" is a down-tempo number where guitar takes a backseat to a strong, pulsing, rhythm section that allows Martsch's voice to shine through. Perhaps what is most impressive about "You In Reverse" is the way that the songs are allowed to breathe, without ever getting out of hand. Almost every song is over four minutes, three of them over six, and yet there is rarely a dull moment. Each song rolls out at its own speed and takes a life of its own. The creative and tight rhythm section meshes with Martsch's lyrical, spiraling guitar leads, which are then accented by second and third guitars that transform each song into a small journey of its own.

With such an impressive catalogue, there is no way to unanimously decide where "You In Reverse" will end up in the ranking of Built To Spill's career but it is certainly fit to stand amongst their best work. "You In Reverse" is the type of album that will not only satisfy longtime fans, but it feels important enough that it could launch Built To Spill into the same category as the legendary indie bands that they are often compared to.

BY NICK ROMANOW
COLLEGIAN STAFF

'Sentinel' stars feel heat after recent interviews

BY PHILIP WUNTCH
THE DAILY ARIZONA STAFF

Michael Douglas and Eva Longoria have more in common than starring in "The Sentinel," which opens Friday. They both had lots of explaining to do after interviews with national publications.

Gentleman's Quarterly quoted Douglas in its April issue as criticizing Brad Pitt for the Jennifer Aniston-Angelina Jolie brouhaha. He also reportedly chided Julia Roberts and Renee Zellweger for their brief marriages to Lyle Lovett and Kenny Chesney, respectively.

Longoria, "Desperate Housewives'" lusty Gabrielle Solis, discussed her relationship with San Antonio Spurs point guard Tony Parker in an Allure interview this spring.

"The Allure interview by itself was just fine," Longoria said in a recent telephone interview. "I told Allure that I was more experienced in relationships. I'm 31, and I've been married and divorced. Tony's 23 and has had only one long-term relationship. Then the tabloids had a field day, rearranging the quotes so that it sounded like I said Tony was sexually inexperienced and I had to give him lessons.

"Tony knows what the truth is, and that's what's important. Things like that come with the territory. I try to go with the flow."

Instead of going with GQ's flow, Douglas, 61, says he wrote letters that "apologized profusely" to the celebrities mentioned and has publicly denied making the comments.

"I spent 20 hours with the GQ writer," Douglas said in a recent phone interview. "I called her and asked her to play back the sections where I allegedly made the remarks. She said she had turned off her recorder when I supposedly made them.

"Print publications are under pressure to be as provocative as they can. So they leak a seemingly provocative quote to the media a month before the magazine hits the stands, in hopes of stirring up interest."

Douglas says he may quit doing print interviews altogether. "Or else I'll record them as they interview me."

Douglas, his wife, Catherine Zeta-Jones, and their two children, 5-year-old Dylan and 3-year-old Carys, live in Bermuda most of the time. "It's wonderful for kids to grow up without paparazzi or celebrity-stalking Web sites," he says.

That intrusive technology that most celebrities rail against plays a pivotal role in "The Sentinel," in which Douglas stars as a Secret Service agent caught in a web when a plot to assassinate the president appears to come from within the Secret Service. Kiefer Sutherland plays a friend-turned-rival, Longoria is a rookie Secret Service agent and Kim Basinger is the first lady, who has her own set of secrets.

"Working with Kim is a long-time dream," says Douglas, who also produced the film. "She was our first choice for 'Basic Instinct.' But she had already done '9 Weeks' and didn't want to become the go-to actress for erotic thrillers."

The mention of "Basic Instinct" brings an obvious question about the sequel, also starring Sharon Stone, to which Douglas gives a dutiful answer.

"No, I haven't seen 'Basic Instinct 2' yet. I'm aware of the reviews. But I have respect for Sharon and wish her well."

Always vocal about his political beliefs, Douglas was appointed "Messenger of Peace" by United Nations Secretary-General Kofi Annan. There are six other "Messengers," including Luciano Pavarotti and Muhammad Ali. "Each of us has an area we focus on," he says. "Mine is disarmament."

He would have had a tough time trying to disarm Longoria. Having grown up on her father's ranch near Corpus Christi, Texas, she was the best shot on "The Sentinel's" set.

"I got lots of practice with my dad. For targets, I used cans, bottles, anything that exploded. I loved the noise."

Actor Michael Douglas' character Pete Garrison confronts David Breckinridge, played by Kiefer Sutherland in the movie "Sentinel."

But not everything in her early years was sunshine and target practice.

"I was definitely the ugly duckling of my family," she says convincingly.

"I was dark, and my three sisters were beautiful, fair-skinned blondes. They told me I must have been switched at birth. Now, whenever I'm on a magazine cover, I send it to them."

She says she sought the largely unsmiling role of agent Jill Marin because it's so different from "Housewives'" Gabrielle.

"Before 'Desperate Housewives' ran any longer and I became totally immersed in the public's eye as Gabrielle, I wanted a change of pace. And, actually, I'm much more like Jill than Gabrielle. I love the outdoors, and I love action. Gaby is much more the indoor type.

"But Jill is ambitious and hardworking. She'll probably run the country one day."

For that, you'll have to wait to see whether there's a "Sentinel II."

Poppy Montgomery lost in the CBS series 'Without a Trzace'

BY KATE O'HARE
ZAP2IT.COM

After spending many hours a day grilling suspects and tracking clues in missing-persons cases on the hit Thursday-night CBS crime drama "Without a Trace," you couldn't be blamed for thinking that Poppy Montgomery, who plays FBI Agent Samantha Spade, goes home after work and immerses herself in light entertainment.

Well, you'd be partly right.

Admitting she's "stupidly obsessed" with Fox's "American Idol" and a big fan of "Oprah" Montgomery also never misses ABC's "20/20," NBC's "Dateline NBC" and CBS' "60 Minutes."

"I watch all the newsmagazines," says the native Australian, "partly because of the show. They oftentimes will do a lot of missing persons, so I always watch those."

She doesn't watch Fox's "America's Most Wanted," but she's considering adding Fox News' law-oriented current-affairs show "On the Record with Greta Van Susteren" to the TiVo list.

"She rocks, man," Montgomery says. "She's fantastic. It's actually instructive for me, because she knows she's in front of a camera. There's a certain amount of theatrics that has to go on in order for an audience to really watch you. That's a different thing than just questioning someone.

"What's interesting for me are when they show interrogations on '20/20' or 'Dateline' of suspects who turn out to be guilty, and how not-dramatic they are. The cops ask the questions, and the suspects are normally terrified and just deny, deny, deny. That's really interesting for me to see, because it reminds me not to make too much of everything all the time.

"It reminds me that these people do it every single day. They've heard it all. A lot of it is instinct-based. I find that really interesting. But I find Greta interesting, because she's a really strong woman. Her voice is very commanding."

Montgomery says she also keeps a weather eye on certain cases in the news, including the disappearance of Alabama teen Natalee Holloway in Aruba, the murder of graduate student Imette St. Guillen in New York City, and the disappearance of groom George Smith during his honeymoon cruise.

"We've been doing the show for four years," she says, "and the idea of someone just going missing, and there's no trace of them ... it's like the ghost of it is with you forever. I imagine, because you don't have any sense of, are they alive, are they dead, did they run away, were they taken?"

She even mentioned the cruise-ship story to the show's writers. "That would be interesting, just to take the premise of a cruise ship, and somebody disappears on the ship — not necessarily the same story, but the idea of that.

"Normally the FBI will come in when a missing-persons case or a kidnapping crosses either state or international lines, if they're American citizens. So it would have to be a cruise ship where the cruise company was based out of New York ... look at me trying to figure out stories. I love it. It's because I've been watching too many of these shows.

"But our writers are so on top of it. I brought up that cruise ship, and they're like, 'We've been following that story.'"

Working on "Without a Trace" has also made Montgomery more aware of how vulnerable people can be, especially women.

"A woman out drinking alone," she says, "if you're drinking, and you're not completely sober, your defenses are down somewhat. You're easier prey."

Asked if she talks with her women friends about this, Montgomery says, "Certainly with my little sisters. I have an 18-year-old sister and a 17-year-old sister, and even with my sister who's a year younger than me. I'm overly cautious. God forbid if I ever have children. I'll be like the overprotective person who's constantly like, 'Don't talk to strangers.'

"I've always been careful. I came to the States on my own so young. I was 18, and I've always been very aware, eyes-in-the-back-of-my-head aware. If I even get a slight feeling that something's wrong, whether or not I'm being paranoid or whether it's real, I act on that.

"I think your instincts generally are about right. If something doesn't seem right, don't trust it. It's always better to be safe than sorry, is my theory. Some of that, sure, has come out of four years of doing the show, with missing persons."

Since moving from a sixth-floor apartment into a house, Montgomery is even more careful.

"I think like a cop now a little bit, swear to God," she says. "Just even the security system in my house — I wanted one immediately. And when I go to bed, I set it."

Of course, Montgomery doesn't always get to bed early. "Thank God 'American Idol' is on TiVo, because I watch that at 1 or 2 in the morning."

Poppy Montgomery plays an FBI agent on the hit CBS television series "Without a Trace," which airs Thursday nights at 10 P.M.

June of the Pointer Sisters leaves fans much to remember

BY ANNETTE JOHN-HALL
THE RECORD-NEWSPAPERS

When June Pointer of the Pointer Sisters died last week from cancer at age 52, many news organizations mistakenly ran a picture of her older sister Ruth with their obituaries.

That final indignity simply reaffirmed the lack of appreciation the singing sisters from California have dealt with throughout their long and versatile career.

Nowadays, they are viewed as another oldies act, their more popular songs — "Jump (For My Love)" and "I'm So Excited" — more recognizable as commercial jingles than the top-10 hits they were.

But true Pointer fans remember when the trio was a quartet; how the sisters emerged on the scene in 1973 like a "cloudburst" — one of many jazz standards they sang at breakneck speed; how they pushed fashion forward by dressing in the vintage past; how they could funk it up better than LaBelle, scat like Ella, and croon country so authentically that folks at the Grand Ole Opry didn't even realize they were black until they actually performed their 1974 Grammy-winning hit, "Fairytale" (which, by the way, Elvis later recorded).

True fans understand that the Pointer Sisters were the single most influential girl group to cross the post-Motown divide between restrained R&B and free-flowing pop. Their gospel-tinged voices — straight out of the West Oakland, Calif., Church of God, where they grew up as preachers' kids — were malleable enough to defy category. Their versatility paved the way for many, from Sister Sledge to Destiny's Child.

True fans could tell the difference between June and Ruth.

It was June, not Ruth, who dropped out of high school to form Pointers-A-Pair with sister Bonnie. Anita and Ruth joined later. Their debut album, "The Pointer Sisters" — the cover featuring a photo of the quartet rocking hip 1940s' garb — was a rich, jazz-inflected gumbo of complex harmonies and R&B grooves. (One of the songs from that album, "Jada," written by Anita, inspired this reporter to name her daughter after same.)

Ruth, the oldest, provided the group's gut-bucket alto harmonies. And while Anita's voice was more pop, and Bonnie — who left the group in 1977 to pursue a solo career — was more rock, June, the fun-loving, practical-joking, generous-to-a-fault baby sister, was the belter.

It was June who sang lead on "Jump," and "He's So Shy," the flirty 1980 pop anthem that put the Pointers back on the charts, positioning them for the pair of Grammys they would win in 1984 for "Jump" and "Automatic."

If the Pointer Sisters' albums were refreshingly eclectic, their live performances were spectacular. They were the first pop act to perform at the esteemed San Francisco Opera House, and those who attended that 1974 concert are probably still talking about it. From their showmanship they wore such outfits as padded-shouldered 1940s' suits to Carmen Miranda-like rumba skirts to their mercurial vocal prowess, the Pointers set the standard for harmonies in a way that would make the Andrews Sisters, the Manhattan Transfer and Lambert, Hendricks & Ross bow down in reverence.

June, however, could not shake the drug demons that haunted her after she was raped as a teen, became pregnant, and had an abortion, her brother Fritz told the San Francisco Chronicle last week.

She struggled with her cocaine addiction throughout the group's heydays in the '70s and resurgence in the '80s. By the 1990s, after releasing a pair of solo albums to little fanfare, June stopped touring, replaced by Ruth's daughter Issa, whose father is Dennis Edwards of the Temptations. In 2004, June was charged with felony cocaine possession.

The Pointer Sisters were on tour when June suffered a stroke in Los Angeles in February. They rushed to their sister's bedside, where they found that cancer had also been diagnosed.

The passing of June Pointer silences a voice that blended perfectly with her sisters' but was distinguishable on its own — a voice that true fans would never mistake for another.

SOUTH ASIAN STUDENTS ASSOCIATION
PROUDLY PRESENTS
13th Annual
SASA NITE '06
ELYSIAN
...once the feeling...
DHARA MANEK - DMANEK@STUDENT.UMASS.EDU | WWW.UMASS.EDU/RSO/SASA

RAIN
3 Clubs/DJ's Under One Roof - Party Until 2:00 am
HOT BODY CONTEST
Every Thursday Night
18+ College Night
- Weekly $100.00 for Top Male/$100.00 for Top Female
- GRAND PRIZE: $500.00 cash & loads of Prizes for Top Male and Top Female
- Cover Charge: 18+ with College ID $10.00 / 21+ $5.00
19 + WET & WILD FRIDAYS
Every Friday Night
$1 Draft Beers
Doors open at 9pm
Cover Charge: 19+ $10.00
21+ $5.00
Now Hiring: Barbenders, Waitstaff, Cashiers and Security Staff
10 Stearns Square - Springfield, MA 01103 - (413) 827-9000 - www.RainSpringfield.com

UMass Fine Arts Center
Center Series 2005-2006
30th Anniversary Season
30 YEARS of WOWS AND CHEERS!
THE WORLD IS OUR... The Fine Arts Center is turning 30 and is looking forward to a birthday bash that lasts all year long. For this special season, we will bring back some popular favorites as well as introduce a few new ones to our stage. Don't miss the party; look for the mark that indicates that it's a great event for families. And as always, the Fine Arts Center offers educational discounts for you! 17 and under are seniors.
E=FAC2: Mass Ensemble in Critical Mass
Special Anniversary Event
Thursday, May 4
Based on Einstein's theories, Mass Ensemble fuses music with technology, sculpture, dance, and aerial performance to create a futuristic performing arts concert.
"Looks like sculpture, sounds like Zappa, kicks like Jackie Chan." -Alaska Design Forum
Concert Hall at 7:30 pm
April 30th is Community Day! Join the fun and big birthday bash while Mass Ensemble strings a giant earth harp from the Concert Hall building to the plaza. More info to come. Sponsered by MassMutual Financial Group, Bank of America, the Valley Advocate and 93.9 The River
TICKETS ARE ON SALE NOW!
Call and ask about our "Take 3" subscription offer or to request a fully illustrated brochure.
CALL 545-2511 or 1-800-999-UMAS
Check us out online at www.fineartscenter.com where you can safely purchase tickets and find press releases, artist features, a visitor's guide and more.
THE FINE ARTS CENTER
The Fine Arts Center's venues are fully accessible and ADA compliant

MONEY FOR COLLEGE
NOW

Because big brother's on the "Van Wilder" plan.

He's burned through his college fund and most of yours.
Extend your savings and cover up to 100% of your education costs with a Campus Door student loan, featuring online approval in less than a minute.
Write that down.

www.campusdoor.com

CAMPUSDOOR®
YOUR TUITION SOURCE

Like this poster? Download your own printable PDF version at campusdoor.com/posters

Disaster the appeal for Discovery Channel and others

These Africanized honeybees are fearfully known as "killer bees," and are featured on The Discovery channel for their deadly attacks.

The Discovery Channel does have less horrific subjects, such as this red lechwe in a flooded meadow, known for its spectacular leaps.

By Robert Trussell
Knight Ridder Newspapers

For most of my life I never really thought about what happens to a human foot when tissue starts freezing.

Now I know, because the Discovery Channel showed me. Thanks to computer-generated imagery, I watched a camera lens burrow into a woman's foot, gliding past bone and tissue to show me the blood vessels turning into black ice as a dispassionate announcer's voice explained the process in detail.

Likewise, it never occurred to me that a tornado so vast that it could wipe out most of downtown Dallas was even possible.

Now I know, thanks to Discovery, that if the necessary weather conditions align, hail could fall in daylight and fish could rain from the sky.

We have entered a brave new age of television, my friends. The line between "educational" and "sensational" blurs more with each passing TV season. And cable television has surpassed all expectations in bringing human suffering into our dens and living rooms.

And, yes, it can teach us things we didn't know. But it also satisfies a hunger that used to drive people to disaster films or sword-and-sandal movies. The Germans call it "schadenfreude," the enjoyment of the misfortunes of others.

At the moment, Discovery leads the pack with "I Shouldn't Be Alive," a series based on true life survival stories, and "Perfect Disaster," whose tag line is "when conditions are right, it will all go wrong."

Recently on "Alive" we've seen men surviving multiple avalanches in Alaska, a father and son battling dehydration and frostbite in a cave in the mountains of Turkey, boaters suffering from sunburn and delirium on a desert island in the Sea of Cortez and an Australian hiker pinned to the ground by a boulder on an uninhabited island.

"Perfect Disaster," meanwhile, has projected a series of calamities that could be just around the corner: a monster typhoon laying waste to Hong Kong, an enormous twister slamming into Dallas and a firestorm devastating part of Sidney, Australia.

In January the Weather Channel began airing a 30-minute weekly series, the ominously titled "It Could Happen Tomorrow." Using interviews, archival footage and computer generated images, it has projected a major hurricane hitting New York, catastrophic failure of the levee system in Sacramento, Calif., and a scenario in which Boulder, Colo., is washed away by a massive flood.

Thursday night, to mark the hundredth anniversary of the 1906 San Francisco earthquake, the National Geographic Channel will rebroadcast "The Great Quake," a two-hour documentary on the subject, complete with re-enactments, CGI-assisted scientific analysis and musings and unambiguous predictions that it will happen again — it's only a matter of time.

Why all this televised mayhem? Why now?

Some viewers undoubtedly tune in out of morbid curiosity, said pop-culture expert Elizabeth Bird, chair of the anthropology department at the University of South Florida. They just like to watch buildings collapse and hikers being eaten alive by insects.

She suggested that others may find a level of comfort from vivid depictions of catastrophes and survivors who beat the odds.

"These sorts of things probably give people some sense of control because if they have some tools in advance, then maybe that can deal with it," Bird said. "People always have this unquenchable optimism that they'll be the ones who survive. I do think people believe the world is a very frightening place."

If people think the world is a frightening place, it's not without reason.

On Sept. 11, 2001, Americans saw buildings melt and New Yorkers jump from 100 floors up. The devastation of New Orleans and the Gulf Coast inflicted by Hurricane Katrina last year was unprecedented. The Indian Ocean tsunami was a disaster of biblical proportions.

"People are thinking about surviving these days more than they used to," said Terry Connelly, senior vice president and general manager of the Weather Channel.

Janet Root, Discovery's executive vice president and general manager, said a television audience has emerged in recent years with an acute interest in survival stories.

"On 9-11 we all realized that the world could change very, very fast and that we had to be prepared for the unimaginable to happen," Root said. "That's the zeitgeist change that has gone on in the Western world."

The producers all agree on one point: The shows are meant to be informational. But they do acknowledge that for some viewers survival stories and disasters exert an irresistible pull.

The Discovery shows are slick productions employing professional actors to portray real people in sequences shot in difficult locations and using CGI schematics to explain how Sidney could be ringed by fire or what happens in a human brain when nerve endings are sheared.

"One of the things people expect from factual programming now is for it to have the same adrenaline and the same excitement and energy they get from drama," Root said.

The Weather Channel takes a relatively low-budget approach but serves up its 30 minutes of vengeful weather scenarios with a dash of basic showbiz, personified by Howard Parker's melodramatic narration delivered in a breathy baritone: "The earthquake unloads with the destructive force of 400 Hiroshima atomic bombs."

The fact is, some of the most consistently violent imagery on television is found in documentary programming dealing, one way or another, with the weather. Watch enough of it and you begin to imagine a CGI of your own brain's damaged nerve endings.

But the audience apparently isn't going away anytime soon.

"I think there's a natural curiosity about everyday life turned upside down," said Michael Cascio, senior vice president of production for the National Geographic Channel. "One minute you're walking down the street, the next minute a building's coming down."

Rap-rock pioneers 'Mojo' working

By Brad Barnes
Knight Ridder Newspapers

In 1993, there was barely an Internet.

We found out about music by talking to people at a record store, or by what they were playing. Sometimes, we'd bump into a friend at a show who raved about someone. Or we gleaned ideas from the names of artists listed in the liner notes as guests on the CDs we were spinning.

So it was a tougher row to hoe for Stuck Mojo than for newer acts that fused rap and metal. The band's first record was out four years before Limp Bizkit spat out its 1997 debut, "Three Dollar Bill, Y'all," and seven years before Linkin Park unleashed it's first record, "Hybrid Theory."

Atlanta's pioneering Mojo, along with the likes of Fishbone, Follow For Now and Faith No More, was influential for these younger bands. Early on, LP's Brad Delson called Mojo guitarist Rich Ward his favorite axeman.

"It's great when you hear that," Ward said during a recent phone interview.

The band's buzz led to major label talk for Mojo in the late '90s.

That's when, according to Ward, the band's label — metal specialists Century Media Records — issued a punishing blow.

"Our record company was always kind of lukewarm on the rap-rock thing. They were metal purists," Ward said. "But when it came down to it, they put a price so high on the buy-out of the contract that no one would do it.

"It just kind of broke our back. If there was one moment where Stuck Mojo ceased to exist as a band, that was it," he said. "After that whole thing came through, the phone calls stopped happening, and here we are with two more records left on the contract ... It's like working for IBM and knowing there's a ceiling. It kind of took a little bit of the fire out of us."

The band has persevered, though.

While on hiatus, most of the band morphed into Fozzy, the metal act famously fronted by wrestler Chris Jericho. But for the past few months, Stuck Mojo has been working with its old MC — rapper Bonz — and recording material for an album to be released this fall.

And while Ward loves the energy and stage presence of Jericho, he says nothing can top Bonz's level of insanity.

"Chris is a regular guy. He doesn't have to tour, he doesn't have to work," Ward said. "Bonz is broke, you know? He is the real deal. He lives it, he breathes it. This is all he has. You can feel the difference."

Write for Arts!!
arts@dailycollegian.com

$15 OFF ANY HOT TUB RENTAL FOR TWO
(one discount per rental)
Student Discount only good Mon-Thurs or any day after 11pm
Weekdays 11- Midnight Weekends 11 - 1am
413-587-0000 • 33 West St. Northampton • www.eastheaven.com

FOUR Seasons
WINE • LIQUOR • CIGARS
333 Russell St., Rt. 9
Hadley, MA 01035
584-8174
Sale date: 4/20/06 - 4/26/06
not responsible for typographical errors.

Beer

Liquor
Wine

Hours: Monday - Saturday 9am - 11pm, Sunday 12pm - 11pm

Greeks who have obtained high academic achievement for Fall 2005...Congratulations!

3.2 or better, *-3.5 or better, -4.0

Kyle Andrejczyk*	2008	Mindi Greenberg	2006	Sean O'Connell	2008
Benjamin Andrew*	2009	Nicole Gurski*	2006	Nicholas O'Connor	2006
Eric Anthony*	2006	Elizabeth Hayes*	2006	Tiffani O'Connor	2008
Rebecca Arnold	2007	Christina Henderson	2007	Vanessa Ortmann*	2008
Amy Arzoomanian*	2007	Craig Henley	2008	Jacqueline Ouellette*	2006
Michael Audette*	2008	Kristin Hennessy	2007	Amanda Pantano*	2006
Robyn Avellino	2007	Meg Her*	2007	Matthew Pearlson*	2007
Jason Barber*	2008	Michael Hersey	2007	Michelle Pinto*	2008
William Barnard*	2007	Richard Hynes	2006	Rachael Plotkin	2009
Robin Basler*	2007	Stephen James		Samuel Plotkin*	2008
Dean Bebis*	2006	David Humphreys	2009	Melanie Pover	2007
Jamie Becker	2007	Christopher Ito*	2006	John Quill	2007
Gabriel Belino*	2007	Christie Jennings*	2008	Leor Radbil	2007
Philip Benevides*	2007	Allyson Johanson	2008	Andrew Ramsey*	2007
Jillian Bennett	2006	Scott Kagan	2008	Michael Reardon*	2007
Derrick Bessaoud*	2009	Helen Kang	2006	Lauren Reinfeld	2007
Jeanine Bilenski*	2006	Lauren Keene*	2006	Amelia Reniszewski	2007
Julie Binder	2009	Laura Kelly*	2008	Lauren Renvanz	2007
Marsha Binns*	2007	Kyle Kessel	2007	Joanna Reynolds*	2006
Edward Blanchard*	2007	Janice Kindorf	2008	Blaine Roche	2008
Shannon Borden	2008	Jessica Kirby-Dixon	2007	Elyse Rodil*	2009
Philip Brady*	2006	Brian Klein	2007	Alana Roffe	2007
Clifford Breese*	2008	Julie Kneeland	2006	Megan Rogal	2007
Cary Bronstein	2008	Joseph Kocot	2006	Igor Romashko	2007
Emily Brookstein	2008	Stephanie Kone*	2006	Melissa Rosen	2008
Ashley Brown	2008	Adrianne Kowalczyn*	2006	Chaela Roshetar*	2007
Daniel Brown	2008	Sarah Krieger*	2008	Andrew Rozynski*	2008
Lauren A Brown	2007	Matthew Kroll	2007	Justin Rubin	2009
Samantha Brown*	2007	Andrew Kuntz	2008	Juliane Saccardi	2008
Doyle Campion	2008	Amanda Laorenza*	2008	Shayna Scanlon	2007
Kelly Chandler	2007	Justin Leblanc*	2006	Lilli Scheiber*	2007
Hoson Chao	2007	Seho Lee*	2008	Matthew Schoenberg	2009
Susan Chen*	2006	Jamie Leehy	2006	Catherine Scott*	2009
Jennifer Chow*	2008	Justin Levy	2009	Daniel Segura*	2009
Callie Comtois*	2006	Kevin Libby	2008	Ailyn Sheehan	2007
Angel Coriano	2007	Daniel Ludwig	2006	Ashley Sherblom	2006
Stephen Cuilla	2006	Brian G. Lynn*	2006	Kyle Sherin	2008
Jill Cushing	2006	Gloria Mak*	2008	Adam Simon*	2006
Wilder Cusick*	2007	Daniel Maltzman*	2007	Elizabeth Sinel*	2006
Michael Czabaj*	2006	Unati Mangaliso	2007	Katrina Skurka	2006
Jessica Dabakis*	2007	Alyson Marx	2007	Elizabeth Solomon*	2009
Kristen DeMarco*	2007	Andrew McCandless	2008	Masha Sorkin*	2006
Thomas Dolan	2009	Nicole McCarthy	2008	Marie Sokolovsky	2008
Damon Dopfel	2006	Allyson McConnell	2007	Cara Sullo*	2009
David Dowd	2009	Caitlin McGuire	2008	Torrie Speller*	2007
Kathryn Downing	2006	Dallais McIlrath*	2009	Jennifer Stencel	2008
Nicholas Druar*	2009	Mary McMahon	2007	Edward Sweeney*	2007
Jon-Paul Dumelle	2007	Kathryn McNamara*	2007	Melanie Teixeira	2008
Pavel Favinsky	2007	Jennifer McSorley	2006	Susan Teperow*	2006
Kevin Ferreira*	2007	Sarah Meaux*	2007	Amanda Terkelsen*	2009
Brianna Fish	2008	Samuel Messer	2008	George Theocles	2008
Ashley Floreen	2007	Marianne Metzger*	2006	Tiffany Thompson*	2007
Matthew Fox*	2007	Benjamin Miller	2008	Linn Turecamo*	2008
Nathaniel Freedman	2007	Robert Morgan	2009	David Valade	2008
Nathan Garel	2008	Kevin Moriarity*	2006	Jaclyn Vigneau*	2006
Kristin Garone*	2006	Andrea Mosher	2008	Alicea Vine	2007
Kristen Gentile*	2006	Kelli Moulton*	2006	Marie Vitale	2007
Christine Gervasio*	2007	Lauren Myers*	2007	Yevgeniy Volodin	2007
Maria Gizzarelli	2008	Caitlin Nee*	2007	Megan VonHehren*	2008
Dana Goldberg*	2009	Catherine Newman*	2006	James Washburn	2007
Amanda Goldman	2007	Can Nguyen	2007	Leigh Whiting-Jones*	2007
Ashlee Gordon	2006	Matthew Nickerson*	2008	Angela Williams	2006
Caitlin Gould	2006	Angela Nickole	2008	Emily Williams	2008
Marissa Green	2008	Stephanie Nizewitz*	2007	Kyle Wood	2008
Hayley Greenberg	2007	Ariele Noble*	2007	Christopher Worthy	2006
				Michael Yellot*	2008

Bonds: must-see TV

BONDS from page 11

What's easy to forget is that Bonds brought that on himself. He saw the parade going by and did what he had to do to get out front.

A dozen or so big leaguers tested positive last season and only one, Rafael Palmeiro, was accorded even close to the same rough treatment. And that was because, like Bonds, Palmeiro put up some very big numbers and got caught telling a tale. Based on their testimony before Congress last year, Mark McGwire and Sammy Sosa deserve a better grilling, but like their once-Bunyanesque frames, they've pretty much shrunk from public view.

Not so Bonds.

He isn't backing away from his accomplishments and he hasn't lost his appetite for a fight. Yet.

"They ain't gonna break me," he says at one point, "no way. They can try. It just ain't gonna happen."

If "Bonds on Bonds" had a subtitle, it would be, "He reports, you decide." And that's the show's glaring weakness.

While there's something almost noble, though not quite sympathetic, about the way Bonds shows up to face his fate day after day, he's untrustworthy and ultimately that renders him unconvincing. He can laugh or shrug off the low moments that pack every episode, but the camera never blinks. If Bonds sat down and watched any of the shows so far, he'd realize how far he remains from setting the record straight. And it's only going to get harder from here on out.

Giants trainer Stan Conte, who is not related to Bay Area Laboratory Co-Operative owner Victor Conte, was subpoenaed to appear April 27 before a grand jury in San Francisco looking into whether Bonds lied to a separate grand jury in December 2003 about his connection to BALCO.

Bonds was asked about that testimony in Episode 3, and he answers deliantly, "I said what I said in the grand jury testimony. That's what I stated and that's what I will live by for the rest of my life."

For those who forgot, Bonds told the grand jury he didn't know what ingredients were in the cocktails his trainer at the time — convicted BALCO bagman Greg Anderson — was mixing up, never heard of most of the names, and couldn't pronounce at least one of them even if someone had bothered to spell it out.

But his defense that day — "I thought it was flaxseed oil" — sounds laughable in light of recent revelations. And the next time he sits still long enough to answer questions about steroids, it likely won't be with his hand-picked film crew for an episode on "Bonds on Bonds," but for a prosecutor who's served him with a subpoena.

Now that would really be must-see TV.

Gordon searching for his groove

By Marlen Garcia
Knight Ridder

CHICAGO — Ben Gordon is used to doing things his way

It has worked for him since he was a kid.

The summer after his junior year of high school, while some of his peers dazzled scouts on the national AAU and club circuit, Gordon stayed put in Mt. Vernon, N.Y., to work on his game on the local playgrounds and in his high school gym.

"I'm a person who looks through the politics and sees things for what they are," Gordon said. "You play AAU to get a scholarship. I already had done that. My mission was accomplished."

The decision probably cost him an honor most high school players crave, the McDonald's All-America team, because he had not tested himself against the nation's best.

Gordon didn't think he needed it. He already had an idea about where he stood.

Such poise helped Gordon lead Connecticut to an NCAA championship two years ago, and it made him a standout for the NBA's Sixth Man Award in his rookie season with the Bulls last year.

Like something out of a comic book, Gordon's play routinely was amazing.

That was last season.

This season he is under closer scrutiny. People, from fans to the Bulls' brass, want to know if they are watching an occasional marvel. Is he an undersized guard who never will become a consistent threat? Is he destined to be a sixth man?

Even his spectacular moments lead to questions.

The career-high 19 free throws he made in a victory over the New Jersey Nets last week, which kept the Bulls in the race for the Eastern Conference's eighth and final playoff berth, raised a question for some in the organization. Though he scored 36 points, his play left them asking why he doesn't attack the basket aggressively more often to draw fouls, and it also made them wonder whether he has it in him to do so.

When he scored 32 points and tied an NBA record by making all nine of his three-pointers Friday night in the Bulls' victory over Washington, he had only one free throw.

It is still too early to know if the 6-foot-2-inch streaky shooting guard who just turned 23 will fulfill his considerable potential.

"You're seeing someone evolve in a big, big spotlight on a young team right before your eyes," Gordon's college coach, Connecticut's Jim Calhoun, said.

Every player has slumps, and Gordon's play has waxed and waned.

After an inconsistent March, Gordon has stepped up his production for the playoff drive in April, averaging 22 points over seven games with a low of nine and a high of 36.

"Overall, I've had a decent season," Gordon said. "But when it's summer and you're preparing, you think it's going to be a whole lot different."

Little has gone according to plan for Gordon and his teammates, who cruised into the playoffs last season only to stumble for most of this one.

The adjustments have been rough.

In February, Gordon was at the center of trade rumors instead of receiving adulation for a scoring spree on the team's Western Conference trip. Repeatedly, he has said he wants to be a Bull forever. There also has been talk of discord between Gordon and coach Scott Skiles that both vehemently deny.

In many ways Gordon is meticulous and single-minded, which helped him become a star at Connecticut and played a major role in his smashing debut season in the NBA.

Once he had a grip on his role, he thrived, which was evident in the double-digit fourth quarters he racked up last season coming off the bench. He had 21 of them, compared with 11 this season.

The problem this season is that Gordon hasn't been sure of his role.

He had banked on becoming a full-time starter. He thought he had earned it. Gordon practically lived at the Bulls' training facility during the off-season to improve his ball handling and conditioning, but he started the season coming off the bench again.

"That was kind of tough to deal with at first," Gordon said. "I thought I was definitely going to come in ..."

His words trailed off.

He ended up starting for a chunk of the season, but went back to being the first guard off the bench later because Skiles wanted his fourth-quarter shooting to improve.

Publicly, Gordon comes off as unflappable, addressing people with self-assurance and diplomacy. But that doesn't mean the lineup changes or fluctuations in playing time don't bother him.

Most of the time he bottles up frustrations. It's not his place to question authority figures, he said. When lineup changes or decreased playing time rattle him, sooner or later it shows up in his play and sometimes in his words.

"Why do people only question my inconsistency with scoring?" he asked. "They need to look at how many minutes I'm playing."

Gordon isn't the only Bull who connects decreased production with playing time. Chris Duhon and Andres Nocioni have said they struggle to stay productive when their minutes dip, but they aren't analyzed with the same sharpness Gordon faces as the third overall pick in the 2004 NBA draft.

With parity on the roster, Skiles often goes deep when distributing playing time. A player can go from starting to not playing at all. Taking it in stride is sometimes easier said than done.

"If you look at guys like [the Celtics'] Paul Pierce, if he starts 0-for-10, he's still going to get minutes," Gordon said.

Gordon, like a few of his teammates, sometimes plays with the sinking feeling he's about to get pulled. He's still not used to it, and apparently it doesn't do much for his confidence.

"With consistency you get more confident," he said. "But a lot of confidence comes from people believing in you."

Skiles has said that he doesn't play favorites and that court time is determined both by intensity in practice and performance during games.

But Gordon sounds like someone who isn't sure of his place, and it wouldn't be the first time he has struggled with doubts.

"I used to tell him everyone wanted to be Ben Gordon except Ben Gordon," Calhoun said. "He lacked self-belief."

Once he found it, there was no stopping him in the college ranks. "He's always going to be a clutch shooter," Calhoun said.

Ultimately, Gordon wants to prove he's much more.

Battle for ECAC title

LACROSSE from page 14

to run the ball up the field and get it in transition and finish that way," Cannella said. "We have to be able to keep them out of that as best we can. We have to defend the hell out of the ball on our end. They're going to get theirs; it's a bend and not break situation."

Cannella isn't afraid to fight fire with fire, and won't change the Minuteman attack to try to slow the pace of the game.

"That's our style and that's why all of these games have been in the 13-12 range," Cannella said. "So you're going to see two teams fight it out. It'll probably come down to [who has more firepower that day]. Hopefully it comes down to that, because that means we're in the ball game."

NOTES: Senior captains Sean Morris and Jack Reid were nominated, along with 21 other players, for the Tewaaraton Trophy on Tuesday.

Morris, who leads the nation in scoring, was one of five finalists last year for the award, which is given to the nation's top player.

The team's third captain, defensive midfielder Jake Deane, was named the ECAC Defensive Player of the Week for the second time this season following a dominant performance in a 13-7 win over Hobart on Saturday.

Deane won 17-of-21 face-offs and tied a career high with 12 groundballs. Deane is third in the nation in groundballs, averaging 8.5 per game.

Senior midfielder Jamie Yaman and UMass will face Georgetown on Saturday at 1 p.m. in Washington, D.C.

Stewart makes waves in racing

By Mike Harris
Associated Press

People call him Bubba, and James Stewart insists he can't remember why. The 20-year-old Supercross and Motocross star doesn't really mind.

"People think that my real name is Bubba and that's what they call me. I'd rather be called James, but it doesn't really matter," the bubbly Stewart said. "The only thing that really matters is they keep calling my name."

Not much doubt about that.

Stewart, who started racing at the age of 4 and had a sponsor by the time he was 7, is a prodigy. After winning 11 amateur championships, the youngster from Florida moved up to the developmental AMA Supercross Lites series in 2002 and became, at 16 years, 247 days, the youngest rider to ever win a Lites race.

He went on to grab nearly every possible record in Lites over a three-year period, including winning 18 of 20 races in 2004 in the AMA East/SuperCross Lites and Motocross Lites series.

Overall, he won a record 47 Lites races before finally moving up to the big leagues, the 4mp'd Mobile AMA Supercross Series and the AMA Toyota Motocross Championship, in 2005.

The move up wasn't a smooth one, though.

Practicing in Phoenix before the season began, Stewart fell and fractured his left forearm, an injury that kept him out of action for eight weeks.

When he finally did make his much-heralded 250cc debut, Stewart finished on the podium in Orlando. He then won at Texas Stadium in Dallas, the first of three Supercross wins last year.

But Stewart's problems weren't over. During the outdoor Motocross season that followed, he fell again and came away with a concussion. He then was hit with a mysterious stomach ailment, which ended his season before it was finally diagnosed as a bacterial infection in his intestine.

"All that is behind me now," Stewart said. "I really consider this my first year because of all the time I missed last year. But dealing with all that stuff made me a better person, a stronger person. I feel great and I'm riding better than I ever have."

The record would seem to back him up.

A victory on April 6 in Houston's Reliant Stadium was his eighth in 15 Supercross starts this season, tying him for the points lead with 13-time AMA national champion — and defending Supercross champion — Ricky Carmichael.

Most of their fans love the idea of a true on-track rivalry springing up between the two Floridians. The 26-year-old Carmichael says that would be OK with him.

"Definitely, James has ridden exceptionally well all year, not just these last three races," Carmichael said after finishing second to Stewart at Houston.

"I know James has won three races in a row [this season] and I have two [in a row] this year and we're tied in the points, so anything can happen [in the last three races]," Carmichael said. "It's fun and it's what everybody wants too see. I'm glad to be a part of it."

Their next meeting will be Saturday night in Dallas and the pressure is on Stewart, who has the opportunity to become the first black racer to win a major motorsports championship.

"I know a lot of little kids are getting interested in the sport because of me and I want to be a good role model, that's the most important thing," he said.

Stewart's father, James Sr., was a motorcycle racer in Florida and still works with his two sons. James Jr. and younger brother Malcolm, considered a rising star on the Florida motocross scene.

It was determined early that James Jr. was going to make motorcycle riding his profession, although the Stewarts had to scrape to keep their son on the race circuit.

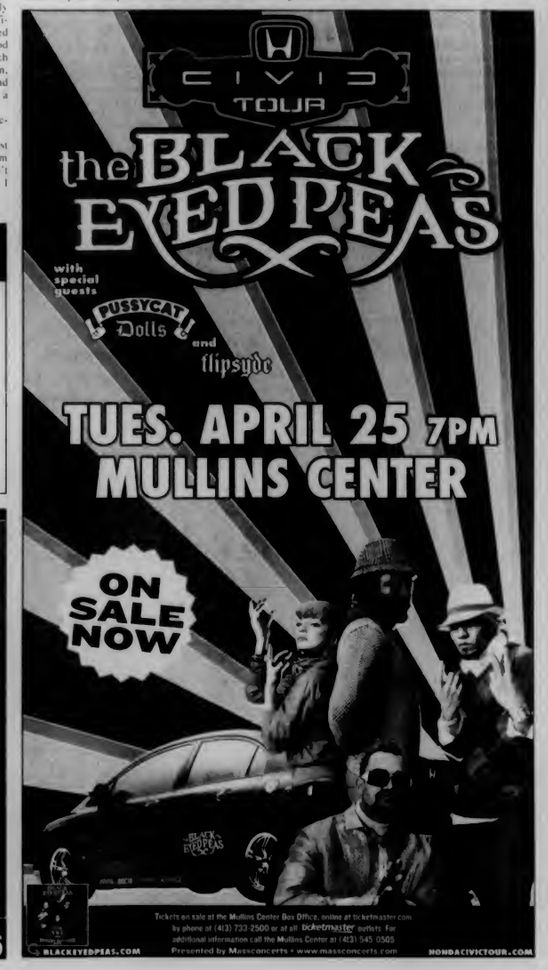
Sonya Stewart, James Jr.'s mother, says the family collected cans, bottles and whatever else they could find to turn in for cash to help keep food on the table and a racing bike under their oldest son.

"James has a God-given talent and we wanted to give him the opportunity to take advantage of it," she said.

Both boys were homeschooled and the Stewarts drove from race to race in a motorhome, which also doubled as their home.

Now, with their older son's fame and fortune established, the family owns a 100-acre farm in Haines City, Fla., about 30 miles south of Orlando, where they have built a home and state-of-the-art supercross and motocross training tracks and oversee two-week schools for riders of all ages and skill levels. Stewart is also building a house on the property and he likes to stay close to home.

When he's not racing, shooting commercials or making sponsor appearances, Stewart can usually be found driving his new Kawasaki KX450f on the family tracks.



"The way I look at it, I'm still pretty young and I'm only going to get better," the confident youngster said. "My speed is good, my conditioning is good and I'm learning patience, which I guess was my biggest problem, and I'm learning about a brand new motorcycle, which is really a great bike."

The other big factor in his success is passion for the sport.

"Sometimes, I find myself just smiling like an idiot when I'm racing," Stewart said. "I don't even know I'm doing it. But I can't help myself. I love it."

Dance Stuff
Spring Sale
50% off All Skatewear
20% off All Leotards, Dance Pants & Tops
April 18 – 29
220 North Pleasant St. (Rear) Amherst, MA
Tues, Wed, Fri 10-5 • Thursday 10-7 • Sat 10-2
(413) 253-5201

WRITE FOR SPORTS!!
All the time. Anytime.
The Daily Collegian

Turnovers plague UM

TURNOVERS from page 14

"The guys know where they are at this point in the season and how important it is not to turn the ball over in any game coming up here. Let's just hope that they can do it out there on the field. There is a big difference in talking about it and going out and doing it."

But while it has been a concern for Cannella, he isn't about to change his offensive philosophy. His teams have had success over the years by playing at a high tempo, taking chances and letting the offensive players go to work in the attacking zone. With just four games to play before the NCAA tournament starts, this isn't exactly the time to trade in the playbook.

"We haven't really done much differently," midfielder Jamie Yaman said. "Every week, we try to harp on limiting our turnovers. Some weeks we do it, and we do limit our turnovers. There is no real reason why we do it. We like to push the ball and take chances. Sometimes when we push the ball those passes aren't on, and sometimes they are."

Georgetown plays a similar style as UMass so if the transitional game proves to be the difference between the two teams — in a game that will ultimately give the winner the inside track to the ECAC championship — ball control will play a major factor in the outcome.

New show doesn't change image

By Jim Litke
Associated Press

"Bonds on Bonds" is not half-bad.

It's not particularly good TV, either, and we'll get to why in a moment. But if you think of the show in terms of the old "fairness doctrine," which once instructed broadcasters to provide balancing comment on controversial issues, it's a viewpoint that probably should be out there.

Yes, it smacks of "checkbook journalism." But considering how much the book, "Game of Shadows," relies on leaked grand jury testimony, this might not be the time or place for the profession to get hung up on ethics. Besides, "Bonds on Bonds" really is entertainment and not news, since both the star and his audience already know he's acting every time he opens his mouth on the subject of performance-enhancing drugs.

As Episode 3 began Tuesday night, the feds were crawling all over Bonds and opposing pitchers were throwing their best stuff by him. Not coincidentally, so were some fans.

Barely a day goes by, it seems, without someone close to Bonds — past or present — being called to testify before a panel investigating some allegation or other. Or else, some fool in the stands is hurling toothpaste (the homemade label on the tube in Arizona the other night read: "TO BARRY BONDS, THE CREAM, FROM: VICTOR CONTE.") or a syringe at his feet.

What makes the show fascinating is how well the center is holding while so much chaos swirls around him.

"They needed a villain, you know," Bonds says very matter-of-factly, "so I became the villain."

At home, we see Bonds surrounded by his family and at work, he's swaddled in a protective cocoon of publicists, personal trainers, sycophants and increasingly, security guards. Somehow, though, his comes across as a very solitary existence.

Using headlines and a series of voiceovers from sportstalk radio, "Bonds on Bonds" pushes the theme that the Giants slugger is shouldering the blame for an entire era of bloated, bulked-up sluggers, which is true.

San Francisco Giants left fielder Barry Bonds has been at the center of a firestorm of attention in the first month of the season.

See BONDS on page 10

Jumping onto the scene

HOAGLAND from pag 14

"He's displayed what he's capable of doing," she said. "He's really proven himself through hard work and dedication."

Perhaps the only thing more jaw-dropping than Hoagland's recent accomplishments is the fact that prior to this indoor season he hadn't laced up a pair of track shoes in over two years.

Hoagland ran track at Suffield Academy, where he attended high school, his sophomore, junior and senior years. He excelled in the long and triple jumps, 100-meter dash and the 4x100-meter relay. After graduating, however, track seemed to take a backseat.

In the fall semester after his senior year Hoagland attended the Art Center College of Design in Pasadena, California, where he intended to major in car design. After a year, however, he decided that that wasn't what he wanted to do. So, for his sophomore year he chose to attend UMass because it is much closer to home and because of its fine architecture department.

Hoagland elected to sit out the track season his sophomore year to get better acquainted with school. But he soon felt track and field calling him back, so last summer he approached O'Brien to tell him that he was interesting in trying out for the team.

"The great thing that I [saw in] Eric and the way he tried out was that he was very mature and very responsible — I always look for that in an athlete," O'Brien said.

After making the team, Hoagland began training with Otrando.

"He had tried out with [O'Brien] and then [O'Brien] told me that he had done some triple-jumping and long-jumping in high school and that he was pretty athletic so he did the tryouts and he put him on the roster," Otrando said. "Then I was the event coach that was working with him after that point."

Otrando's helping hand has certainly not gone unappreciated by Hoagland.

"[Otrando] has worked with lots of very successful athletes in the past. So I guess the reason she is such a great coach is because she knows what it takes to win," Hoagland said. "Everyone that she coaches on our team respects her and knows that she is a great coach.

"We have been working together through the indoor season and now to the outdoor [season] in improving my jumping technique, so that I can achieve the longest distance possible."

Those techniques must be working because Hoagland has been on a tear for the first three meets of the outdoor season.

He won the long jump event in each of the first two, recording jumps of 23 feet, 4.75 inches (which qualifies him for the IC4A Championships), and 22 feet, 11.75 inches, respectively.

At the Brown Invitational on April 15, however, he dropped down to a fifth place finish.

But that doesn't worry his coaches in the least. They are certain that Hoagland will gain more consistency as the outdoor season rolls further along.

With just under three full track seasons left in his college career, Hoagland has the potential to achieve even greater things.

"[He should] be able to be at the top of the A-10 Conference again, and the New England [Championships] and maybe make a little more of an impact at the IC4As," Otrando said. "As long as he keeps doing what he's doing, he'll just get stronger and better with time."

Many collegiate jocks have a reputation for using their "athlete" status to coast through the academic side of college. Hoagland, on the other hand, is a serious student-athlete. He is working towards a bachelor's degree in architecture and knows exactly what he wants to do with it.

"Hopefully [after graduation] I'll get into an architecture firm at some point. Probably in the commercial [field] because the residential [field] is not too open to new architects," Hoagland said. "Hopefully I'll get a job at a large commercial firm and work my way up."

Otrando has nothing but confidence in Hoagland. She is certain that the tremendous traits that he exhibits at track practice will carry over with him to the working world.

"He always comes to practice ready to go. He doesn't waste time. He's very dedicated to athletics and academics as well," Otrando said proudly. "He's a focused individual. I think that's the best way to describe him."

UM gearing up for tournament

TENNIS from pag 14

"Michelle has an unbelievable record," Dixon said. "Over two years she has a 93 percent win record and that's incredible. She is, for sure, the most outstanding player in the conference. She's beaten the No. 1 at Richmond, George Washington and Temple. She's the No. 1 player in the conference right now."

KAREN WINGER / COLLEGIAN

The UMass tennis team is preparing for the Atlantic 10 tournament which begins on Friday morning against La Salle.

With seniors Susan Johnson and Dorothy Iwanowicz receiving some rest, freshman Lauren MacKay and Kristin DiPiero filled in for them, but took the loss as BU outplayed the Minutewomen. Senior Jana Bartoloni moved up from her traditional number six spot in the lineup and competed at No. 4.

With the BU match behind them, the Minutewomen turn their attention to the A-10 tournament where they have played quite well in recent seasons. Last year, the Maroon and White made it all the way to the championship match but fell to the Richmond Spiders. Seeded fourth this year, Dixon feels her team has a legitimate shot at matching or even exceeding last year's terrific performance in the tournament.

"We're in really good shape right now," Dixon said. "The A-10 is up for grabs this year and we have as good a shot as any."

The tennis team will travel down to Monroeville, Pa. at the Club 4 Life for the 24th annual Atlantic 10 Women's Tennis Championship. Richmond is the two-time defending champion and has also won three out of the last four titles. Dixon's squad will match up with 13th seeded LaSalle in the first round with the winner of that match playing either Temple or Fordham.

Earlier this year the Minutewomen handily beat Temple 6-1 and their match against Fordham was postponed due to weather conditions. First UMass must square off against a LaSalle team that they have not faced since 1998. Despite the unfamiliarity, UMass is the much better ranked team and has never lost to LaSalle in three matches. The first round match will be played on Friday at 8 a.m.

Investigators search dorm rooms

By Tim Whitmire
Associated Press

DURHAM, N.C. — Police searched the dorm rooms of two Duke University lacrosse players after the two were arrested on charges of raping and kidnapping an exotic dancer during an off-campus team party.

District Attorney Mike Nifong said Tuesday he also hoped to link a third man to the alleged attack soon, but he said that person had not been "identified with certainty."

"It is important that we not only bring the assailants to justice, but also that we lift the cloud of suspicion from those team members who were not involved in the assault," Nifong said in a statement.

The accuser, a 27-year-old student at a nearby college, told police she was attacked by three white men at a house where she and another woman were hired to dance at a party of lacrosse team members the night of March 13.

Two team members — Reade Seligmann, a sophomore from Essex Fells, N.J., and Collin Finnerty, a sophomore from Garden City, N.Y. — were arrested early Tuesday. Each posted $400,000 bond and was released within hours.

Their lawyers assailed the district attorney for bringing the charges after DNA tests had failed to connect any of the team members to the alleged rape.

Seligmann is "absolutely innocent," said attorney Kirk Osborn. Finnerty's attorney, Bill Cotter, said, "We're confident that these young men will be found to be innocent."

Nifong has declined to say what led to the charges or discuss evidence in the case. The dorm rooms were searched Tuesday night for about two hours, according to resident assistant Taggart White.

Defense attorneys have said they have time-stamped photos from the party, bank records, cell phone calls and a taxi driver's statement to support Seligmann's claim of innocence.

Robert Ekstrand, who represents dozens of players on the team, said neither Seligmann nor Finnerty was at the party "at the relevant time." The indictment represents "a horrible circumstance and a product of a rush to judgment," he said.

Defense attorneys have also alleged that the accuser was intoxicated and injured when she showed up for the party.

A cousin of the accuser who has been acting as a spokeswoman for her family disputed that allegation in an interview on ABC's "Good Morning America" Wednesday. She identified herself only by her first name, Jackie, to protect the woman's identity.

"Before she went to the party she was not intoxicated, she was not drinking," Jackie said. "There's a great possibility that when she went to the party, she was given a drink and it was drugged."

The case has raised racial tensions and heightened the long-standing town-vs.-gown antagonism between Duke students and middle-class, racially mixed Durham. The accuser is black, and all but one of the 47 lacrosse team members are white.

Duke would not comment specifically on any disciplinary action taken against Seligmann and Finnerty, but said it is university practice to suspend students charged with a felony.

"Many lives have been touched by this case," Duke President Richard Brodhead said in a statement. "It has brought pain and suffering to all involved, and it deeply challenges our ability to balance judgment with compassion."

Nelson, Picard elected to Hall

By Doug Ferguson
Associated Press

Larry Nelson, overlooked as a Ryder Cup captain and often forgotten despite his remarkable journey from Vietnam War veteran to three-time major champion, finally got his due yesterday when he was elected into the World Golf Hall of Fame.

"Of all the awards, nothing can top this," Nelson said.

Nelson was elected on the PGA Tour ballot by getting 65 percent of the vote, the minimum required.

He will be inducted Oct. 30 at the World Golf Village in St. Augustine, Fla., along with the late Henry Picard, selected through the veteran's category, and Vijay Singh, who deferred his induction after being elected last year. That will bring membership in the Hall of Fame to 112.

Nelson's election came in his 11th year on the PGA Tour ballot, and in many respects, it was overdue.

He won the PGA Championship twice and the 1983 U.S. Open at Oakmont, joining Jack Nicklaus, Tom Watson and Seve Ballesteros as the only players to capture three majors in the 1980s. Nelson played on three Ryder Cup teams, posting a 9-3-1 record and becoming the only player to go 5-0 in a Ryder Cup.

But he was passed over as U.S. captain the last four times, with the PGA of America opting for Tom Lehman for this year's matches.

"This honor is so far greater than that," Nelson said. "I don't relate the two things. This has to do with my career. The Ryder Cup captain has to do with three or four people deciding who does that for the year."

Picard, who died in 1997, won 26 times on the PGA Tour, including the 1938 Masters and the 1939 PGA Championship. He later became a teacher, with Hall of Famer Beth Daniel among his pupils.

No one was elected from the International ballot, with Jumbo Ozaki heading the list with 46 percent of the vote. An inductee from the Lifetime Achievement category is expected later this spring.

Nelson was informed of his election three weeks ago, and even for a man who went about his golf so quietly, it was difficult for him to keep this a secret until the announcement at the Legends of Golf tournament in Savannah, Ga.

His road to the Hall of Fame is unlike any other.

Nelson's joy was baseball as a kid, and he thought golf was a sissy sport until he met a burly soldier in Vietnam named Ken Hummel who told him about guys making a living playing golf. Returning from the war, Nelson went to Kennesaw Junior College in Georgia and decided to play golf when he wasn't in class.

He was given Ben Hogan's book, "Five Lessons: The Modern Fundamentals of Golf," as a guide, and was encouraged by members at Pine Tree Country Club, where he worked, to try the mini-tours.

"I fell in love with it and got better every day," Nelson said. "I was always put in a situation where everyone was better than I was. My motivation was getting better and feeding my family."

He broke 100 the first time he played, and made it through PGA Tour qualifying school in 1973. Six years later, he won the Jackie Gleason Inverrary Classic by three shots over Grier Jones, then won his first major in 1981 by four shots over Fuzzy Zoeller at Atlanta Athletic Club.

His defining victory might have been the U.S. Open at Oakmont in 1983, when he beat Watson by one shot. Nelson added the '87 PGA Championship at PGA National, beating Lanny Wadkins in a playoff. He ended his career with 10 victories.

"Until I get in front of everyone in St. Augustine will it actually feel it's real," Nelson said. "I'm living in a dream world right now."

What touched him the most Wednesday was a group of Hall of Famers who attended the announcement, such as Hale Irwin, Tom Kite, Charlie Sifford, Tony Jacklin and Carol Mann.

"I don't know of too many people who feel they deserve to be in there," Nelson said. "To get the 'welcome' from guys who have accomplished a lot more than you have ... it's like winning another major, as far as I'm concerned."

Picard won the '38 Masters with a 32 on the front nine, holding off Harry "Lighthorse" Cooper and Ralph Guldahl, then won the PGA a year later with a birdie on the 36th hole to square his match with Byron Nelson, and a birdie on the first hole to win.

"Henry Picard was one of the country's brightest stars in the decade leading up to World War II, where his victory total compares favorably to the likes of Sam Snead during that span," PGA Tour commissioner Tim Finchem said.

The voting body for the World Golf Hall of Fame consists of Hall of Fame members, golf writers and historians, the World Golf Foundation board of directors and members of the Hall of Fame's advisory board.

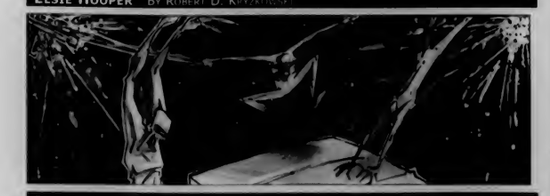
The Hall of Fame does not disclose vote totals, only percentages.

While he was selected through the veteran's category, Picard received 53 percent of the vote on the PGA Tour ballot. Two-time U.S. Open champion Curtis Strange received 50 percent, followed by Craig Wood at 37 percent.

If You've Got a Plan We've Got a Van!
POTTERS AUTO & FRENCH RENTAL
Insurance Replacement Rates FREE PICK-UP
• Direct Billing to Insurance Company • Locally Owned & Operated • 7 & 15 Passenger Vans • UMass Purchase Orders, MHEC Rates
North Amherst Motors
Collision Repairs & Glass Replacement
78 Sunderland Rd., North Amherst, MA (413) 549-RENT (7368) www.northamherstmotors.com (One mile North of UMass - on bus route)

Celebrity Beauty
Beauty Is Our Only Business
Bring this ad for 30% OFF any service!
Hair Cuts, Waxing, Coloring, Perms, Facial Treatments
Hours: Tuesday - Friday 11 - 6 Saturday 10 - 4
321 Main St Amherst (Next to Brueno) 413 256 0819

Bueno Y Sano
Every Tuesday is
Fat Tuesday
Grandé Burritos same price as regular burritos every Tuesday.
1 Bothwell Walk Amherst MA - Behind Newbury Comics Call Ahead for Pick Up (413) 253-4600 Open Daily 11a.m. - 10p.m.
134 Main Street Northampton MA - Next to Thorne's Call Ahead for Pick Up (413) 586 7311 Open Daily 11a.m. - 10p.m.



On-Line Classifieds...
Simple & Easy!
Interested? Go to www.dailycollegian.com
Questions? Call 545 - 3500

UMass Amherst
What are your Summer plans?
Register Now!
Session I - June 5 - July 13
Session II - July 17 - August 23
UMassULearn.net
545-3430
Have some fun and get things done! Take a summer class at UMass and you'll get ahead. Want to work on your GPA? Stay on track to graduate? Summer at UMass means smaller classes, with the same great professors.
Online or on campus!

LABRAT By Richard Martell

ELSIE HOOPER By Robert D. Krzykowski

THE FAMILY MONSTER By Josh Shalek

PAUL By Billy O'Keefe

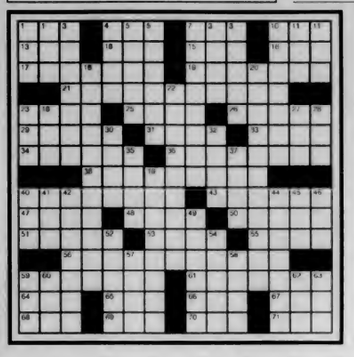
A COLLEGE GIRL NAMED JOE By Aaron Warner

Quote of the Day

"Times have not become more violent. They have just become more televised."

—Marilyn Manson

ACROSS
1 Over the hill
4 Stooge
7 Make a choice
10 Spoiled
13 Clod buster
14 Personal pension $
15 And not
16 Miner's product
17 Fastener attacher
19 Trinkets
21 Bagel topper
23 ___ gin fizz
25 Mall event
26 Actress Diamond
29 Bamboo-eating mammal
31 Scoundrels
33 Tilt to one side
34 State positively
36 Soared rapidly
38 Curved swords
40 Circular temple in Rome
43 In general
47 ___ Bnith
48 Instituted legal proceedings
50 $100
51 Skunk indicator
53 Bambi's dad
55 Concussions
56 Querulous state
58 Old name for a two wood
61 Failing temporarily
64 Marker
65 Aerial RRs
66 Dander
67 Ironman Gehrig
68 Hair preparation
69 To date
70 Tankard filler
71 Pen



DOWN
1 Exclamations of surprise
2 Used-car site
3 Church leaders
4 Tick off
5 Locavores
6 Landing strip
7 Precisely
8 Skin hole
9 Attempts
10 Arvel, hammer or stirrup, e.g.
11 Is for several?
12 ___ Paines, IL
18 Forecrdams
20 Futility
22 Musical iconce alcks
23 Fancy tub
24 Spanish article
27 West of films
28 Sentence stretcher
30 Monumental entrance
32 Con game
35 Equal scores
37 Fast food magnate Ray
39 Most meek and mild
40 Network of "Nations"
41 Industrious insect
42 Writer V.S.
44 Throat guardians
45 Inc. in Liverpool
46 You betcha'
49 Alan Ladd movie: "The Blue ___"
52 Beat-era writer
54 Tree knot
57 Loathsome
58 Fencer's weapon
59 Large-scale
60 Caviar
62 "___ as a Stranger"
63 Fellow

Find today's answers online
www.dailycollegian.com

The Moan and Dove
Fizzy yellow beer makes you smarter.
themoanandDove.com
460 West St. • Rte. 116
Amherst, MA • 256-1710
3pm 'til 1am every day

Chicago Pizzaria Yes, We Deliver!
PIZZA - CALZONES - SUBS
SALADS - PASTA - DINNERS
RIBS - SEAFOOD - SLICES
PARTY PLATTERS NOW AVAILABLE!!
CALZONE SLICES...LIKE NO OTHER!
HOURS
Sun-Wed 3pm-2am
Thurs-Sat 3pm-3am
Order For DELIVERY or PICK UP
(413) 549-6073
150 Fearing Street Next to Patterson Dorm Amherst, MA 01002

Best Bar Around
Seven O's
KARAOKE
Every Wednesday
LIVE BAND
Saturday
4-22-06
STRANGE BREW
at 9:00 p.m.
Route 116, 330 Amherst Road Sunderland, MA 01375
(413) 665-8788
2pm to 1am M-F
12pm to 1am Sat & Sun
Next To Cliffside Apts.

Horoscopes

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
Don't forget to fill up your water bottle before going to class today.

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
You should get your palm read over the weekend.

aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
Just do your homework now and get it over with.

taurus Apr. 20-May 20
Spell check needs to be your new best friend.

gemini May 21-Jun. 21
You will get all caught up on sleep tonight.

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
Don't go out of your way to hand that paper in.

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
If you have a sore throat get yourself some honey.

virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Someday you will be able to afford all the shoes you want.

libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22
You will find a whole bunch of blank CDs today.

scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
You will have 12 missed calls when you get out of work tonight.

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Your backpack is going to be way too heavy today.

capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
You should get a lunch box and bring your lunch to class everyday.

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

Announcements

Race into a good time. I'm fast, easy to handle and have the look that turns heads. Meet me, the Ford Fusion, outside the Campus Center on April 25th between 10 AM and 3 PM. Brought to you by your New England Ford Dealers.

Let Us Pay You To be a student here Full tuition plus $5,000 each year www.umass.edu/armyrotc

Apartment for Rent

One bedroom apartment located in the center of town. $680/mo, heat and hot water included. Call (978) 771-8074

2 bedroom $1100 3 bedroom $1400 4 bedroom $2150 Now Accepting Applications 253-7377 millvalleyestates@wlinco.com

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing, 1&2 bedroom apts. Leases begin June, July, Aug or Sep. First come, first serve. Get them while they last. www.brandywine-apts.com stop by or call 549-0600

28 Stockbridge St.: 4 bedroom house- 2 baths, living room, eat in kitchen, pantry, laundry, finished basement, yard, 2 car garage. 1.5 mi. to campus! $2,800/Mo www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

Childcare

Amherst Center family looking for parents helper in exchange for housing everything included. Call 413-687-2710

Looking for 10+ hrs/week babysitter & help w/light housework. Must be reliable and trusted. Ruby 210-8155.

Employment

#1 EASY HOME BIZ Make up to 5k week!I do the work Call 1-800-378-1169 ID# 2561KB Now! 1 Time $1995 Start Fee.

1000 Envelopes = $5000. Receive $5 for every envelope stuffed with our sales materials. Guaranteed! Free Information: 24 hour recording 1-800-796-6567

Employment

The best summer of your life! Live, work, and play outdoors at one of New England's best Summer Camps. Seeking staff to work as Cabin Leaders at overnight Boys Camp, 6/18 – 7/22. Teach three daily skills classes, supervise a Cabin Group, and role model YMCA values for boys 7-17. Room, Board, paid staff training and $800-1200 salary. Download application packet at www.camptakodah.org/staff/positions.html or contact Camp Director William Therrien at (603) 352-0447 / willy@camptakodah.org

PAINTERS NEEDED! Hundreds of positions available throughout New England. Work outside with your friends and family in your hometown. No experience needed, training provided. Join large student painting company this summer. Hiring now! 888-277-9787, www.collegepro.com

Bartending $300/Day potential. No experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 x162

Employment

Apartment Leasing Consultant – Love People? Can't Sit Still? Nat'l real estate firm has a unique opportunity for individuals this summer as leasing consultants at our 232 unit apartment community in Sunderland. We need energetic, organized, & passionate individuals to work in an environment where no 2 days are alike. Individuals w/ retail, hospitality, banking, or restaurant experience are encouraged to apply. Send resumes to erich@aspensquare.com or fax to 240-525-0058. Visit us at www.aspensquare.com

Furniture porter and maintenance person needed for busy auction gallery on Nantucket Island this summer. (508) 228-3942

Rent us your Ears! Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu Voicemail: 545-6837

For Sale

"Tiktaalik roseae.. Time is Running Out for Intelligent Design." Celebrate the discovery of the missing link between fish and land animals with fishapod clothing and gifts at http://www.cafepress.com/tiktaalikroseae

House for Rent

Northampton- 4 bedroom, double living room, open and enclosed porches. June $1300 plus utilities, near park Skibiski, Realtors 586-1827

Room for Rent

Female to share with another friendly Sublet June 1 – August 31 $430 with everything included. Call Sandra 774-826-9597

CAPE COD Summer rooms Hyannis area. Private pond. $150 a week includes... (508) 428-3456

Services

Pentium Color laptops $99 We type term papers, resumes, cover letters. 413-584-8857

Services

Legal questions? We have answers at the Student Legal Services Office, 922 Campus Center or Call 545-1995

PREGNANCY TESTING HIV TESTING, Birth control, and Emergency Contraception STI Screening and Treatment Affordable and confidential Tapestry Health...37 Pray Street, Amherst 548-0932

Travel

Disney/Beach Area 7/6 nights stay. Pd $600.00 Sacrifice $199.00 Good for one year 978-444-0261

Wanted

EGG DONORS WANTED Help make a couple's dream of becoming parents come true by becoming an egg donor. Very generous compensation and expenses paid. Must be a non-smoking female between the ages of 21 and 32. For more information, please visit our website at www.robertnicolesq.com or contact Christine or Liz at 781-551-0900.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS THURSDAY

THURSDAY, APRIL 20, 2006 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Clash of the ECAC titans

Minutemen meet Hoyas in pivotal conference mathup

By Dan Duggan
Collegian Staff

In its six years of existence, the ECAC has had just two different champions — Massachusetts and Georgetown, who have each won the league title three times.

The annual matchup between the No. 8 Minutemen and the No. 7 Hoyas has been a de facto conference championship game, as the winner of the heavyweight tilt has won the league crown in five of the six years.

This season is no different, as the UMass-Georgetown matchup —slated for Saturday at 1 p.m. in Washington, D.C. — will once again go a long way in determining this year's league champion.

UMass and Georgetown enter the game with identical 8-2 overall records and 3-1 marks in league play. The two squads are locked up in a four-way tie for first place with Penn State and Loyola.

While UMass coach Greg Cannella is steadfast in his belief that no game is more important than any other, it's safe to say that when the schedule comes out every year, many players circle the late-season date with the Hoyas.

"It's developed into a great rivalry, so the guys know what Georgetown represents in our conference and in the country," Cannella said. "As I told the guys, it's another big game in a season of big games. If you're too hyped up it will hurt you. You want your guys fired up for every game, and certainly they'll be fired up for this game, but you have to be able to control your emotions."

The teams have only met six times (with each squad winning three games apiece), but a rivalry has grown quickly, mainly because each matchup has produced high-scoring, tight contests.

Every meeting has been decided by less than three goals, with the difference in three of the games being a single goal.

"There have been great games between the two teams. That's why rivalries exist," Cannella said. "They exist when you have two fairly even-matched programs that battle it out every time out. It has developed into some really good games because of the competition."

The up-tempo pace that both teams employ has added to the excitement in the games, and Cannella knows his defense will be put to the test on Saturday.

"They're explosive. They love

See LACROSSE on page 11

Senior defenseman Jack Reid was selected as one of 23 final nominees for the Tewaaraton Trophy on Tuesday. Reid is joined by senior attackman Sean Morris as finalists for the award.

UM winning despite turnover problems

By Jeff Howe
Collegian Staff

It's not always common to see a highly successful team — in any sport — succumb to such a crippling statistic such as turnovers. But 10 games into the season, that has indeed been the case with the No. 8 Massachusetts men's lacrosse team.

The Minutemen are coming off an eye-popping 27-turnover outing in their 13-7 victory over Hobart on Saturday, accentuating what has been the most frustrating issue with the UMass team this year.

The Maroon and White have turned the ball over 17.2 times per game in 2006 in comparison to just 14.7 giveaways per contest for their opponents, a difference in 2.5 per game for a team that has an 8-2 record.

Last year, however, UMass only turned the ball over at a clip of 13.3 times per game, which was 4.1 less turnovers than their opposition's number of 17.4. For the sake of comparison, UMass' turnover ratio over the last two seasons has gone in the wrong direction by an average of 6.6 per game.

Against a team like the No. 7 Hoyas, who are on tap for the Gorillas in two days down in the District of Columbia, possessions will be at a premium as much as they ever have been so far at this point in the schedule.

"We've continued to talk about it — not too much — but we're hoping we can pay greater attention to it," UMass coach Greg Cannella said. "We're going to need greater attention to it this weekend. We haven't thought too much about it.

See TURNOVERS on page 11

On the right track

By Dominic Poli
Collegian Staff

Neither of the Massachusetts men's track coaches, Ken O'Brien nor Antoinette Orrando, had ever seen or heard of him before. The soon-to-be junior was a complete stranger to them, but he wanted to join the track team.

Well, about eight months have gone by since then and in that time Erik Hoagland's name has grazed plenty of headlines in local newspapers, and rightfully so. In his first college indoor season, Hoagland stunned the world of UMass track and field by winning the long jump and triple jump at the Atlantic 10 Championships, the long jump at the New England Championships and taking third place at the IC4A Championships.

Hoagland's performance at the A-10 Championships on Feb. 18 was nothing short of exceptional. His victories in the long jump and triple jump marked the first time a Minuteman has ever won both events at the meet since UMass joined the league back in 1994. But there's another monumental highlight: his leap of 49 feet, 3 inches in the triple jump broke the UMass record for the second time that season. This electric day won him the UMass/Dinn Bros. Co-Athlete of the Week award.

"I had just gotten on the team this season, so it was my first collegiate championship. I didn't expect to win both," Hoagland said. "You have to do both events right after each other, so it got kind of tiring having to do all the run-throughs. But the team was pretty supportive, so that helped a lot."

His teammates' support must have been just what the doctor ordered because he continued right on over to the long jump, where he marked a distance of 23 feet, 4 inches.

Perhaps it was shock or simply exhaustion, but Hoagland says he didn't have time to comprehend all that he had done until a while later.

"I didn't really understand the magnitude of winning both until I got back from the trip and my [jumps] coach [Orrando] called me and told me that no one had done that before," Hoagland said. "And she told me that I broke the triple jump record too.

"It was just overwhelming because all these things that I was doing kind of came together at once. And then [winning] Athlete of the Week was pretty amazing."

As amazing as all of that was, Orrando was even more stunned by the tremendous grit that Hoagland displayed in order to get to that point.

"He actually had a little mishap shortly into the new year in which he kind of fell down and whacked his arm and he had a hairline fraction and I'm thinking 'Oh no, he [fractured] his arm, he'll be out for a while,'" Orrando said. "But he said 'It's not that bad, I'm going to keep doing what I can do and I'll come back.' And sure enough, he did and he worked really hard. He's quite a competitor."

It was this kind of heart and determination that led Hoagland to continue his season-long reign of success just a week later.

At the New England Championships on Feb. 27, he won yet again. This time it was the long jump with a distance of 23 feet, 3.35 inches.

Hitting him like a ton of bricks, his achievements left this Belchertown-native what he described as "speechless."

Orrando certainly wasn't, though.

"That was equally as exciting," Orrando said. "He didn't have quite as good a performance in the triple jump [he jumped 44 feet, 5.5 inches to finish in 11th place] but he did win the long jump. To do that back-to-back [weeks] is pretty tough. He felt a little beat up at that point [due to a nagging ankle injury]."

But this 21-year old superstar wasn't finished there.

One week later he was at the IC4A Championships in Boston to cap off a spectacular season. Hoagland set a new personal record in the long jump when he soared a distance of 23 feet, 5.25 inches. Despite the great jump, he had to settle for third place.

"He definitely competed the best that he could. Three weeks in a row is tough to do," Otrando said. "He definitely put forth a great effort and did the best he could."

What becomes apparent, however, is that no matter how well he does, Hoagland will always be his own toughest critic.

"Coming in third is never something to be proud of. But, considering that the IC4A is a pretty competitive meet, it felt pretty good," Hoagland said, adding that his ankle started to give out towards the end of the season, making his events much more difficult to do.

Hoagland demonstration of grit came as no surprise to Otrando.

See HOAGLAND on page 12

Another Boston rival on tap

By Eric Athas
Collegian Staff

After the dismantling of one Boston rival on Tuesday, the Massachusetts softball team will look to take care of another one this afternoon when it takes on Harvard at the UMass Softball Complex for a doubleheader. The Minutewomen shut out the Boston College Eagles 6-0 on Tuesday, holding them to just five hits. The win was the team's seventh straight and 15th out of the last 16 contests.

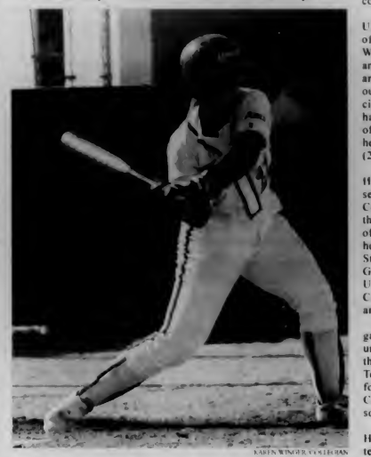
The last few games for UMass have been highlighted by individual milestones, and the matchup against Harvard (15-16) could be the same.

On Saturday, freshman Whitney Mollica set the new single-season RBI record, driving in five RBIs against Temple, increasing her total to 47. Senior K.J. Kelley, who holds the all-time home run record at UMass, cranked her 40th homer in the win against B.C.

So far this season freshman Brandice Balshmiter has struck out an A-10-high 193 batters she has faced. With just a few more, she will pass Kelly Daunt on the all-time UMass list and will move up to the No. 4 slot for single-season strikeouts. Her season ERA of 0.73 is also the best throughout the conference.

Balshmiter will have to continue her work when she faces Crimson senior Rachel Murray this afternoon. Murray is the offensive threat for Harvard, batting .264, hitting four home runs, and registering 19 RBIs. Her slugging percentage of .437 is third on the team among starters.

Although Murray is the leader at the plate for the Crimson, the Minutewomen's offense has proven to be unstoppable at times.



Led by the record-breaking Mollica, who leads her team in seven different categories (.416 batting average, 47 hits, 12 doubles, three triples, nine homers, 47 RBIs and a slugging percentage of .814.), UMass leads the A-10 at the plate. The Minutewomen have produced 52 runs over a span of seven games, combining for 26 total homers.

Countering that daunting UMass attack is a combination of Crimson hurlers. Amanda Watkins has made 20 appearances for Harvard, recording an ERA of 2.79 and 35 strike outs. Though she has been in the circle the most this season, she has given up the least amount of homers (four) compared to her three counterparts combined (21).

The last time UMass faced Harvard was during the 2005 season at the UMass Softball Complex. It was April 26 and the Minutewomen were coming off of a heartbreaking doubleheader loss to North Carolina State, where they fell 6-4 in Game 1 and 6-0 in Game 2. UMass recovered against the Crimson, sweeping them 4-1 and 4-3.

Those victories sparked a 13-game winning streak that lasted until the team was ousted from the NCAA tournament 1-0 by Texas on May 20 and then the following day by Texas A&M Corpus Christi, ending the season for UMass.

The contest today against Harvard is the last time the team plays at home until Friday, April 28 against Dayton, as the Minutewomen will be traveling to Saint Louis on Sunday.

Whitney Mollica and UMass take on Harvard today at 3 p.m. at home. Mollica set the school single-season RBI record on Saturday.

Loyalty strained by free agency

By Tim Dahlberg
Associated Press

Pedro Martinez was on the mound the other night in New York, which was enough to attract some 13,000 walk-ups to Shea Stadium. They came to celebrate win No. 200 for one of the best pitchers in the game.

Two seasons ago, the same fans wouldn't have paid $2 to take the No. 7 train to Queens to see Martinez pitch. Before he signed a $53 million contract with the Mets, they probably didn't even know he was nearing a career milestone.

Across town, Johnny Damon is cheered every time he comes to the plate at Yankee Stadium. He cut his hair and shaved off his beard, but he's still playing suspiciously like the guy who broke Yankee hearts when he hit two key home runs — including a grand slam — to help the Red Sox beat New York in Game 7 of the 2004 American League championship series.

All is forgiven. And the wounds seem to be healing quickly in Boston, too, over the $52 million signing of their center fielder.

"I know I'll always be remembered for Game 7 to help get us to the World Series and I know I'm also going to be remembered for jumping sides," Damon said after his signing.

Game 7, maybe. But these aren't your father's Red Sox anymore, either.

Heck, they're not even your older brother's. Eighteen months after winning the World Series, only 13 of the 51 players who took the field in Red Sox uniforms in 2004 were still in the organization when spring training began.

Babe Ruth's trade to the Yankees invoked a curse that lasted for more than 80 years. Damon's departure, after a brief sputter of protest from Red Sox fans, now draws little more than a yawn.

Even Red Sox fans don't really seem to care who is wearing their uniform these days.

"Most fans today don't really remember the time that when you were a Dodger you were a Dodger forever," said Robert Pasilkoff, who runs Brand Keys, a New York company that surveys fan loyalty. "You're dealing with the bionic consumer of the 21st century. These guys realize that it is a business. They may not like it, but they understand that this is how the game is now played."

Red Sox fans certainly understand it. The revolving door both in and out of Fenway Park in recent years includes players like Martinez, Damon, Roger Clemens, Wade Boggs, Nomar Garciaparra and Manny Ramirez.

But ask Boston fans how much they love the Red Sox today, and the answer is the same as when Carl Yastrzemski and Ted Williams spent their entire years in Boston uniforms. Lose a Clemens or Martinez or gain a Ramirez or David Wells, it doesn't matter as long as the Green Monster remains in left field and opening day is still in April.

In Boston it's simply an opportunity to sell new jerseys. Fans there are ranked No. 1 on the Brand Keys Sports Loyalty Index, an annual survey of 14,000 fans that charts the intensity of a fan's relationship with his or her team.

The Yankees aren't far behind at No. 3, while the Mets make the top 10.

All have something in common — they have enough money to reload at any time. And that makes fans quicker to both forgive and forget.

UMass drops finale to Terriers

By Eli Rosenswaike
Collegian Correspondent

The Massachusetts tennis team (11-9, 3-1 Atlantic 10) wrapped up its regular season on Tuesday with a disappointing performance against a strong Boston University team. The Minutewomen failed to capture a single match, falling to the Terriers 7-0. However, with the Atlantic 10 tournament just around the corner, UMass coach Judy Dixon decided to rest some of her starters and let some of the other women get a chance to play.

In doubles play, the women of BU were ferocious, winging all three matches in impressive fashion to take the doubles point. At No. 1 singles junior Michelle Spiess and sophomore Masha Pozar suffered a rare defeat dropping to 14-4 on the season as a doubles tandem.

At first singles, Spiess also took a rare loss, which turned out to be only her fourth loss all season in singles. Despite the loss, Spiess has had a highly successful campaign this year and won the A-10 Co-Player of the Week honors last week. Also receiving honors last week was freshman Stephanie Gimenez, who won the A-10 Rookie of the Week. Gimenez, like Spiess, also dropped her match against BU at No. 3 singles, a spot where she hadn't played all season.

Before the match, Dixon couldn't help but sing the praises of Spiess, and even with her loss against BU Dixon couldn't be more pleased.

See TENNIS on page 12

New England's Largest College Daily · Est. 1890

The Daily Collegian

Friday, April 21, 2006 www.dailycollegian.com Volume CXVI Issue: 119

Johnston's father describes first sign of son's paranoia

By Matt Belliveau
Collegian Staff

The father of the Daulton man accused of murdering his best friend shared his testimony in the Hampshire Superior Court yesterday, illustrating signs of his son's extreme paranoia that the defense believes drove him to kill.

Bruce Johnston, 61, testified in the trial of his son Bryan Johnston, 24, who is accused of killing his best friend and former University of Massachusetts student David Sullivan, 22, explaining that his son "lived a normal childhood" that included playing competitive sports and a heavy involvement in BMX bike racing.

Johnston also alluded to introducing his son to guns at eight years old, and that he had weapons around his home on 95 Bruce Drive in Daulton.

"I came from a hunting family, and I passed that information down to my son," said Johnston. "I had weapons in the house with ammunition, but that was all locked up."

Bruce Johnston explained his first knowledge of his son's paranoia which came months after he had helped move his son into his new dorm room in Hawaii Pacific University.

"He told me he wasn't enjoying the dorms and that his roommate had a father who was heavily involved in the Mafia," said Johnston.

Bruce then paid $6,000 for his son to live in a new apartment and purchased a new $9,000 Suzuki 650 street bike for his son.

"I didn't know what to believe," said Bruce Johnston. "I wasn't sure if it was true."

Johnston withdrew from the University months later.

Johnston felt concern after an incident months after Bryan returned from Hawaii Pacific.

In the spring of 2002, Bryan asked his father to look out his window to see "a van outside that is filled with FBI agents watching him."

"He was very anxious when showing me," said Johnston. "He pulled the curtains apart and I saw a white van outside."

Bruce told Bryan that he was going to go out to the van to show him that the men were not FBI agents, but Bryan stopped him from going.

"He wouldn't let me go," said Johnston. "He was afraid for my life as well as his own."

Johnston's defense team, led by defense attorney Alexander Nappan, rested yesterday just days after the testimony of Dr. Carol Feldman, the forensic psychologist who spent over 50 hours evaluating the mental health of Johnston after the murder, that Johnston suffers from psychotic delusional disorder and was not able to control himself when he killed David Sullivan.

The Commonwealth, led by prosecutor Renee Steese, challenged the psychiatrist's conclusion by detailing Johnston's seemingly logical behavior after the murder.

Cell biologist gives Williamson lecture

By Steve Stafford
Collegian Correspondent

Brown University Professor Kenneth Miller gave the annual Kathryn and Paul Williamson lecture at the Fine Arts Center yesterday, mostly covering the conflict between evolution and intelligent design.

Miller, a staunch defender of evolutionary theory, played a starring role in the 2002 Cobb County, Georgia evolution trial.

The trial began after the school board placed biology textbooks authored by Mr. Miller with a warning sticker, stating that evolution is only a theory and not a fact.

"Of course it's a theory. Theories explain facts," said Miller yesterday. "Why take evolutionary theory out of biology textbooks? Why not cell biology, physiology, or for God's sake Organic Chemistry?"

Miller has received national recognition in this conflict, making appearances on CNN's "Newsnight" with Aaron Brown and most notably Comedy Central's "The Colbert Report."

Miller has also written several popular books including the bestseller, "Finding Darwin's God: A Scientist's Search for Common Ground Between God and Evolution," as well as a successful series of high school biology textbooks.

Calling his lecture "God, Design and Darwin," Miller criticized intelligent design and debunked several myths about evolutionary theory.

Most prominent among these myths was that evolution disproves the existence of God.

Quoting his comments on the "Colbert Report," "I don't view God as a trickster. I think he's so clever that he set in motion this process that made you, made me, and maybe even made Bill O'Reilly."

"It was a blast. Those six minutes went really fast. [Colbert] has one of the quickest wits I've ever seen and he always stays in character," said Miller describing his appearance on "The Colbert Report". "Aaron Brown, however, is a very soft-spoken, thoughtful man. He actually let me finish my sentences. That experience was sort of the anti-Colbert."

Miller strongly rejected the idea that science should account for the supernatural.

"By that logic, astrology is also a legitimate scientific theory," said Miller. "Supernatural explanations may be right, but that doesn't make them science. For instance, how else do you explain the Red Sox beating the Yankees after losing three games in a row? Maybe God just got sick of George Steinbrenner."

Miller told the crowd of approximately 200 people about recent discoveries that further prove evolutionary theory to be correct and about the many transitional "missing link" species that we have discovered in the fossil record.

He also quoted a somewhat surprising defender of evolution, Pope Benedict: "[Evolution] can fall within God's providential plan for creation." As Professor Miller mentioned, the Vatican rejects Intelligent Design, calling it "bad science and worse theology."

In the past, Miller has appeared as an expert witness in controversial court cases about evolution in Cobb County, Ga. as well as in Dover, Pa.

"Once I was mentioned on the 'Daily Show' my students thought that I was actually doing something worthwhile," he joked.

Both of these trials stirred up controversy nationwide, and as he brought up, even in England.

Despite taking criticism from various groups, Professor Miller counts himself among the believers; he is a practicing Roman Catholic in his hometown of Seekonk.

"I coach CYO basketball, isn't that the true test of devotion," said Miller.

Many of the attendants found his faith and commitment to science refreshing.

"It was nice that he pointed out that not all Christians believe in Intelligent Design, like his example with the Catholic Church," said UMass Junior Diana Barszcz.

Credit card fraud cases dealt by UMass Police Department between January 2005 and April 2006

It was days after spring break when freshman University of Massachusetts student Joelle Sanford received a phone call from her bank notifying her of possible fraudulent activity with her credit card account.

Sanford went online to check her account and was stunned when she noticed that $600 was charged under her name. Later that day, Sanford realized that the thief had more than just her credit card information — the thief had her identity. Sanford is certain the suspect is a student living on campus.

Logging onto a networking Web site called iFriends.net, the thief used Sanford's credit card information to buy a subscription and create a profile. Included in that profile was enough information to give Sanford the chills.

"They had my phone number, my address, my name, my e-mail, my boyfriend's e-mail, and they even had my cell number — It was just kind of creepy," said Sanford, who says that the person ultimately charged about $1,000 on the Web site.

Sanford's incident does not stand alone. With identity theft and credit card fraud on the rise, the exposure of students to fraud has been displayed on campus and on the Internet, forcing one local company to change its business methods.

With seven full-blown credit card fraud cases dealt by the UMass Police Department between January 2005 and April 2006, the issue has been a frequent problem for Deputy Chief Patrick Archbald, who says that the cases that his department deals with often involve a victim and possibly a known suspect. The problem, however, is prosecuting that suspect.

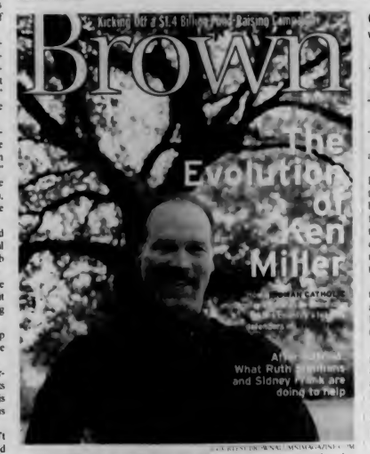
When Sanford realized someone had hacked into her life, she contacted iFriends, explaining to the Web site maintainers how she never logged onto iFriends.net — a site that contains live adult video chats.

The person she spoke with at iFriends described the profile that was registered under Sanford's credit card, and things became even more unsettling.

The thief had constructed an entire phony profile under Sanford's name — stating that she was single and an econ/macs major. Every time the thief logged on to the site and added a new feature to the fake profile, Sanford's card was charged a fee. A steady stream of charges amounted until the grand total reached $920.

Bank of America nullified the charges under the bank's Total Security Protection policy, and iFriends cancelled the account. While Sanford never contacted the police regarding this issue, she is adamant that the thief lives in a dorm on the UMass campus.

There was a phone number that the perpetrator had used to call iFriends, and that number was traced back to the UMass switchboard. The thief made a call from a phone on campus, but that's where the trail went cold.



"It was scary," said Sanford, who believes that the credit card information may have been breached because she did not properly shred all of her bills. "Luckily [the bank] cancelled the charges for me, and it kind of just ended there."

Archbald says the problem with local incidents is that it's hard to prosecute the suspect at hand. Often, the bank refunds the victim, and the other victim, the credit card company, isn't willing to prosecute, because the cases are not large enough in scale to justify costly legal counsel. There have been instances when a bank has lost up to $10,000 and not appeared in court.

"It's a great feeling to identify a suspect, but in the back of your mind you're thinking about two, three, or four months from now, things are probably going to peter out and not a whole lot's going to happen with it," said Archbald.

UMass sophomore Provan Slys experienced credit card fraud in cyberspace. She had her debit card information stolen through a fraudulent e-mail masked as an official solicitation from eBay on March 16 — about a

See FRAUD on page 3

Ken Miller, a staunch defender of evolutionary theory, played a starring role in the 2002 Cobb County, Georgia evolution trial.

SOM offers rides for drunk students

By Dan O'Brien
Collegian Staff

Some college students at local bars are sure to get lucky this weekend.

That's because students from the Isenberg School of Management at the University of Massachusetts will be giving their peers free rides home from downtown Amherst every night through Saturday. The goal is to discourage drunk driving and market the new Ford Fusion vehicles at the same time.

The effort is for a class project for the Marketing 497K class, also known as Advanced Promotional Strategies. But the students are calling their class the Mass Minute Marketing.

Students looking for free rides to go downtown can find them between 7 and 11 p.m. Thursday through Saturday at Hobart Lane, Puffton Village, Townehouse Apartments, Brandywine Apartments, Boulders Apartments, Mill Valley Apartments, the Southwest Horseshoe and Rolling Green and Alpine Apartments.

Rides leaving from downtown will last from 11 p.m. until 2 a.m. and will begin at the Starbucks Coffee Shop on N. Pleasant St.

The project's public relations spokesperson, Caren Tortorici says promoting the event is a win-win situation for students.

"We're getting people in the fusion and we're giving them a safe ride," Tortorici said.

Mass Minute Marketing had a $5,000 budget to plan an event that would promote the Ford Fusion in and around the UMass campus. Tortorici says $1,000 was spent on renting two vehicles for the event, and the remaining money was spent on TV and print advertising, shirts, tents, banners and food, among other items. The group's main sponsor was New England Ford Dealers.

The group plans to hold a "Mass Fusion" event on Tuesday at the UMass campus from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m. with activities that participants hope will promote the event and allow students to have fun at the same time.

The group says some of the activities will highlight aspects of the vehicle. In addition, radio station Laser 99.3 FM will be broadcasting live from the event and providing music. Students who participate in vehicle interactions will be entered to win Boston Red Sox tickets, along with a variety of other prizes donated by local businesses.

A rock wall and a cookout will also be at the event.

The UMass students working on the entire project say they have worked hard to make it a success.

"This is the most intense six credit class that I've ever taken," Tortorici said. "It's the best hand on experience you can get."

ARTS & LIVING

"NOTORIOUS BETTIE PAGE"

Mary Harron's biopic shows a cheerful and enthusiastic Page.

Page 6

EDITORIAL/OPINION

SOME RA'S ARE POWER CRAZY

Some rules should be ignored as long as there is dorm harmony.

Page 5

WEATHER

TODAY High 65 Partly Cloudy

TONIGHT Low 34 Clear

TOMORROW High 60 Low 37 Showers

SPORTS

MINUTEMEN HEAD WEST

UM travels to Saint Louis to face newest conference opponent.

Page 10

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief Michael A. Busack
Managing Editor Eric Athas
Business Manager Nathan Chomsky
Production Manager Nicholas Belanger
Night Supervisor Katie Huston
Advertising Manager Kerry O'Grady
Advertising Production Lauren Egavian
Editorial Production Amanda Allen
Arts & Living Editor Ian Jones
Comics Editor Amanda Allen
Editorial Editor Kristen LaCasse
News Editor Dan O'Brien
Photo Editor Kate Sachsenmaier
Sports Editor Jeff Howe
Circulation Manager Thomas Hecht
Distribution Manager Nick Gleason
Finance Manager Daniel Conti
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Assistant Advertising Caren Torrorici
Assistant Business Phil Smollier
Asst. Arts & Living Morgan-Ann Rousseau
Asst. Arts & Living Alex Butler
Assistant News Megan Daley
Assistant News Matt Bellineau
Assistant Photo Elizabeth Carusi
Assistant Sports Dan Duggan
Assistant Sports Rob Greenfield
Assistant Editorial Tucker Merrick

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is independently funded, operating on advertising revenue. Founded in 1890, the paper began as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1956. Published daily since 1967, The Collegian has been broadsheet since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call 545-3500 between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

Production Crew
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Eric Athas

COPY EDITOR
Michael A. Busack

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Nick Belanger

PRODUCTION STAFF
Sean Duram, Sara Belanger

If you see news happening, call us at 545-1809 and snap a photo with your cell phone, then send it to news@dailycollegian.com

Tent State University brings in students, debate over tuition fees

By Daniel Magazu
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts' held their first ever Tent State University at the wraps up this afternoon after a week of great weather, free food and much deliberation over bulging tuition costs and issues of diversity.

The event kicked off on Monday evening with very modest crowds but as the week went on more people made their way out to the dozens of tents set up on the Student Union lawn.

Students sat in on workshops that discussed issues ranging from community development to effective lobbying techniques.

Initially, volunteers for the event planned on holding democratic meetings every evening to implement what had been discussed during the day into a "platform for action."

"Basically the democratic meetings allow us to make plans for what we can do beyond the week of Tent State," said volunteer Sara Bernardo. "We will be able to come up with ideas for what sort of actions we can take to cause change."

However, according to UMass graduate student Jed Murr, this process began happening at the workshops.

"We noticed that during some of the workshops people had already begun discussing how they could take action," said Murr. "During a civil disobedience workshop this morning there was already talk of building a broad-based coalition on campus."

Tent State University will come to a close today with a free barbeque and party being held on the student union lawn at 12:30 p.m.

On Tuesday, students got the chance to hear from one of the leading voices in the anti-war movement when Cindy Sheehan gave a speech about a possible link between the war in Iraq and declining support for higher education. She was joined by Preston Smith, a Mount Holyoke professor and the National co-Chair of the Labor Party's Free Higher Education Campaign.

"It was great to hear Preston Smith talk about the feasibility of free higher education," said Bernardo. "The speech was interesting in conjunction with Cindy Sheehan's speech about how the war is cutting into education spending."

An exchange of ideas was not the only thing being served up during the week. Each day hundreds of students lined up along the tents to enjoy a free barbeque courtesy of the events sponsors.

In the spirit of Tent State University, many students chose to sleep out in their tents throughout the week. UMass junior Jon Moore found this to be one of the more enjoyable parts of the event.

"Some people have stayed up until three in the morning playing banjos and fiddles," said Moore. "The activities and camaraderie have been really good all week."

Tent State University will come to a close today with a free barbeque and party being held on the student union lawn at 12:30 p.m.

Students arrested in shooting plot

By Marcus Kabel
Associated Press

RIVERTON, Kan.—Five teenage boys accused of plotting a shooting rampage at their high school on the anniversary of the Columbine massacre were arrested Thursday after a message authorities said warned of a gun attack appeared on the Web site MySpace.com.

Sheriff's deputies found guns, ammunition, knives and coded messages in the bedroom of one suspect, Sheriff Steve Norman said. Authorities also found documents about firearms and references to Armageddon in two suspects' school lockers.

"What the resounding theme is: They were actually going to do this," Norman said.

Norman said he would ask prosecutors to bring charges of conspiracy to commit murder against the teens, ages 16 to 18. Attorney General Phill Kline said in a news release that his office was taking over the prosecution at the request of the Cherokee County attorney.

Deputies' interviews with the suspects indicated they planned to wear black trench coats and disable the school's camera system before starting the attack between noon and 1 p.m. Thursday, Norman said. The suspects apparently had been plotting since the beginning of the school year.

Officials at Riverton High School began investigating on Tuesday after learning that a threatening message had been posted on MySpace.com, he said.

The message discussed the significance of April 20, which is Adolf Hitler's birthday and the anniversary of the 1999 Columbine High School attack in Colorado, in which two students wearing trench coats killed 13 people and committed suicide, the sheriff said.

"The message, it was brief, but it stated that there was going to be a shooting at the Riverton school and that people should wear bulletproof vests and flak jackets," Norman said.

School officials identified the student who posted the message and talked to several of his friends, Norman said.

But Riverton school district Superintendent David Walters said the significance of the threat didn't become clear until Wednesday night, after a woman in North Carolina who had chatted with one of the suspects on Myspace.com received more specific information that there would be about a dozen potential victims, at least one of whom was a staff member. She notified authorities in her state, who contacted the sheriff's department, Norman said.

Norman said that the potential victims were popular students and that the suspects may have been bullied.

"I think there was probably some bullying, name calling, chastising," he said. He also said investigators had learned the suspects were computer buffs who liked violent video games. About 900 students in all grades go to school on the campus.

Riverton is an unincorporated area of about 600 people along what once was the famed Route 66 in southeast Kansas, near the Oklahoma and Missouri borders.

UMass, ready for relay

By Ryan Richardson
Collegian Staff

Nearly 800 University of Massachusetts students will gather at Pratt Field today to hold the fourth annual Relay for Life at 6:30 p.m.

Groups from the Five Colleges will gather to wrap up weeks of fundraising on behalf of the American Cancer Society.

The event will continue through the evening until 12:30 p.m. on Saturday and will include activities and events all through the night for participants.

The primary focus is the relay itself, where team members will walk the track throughout the event as a symbol of the continuing struggle against cancer. Cancer survivors will lead the first lap along with their caregivers. The event will be accompanied by inspirational speakers as well as prizes, contests, and games throughout the evening.

Organizers hope to beat last year's record fundraising of $72,000. So far the participating groups have managed to raise roughly $64,000 online according to Dan Lachar, Online Fundraising Chair and UMass junior.

"Last year 60 percent of donations came online, so I'm estimating that we'll raise about $100,000, which was our goal," Lachar said.

The online figure does not take into account other donations and the $10 registration fee. Donations will be accepted online through the summer at www.acsevents.org/relay/mafivecollege.

As of Thursday, the Five College Relay for Life was the number five relay in New England.

Enrolled participation in the event has also more than doubled from some 500 people in 2005 to over 1,000 this year.

UMass students make up a large percentage of participants, with around 800 UMass students signed-up to participate online. In addition to the college students, several local organizations and high schools have thrown their hats into the ring.

A large part of this boost in participation is owed to Pam Horan and Amy Miller, Relay co-chairs, who worked with Vice Chancellor Mike Gargano to fold Relay for Life into Greek Week. Greek organizations have served a large part in the fundraising and getting the word out about Relay contributing close to $10,000 through their teams.

FBI analysis raises new questions in bungled Detroit terror case

By John Solomon
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — A new FBI analysis of evidence in a bungled Detroit terrorism trial undercuts the recent indictment of the former prosecutor in the case, creating fresh conflict in a legal drama that has embarrassed the Bush administration.

The 13-page report by FBI Agent Paul George concludes that satellite photos of a Jordanian hospital closely match hand-drawn sketches found in 2001 inside the apartment of four Detroit men who the government claimed had surveyed the site as part of a terrorist plot.

The new analysis conflicts with the Justice Department's argument that photographic evidence did not match the sketches.

George testified at the 2003 Detroit terrorism trial and produced the new analysis around the time he was called to testify late last year before a grand jury that eventually indicted the prosecutor for wrongdoing in the case, officials said. The agent's report was obtained by The Associated Press.

Convictions of three of the four Detroit men — arrested shortly after the Sept. 11 attacks — were tossed out in 2004 after the Justice Department told the court its own prosecutors withheld photos from defense lawyers that could have helped prove the defendants innocence.

Last month, former Assistant U.S. Attorney Richard G. Convertino and a State Department investigator were indicted on charges they conspired at the trial to withhold the pictures because they would have shown that the drawings were not surveillance sketches of the hospital, as Convertino and trial witnesses had portrayed.

"The object of the conspiracy was to present false evidence at trial and to conceal inconsistent and potentially damaging evidence," the indictment alleges.

In an earlier court filing, Justice went further, claiming the photos disproved the sketches. "It is difficult if not impossible to compare the day-planner sketches with the photos and see a correlation."

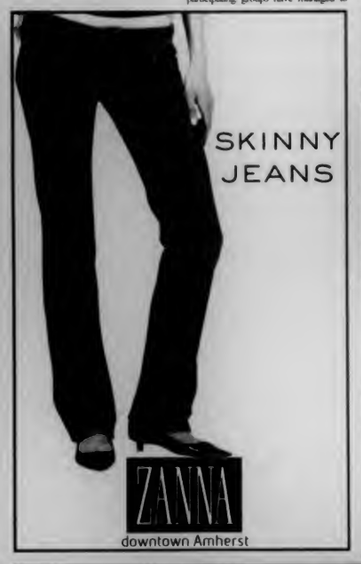
Department officials said they were aware of George's report, but remained confident they could prove the ex-prosecutor and the State Department official lied about the existence of the photos, which were e-mailed to Convertino before the trial and were not turned over to defense lawyers. Convertino said he never saw the e-mail or photos.

"The pending prosecution is not about the guilt or innocence of the defendants" in the original terror case, Justice spokesman Bryan Sierra said. "This is about lies perpetrated by a federal prosecutor and a federal agent, as alleged in the indictment. It's about perjury and the integrity and fairness of the judicial system."

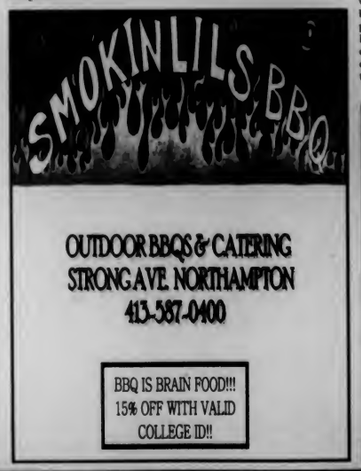
Justice officials also acknowledge they don't possess one of the two sets of photos they believed were taken in the case and don't know if they exist. Aerial photos believed to have been taken by helicopter before the trial are missing, but prosecutors do have a second set of ground and helicopter photos of the Jordanian hospital they say were e-mailed to Convertino before the trial.

Convertino alleges he is being prosecuted solely because he sued then-Attorney General John Ashcroft in 2004, alleging mismanagement of the war on terror.

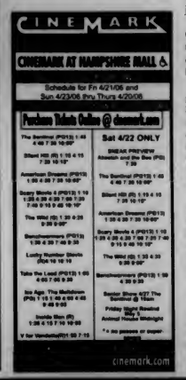
Convertino is due in court Friday. His lawyer said Thursday the new FBI analysis "disproves the indictment's preposterous allegations" and vindicates the original terrorism convictions.



"The government now agrees, after three years of inquiry and millions of dollars, that the evidence in the original case proves the terrorist convictions originally rendered by the jury," attorney Bill Sullivan said.



The criminal charges against Convertino are based on the principle that prosecutors must turn over to defendants all evidence that could help them prove their innocence.



Legal experts said the emergence of George's analysis could help Convertino's lawyer create reasonable doubt. Defense lawyers could argue that if photos matched the sketches — instead of disproved them — Convertino would have had no motive to hide them and no obligation to turn them over, experts said.

"We don't know yet what other evidence Justice might have, so we have to wait and see but this new information seriously weakens the allegations as initially reported," New York University School of Law professor Stephen Gillers said.

Gillers said the fact that an FBI agent would create an analysis that could undercut Convertino's indictment "signals disagreement about the wisdom of this prosecution within the enforcement agency."

Moussaoui prosecutors doubt part of defendants claim

By Michael J. Sniffin
Associated Press

ALEXANDRIA, Va.—Prosecutors acknowledged on Thursday the government has no evidence to support — and actually doubts — part of Zaracias Moussaoui's dramatic courtroom confession that he was involved in the Sept. 11 attacks: His claim that shoe bomber Richard Reid was to be on his team.

Thanks to legal maneuvering outside court, the potentially damaging concession reached the jury in a decidedly undramatic way: It was part of a stipulation agreed to by the government and read to the jury in the monotone voice of defense lawyer Alan Yamamoto.

The disclosure came shortly before the defense rested its case for sparing the life of the 37-year-old Frenchman. Testimony in the trial concluded after prosecutors presented their only rebuttal witness, psychiatrist Raymond Patterson, who examined Moussaoui. Patterson disagreed with defense experts who testified the terrorist conspirator is a paranoid schizophrenic.

On Monday, jurors who must choose execution or life in prison for Moussaoui will hear closing arguments and begin deliberations.

The windup of testimony in the 1 1/2-month roller coaster trial covered several issues. Seven more people who lost relatives in the attacks testified on Moussaoui's behalf about how they have devoted their lives to reconciliation rather than vengeance. The defense called 13 victim relatives over two days to try to blunt the impact of nearly four dozen victims and relatives whose heartrending testimony for the prosecution had some jurors wiping their eyes.

The defense also read another government-approved stipulation acknowledging that six al-Qaida operatives who directly planned and put in place the Sept. 11 plot, including mastermind Khalid Shaikh Mohammed and planner Ramzi Binalshibh, are in U.S. custody and have not been charged. Some Sept. 11 families have criticized the government for charging only Moussaoui, whom they consider marginal, and not major players such as Shaikh Mohammed.

The concession about Reid went directly to the argument between prosecutors and defense lawyers over Moussaoui's credibility since he testified March 27. He stunned the courtroom that day by recanting his four-year-old claim of having nothing to do with Sept. 11. Instead he said he was to have hijacked a fifth jetliner, with Reid, that day. Previously, Moussaoui claimed his planned attack on the White House was part of a later plot.

Since Moussaoui testified, the court-appointed defense team — with whom he does not cooperate — has portrayed him as a delusional schizophrenic who lied either to achieve martyrdom through execution or to enhance his role in history.

Prosecutors have tried to shore up Moussaoui's reputation. They argue he is not insane but a committed Islamic fundamentalist jihadist who finally confessed his role and determination to kill Americans.

Defense lawyers tried to bring Reid to court from federal prison, where he is serving life for attempting to detonate a shoe bomb on a trans-Atlantic flight in late 2001.

That bid was thwarted in motions still sealed from the public. But defense lawyers were able to obtain the government's agreement on the statement about Reid.

"No information is available to indicate that Richard Reid had pre-knowledge of the Sept. 11 operation or was instructed by al-Qaida leaders to conduct an operation in coordination with Moussaoui," it said.

Reid named Moussaoui as the beneficiary in his will and two FBI analysts concluded that was an unlikely decision for him to make if they were going to be on a joint suicide mission, the statement said.

The two FBI analysts also concluded it was unlikely Reid was part of a Sept. 11 plot with Moussaoui because Reid spent May to September 2001 traveling in Afghanistan, Pakistan, Israel, Turkey and Amsterdam and The Hague in the Netherlands. All Sept. 11 participants were in the U.S. by July 2001, the statement said.

During the government's rebuttal, Patterson testified his examination of Moussaoui found "exaggerations of traits we all have," but "not a major mental illness."

In jargon: he's a character," Patterson said.

He dismissed items cited by defense doctors, such as an incident in which he spat on a defense doctor more than a dozen times while refusing to submit to an examination. "I describe that with the clinical term 'pissed off,'" Patterson said, noting Moussaoui claimed guards manhandled him earlier that day.

Moussaoui's often vituperative and incoherent written court motions and his dream that President Bush will release him were not evidence of the disorganized thinking or delusions of schizophrenia, Patterson said. Rather, he said, they were a part of "fighting his war, using them as propaganda."

The jury earlier found Moussaoui eligible for execution. Although Moussaoui was in jail on Sept. 11, the jury ruled that lies he told federal agents before Sept. 11 kept them from identifying and stopping some of the hijackers.

This artist rendering shows court appointed physician Dr. Raymond Patterson, center, being questioned by U.S. Attorney David Novak.

The Skinny on "Skimmers"

Some thieves use what is called a "skimming device" to steal credit or debit card information. These devices look similar to a small pager, and when the thief swipes a card through it, the magnetic information contained on the card is copied. With this information, counterfeit cards can be produced, or the number can be used to purchase merchandise on the internet.

Skimming devices are also sometimes attached to an ATM, and when a cardholder thinks he or she is swiping their card through an ATM, they are actually becoming victims of credit card fraud, as their information is copied.

Visa has a $1,000 reward for information leading to the arrest of skimmers.

Tips on Foiling Fraud

UMass Police Department's advice to prevent becoming a victim

- Never give out information over the telephone or internet unless you are certain of the source.
- Never leave your wallet, purse, checkbook, or credit cards unattended or unsecured in an unlocked room.
- Obtain and review your credit report regularly.
- Shred your financial garbage including credit receipts, pre-approved credit offers, credit checks, credit card bills, or bank deposit slips.
- Try to keep a list of all your credit or debit card numbers, and issuer phone numbers in a secure place.
- Be wary of employees who have your card in their possession.

UMass students combat credit card fraud week before Sanford realized her dilemma with it friends.

FRAUD from page 1

This type of e-mail, commonly known as "phishing," has become notorious among regular eBay users and is one that has all of the markings of an eBay message — the logo, the PayPal symbol, the professional-looking e-mail address. The e-mail asks the recipient to reenter their credit card number, or username and password. According to eBay.com, the most effective defense against these types of e-mails is to ignore them, and not provide any sensitive information.

Slys, who had only recently begun using eBay and was not aware of protocol, entered her credit card data without thinking twice.

"I didn't know that there were fraud e-mails that went around," Slys said. "I'm usually really cautious about anything I do online with my debit card."

According to Slys, the thief bought merchandise, and attempted to spend $800 on another purchase. After Slys filled out paperwork at Sovereign Bank, she had her account frozen for a week, and had to wait days for her new charge card to come.

"I'm glad they caught it," said Slys. "I think a lot of people just throw [information] around and are a little bit less cautious."

One local delivery company altered its business practices to reduce the vulnerabilities of its customers to becoming victims of credit card fraud. Sugar Jones, an Amherst-based cookie-delivery company, staples a pink slip on the side of the box that the food is brought in.

Up until last week, the pink slip had the customer's credit card number, expiration date, 3-digit code found on the back of the card (also known as the CVC2 security code), and phone number written out in print, which American Bankers Association spokesman John Hall says should not happen.

"[Sugar Jones] is required by the card companies to protect [the consumer's] information," said Hall, who was shocked to hear that the 3-digit CVC2 security code was written on the pink slip.

Hall added that Visa and MasterCard passed a rule three years ago that all machines print out receipts and that the credit card number is truncated, only revealing the last four digits of a card number.

According to visa.com, Visa's Data Security Standard says that, "...all members, merchants, and service providers that store, process or transmit cardholder data...[are required] to protect cardholder data." If these standards are breached, the business, which does so, could be subject to penalties.

After questioned about the pink slip, Sugar Jones' owner Larry Severance acknowledged the problem and as of several days ago, employees have refrained from writing out the crucial information on the slip.

With the credit card number alone, a thief could commit fraud by several different means. The first is by making a counterfeit "white card," which is a blank credit card that has a magnetic strip on the back of it. The thief would then apply the stolen number to the blank magnetic strip, thus making a copy of the victim's card. All the thief needs is the credit card number. A thief could also exploit a card number by making purchases online with the 16-digit number.

Nevertheless, Hall says the real gold mine for thieves is not necessarily the 16-digit number on the front of the card, but rather the 3-digit CVC2 security code found on the back of a credit or debit card. This number, Hall says, is not easy for people to obtain, but if they do, bank investigators have a much tougher task in cracking the case.

"It's one thing for a card number to be out there – that's fairly easy to resolve," said Hall, who is based out of Washington, D.C. "The card company is going to wonder how the [3-digit CVC2 security code] got out to the crook."

Become an editor at the Daily Collegian!
News is hiring for the Fall
Apply Today in person!

Celebrity Beauty
Beauty Is Our Only Business
Bring this ad for 30% OFF any service!
Hair Cuts
Waxing
Coloring, Perms
Facial Treatments
Hours: Tuesday - Friday 11 - 6 Saturday 10 - 4
321 Main St. Amherst (Next to Brunos)
413.9699

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

EDITORIAL OPINION

FRIDAY, APRIL 21, 2006

"I may not agree with what you say but I will defend to the death your right to say it." -Voltaire

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

By the book is not the way

The laws we agree to as freshmen should not be enforced so strictly.

Duncan Devlin

When I got to UMass as an eager young freshman almost five years ago, I was met with many enthusiastic smiles and happy hopeful stories. I was also handed a stack of papers close to the size of a textbook that I was asked to sign. Among these was the Code of Student Conduct. Having stayed at many people's houses in the course of my childhood, each having different rules of the house I pretty much agreed with the need for a unified set of guidelines.

On top of signing this paper, my entire floor had a big meeting where we discussed the rules for living on campus. We were mostly freshmen, so we were pretty interested in getting back to our socializing; talking about how cool we were in high school, and drinking. My RA, a big Irish bloke known for his ability to consume seven gallons of beer in a night, pretty much summed up his idea of the Code of Student Conduct.

"First of all, I know that most of you are under 21, and that some of you may drink. Under no circumstances should you have your door open if you are under 21 and drinking. If I don't know about it, then it doesn't happen. Second, you all signed this set of rules. They are all pretty basic; just be respectful of those around you, and don't piss anyone off."

I was living on the seventh floor of Dickinson in Orchard Hill at this time, and there was quite a party scene. The entire floor was a pretty tight-knit group of friends, and our RA was hardly to be seen. When someone had an issue with someone else, some words would be spoken, and that would be the end of it. My RA would step in only when he deemed it necessary, and by all memory, that never happened. The floor got along beautifully.

My sophomore year would see a new RA. She was a sophomore instead of a senior, and a little anxious about her job. She would put a stop to loud noise if someone expressed an issue, but overall,

I was hoping to live in Orchard Hill again, after having developed such a community, but some tricks of the Housing Assignments Office brought me to Northeast, where I found out just how anal authority figures can be.

she too was concerned more with harmony on the floor than asserting her authority. I was hoping to live in Orchard Hill again, after having developed such a community, but some tricks of the Housing Assignments Office brought me to Northeast, where I found out just how anal authority figures can be.

Every rule in the Code of Student Conduct exists for a reason. Students are not to have too much alcohol in their rooms because . . .well, they're not. Music is to be kept to a minimum because people are trying to study or sleep (at any time of the day). Candles present such a fire hazard that even incense must be outlawed. When someone writes a law, there was an original need, and that is fine. The true test of the law lies in the choice to enforce it.

For instance, my RA has cited me for noise violations about a dozen times. She will tell me that she can hear my music at the security desk three doors down the hall. I will respond by asking the security guard if the music bothers him. After this little exchange, I will be told to turn down the music. I forget the fact that it is not quiet hours, my neighbors are not around, and there is actually some fun existing at college. The rulebook says I am out of line, and the rules must be enforced.

Similar instances occur when it comes to open containers. Beer looks a lot like apple juice. The decision is left to the RA to decide whether or not to investigate the situation. She has the option of either checking the beer, or thinking that it may be some other liquid or merely continuing on unnoticed. Sure, if her supervisor is present, then she may want to go for it, but if not, then why bother?

These people, who go completely nuts on rules, are the ones who go on to be state cops, giving out tickets for doing 66 in a 65 mile an hour zone. Just because it is written in the book does not mean that you have to enforce it. Use your judgment, or you become like one of the minions of the bad guys we were all so afraid of becoming when growing up.

Rules were meant to be broken, pure and simple. As an authority figure, there is not necessarily any reason to enforce any rules. Students and people in general, are capable of self government. The purpose of authority is to take care of those who cross the line. If a rule can be bent, go for it, or you will end up just like those state cops giving you a ticket to feel like they have some power in the universe.

Duncan Devlin is a Collegian columnist.

Get out of your dom into the outdoors

I don't know if I'm wrong or not, but it seems as if my fellow students are missing out on the incredible opportunities afforded by the season. Take me for example: here I am sitting at my computer typing an editorial on a beautiful afternoon instead of doing more important things like tossing a disc or laying out on the grass. My point is spring only comes once a year, it's sweet, and a lot of people are missing out.

Andy Martin

It blows my mind to think that instead of soaking in the life-giving rays of the sun and feeling the wind in their hair, literally thousands of kids are at this moment in their cells playing video games, watching TV, updating their Facebooks or writing on walls and instant messaging each other.

Don't use the excuse of doing work. My personal philosophy tends to put chilling with the sun ahead of most things that can possibly be put off, but even if you have work to do, most of it can and should be taken outside.

There are a few practical reasons for this. First, we're all familiar with the obesity epidemic in our country, even among young people. I'm not sure if this isn't just the sensational media's idea of something useful to freak out about, but I'll assume it's true.

I'm no scientist, but it seems obvious that there must be some correlation between the habits and entertainments of people today and our national health. Nutrition, of course, is another factor, and I don't think we have to thank the DC for anything.

Second, studies have shown sunlight to be good for your mood. I think everyone could use a bit of a pickup after our long, cold, lonely winters.

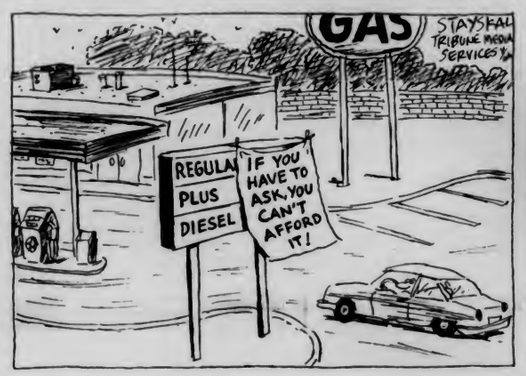
More importantly, however, I think there are personal, subjective, but undeniably true ways in which being outside directly affects well-being. Poets have extolled the virtues of nature since there have been poets, and many great thinkers, like Ralph Emerson, enjoyed gushing about the wonder of the outdoors.

Anne Frank put it extremely well when she said,

Whenever I'm jaded, overworked or just discouraged with life, I find nothing can give me the type of emotional and even physical boost in good vibrations that being outside on a pleasant day or night can.

"The best remedy for those who are afraid, lonely or unhappy is to go outside, somewhere where they can be quiet, alone with the heavens, nature and God. Because only then does one feel that all is as it should be and that God wishes to see people happy, amidst the simple beauty of nature."

I'm not a huge fan of personifying the power of the natural world as some kind of paternalistic God, but the fundamental sentiment is right on. Whenever I'm jaded, overworked or just discouraged with life, I find nothing can give me the type of emotional and even physical boost in good vibrations that being outside on a pleasant day or night can. A really good experience outdoors makes me feel like everything will eventually even out, no matter how much my petty problems may have been troubling me at the time.



Watching the light filter through the trees, following the shadows of clouds as they rush over the grass or standing in awe when late afternoon shafts of sunlight stab through the clouds over our valley fills me with a sense that there is a force in the world that transcends our usual standards of good and bad, and which is accessible to every person.

Spring weather isn't required of course to feel this; really, the drama of other seasons and times of day, the storms, the moon and the stars can be just as inspiring. However, it's spring right now, and it's in its most beautiful, shortest lived phase.

The temperature is mild, the sun is warm, not oppressive, the buds are just opening and the fruit trees are blooming. This is why now is the time to take advantage of what is available to us, whether thanks to God, or the Earth Mother or some variation of the benevolent force in the universe that organizes things into beautiful systems for our enjoyment.

So if anyone feels this, bust out of your cell, grab an implement of recreation or some sun block for lounging or just go for it and run around on the grass like a pagan. The screen may seem mesmerizing now, but you won't regret leaving it later.

Andy Martin is a Collegian columnist.

Some studies are useless

My articles have made the move to the Friday edition of the Collegian. After having only one article published in the Wednesday edition, this situation kind of reminds me when a bad television sitcom failing terribly in the ratings is moved to the dreaded Friday night lineup. Speaking of sitcoms, I believe my over exposure to the men's NCAA basketball championship tournament, or March Madness, has left my memory permanently engraved with CBS's sitcom lineup.

Kevin Dooley

I can remember visiting my grandmother in the nursing home when she was suffering from Alzheimer's disease. What was amazing was the fact that despite her memory loss, she could still remember the words to the Rosary. Fast forward 60 years later and I'll be the one with Alzheimer's disease. Instead of remembering the words to the Rosary however, I'll be reciting CBS's sitcom ads played during the March Madness Tournament. But I digress.

Over the long Easter weekend my dad got his hands on the book "Want Fries With That?" and was reading off facts about how bad fast food is for you to anyone who would listen. While my dad was preoccupied with this book, I had my head buried in a bag of McDonalds and swearing because there were only five McNuggets in a box that was supposed to have contained six McNuggets. The facts my dad was reading from the book got me thinking. Why are some studies even conducted and books written such as "Want Fries With That?" Isn't the fact that McDonalds and similar fast food chains are as unhealthy for you as watching five minutes of "The Simple Life?"

Beginning an investigation into rampant steroid usage in the game in 2006 is a little behind the curve if you ask me.

Studies like the ones which uncover the dirty secrets of McDonalds and Kentucky Fried Chicken can only enforce what any person with common sense already knows; this food is not good for you.

Occasionally, you will see on the news a reminder from the Surgeon General that daily exercise and eating fruits and vegetables will improve your health and overall well-being.

Um, OK. I don't need a reminder from the Surgeon General telling me that by burning calories and reducing caloric intake, I'll lose weight. This reminder is common sense. I'm also well aware that on occasions when I actually find a way to motivate myself to get to the gym at Lewis, that same night I am held hostage by my two friends until I agree to get in on Domino's 555 Deal.

Or how about when I'm loading my tray at the Worcester Dining Commons with fries and stuffed shells? Then, to make it look like I try to eat healthy, I grab an apple, which I have seen sitting on the counter since September, knowing all too well there is no way I'm eating that apple.

Major League Baseball is also throwing their hat into the world of useless investigations. Commissioner Bud Selig late last month opened up an investigation with the purpose of discovering the extent players were taking steroids in the game beginning in the year 2002, the same year they were made illegal in the game.

For those of you not aware of baseball's steroid problem let me explain. The owners, the media and even fans, including myself, all knew that certain players were taking steroids during the 1990s and into the beginning of the new millennium. The investigation needed not to continue when they realized that Barry Bonds' head was larger than the heads of any mascot in the game.

Beginning an investigation into rampant steroid usage in the game in 2006 is a little behind the curve if you ask me. MLB claiming that they had no idea that steroids were responsible for homerun records and bringing fans back to the ballpark is like not realizing that ESPN has a second channel or that claims of WMD in Iraq were exaggerated. The league might as well be investigating the fact that MTV doesn't show music videos anymore.

I believe this next recent study, though, may top both the Surgeon General's call for Americans to get moving and the MLB steroid investigation. In an article which appeared in the Arkansas Traveler (University of Arkansas) a nurse unveiled to the world one of the laws which governs our universe. According to Lori Reynerson, a nurse practitioner at the Pat Walker Health Center, "Although spring break is a time for fun and excitement, it can also be a time when students participate in risky behavior."

Now, on to her conclusion; this may shock you. Reynerson goes on to say, "Spring break brings an increased incidence of sexually transmitted diseases for college students." I'm speechless. A better study to have conducted would be whether there is an increase in college girls getting an STD immediately after dancing with her friends to Cyndi Lauper's classic song "Girls Just Want to Have Fun." I think that's a study we would all actually want to see.

Kevin Dooley is a Collegian columnist.

Emotion vs. knowledge

Jennifer Lane

I support gay marriage, I support my mother and I support her opinions, which are completely different from mine. I support love, life, freedom and happiness. I support the libraries, books, research, the Internet and Starbucks. I support Wal-Mart's everyday low prices, but not their work ethic. I support our boys over seas. I support our troops.

So when someone says, they decided to sign up. I don't have to support their political decisions. Don't support troops. Support peace and the withdrawal of the troops, I take it personally.

I shouldn't. Everyone is entitled to his or her own opinions, but to me, it's difficult to see through my blurred vision. I love those boys and I can't believe that someone is against them. True, opinions are just that, an opinion. To me, that opinion is one based on knowledge and mine is based on simple emotion.

These emotions, however, aren't simple. They aren't simple when you've spent over $50 in the past three weeks sending birthday presents to a loved one. They aren't simple when I've probably sent more letters over seas than in the United States in the past few months. So maybe my vision is allowed to be blurry and I'm allowed to be a little bit hurt by the statement against the troops.

The Internet caused this entire ordeal, although I do not blame the source. I simply reposted a Myspace bulletin that said support the troops. After reading about the beautiful and truthful comparison to our lives versus the troops' lives over seas, I reposted, truly believing in

Many people want only peace and not war, but unfortunately, there is only one president, one person, one being, that can make that final decision every word. Looking at this again, I thought, "Should I have posted that?" I think yes, I should have. If others are entitled to their knowledgeable opinions, then I am entitled to my simple emotion.

And, just to let you know, yes, I am that obnoxious person you see in traffic that, not only has one yellow "Support Your Troops" sticker, but two. One of them is custom made, with a picture of one of my friends in the middle, and his name. I'm that obnoxious person who roles up my window when the protestors are on the Common. I'm that obnoxious person who walks faster past the "support peace" signs in the campus center.

But I do not support the war. Is that allowed? Am I allowed to have that opinion? It may not be knowledgeable, but it is emotion. I don't have as many facts as some. I make a choice and decision to limit how much media and information I receive during the day. I will guarantee that it probably isn't nearly enough exposure to warrant such a statement as, "I believe in our troops, but not our war," but aren't I allowed?

Everyone has his or her own opinion. Be it knowledgeable or emotional, everyone is entitled. Overall, I'm not angry, but I am hurt. If that is an opinion, so be it; let it be. Many people don't believe in our troops. Many people want only peace and not war, but unfortunately, there is only one president, one person, one being, that can make that final decision. It's not you. It's not me. That's why we have our opinions, to sway his decision to our interests.

I don't support war, but I do support those boys. They signed up, yes, but some of them didn't know what they were in for. Some of them signed up for the wrong reasons, and some of them just wanted an education they couldn't pay for.

All of them want to come home. Whether it be to the family and friends they love, or the homeland they cherish, they want to come home. I appreciate everything they do, even if I'm not a full believer in what they're doing.

Make your own decisions, choices and opinions. It's our country, and we have the right to say what we please and help in whatever way we see fit. I see fit to walk faster past something I don't believe in. I see fit to roll up my windows and turn my music up a bit louder in traffic. I see fit to be that obnoxious person you see in traffic with not one, but two "Support Your Troops" stickers. I love those boys and I want them to come home safely, each and everyone of them.

Jennifer Lane is a Collegian columnist.

SUBMIT A LETTER OR OPINION

E-mail: editorial@dailycollegian.com

Fax: 413-545-3699

Mail: Letters to the Editor, 113 Campus Center, Amherst, MA 01003

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

ARTS & LIVING

FRIDAY, APRIL 21, 2006

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Rossellini honored as environmental 'champion' by Disney

By Roger Moore
The Orlando Sentinel

ORLANDO, Fla. — Isabella Rossellini is famous for her beauty, her acting and her lineage.

She's the daughter of Ingrid Bergman and Roberto Rossellini. She is the star of "Blue Velvet" and many other films, and has lived much of her life as a cover girl and People magazine "Most Beautiful People" celebrity.

"You have those parents, and you're born pretty, well, you go into the family business," she says with a chuckle. A one-time Chanel spokesmodel, star of interesting movies, from "Immortal Beloved" and "Wyatt Earp" to "Roger Dodger" and "The Saddest Music in the World" — she has done all right by the family name.

But in environmentalist circles, Rossellini is well-known for something else altogether — generosity and activism. She has spoken out for animals and wilderness for more than 20 years.

"The amount of time she's put into the environment, the amount of money she's put into it, really show her as a person with a passion for it," says Wildlife Conversation Network director and co-founder Charlie Knowles. Rossellini is on the board of that organization, and she is not just a pretty face for that board, Knowles says. She takes this work seriously.

"I was bad at math, and at school-work in general," says Rossellini. "But I knew I could earn money from being beautiful, and then donate that money to saving animals."

Thanks to the Disney Wildlife Conservation Fund, she'll have more of that cash to spread around. Rossellini was honored at Walt Disney World recently as a "champion" of the environment, with a $100,000 grant.

Rossellini, 53, accepted her award and promised to pass it on to conservation efforts she backs — The Howard Gilman Foundation, which runs the White Oak Plantation nature preserve in Yulee, Fla., north of Jacksonville; and the Wildlife Conservation Network, which is trying to save the Andean mountain cat.

"The first time the cat, which lives between Bolivia, Peru and Chile, was photographed was only in 1997," she says. "It is endangered because people hunt chinchilla, you know, for the fur coats."

Scientists think the cat primarily subsists on chinchillas.

"When I was a little girl, my mom had a chinchilla fur coat that I just dreamt I'd get to inherit someday. I never understood, nor did my mom, that having fur coats made from wild animals would mean the decimation of the animal in the wild."

Donating money to save the cat that needs the chinchilla to survive, Rossellini says, "is the least I can do to restore the damage!"

Rossellini is a world traveler whose fondness for wild animals began with domesticated ones, especially a dog named Macaroni.

"You have cats and dogs, and you start to wonder how the cats and dogs in the wild, tigers and wolves, were doing. You see your dog do something that seems instinctual, and you wonder where it comes from. Simple questions like that made me realize that we can't take animals for granted in the wild, anymore. We have to protect them."

She has had a long love affair with elephants, "my passion," and has long supported, financially, another Disney Wildlife Conservation Fund honoree — elephant advocate Iain Douglas-Hamilton.

"I love all kinds of animals, from dogs and cats, to birds in Central Park, in New York, where I live," Rossellini says. "But elephants are quite intelligent, with a matriarchal society, and it's quite moving to learn of the sagas of a family of them. Their affection for their babies, the fact that the group raises the babies, together, really touched me."

The others honored by Disney included comic actor and conservationist John Cleese, Nobel laureate Wangari Maathai, and legendary primate expert Jane Goodall, "a shocking list, and one I am quite stunned to be honored with," says Rossellini.

While in Orlando for the ceremony, Rossellini toured Disney's Animal Kingdom.

"It's not really Africa," she says. "But it makes you dream of Africa. And I love that Disney has taken on the cause of teaching conservation to young people. You really do need real elephants to be inspired to make a Dumbo. I am happy they understand that."

Isabella Rossellini was given a $100,000 grant from the Disney Wildlife Conservation Fund for her work as a "champion" of the environment.

Graffiti has developed its own art scene

By Tristan Wheelock
The Oracle (U. South Florida)

TAMPA, Fla. — There is a movement happening as this is being read.

Right now, there is a kid lost in an urban jungle with nothing but his wits and an aerosol can, painting his dreams on the walls around him. Maybe this kid keeps up with what he loves and doesn't compromise his aspirations despite the illegal nature of his chosen calling. Maybe his art will be famous one day, even though the critics never got a chance to see it in a gallery and point out its faults over glasses of cheap wine.

Though this is a story, it's not far from the truth. Graffiti has stepped into the mainstream. It is accessible, anonymous and undeniably cool, but it did not happen overnight. Modern street art is the product of more than 30 years of underground effort at nameless expression.

To understand what grafliti is, it is helpful to understand the vocabulary associated with it. In the book "Beautiful Losers: Contemporary Art and Street Culture," James E. Walmesley points out that the term graffiti is a dated one. Graffiti artists generally use the term "writing" when referring to their art, and they speak of themselves as "writers."

The first thing a new writer must do is figure out a "tag," or nickname. If you have seen graffiti, you have most likely seen a tag. They are usually short, aesthetic words sometimes written in complex tribal script known as "wildstyle." As one writer said, "Choose a clever name that defies the norm of simple-minded slang."

Once writers figure out their tag, the next step is "getting up." Getting up means — as the name suggests — writers should try to spray their tag in as many places as possible.

There are two ways in which a writer can "get up." One is a "throw-up," in which the writer's tag is usually written in bubbly block letters around three feet tall, typically in one color. A "piece" is similar to a "throw-up" but is larger and more intricate.

The tag and the throw-up are two tools beginner writers tend to choose. They are easy to put up and can be done without any planning.

On the other hand, due to its complex nature, a piece must be planned in advance. It can be the product of the combined effort of two or more artists. It can also include imagery beyond the tag, such as cartoon characters or of realistic imagery.

If a piece is well-styled and has good use of color, it is then referred to as a "burner." It is through these pieces that a writer's style is judged.

Writers also use wheat paste to display their work in the form of a poster. Wheat paste has been gaining popularity recently and can be seen all over Tampa, Fla. The benefit of wheat paste over writing is its ability to be transported. An artist could mail posters to another city and ask an artist there to put them up. Wheat paste is also very inexpensive. It is a mixture of flour, boiling water and sometimes sugar.

According to the essay, "In the beginning, there was the word," by Walmesley, in his book, TAKI 183 is credited with starting the graffiti movement. He was a delivery boy in New York in the early 1970s. Using a small marker pen, he began to write his tag wherever he went in the city. Others saw this and wanted to copy him. He unknowingly started the writing subculture.

"Graffiti started as just writing your name on things, but then evolved into a kind of urban calligraphy," local artist Patrick Hanlon said.

Graffiti is a unique art form in the sense that all of its participants have at some point broken the law. No other art movement in history can boast this. Graffiti will always be a subculture, despite mainstream efforts to control and incorporate it because of its inherent illegality. Rebellion and art are inextricably connected in the graffiti scene.

Accessability is another defining characteristic of graffiti. Traditional art may seem stuffy and unapproachable to someone who is just getting into art. Yet, you can walk up and touch graffiti. It is there for the people and not for the critics. Graffiti is in the public eye. It defies the constraint of authority.

"You're making your art more accessible to people" Hannon said. "You bypass the gallery system and reach people you wouldn't normally reach. It gives a sort of mystery or aura to your work people want to know what's behind it.

"When I see (graffiti) someplace, I think you can get an idea of the kind of culture a city has. If I see a bunch of cool stuff around, I think it's a little glimpse at what lurks beneath."

Graffiti has seen quite a bit of popularity as of late.

Mol is comfortable as 'Notorious' Page

By Bruce Newman
Knight Ridder Newspapers

In the dirty diorama of 1950s fetish photography, Bettie Page was the trussed-up pinup queen who delivered her people into bondage, rather than out of it. In "The Notorious Bettie Page," when her boyfriend discovers some of the salacious pictures Page has been posing for, all he can see is the shame in what she's doing. "Bettie, doctors write books about people like this!" he tells her, horrified. "It's disgusting."

"The Notorious Bettie Page"
Directed by Mary Harron
Starring Gretchen Mol, Chris Bauer
Picturehouse
Rated R
91 mins.

But he can't convince her she's bad; she's just photographed that way.

Page's career as a nude model in one of porn's seedier specialty arts is founded on a contradiction: She comes from a conservative religious background, against which she had no interest in rebelling. It is her sunny optimism that shines through the bondage hoods and naughty nighties, making her life worthy of the examination it receives in writer-director Mary Harron's biopic.

That, and her bottomless enthusiasm.

"The Notorious Bettie Page" examines the contradictions of its titular star's life, although rarely with the sort of unfettered glee that you might hope for. Harron, whose sober approach to obsession is evident in such earlier films as "I Shot Andy Warhol" and "American Psycho," cuts loose in only one scene, when Page (played by Gretchen Mol) tells fetish photographer John Willie (Jared Harris), "I believe in Jesus," while strung up against a wall like a prisoner at Abu Ghraib. She appears to be having fun, likes the attention more than craves it and sees nothing wrong with what she's doing. Page isn't some cynical porn star, selling herself out to sleazy men she despises. She cracks the whip because it makes her feel good.

The story is told as an extended flashback as Page waits outside a hearing room, where she has been summoned to testify before a Senate subcommittee — led by Estes Kevauver (David Strathairn), the senator from her home state of Tennessee — that is investigating the impact of pornography on the nation's youth. Seeing Strathairn in another black-and-white movie, set in the '50s, and involving a crusading senator, so soon after his Oscar-nominated role in "Good Night, And Good Luck" is a jarring piece of casting, made odder still by the fact that this part of the story never goes anywhere.

As the film unfolds, it becomes clear that when she was a teenager, Bettie was molested by her father. And later, she's duped by a man who leads her into a gang rape. This obviously is important material biographically, but thematically, it's at odds with the story. In the film, Page's sudden swerve from ruined innocence to fetish pinup doesn't spring from sexual trauma; her career isn't presented as a form of self-abasement.

Mol is a revelation as Page, and not just because she keeps taking her clothes off. She's so comfortable in Page's skin — every square inch of it — that, as one character in the film notes, "When she's nude, she doesn't seem naked."

Page's stardom was created in secret, and her personality, at least, was never fleshed out in public. There's no way to know if the nutty cheerfulness that Mol brings to her role as you guide through this world of seamy shockings and steamy looks bears any resemblance to the real Bettie Page, but it doesn't matter. She's the archetypal girl next door in stiletto heels and leather bra.

As a slightly twisted piece of '50s Americana, "The Notorious Bettie Page" would make an entertaining double bill with "Good Night, And Good Luck." But it doesn't bring us any closer to understanding Page's life, or the origins of the multi-billion dollar porn industry. She's just a girl who can't say no, and too often says yes on a whim and a prayer. To Page there is nothing erotic about what she's doing, and there's also remarkably little complexity to her story. She's a good girl who loves her family, loves the Lord and loves casting her pearls before (some Praise Jesus)

Gretchen Mol as the conservative and kinky Bettie Page in Mary Harron's biopic "The Notorious Bettie Page."

Drive-By Truckers' latest stays true to their Southern roots

By Jim Farber
New York Daily News

Mention Southern rock and some people envision Confederate flags and a legacy of prejudice. Others focus on blissful guitar solos and some of America's most deeply rooted songwriting.

Drive-By Truckers
"A Blessing and a Curse"
New West Records

The Drive-By Truckers, who hail from Alabama, have made it their mission to wrestle with, and reconcile, such contradictions on albums like "Alabama Ass Whuppin'," "The Dirty South" and a CD anointed with no less lofty a title than "Southern Rock Opera."

Conceived as a kind of down-home version of "Jesus Christ Superstar," "Southern Rock Opera" uses the tragic history of the band Lynyrd Skynyrd as a jumping-off point to create a mythic folk tale of regional pride and loss.

"On the one hand, there's a very romantic idea out there of what the South is all about," explains Truckers' guitarist Jason Isbell. "On the other, you have a history of people like Gov. George Wallace, who was not only very close-minded and racist but very loud about it. He ruined the party for the rest of us."

To help redress the balance, the band's music revives some of the open-minded style that fired great Southern rock bands like the Allman Brothers and Lynyrd Skynyrd. To avoid rank imitation, the Truckers mix such below-the-Mason-Dixon-line touchstones with elements from Crazy Horse, Tom Petty, the Replacements and the Faces.

The Truckers' seventh and latest work, "A Blessing and a Curse," arrived Tuesday, and it should only extend their reputation as one of America's most sterling bands.

Once again it benefits from the band's use of three full-time singers and songwriters: Isbell, Mike Cooley and Patterson Hood. That triple threat puts the band in the tradition of talent-heavy acts like The Byrds, Buffalo Springfield and Fleetwood Mac.

While the result may give the Truckers a creative boon, it could easily turn into a personal time bomb, given the inevitable ego clashes of having three strong individuals in the same band. "Luckily, we're the sort of people who get along," Isbell offers. "And we have a great respect for each other's work."

Cooley and Hood, who met in college, started the Truckers in 1996. Hood came from an esteemed musical family. His dad, David, played bass in the house band at the legendary Muscle Shoals studio of the '60s and '70s. Over the years, he performed with everyone from the Staple Singers to Traffic.

The younger Hood had some strong role models for the self-aware, neo-Southern rock forged by his band, including the Georgia Satellites and the Bottle Rockets. The Truckers' take on the style debuted on the 1998 album "Gangstabilly," followed the next year by "Pizza Deliverance." While such titles took a jokey run at Southern stereotypes, in the music they dealt seriously with pain and heartbreak.

It wasn't until 2001's "Southern Rock Opera" that the group became a national issue. Critics compared the disk to Randy Newman's 1974 regional classic, "Good Old Boys." Isbell admits that it took "gall" to rewrite Skynyrd's history, which comes complete with a retelling of that band's tragic plane crash. Small wonder the members of Skynyrd had a mixed reaction to "Rock Opera."

"(Guitarist) Ed King loved it," Isbell explains. "(Leader) Gary Rossington said he appreciated the album but that it weirded him out. I can understand that. If somebody made a record about my friends dying, it would freak me out, too."

Isbell says there has been some talk of turning the album into a movie or play, but none of the artists who've proposed a take so far have come up with the right angle.

Some critics wondered if the band could live up to their "Opera." But the two CDs since — 2004's "Dirty South," and the latest — have proven the doubters wrong. "A Blessing and a Curse" boasts beautiful melodies and smartly turned lyrics. Cooley penned especially moving verse for his song "Gravity's Gone." In the song, he imagines what hitting bottom might be like, though he never seems to get there. "I've been falling so long it's like gravity's gone and I'm just floating," he sings.

In the song "Aftermath USA," a dazed narrator wakes to find crystal meth in the bathtub, blood in the sink and, worst of all, terrible music on the stereo.

That last detail tips off the Truckers' dark sense of humor. They use it to alleviate the considerable suffering found elsewhere in their songs. Maintaining balance is key. Even though the album's final song is titled "A World of Hurt," they make sure to end it with the declaration, "it's great to be alive."

"It's important for us to make hopeful creations — because Lord knows we've done enough of the other kind," Isbell explains. "We're just trying to give both sides of the story."

The Drive-By Truckers' newest album "A Blessing and a Curse" lives up to their previous, ambitious releases.

Mamie Van Doren still in the spotlight

BY PETER LARSEN
THE ORANGE COUNTY REGISTER

NEWPORT BEACH, Calif. — Let's just get this part out of the way right up front.

The breasts that helped turn Midwestern farm girl Joan Olander into blond bombshell Mamie Van Doren?

"They're natural," Mamie tells you once, twice, three times over lunch near her home on the Balboa Peninsula.

"A lot of people say, 'Oh, they're enhanced,' and that's fine if you want to," Mamie says, her voice still the soft, breathy instrument that tempted everyone from Elvis Presley and Frank Sinatra to Joe Namath and Henry Kissinger.

"But they're not. They're natural."

That settled, we get down to dining and dishing.

You tell her how she seems so full of life — posing for a Vanity Fair photo shoot with actress Pamela Anderson, writing a political blog that rails against the Iraq war, partying at the Playboy Mansion with her old friend Hugh Hefner — and doesn't appear to concede anything to age.

"A glamorous survivor," says the 73-year-old sex kitten, repeating the phrase you suggest as the theme of this story.

"I like that."

Joan Olander was born Feb. 6, 1933, in a small town in South Dakota, her parents hard-working Midwesterners of Swedish descent who moved to Los Angeles when she was 9.

Mamie Van Doren was born Jan. 20, 1953, in Hollywood, the creation of the movie studio, which signed her on President Eisenhower's inauguration day and renamed her after his wife, Mamie.

Early on, Mamie learned she had a look that made men take notice.

Billionaire Howard Hughes discovered her at 15 after she won a Miss Palm Springs pageant, and gave her bit parts in several of his movies.

And Universal International gave her a contract — looking to make her its own version of the young Marilyn Monroe — and started to mold her into a blond bombshell.

"You did what they wanted you to do," says Mamie over lunch of strawberry crepes and black coffee at Le Bistro. "They trained you, they changed your name.

"The studios always had their idea of what I was, and they'd give me the dumb blonde roles," she says, complaining that her image eventually confined her to a narrow type of part.

"But I ran for the hills when the Ma and Pa Kettle series came around," Mamie says. "I did Francis the Talking Mule (in 'Francis Joins the WACS') and that was it."

She was always a little wilder than the other girls on the studio lot — she boasts that she liked to hit 100 mph in her 1953 Jaguar XK 120 — and when the studios discovered rock 'n' roll and teenagers in the mid-'50s, she landed a string of memorable roles in B-movies such as "Running Wild," "Untamed Youth" and "High School Confidential!"

"'Untamed Youth' was my favorite," she says. "I got to sing and dance and do my own gyrations."

In 1958's "Teacher's Pet," she starred alongside Clark Gable and Doris Day, but instead of launching into the mainstream like Marilyn Monroe, or even Jayne Mansfield, she soon landed back in B-movies, movies with titles such as "Girls Town," "Vice Raid" and "Sex Kittens Go to College."

"I had a couple of people who didn't like me, and that really hurt," she says, arguing that her career suffered because of foes such as gossip columnist Louella Parsons (Mamie says she was jealous of her) and the archbishop of New York, Cardinal Francis Spellman (his crusade against racy films included Mamie's "Girls Town").

By the '60s, Mamie's fame started to move from her work — the films were drying up — to her life.

Especially her love life.

In conversation, as in her 1987 memoir, "Playing the Field," the names drop fast and frequent about the men in her life.

Of co-star Gable: "I ended up sitting on his lap and we started hanky panky, but that was about it."

Of astronaut Buzz Aldrin: "I met him at a Nixon rally. We started dating and then he explained to me what it was like to be on the moon."

Of one-time Angels phenom Bo Belinsky: "He invited me out to Palm Springs for spring training. Oh, God, we had great sex!"

The way Mamie sees it, even in the '50s and '60s, she tended to act more like a guy — speeding around in fast cars, carrying condoms in her purse on dates, following baseball and basketball religiously.

She married five times, including to bandleader Ray Anthony — with whom she had her son, Perry — and to Thomas Dixon, her partner for more than 30 years now.

A short-lived marriage to Angels pitching prospect Lee Meyers, a Huntington Beach native, introduced her to Orange County in 1966. After moving into the just-built Balboa Bay Club in Newport Beach — its first resident, she says — she's lived here ever since.

"Since I was a Republican (at the time), I didn't fit into Hollywood very well, so we moved down here," Mamie says. "Hollywood, I love going there to do things, but it's not like living here.

"I love it down here."

It's not easy for a sex symbol to grow older.

Some die Marilyn and Mansfield — along with Mamie, they were sometimes known as "the three Ms" — died long ago.

Some retreat. "The Notorious Bettie Page" is opening in theaters, but the biopic's real-life pin-up star hasn't been in the public eye for years.

And then there's Mamie.

Still glamming it up — with or without her shirt on — for the cameras. Still striking platinum-blond poses in public, though now, the frothy, glamour and suggestive glances come with — what's this? — a measure of politics, too.

"I'm really enjoying life more than I've ever enjoyed it before — because I'm still here," says Mamie, who in person shows a few subtle signs of her true age, but remains remarkably youthful in body and spirit.

"It isn't so bad getting old," she says. "It really isn't. As long as I can stay healthy. I've got a great sense of humor, a great son, a great husband."

Of late, she's been busier than ever.

She runs her Web site — mamievandoren.com — which is packed with photos of Mamie: out on the town, biking at the beach, cuddling her beloved miniature pinschers and so forth.

Click on the "Inside Out" button on her home page and you jump to an alternate universe where Political Mamie resides, blogging against the Iraq war and for the impeachment of President George W. Bush.

Trips to entertain the troops in the Vietnam War turned her against that conflict. "It changed my life forever," she says.

What she saw as the failure of the Reagan administration to address social ills in the '80s — especially the rise of the AIDS epidemic — turned her into a Democrat by the time Bill Clinton ran for president.

In March, she went even more public with her opposition to the Iraq war and the Bush administration, speaking at a peace rally in Orange and on the nationally syndicated Fox News radio show hosted by Alan Colmes.

COURTESY PHOTO / GLOBE PHOTOS, INC. / GLOBEPHOTOS.COM

Mamie Van Doren and Tony Curtis in the 1953 film "All American."

Faithful filmgoers flock to 'Celestine Prophecy' screenings

BY RANDY MYERS
KNIGHT RIDDER NEWSPAPERS

OAKLAND, Calif. — The popcorn set you back a dollar, and was sealed in Ziploc baggies. Should you spill any while watching "The Celestine Prophecy" at East Bay Church of Religious Science in Oakland, you were expected to clean it up.

The Rev. Andriette Earl was ever so appreciative.

Admittedly, the moviegoing experience at church fails to come close to the cushy comforts of the megaplex. There is no thundering sound system, no humongous screen, no seats that recline and the sightlines can give you a kink in the neck. Even the ticket booth looked a bit like a thrown-together lemonade stand set up in the church meeting area.

But the faithful at this screening last week didn't seem to mind the lack of traditional theater amenities. They, along with many others across the nation, plunked down $10 for advance showings of "Prophecy," based on the inspirational James Redfield novel.

In the past two weeks, "The Celestine Prophecy" has been shown on DVD nearly 1,000 times in 450 churches or spiritual centers in the United States and Canada, according to publicist Corinne Bordeau. Wednesday night, the PG-rated film about the discovery of ancient scrolls that contain nine revelations on the spiritual condition had its theatrical premiere at San Francisco's Lumiere theater.

Despite some clumsy moments and cheesy special effects, "Celestine" is an absorbing and beautifully photographed film, told and acted — for the most part — with a refreshing sense of hope and compassion. The cast features recognizable, solid actors such as Hector Elizondo ("Princess Diaries"), Jurgen Prochnow ("Das Boot") and Annabeth Gish (TV's "The West Wing"), along with relatively new faces such as Matthew Settle ("Divine Secrets of the Ya-Ya Sisterhood") and Sarah Wayne Callies (Fox's "Prison Break").

Director Armand Mastroianni never allows the film to lag. He has directed numerous miniseries and TV series; his first film was the 1980 slasher flick "He Knows You're Alone" with Tom Hanks.

Settle plays John, a laid-off teacher who travels to Peru after he learns about the discovery of ancient scrolls. Once there, he immediately becomes embroiled in a conspiracy led by the mysterious Robert Jenson (a brassible Prochnow). Jenson, along with a totalitarian police force, wants to get rid of the scrolls so more aggressive forces can continue to dominate the world.

The documents contain nine key insights with the power to lead to a new spiritual awakening worldwide. Some of this wisdom relates to how coincidence plays a pivotal role in our lives. The coincidences do start to pile up while John is in Peru, where he encounters a group of enlightened others, played by Gish, Callies and Thomas Kretschmann. His unexpected soul-searching leads to greater understanding of himself and his connections with others, especially after learning more about the insights from Father Sanchez (Joaquim de Almeida).

"Celestine" works both as a thriller and a spiritual film. The best parts involve John letting go of past expectations; these moments are filmed with such sincerity that you can't help but embrace them. The action sequences — there are even a couple of explosions — aren't always done well, however, and seem silly at times.

Ultimately, "The Celestine Prophecy" proves to be a huge step forward in spiritual adventure films, far better executed than the first "Left Behind" movie. It's easy to see why it prompts introspection afterwards.

The screening last Thursday night in Oakland piqued the interest of churchgoer Cathy Basen and about 60 others, many of whom who are very familiar with the book. The Martinez, Calif., resident recalls reading the 1993 novel and being incredibly moved by it. "Prophecy" has sold more than 20 million copies.

Basen welcomes the book making the leap to the big screen, and is encouraged by the spate of films dealing with spiritual matters. "I think that we're going to see more spiritual cinema," she said. "I just believe that's where we're going."

So do many others. Not only are mainstream studios making movies that deal with or mention spiritual issues, some have launched special DVD divisions such Fox Faith, now a part of 20th Century Fox.

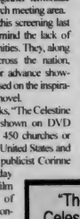
"Everybody has jumped on it," said Peter Sealey, adjunct marketing professor at UC Berkeley's Haas School of Business. "It's just a huge churchgoing population that has been ignored."

In a marketing technique that mirrors "The Passion of the Christ" and "What the Bleep Do We Know," "Prophecy's" makers scuttled expensive traditional publicity methods to spread the word about their film. They avoided most TV and print ad campaigns, and drummed up support in the nation's faith centers.

"It's really the way you have to do it," author Redfield said on the phone Monday. "The old model of just buying air time and opening in a thousand theaters — that doesn't always work."

For theatrical distribution, he partnered with Landmark theaters in California. On Friday, "Prophecy" will expand to the Shattuck Cinemas in Berkeley.

What will attract people to theaters, Redfield expects, is strong word of mouth generated at church and other advance screenings.



The metaphysical "What the Bleep Do We Know" fashioned a similar campaign and went on to make $11 million. Other recent religious-themed fare appealed to and targeted the faith community, including the $290-million blockbuster "The Chronicles of Narnia: The Lion, the Witch and the Wardrobe," the missionary drama "End of the Spear," Tyler Perry's $63-million and still counting comedy "Madea's Family Reunion," and the Mormon-themed "Work and the Glory: American Zion," the second in a trilogy.

More spiritually focused films wait in the wings.

The powerhouse known as "The Da Vinci Code," with Tom Hanks and Audrey Tautou, is expected to jam theaters when it opens May 19, even further intensifying dialogue about the speculative relationship between Jesus Christ and Mary Magdalene. Other films such as "The Omen" remake, slated for June, touch on the dark side of faith.

Probably the most blatantly religious film to be released by a major studio will be the Mary and Joseph pilgrimage story "Nativity" with Keisha Castle-Hughes ("Whale Rider"). Not so surprisingly, it is due out in December.

Spiritual-themed movies appear to be striking such a strong chord with audiences because many feel uneasy about the times in which we live, Redfield said.

Court agrees 'Code' does not violate copyrights

NEW YORK (AP) — "The Da Vinci Code," the mega-selling thriller, does not infringe the copyrights of a book published in 2000 by another author because the books are not substantially similar, a federal appeals court says.

The 2nd U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals issued a five-page order this week which upheld the decision by U.S. District Judge George B. Daniels in favor of author Dan Brown.

Brown and Random House Inc. had asked the federal courts to declare that his story exploring codes hidden in Leonardo Da Vinci's artwork was not substantially similar to "Daughter of God," by author Lewis Perdue. Perdue had countersued, seeking $150 million in damages.

The appeals court said it agreed with Daniels's conclusion that both novels tell a story based on religious and historical people, places and events but the factual details in each are quite different. The case never made it to trial because Daniels concluded that no jury "could find the works substantially similar."

The appeals court said it considered all of Perdue's arguments and found "them to be without merit."

A message left with a lawyer for Perdue was not immediately returned Thursday.

The ruling was issued Tuesday. On April 7, a British court cleared Brown and his publisher of copyright infringement. Authors Michael Baigent and Richard Leigh had claimed Brown's novel "appropriated the architecture" of their 1982 nonfiction book, "The Holy Blood and the Holy Grail."

Brown's book, with 6 million paperback copies in print, has already sold more than 40 million copies worldwide in hardcover and continues to sell well three years after publication.

—The Associated Press

SUMMER STORAGE SPECIAL
Rent Now through September:
Move out any day in Sept–no partial-month charges
THIS IS A NO BRAINER!
ONLY:
5x5: $140!
5x10: $220!
Amherst Self Storage: 253-0664

Whately SELF STORAGE
RENTAL SPECIAL:
Free lock with Student ID!
94 State Rd - Rte 5 & 10
Whately, MA 01093
413.665.9988

Amherst Road Service
•ASE Certified Auto Repair
•Nationwide NAPA Warranty Available
•Conveniently Located on Bus Route
•Only 8 Miles from UMass
•Student Discount
Mention this ad to receive a
$9.99 Oil Change
(on most cars, up to 5 quarts; excluding tax and fees)
Route 116 Sunderland, MA 413.665.3782

Wu-Tang Clan's GHOST FACE
Sean Price plus First Person
Pearl Street
FRI., APRIL 21 8:30 PM
WWW.IHEG.COM 586-8686

Deadline for editor applications is TODAY

NEW BURGERS
NEW MEAL DEALS
RAISING FOR 2 BARS FOR 2 BARS
HAMBURGERS · HOT DOGS · GRINDERS
CHICKEN · SEAFOOD · FRIES
PHILLY CHEESE STEAKS
SHAKES · SMOOTHIES · FLOATS
HARD ICE CREAM & SOFT SERVE
PETE'S DRIVE-IN
287 Russell St
Route 9 - Hadley
585-0241
petesdrivein.com

Sights set on postseason birth

W. LAX from page 10

34, respectively. She now has 78 career points on 70 goals in just 30 games, and needs 18 more to be ranked 10th all-time at UMass in career goals.

The Minutewomen have three games left in the regular season, and with only the top four teams in the conference advancing to the A-10 Tournament, a loss to Temple on Sunday could be the end of a late-season rally.

"Our mentality is do-or-die," Bolduc said. "We're definitely stepping in the right direction. It's certainly a big game for us, and we certainly need to come out with that win. Out of all of our games, this is our biggest game."

Temple stands at third place in the A-10 standings, and is currently riding a three-game winning streak. The Owls are coming off of a 14-7 victory over La Salle on Wednesday. They are led by juniors Allison Frengs and Casey Cech. Frengs is the Owls' scoring leader with 35 points on 21 goals and 14 assists. Cech is right behind her with 33 points on 21 goals and 12 assists.

UMass and Temple are averaging the lowest amount of goals per game in the conference with 9.57 and 9.0, respectively. With that in mind, the Minutewomen know that keeping the ball out of the net will be the key.

"Temple is a physical team," Bolduc said. "They have proven time and time again that they know how to win. They're well coached, and they're fighters. But we're fighters as well, and we don't give up. It's going to come down to our goaltending, and certainly ground balls, which we have been doing a good job of. Besides that, it's also going to come down to draw control and possession, and who can win the ball."

UMass junior goaltender Lauren McCarthy has started in net for a majority of the season, but sophomore Krissy Anderson has been called upon to play more minutes in the cage. Anderson got the start in both of last weekend's games, and picked up her second win of the season on Saturday at La Salle. She played the full 60 minutes and made 11 saves on the day.

Both goaltenders played well over the weekend, and the Minutewomen will undoubtedly need more of that for the remainder of the year. While Bolduc has some late-season moves in the cage, having two goalies that are able to get the job done is a good problem to have.

"Krissy [Anderson] is doing some good things for us," Bolduc said. "The girls respond to her well in the cage, and she has been coming up with some key saves. We have a couple really good goalies that we can play. Will she play on Sunday? That is yet to be determined. Obviously she came off of a really good weekend, but so did Lauren [McCarthy]. So it's still a coin toss, which isn't a bad thing."

KAREN KUSHNER / COLLEGIAN

Sophomore attacker Kathleen Typadis has started in 27 straight games. Typadis has also scored in 16 consecutive games and has a team-high four hat tricks on the 2006 season.

UMass track teams head to Connecticut for UConn invitational

BY DOMENIC POLI
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Massachusetts track and field teams will journey to Storrs, Conn. to take part in the UConn Invitational this weekend.

The meet, hosted by UConn, will also feature Brown University, Boston University and Providence College.

UMass coach Ken O'Brien is going to need clutch performances from his go-to guys for what he said would be a very intense meet.

Junior Erik Hoagland, who had been red-hot the past few months, dropped to fifth place in the long jump last weekend after coming in first place in the outdoor season's first two meets. However, O'Brien is not at all worried.

"Erik's been the mainstay for us [during] indoors and, thus far, outdoors," LaFreniere said. "I would expect that he's going to be able to continue the great competitive efforts that he's shown so far since January."

Freshman Steve Gerome is someone that O'Brien doesn't think gets enough attention because, despite his stellar performances, he seems to always finish second to Hoagland in the jumping events. But his contributions to the team don't go unnoticed by his coach, who genuinely admires and appreciates Gerome's versatility as an athlete.

"He can do so many things that we keep using him in a bunch of different [events]," O'Brien commented. "Eventually as he gets a little bit older and becomes a sophomore and junior, I think he will find a special event or two. But right now we really have used his personal athletic ability in four or five different areas."

O'Brien puts sophomore Kevin Murphy in the same category as Gerome as athletes who will have an impact on Saturday, but never seem to get all the credit they deserve.

"He's established himself now as the team's main middle-distance runner and has really started to come into his own," O'Brien said.

At last week's Brown Invitational, Murphy ran a hard race and finished seventh out of 38 runners in the 800-meters.

O'Brien mentioned that he also expects good performances from his usual big guns such as sophomores Nils Fischer and Nathan Barksdale and junior Manny Harris-Lopes.

Competition is destined to be difficult in any Division 1A sport, but the Minutewomen have been training hard to match up to any track and field powerhouses.

One of those Minutewomen is an athlete the coaches have been raving about for months: freshman thrower Jordan Veney.

Veney has been a big-time performer since she started throwing for UMass during the last indoor season.

She has broken the school's shot put record five times in her short duration here, including consecutive times the last two meets.

Last weekend at the Brown Invitational in Providence, R.I. Veney recorded a throw of 44 feet, 10.25 inches that not only broke her own record by more than a foot, but also qualified her for the ECAC Championships.

"I can see Jordan improving every weekend," LaFreniere said. "Hopefully we'll catch some nice weather this weekend and she'll continue to break some more school records."

Two other Minutewomen, sophomore Christina DeRosa and senior Marissa Callahan, also cracked UMass' all-time top-5 list for the 5,000-meter and the triple jump, respectively.

DeRosa ran a time of 17:31.63, which was good enough for third place. This weekend, however, LaFreniere said she has a big surprise in store for her.

"I entered her in the 1,500 and the 5,000-meters, LaFreniere said. "I'm going to have her do both. I want to see if she can get a PR [personal record] in the 1,500-meters. But then I want her to come back later in the meet...and she what she can do in the 5,000-meters."

Callahan had her first explosive performance of the outdoor season with a distance of 37 feet, 11.25 inches in the triple jump. The mark, a personal record, placed her fourth on the all-time list and just missed qualifying her for the ECACs later this season.

Despite a nagging foot injury that requires her to wear a specialized boot when she's not training, sophomore pole-vaulter Kristen Bakanowski will be competing this weekend.

With BU having and Brown having so many talented pole vaulters Bakanowski, currently ranked No. 1 in the Atlantic 10 Conference, will have her work cut out for her this Saturday, but LaFreniere is confident in her sophomore.

"She's a very strong vaulter," LaFreniere said. "She's probably one of the top three or four vaulters in New England."

Her jump last week of 11 feet, 11.25 inches was a mere quarter of an inch short of tying her career best.

Last Wednesday and Thursday LaFreniere accompanied freshman Liz Biehl and senior Ashley Creel to Worcester, for a heptathlon at the College of the Holy Cross.

A heptathlon is a track competition made up of seven events, the 100-meter hurdles, high jump, shot put and 200-meter dash on one day. Wednesday and the long jump, javelin throw and 800-meters the next day (Thursday).

An athlete is awarded more points for finishing higher in each event. The athlete with the most points at the end is the winner.

Ashley Creel came in third overall with a total of 3917 points.

UM competes for 11th straight Atlantic 10 title

CREW from page 10

LA SALLE

The Explorers finished scoreless at last year's championships as they failed to reach any finals.

At the Knecht Cup, La Salle failed to reach the semi-finals as they finished last in their heat with a time of 7:26.6, 28.6 seconds behind UMass, which finished first in the same heat.

GEORGE WASHINGTON

The Colonials were the only A-10 team that did not compete at the Knecht Cup, or on the Cooper River this year, but could be a threat this year as they finished third in 2005 with 36 points.

At the Playfair Cup on the Charles River in Boston April 5, GW placed last behind Boston University and Navy In the varsity-eight race, the Colonials finished nearly 15 seconds behind the Terriers.

The Minutewomen lost to BU by only 3.5 seconds Saturday on the Charles. UMass coach Jim Dietz feels quite confident and comfortable about his team's chances of repeating.

"I think that if anybody upsets the varsity [eight] then that would totally blow my mind."

Dietz feels that Dayton and URI have the best chances of competing with the Maroon and White for the championship this year.

"With the strength of UMass across the board, we should be up there," Dietz said. "Where it gets to the last race, like last year, that's where we really shined."

SENIORS–
GOT SOMETHING TO SAY?
Leave your mark!
The Daily Collegian is currently seeking essay submissions from graduating seniors
Write a 750 word piece about the UMass experience and how its shaped you. Bring submissions to 113 campus center basement
Top 3 will be published in the graduation edition on May 15th and 16th
All entries must be received by April 21 at 4 pm
Questions? Call 545-3500

Pistons, Spurs are favorites in playoff preview

San Antonio Spurs forward Tim Duncan battles Rasheed Wallace in a possible preview of the 2006 NBA Finals. The Spurs and the Detroit Pistons are the heavy favorites to make it back to the NBA championship.

By Brian Mahoney
Associated Press

A look at the eight first-round series in the NBA playoffs, which start this weekend:

EASTERN CONFERENCE

No. 1 DETROIT PISTONS (64-18). No. 8 MILWAUKEE BUCKS (40-42)

Season series: Pistons won, 3-1, with Milwaukee's only victory coming Monday night when Richard Hamilton and Rasheed Wallace didn't play for Detroit.

Storyline: The team that finished with the NBA's best record against the only sub-.500 team in the playoff field. The only thing that matters to the Pistons is getting back to the NBA Finals to make up for last season's loss, and this series should be nothing more than a brief first step.

Key Matchup I: Michael Redd vs. Hamilton. Redd is one of the league's best shooters, and the Bucks' best hope of making this a competitive series is if he gets hot and can carry them. But Hamilton is constantly in motion on offense, and Milwaukee can't afford to have Redd wear himself out chasing him. Tayshaun Prince will probably defend Redd.

Key Matchup II: Chauncey Billups vs. TJ Ford. Ford is one of the league's quickest players, but even if he gets into the lane, there's little chance of him getting his shot over Ben or Rasheed Wallace. And he doesn't have the strength to prevent Billups from getting to the spots he wants.

X-Factor: Andrew Bogut. The No. 1 pick in the draft had a solid, but not spectacular, rookie season. He'll need to raise his level of play to keep the Wallaces occupied on defense.

Little-known fact: The Pistons ended the regular season with a two-game losing streak. They also lost their last two preseason games – then won their first eight of the regular season.

Prediction: Pistons in four.

No. 2 MIAMI HEAT (52-30) vs. No. 7 CHICAGO BULLS (41-41)

Season series: Heat won, 2-1, with the Bulls getting their only win last Sunday when Dwyane Wade didn't play because of illness.

Storyline: The Heat won 52 games even though they seemed to occasionally lose interest, but their troubles were with elite teams, not the ones below them. With Pat Riley returning to the playoffs, he'll make sure his team is motivated against a Chicago team that won 12 of its final 14 games.

Key matchup I: Wade vs. Ben Gordon. Gordon had a superb finish to the regular season and is one of the league's streakiest shooters, highlighted by a recent 9-for-9 night from three-point range. But he's not as consistent as Wade, nor is he as good a playmaker.

Key matchup II: Luol Deng and Kirk Hinrich vs. Antoine Walker and Gary Payton. The Bulls have nobody who can slow Shaquille O'Neal, so they have to win the other matchups. Deng and Hinrich will have to outplay Miami's top role players.

X-factor: Andres Nocioni. With double-doubles in nine of his last 12 games, his impressive play has coincided with Chicago's strong finish. The Bulls will need him to keep it up.

Little-known fact: This was an excellent playoff rivalry in the last 1990s, but Riley could never lead the Heat past the Bulls during Chicago's dynasty days.

Prediction: Heat in five

No. 3 NEW JERSEY NETS (49-33) vs. No. 6 INDIANA PACERS (41-41)

Season series: Pacers won, 2-1, getting the final victory in a game that Jermaine O'Neal sat out and Vince Carter played only nine minutes because of a hamstring cramp.

Storyline: An Indiana team that couldn't stay healthy or consistent during the season against a Nets team that finished strong, including a league-best 14-game winning streak late in the season.

Key matchup I: Jason Kidd vs. Anthony Johnson. With Jamaal Tinsley hurting, Kidd will find himself matched up against the player who backed him up when New Jersey made back-to-back trips to the finals in 2003-03.

Key matchup II: O'Neal vs. Nenad Krstic. Krstic is overlooked because of the presence of Kidd, Carter and Richard Jefferson, but he's a good scorer inside and gets out quickly on the break for a big man. O'Neal has overcome his groin injury and seems back in top form, having scored 20 or more points in each of the last five games.

X-factor: Clifford Robinson. The 39-old-year veteran has remained reliable for the Nets, and he will likely see plenty of time against O'Neal – who was a rookie in 1996-97 in Portland when Robinson was in his final season with the Trail Blazers.

Little-known fact: Nets coach Lawrence Frank has ties to the Hoosier State. He was a manager on the Indiana University basketball teams under Bob Knight.

Prediction: Pacers in seven.

No. 4 CLEVELAND CAVALIERS (50-32) vs. No. 5 WASHINGTON WIZARDS (42-40)

Season series: Wizards won 3-1, with Arenas averaging 27.8 points. Washington held LeBron James below 20 points twice, including a 6-for-23 game in February.

Storyline: It couldn't be more obvious: This series is all about what James does in his first postseason. Larry Hughes against the team he left behind goes as the distant No. 2.

Key matchup I: James against Caron Butler. James against anyone has the potential to be a one-sided matchup. But Butler has emerged as a strong scoring complement to Gilbert Arenas and Antawn Jamison, and it's no coincidence that Washington's five-game losing streak late in the regular season came while Butler was out with an injury.

Key matchup II: Hughes vs. Gilbert Arenas. The two helped key Washington's return to the postseason last year before Hughes joined the Cavs last summer. He's a strong defensive player but will have his hands full with Arenas, who finished fourth in the league with 29.3 points per game.

X-factor: Flip Murray. The trade-deadline deal that brought Murray to Cleveland didn't make nearly as much news as when the Cavs landed Hughes and Donyell Marshall during the off-season. But Murray averaged 13.5 points after joining the Cavs, and he's shown he's willing – and James trusts him – to take big shots.

Little-known fact: Although it has been eight years between postseason visits, the Cavaliers do have some playoff experience. Eight players have 177 combined games, led by guard Eric Snow, who has played in 71 postseason games and made the NBA Finals.

Prediction: Cavaliers in 7.

WESTERN CONFERENCE

No. 1 SAN ANTONIO SPURS (63-19) vs. No. 8 SACRAMENTO KINGS (44-38)

Season series: Spurs, 2-1, winning two games by a total of four points before Ron Artest came to Sacramento. The Kings won by 10 at San Antonio in early April.

Storyline: The Spurs start their quest for a second straight title against a dangerous No. 8 seed: Sacramento is 26-14 since acquiring Artest in January.

Key matchup I: Tony Parker vs. Mike Bibby. Both are point guards who look to score without disrupting their team's offenses. Parker had his best season, averaging 18.9 points and shooting 55 percent. He is more of a slasher, while Bibby relies more on his outside shot to average 21.1 points.

Key matchup II: Artest vs. Bruce Bowen. Perhaps the two best one-on-one defenders in the league, but they probably won't waste much time covering each other. The Kings may prefer to use Artest on Manu Ginobili, since Bowen spends most of his time behind the 3-point line. San Antonio will put Bowen on whichever Sacramento player gets hot.

X-factor: Michael Finley, Nick Van Exel and Brent Barry. Those perimeter players are supposed to give San Antonio one of the league's best benches. The Kings aren't very deep, so this could be a huge advantage for the Spurs.

Little-known fact: Though they have been two of the best teams in the West during this decade, the Spurs and Kings have never met in the postseason.

Prediction: Spurs in six.

No. 2 PHOENIX SUNS (54-28) vs. No. 7 LOS ANGELES LAKERS (45-37)

Season series: Suns, 3-1, even though Kobe Bryant averaged 42.5 points in the four games. Steve Nash and Raja Bell sat out the Lakers' only victory, and Phoenix averaged nearly 112 points in its three wins.

Storyline: This series is all about offense, so it could be the most fun of the opening-round matchups. The high-flying Suns and Nash, their MVP candidate, against NBA scoring leader Bryant, who also has MVP hopes.

Key matchup I: Bryant vs. Bell. Lakers coach Phil Jackson respects Bell's defensive abilities, but Bryant has no use for Bell. After scoring 51 points in a loss at Phoenix he said, "I've got bigger fish to fry than Raja Bell," he said. "Are you kidding?"

Key matchup II: Lamar Odom vs. Shawn Marion and Boris Diaw. Odom is one of the league's most versatile players, but so are Phoenix's two front-court players.

X-factor: Kwame Brown. He may never reach the potential that made him the No. 1 pick in the 2001 draft, but Brown has had some of his best moments in the league in the second half of this season. The Suns will always give up rebounds and points in the paint, so there's a chance for Brown here.

Little-known fact: Phil Jackson has been an NBA coach for 15 seasons, and his teams have reached the playoffs every time. All of the past Jackson-coached teams have advanced to at least the second round, with nine winning the championship.

Prediction: Suns in seven.

No. 3 DENVER NUGGETS (44-38) vs. No. 6 LOS ANGELES CLIPPERS (47-35)

Season series: Clippers won 3-1, taking the last three meetings and sweeping a home-and-home series in January by a combined 51 points. Carmelo Anthony averaged 25 points for Denver.

Storyline: The Clippers are back in the postseason for the first time since 1997, and plenty of people think they can even advance. Los Angeles has home-court advantage even though it is the lower seed because it finished with a better record.

Key matchup I: Elton Brand vs. Kenyon Martin. Regarded as a tough interior defender, Martin has been slowed this season by a variety of leg injuries. He'll have to be at his best against Brand, who quietly had one of the best seasons in the NBA, ranking among the league leaders in points, rebounds, blocks and field goal percentage.

Key matchup II: Anthony vs. Sam Cassell. They won't be matched up against each other, but they are two clutch players who long to take big shots. In a close game, both teams should know where the ball is going down the stretch.

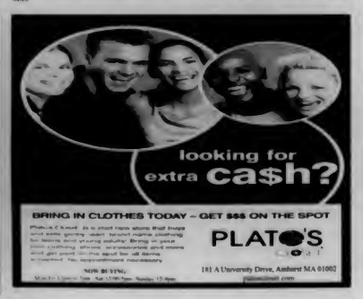
X-factor: The Staples Center crowd. There's been enough talk about the circumstances surrounding this series that the NBA will discuss the way it seeds playoff teams. But the Clippers have the home-court advantage, and they best put it to good use.

Little-known fact: The Clippers haven't won a postseason game since 1993. The last postseason series victory for the franchise was in 1976, when the Buffalo Braves beat the Philadelphia 76ers in the first round of the Eastern Conference playoffs.

Prediction: Nuggets in seven.

No. 4 DALLAS MAVERICKS (60-22) vs. No. 5 MEMPHIS GRIZZLIES (49-33)

Season series: Mavericks won, 3-1, after the Grizzlies won by 20 at Dallas in the first meeting.



Storyline: The Mavericks had the second-best record in the Western Conference, but had to settle for the No. 4 seed because the top three go to division winners and they finished behind San Antonio in the Southwest. The Grizzlies have never won a post-season game, getting swept in the first round in each of the last two years.

Key Matchup I: Dirk Nowitzki vs. Pau Gasol. Nowitzki is a much better defender than he was earlier in his career, Gasol was slowed by a sore foot at the end of the regular season, and if he's limited at all, it's hard to imagine Memphis having any shot.

Key Matchup II: Mike Miller vs. Jerry Stackhouse. Arguably the two best sixth men in the league this season. Whichever produces the quickest when he comes off the team will give his team a huge boost.

X-Factor: Jake Tsakalidis and DeSagana Diop. Both centers were first-round picks who never looked like they would be productive NBA players until this season. But now either could help swing a game with his rebounding and defense, and Tsakalidis has even provided the Grizzlies with some unexpected offense from time to time.

On-Line Classifieds...

Simple & Easy!

Interested?
Go to
www.dailycollegian.com
Questions?
Call 545 - 3500

LIVING IN A CLOUD By Jenny Cordts

ELSIE HOOPER By Rebbeca D. Krasowski

JACK DOGG By Xavier Rhodes

THE FAMILY MONSTER By Jesse Shelek

A COLLEGE GIRL NAMED JOE By Aaron Warner

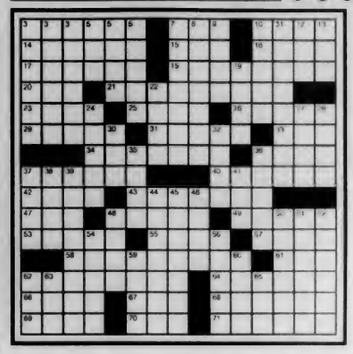
QUOTE OF THE DAY

"Freedom is not worth having if it does not include the freedom to make mistakes."

—Mahatma Gandhi

ACROSS
1 Confront boldly
7 West Coast airport code
10 Serengeti sound
14 Bauble
15 Forever and a day
16 Small whirlpool
17 Clan pattern
18 Phone numbers?
20 & so on
21 Element Mg
23 Auction off
25 Soft shoes
26 Frock
29 Get the check
31 The Divine Miss M
33 Earl Grey, e.g.
34 "The Dance" painter
36 Ring loudly
37 Smooth, even style in music
40 Cravat
42 WWII losers
43 Knife or fork
47 Full hairpiece
48 Determination
49 Muslim holy city
53 Belle of the Old West
55 Mauceau, e.g.
57 Mens socks
58 Charcot's medical field
61 Consent to
62 Approximate calculation
64 Ethnic
66 Related by blood
67 Quaker pronoun
68 Slip by, as time
69 Muscle twitches
70 Pro vote
71 Restraining rope

DOWN
1 Bear witness
2 Volcano opening
3 Rum rings around?
4 Frequency, in poetry
5 Kind of dunk
6 Coffeebreak, hr.
7 Otherworldly sessions
8 Wooded tracts
9 Bingles
10 Come up again
11 Dashboard counter
12 Contribute
13 Deli loaf
19 Assistant
22 Asian desert
24 Tibetan monks
27 Bodies of water
28 Shaker litter
30 Do lacework
32 Asian holidays
35 Duty assignment
36 In a stack
37 Statutes
38 Way out
39 Humongous
41 Thai men
44 New Testament book
45 Visual spell
46 Verne's captain
48 Bongo or conga
50 Islamic leader
51 Trouser fold
52 Rack element
54 Bridle straps
56 White heron
59 Pro ... (in proportion)
60 New Haven school
62 Wolf down
63 Travel on snow
65 Cool dude



Find today's answers online

www.dailycollegian.com

Applications for COMICS EDITOR for the 2006-2007 school year are now OPEN

Pick up an application in the Collegian offices (located in the Campus Center basement) or e-mail: collegiancomics@yahoo.com for more information

APPLICATIONS ARE DUE BY MONDAY, MAY 1

Submit your comic!

e-mail
collegiancomics@yahoo.com

HOROSCOPES

aquarius JAN. 20-FEB. 18
Those sunglasses make you look really old.

pisces FEB. 19-MAR. 20
You will get an A in your chemistry class this semester.

aries MAR. 21-APR. 19
Help an elderly person cross the street. You will feel very virtuous.

taurus APR. 20-MAY 20
Someone put a voodoo spell on you. Try to be nicer to people from now on.

gemini MAY 21-JUN. 21
Don't put any more pictures of you drunk online. They are not attractive.

cancer JUN. 22-JUL. 22
You will get a lot of offers from credit card companies today.

leo JUL. 23-AUG. 22
You are going to trip on your shoelaces if you don't tie them right.

virgo AUG. 23-SEPT. 22
You will get a great summer job that pays a lot.

libra SEPT. 23-OCT. 22
You will be woken up by chanting and bongo drums tonight.

scorpio OCT. 23-NOV. 21
You should try to read a book unrelated to school.

sagittarius NOV. 22-DEC. 21
You will Facebook 20 people in a drunken stupor tonight.

capricorn DEC. 22-JAN. 19
You might get run over by a scooter today.

On-Line Classifieds.
Very Simple.
Very Easy.
Interested?
Go to www.dailycollegian.com
Questions?
Call 545 - 3500

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Saturday, April 22nd, the Hadley Farm, located just off campus, is hosting the Annual Bay State Livestock Classic from 8am-3pm. Come enjoy the refreshments, festivities, and of course the animals.

I don't just grab attention; I demand attention with my bold style and speedy frame. Meet me, the Ford Fusion, outside the Campus Center on April 25th between 10 AM and 3 PM. Brought to you by your New England Ford Dealers.

Can you lead? Prove it with Army ROTC FREE MONEY For school Because we can! www.umass.edu/armyrotc

APARTMENT FOR RENT

2 bedroom $1100 3 bedroom $1400 4 bedroom $2150 Now Accepting Applications 253-7377 millvalleyestates@winnco.com

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Amherst Spacious 2 BR Bus Laundry Near Center 6/1 $1025 413-335-5226

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing, 1& 2 bedroom apts. Leases begin June, July, Aug or Sep. First come, first serve. Get them while they last. www.brandywine-apts.com stop by or call 549-0600

Center of Town 1, 2, 3 bedrooms; hardwood floors. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

CHILDCARE

Amherst Center family looking for parents helper in exchange for housing everything Included. Call 413-687-2710

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending $300/Day potential. No experience nece. Training provided.1-800-965-6520 x162

EMPLOYMENT

The best summer of your life! Live, work, and play outdoors at one of New England's best Summer Camps. Seeking staff to work as Cabin Leaders at overnight Boys Camp, 6/18 - 7/22. Teach three daily skills classes, supervise a Cabin Group, and role model YMCA values for boys 7-17. Room, Board, paid staff training and $800-1200 salary. Download application packet at www.camptakodah.org/staff/posItions.html or contact Camp Director William Therrien at (603) 352-0447 / willy@camptakodah.org

Furniture porter and maintenance person needed for busy auction gallery on Nantucket Island this summer. (508) 228-3942

Rent us your Ears! Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu Voicemail: 545-6837

EMPLOYMENT

PAINTERS NEEDED! Hundreds of positions available throughout New England. Work outside with your friends and family in your hometown. No experience needed, training provided. Join large student painting company this summer. Hiring now! 888-277-9787, www.collegepro.com

Apartment Leasing Consultant – Love People? Can't Sit Still? Nat'l real estate firm has a unique opportunity for individuals this summer as leasing consultants at our 232 unit apartment community in Sunderland. We need energetic, organized, & passionate individuals to work in an environment where no 2 days are alike. Individuals w/ retail, hospitality, banking, or restaurant experience are encouraged to apply. Send resumes to erlch@aspensquare.com or fax to 240-525-0058. Visit us at www.aspensquare.com

FOR SALE

"Tiktaalik roseae. Time is Running Out for Intelligent Design." Celebrate the discovery of the missing link between fish and land animals with fishapod clothing and gifts at http://www.cafepress.com/tiktaalik roseae

HOUSE FOR RENT

Northampton: 4 bedroom, double living room, open and enclosed porches, June $1300 plus utilities, near park Skibiski, Realtors 586-1827

ROOM FOR RENT

1 Bedroom in 4 Bedroom House- 379 Strong St for June, July, and Aug Sharing with 3 women at $402.00 a month Call Sera at 1-330-440-0234

Female to share with another friendly Sublet June 1 – August 31 $430 with everything included. Call Sandra 774-826-9597

ROOM FOR RENT

CAPE COD Summer rooms Hyannis area Private pond. $150 a week includes ... (508) 428-3456

SERVICES

Legal questions? We have answers at the Student Legal Services Office. 922 Campus Center or Call 545-1995

PREGNANCY TESTING, HIV TESTING, Birth control, and Emergency Contraception. STDs, teening and Treatment Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992

Pentium Color laptops $99 We type term papers, resumes, cover letters 413-584-8857

TRAVEL

Disney/Beach Area 7/6 nights stay. Pd $600.00 Sacrifice $199.00 Good for one year 978-444-0261

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS WEEKEND

FRIDAY, APRIL 21, 2006 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Minutemen head west

By Jon Pelland
Collegian Staff

It seems that, despite the Massachusetts baseball team's struggles this season, UMass coach Mike Stone wants to keep his team as relaxed and focused. Before flying out to St. Louis Thursday, the Minutemen (6-18, 4-8 Atlantic 10) hosted a clinic for area little leaguers during practice on Wednesday.

This weekend the Maroon and White travel out to the Gateway to the West to take on conference newcomer, St. Louis (19-16, 8-4 A-10). The first pitch today is scheduled for 3 p.m. while games two and three are both set to begin at noon.

UMass players assisted the 10-12 year-olds with hitting and bunting skills, as well as a personal tutorial from Stone on the proper crouch position for a catcher. Stone himself was a backstop during his playing days.

All season long Stone has preached that his team's worst enemy has been wearing maroon and white. Mental and fielding errors (50 total team errors) have accounted for as many of UMass' losses as opposing runs have.

The team has shown flashes of putting together a balanced mix of offense and pitching together as they showed in a home series against Duquesne two weeks ago. Stone said problems for his club tend to arise late in games when it counts the most.

"We've pitched well at times but we either don't finish or we can't take care of business at the end of games," Stone said. "We just need to have the attitude that starting pitchers are going to go longer, relief pitchers are going to be more aware of holding runners on and throwing quality pitches. We need to make pitches and make plays."

The Minutemen may be without their most consistent pitcher for the weekend in the Midwest. According to Stone, junior Rory McDonald may be unavailable because he has been fighting illness all week. Stone did say that for the first two games of the series he will be sending out senior David Sullivan and junior Chris Lloyd.

Sullivan has had a rough go of it this season posting a 1-4 record in six starts. In 37.1 innings of work he as allowed 60 hits that has led to 36 runs (27 of which are unearned).

Also in six starts, Lloyd is winless (0-2) and has posted an ERA of 6.25. He does, however, lead the team in strikeouts with 21 and has the lowest opponent's batting average of any Minuteman hurler with .262.

UMass will also be without reliever Brent Tarasuik for the foreseeable future. The sophomore took a line drive to the face in the sixth inning of the Minutemen's 11-3 loss to Boston College on Tuesday. Stone said Tarasuik does have a broken bone in his cheek but is expected to make a full recovery.

"He's going to be fine," Stone said. "He was aware after he was hit and he was conversing but he was in pain."

Tarasuik was treated at the field on Tuesday, before being taken to a hospital for precautionary measures.

After spending 10 years in Conference USA, the Billikens have made the switch to the A-10 for the 2006 season. So far the move seems to be a successful one. SLU currently sits in third place in the conference behind a three-way tie for second. Their eight conference wins are the second best (the top four teams all have nine).

"They've done well and they're a good ball club. We have a real test this weekend," Stone said of SLU, once again referring back to his mantra of not focusing too hard on the opposition. "We just need to play aggressively and make things happen offensively and compete. We need to keep competing."

The Billiken offense is pace by a junior and a pair of sophomore sluggers. Greg Rodgers and Casey Moore, the two sophomores, are tied atop the SLU home run list with three apiece and have combined for 46 RBIs.

The elder statesman, Gilbert Marlowe, leads the team in on-base percentage (.460), and is second in both runs (26) and RBIs (23).

UMass hurler Chris Lloyd leads the Minutemen in opponent batting average (.262) and is fifth in earned run average (6.25).

Junior first baseman/pitcher Bryan Adamski reached base twice, scored two runs and tallied a save in UM's first win on March 11.

UM sweeps Crimson in doubleheader at Softball Complex

Sophomore Lauren Proctor is fourth on UMass in batting with a .349 average for the season. She has whiffed just nine times in 109 at-bats.

By Jeremy Rice
Collegian Staff

A pair of great pitching performances led the Massachusetts softball team (26-12, 11-1 Atlantic 10) to a sweep of Harvard (15-18) Thursday afternoon. Freshman Brandice Balschmiter and senior Jenna Busa threw a shutout each, defeating the Crimson, 3-0, and 8-0, respectively.

UMass will play again on Sunday when it travels to Saint Louis (12-29-1, 3-7 A-10) to face the Billikens for an Atlantic-10 doubleheader. The next home game will be next Friday at the UMass Softball Complex against Dayton.

Game 1 was a defensive battle for both teams in what would be a low-scoring affair. In the bottom of the first, UMass put the lead batter on base when Amanda Morin hit a short line drive between the shortstop and second basemen, but she was not on base long.

Candice Molinari hit a short fly ball right on the third-base line, where Harvard shortstop Lauren Brown made a diving effort to catch the ball that was ruled a catch by the umpire. Morin, however, had advanced to second, and was thrown out before she could get back to first.

As soon as the call was made, UMass coach Elaine Sortino, who easily had the best view of the play from the third base coach position, argued the call with the umpire.

"It wasn't a catch," Sortino said. "When she caught it, it was on the ground. It was trapped between the glove and the ground."

Brown landed at Sortino's feat after diving for the ball, but the umpire at home plate made the call, saying the shortstop kept the ball off the ground.

The Crimson did not have a base-runner until a hit batter in the third inning put Haley Bock on first base. A ground out moved Bock to second, but Bailey Vertovez hit a grounder past second baseman Kristi Stefanoni. Bock rounded third for home, but right fielder Lesley Ferrara was able to get the out at the plate, keeping the game scoreless.

In the bottom of the third, Molinari attempted a sacrifice bunt to advance Morin from first, but was able to run out the throw, putting two on with one out. After Whitney Mollica hit a fly ball out to the left field wall, KJ Kelley drove the ball over the right fielder's head, scoring Morin and Molinari with a two-run double, giving the Minutewomen the 2-0 lead.

UMass extended the lead in the fourth inning when Lauren Proctor walked to lead off the inning. After two ground outs advanced her to third, Stacy Cullington's ground ball was poorly handled by the second basemen, and Proctor scored on the error, making it 3-0.

After an error and two walks, the bases were loaded in the fifth for Lauren Proctor with one out. She hit a 0-1 ball back to the pitcher forcing a double play. Mollica was out at the plate, but the throw to first was late. Carly Morin, pinch running for Kelley, tried to steal home on the throw but was also thrown out at home, completing the rare 1-2-3-2 double play. It ended the inning and squandered a golden scoring opportunity for the Minutewomen.

The three runs was all the Minutewomen needed, however, as Balschmiter pitched seven stellar innings, recording five strikeouts, two walks and one hit batter. The game marked her eighth shutout of the year. Balschmiter allowed just one hit despite a number of impressive running catches in Game 1.

The Minutewomen picked it up early in Game 2 as well. After Morin led off with a single, Molinari once again bunted her way on base, advancing Morin to second. Mollica joined in the rally with a bunt of her own, loading the bases with no outs in the bottom of the first.

Kelley wasted no time in bringing them home, driving a two-run single into center field. Later in the inning, Salato reached first on a high throw by the third baseman, bringing Kelley home from third putting the Maroon and White up, 3-0, at the end of the first.

Amanda Morin extended the UMass lead in the bottom of the inning with a two-run home run, her first of the season. The Minutewomen followed with a number of hits, but couldn't score another run, leaving the score at 5-0 after two.

In the fourth inning, the Maroon and White solidified its lead with three more runs. Molinari scored from third on a bunt from Kelley. Kelley was able to reach safely when the first baseman dropped the ball on the tag. Proctor then hit a one-run triple into right field that scored Kelley. Proctor then scored on a passed ball, giving the Minutewomen the eight-run lead that allowed the game to end early on the mercy rule.

Busa once again followed up a rough outing with a solid day in the circle. She threw 77 pitches, giving up four hits and two walks, while striking out three. On offense, Kelley had the biggest day, going 3-for-4 with five RBIs.

The Minutewomen won the games easily, but struggled along the way, making some key mistakes in the field and on the base paths. Mollica and Carly Morin were both thrown out trying to take extra bases, something Sortino attributes to a lack of experience from the young players.

"I think we were just trying to do too much. We were trying to be aggressive and some people just made some poor decisions, particularly young people," Sortino said.

The Minutewomen will visit Saint Louis on Sunday for the first-ever meeting between the two teams. Saint Louis joins Charlotte as a newcomer to the A-10. Both the Billikens and 49ers were members of Conference USA last season. The two schools shared last place in the league last season at 4-20, and are looking for new life in the A-10. Saint Louis is currently in seventh place out of 11 teams.

UMass takes shot at playoffs

By Danny Picard
Collegian Staff

What started as a disappointing 2006 campaign has turned into an end-of-the-season playoff run for the Massachusetts women's lacrosse team. The Minutewomen (5-9, 2-2 Atlantic 10) lost six of their first eight games, and dropped their first two conference match-ups to put them in the basement of the A-10 standings. But a recent turnaround has got them thinking one thing: Playoffs.

Postseason implications will be on the line when UMass hosts Temple (7-6, 3-1 A-10) at noon on Sunday at Garber Field. The Minutewomen are coming off of back-to-back wins that have moved them from last to fourth place in the conference. They defeated Saint Joseph's and La Salle last weekend to earn their first A-10 victories of the year, which was enough to get them back into the playoff hunt.

UMass sophomore Kathleen Typadis has led the charge. Typadis was named the A-10 Lacrosse Performer of the Week on Monday because of her outstanding play last weekend. She scored nine goals en route to wins over Saint Joseph's and La Salle. The sophomore sensation tickled the twine four times against the Hawks last Thursday, and followed it up with a career-high five goals against the Explorers just two days later.

"She continues to be consistent in every game," UMass coach Carrie Bolduc said of her scoring leader. "Obviously, she had a great weekend against La Salle and St. Joe's. We can't really ask for more. She's doing everything right. She's really working hard, improving her game everyday, so she deserves everything that she has done."

Typadis leads the Minutewomen in points and goals with 35 and

See W. LAX on page 7

Sophomore midfielder Julie Papaleo tallied a career-high five groundballs against the Syracuse Orange on March 15.

Minutewomen go for 11th straight title

By Joey White
Collegian Correspondent

The Massachusetts women's crew team will be hitting the waters again on the Cooper River in Camden, N.J. Saturday and will be gunning for its 11th consecutive Atlantic 10 Championship.

With the Minutewomen winning every A-10 Championship thus far — and finishing ahead of all seven of the competing A-10 squads at the Knecht Cup, also in Camden – they will be heading into the championships Saturday as the heavy favorites.

But for sake of tradition, let's look into how the Maroon and White's opposition fared this season and, most importantly, at the Knecht Cup.

Dayton

The Flyers had their best showing ever at the A-10 championships last year, posting a second-place finish with 39 points, six points behind UMass.

Dayton's varsity eight finished fifth (11th overall) in the Petite Final with a time of 7:25.8. The second varsity eight boat finished third (7:38.6) ahead of UMass, Rhode Island and St. Joseph's.

Where the Flyers could make some noise in this year's championships is in the lightweight races. They swept the lightweight-eight and lightweight-four races last year. Dayton will be competing in all nine events, including the lightweight four where it will only be up against Rhode Island.

Rhode Island

The Rams finished fourth last year with 24 points and saw the Minutewomen twice this season.

At the Knecht Cup, URI's varsity eight finished second (eighth overall) in the Petite Final with a time of 7:18.1. Its second varsity-eight boat placed fourth overall, four seconds ahead of UMass after losing the week before by six seconds at the Yankee Cup.

In Kingston, R.I., the Lady Rams finished last behind UMass, Connecticut and New Hampshire. In the lightweight-eight race, URI finished first with a time of 7:04.38, 25 seconds ahead of UMass.

Fordham

The Rams finished fifth last year, just one point behind URI.

In the Knecht Cup, Fordham's varsity won the Third Final (13th overall) with a time of 7:50.5.

On April 1, the Rams swept all events in the Manhattan Invitational, beating the likes of NYU, Hofstra, Sacred Heart, Iona College, Manhattan College, US Merchant Marine Academy and US Maritime Academy.

Saint Joseph's

Tied for fifth at the championships last year with Fordham was the Hawks.

The varsity-eight boat for Saint Joseph's won the Petite Final (seventh overall) at the Knecht Cup over solid opponents: URI, Boston College, Colgate, Dayton and Delaware.

The Hawks had an impressive comeback at the Crew Classic in San Diego, CA, April 3. The varsity eight was in sixth crossing the 500-meter mark, then made up six to seven seconds to pass the 1000-meter mark in second place. Saint Joseph's ended up finishing third behind Miami and Kansas State with a time of 7:10.87.

Duquesne

The Dukes finished seventh last year with 13 points, with their top finish being second in the lightweight-eight and varsity-four events.

Duquesne's varsity was unable to get out if its heat and into the semi-finals at the Knecht Cup as the Dukes finished last with a time of 8:01.1.

Temple

The Owls finished eighth at least year's A-10 championships with 12 points. Their best finish was second in the lightweight, four behind Dayton and ahead of UMass.

The varsity eight finished second (14th overall) in the Third Final at the Knecht Cup.

On Saturday, the Owls' varsity eight dominated Delaware by 25 seconds in the Grand Final at Shamokin Dam, PA. in a four-team regatta hosted by Bucknell University.

See CREW on page 7

New England's Largest College Daily · Est. 1890

The Daily Collegian

Monday, April 24, 2006 www.dailycollegian.com Volume CXVI Issue 120

Conference explores state of black Germany

By Jennifer Sherman
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts hosted the "ReMapping Black Germany: New Perspectives on Afro-German History, Politics, and Culture" conference this past weekend.

The conference, held in the Isenberg School of Management, focused on topics such as race and colonialism in Germany and black presence in the Weimar Republic, as well as the in Third Reich, during the Cold War and in contemporary Germany.

On Thursday a special pre-conference screening was held of director Branwen Okpako's film "Tal der Ahnungslosen," or in English, "Valley of the Innocent." The film told the story of a police officer named Eva who was transferred to Dresden, where she was raised in an orphanage when she was a child. She then begins a search for the truth of what happened to her parents. Okpako also held a question and answer session after the film screening.

The conference officially started on Friday, with an art opening and reception in the Hampden Gallery. It featured paintings by Daniel Kojo Schrade as well as video works by Ingrid Mwangi. There was also a spoken-word poetry session with Olumide Popoola, who uses African storytelling, hip-hop and jazz to address a range of topics from contemporary political issues and challenges of national identity to healing and experiences of space.

The conference was hosted by members of the Black German Studies Project and by a collaboration between the University of Massachusetts and the University of Mainz, Germany. Speakers from

See GERMANY on page 2

Amherst celebrates annual 'Extravaganja'

By Sara L Smith
Collegian Correspondent

Despite rainy weather, the University of Massachusetts' Cannabis Reform Coalition held its 15th annual "Extravaganja" on the Amherst Commons this weekend.

This year, the festival's main goal was to raise awareness in support of Senate Bill 1151, called the Act to Impose a Civil Fine for the Possession of Marijuana. This bill would decriminalize possession of marijuana in Massachusetts.

The festival began at noon on Saturday and featured the bands the Five 6, Busted Vacuum, Soullution, Rudy Brown, and Fungus Amungus. Music was punctuated by guest speakers including Dr. Steven Dunn, Terry Franklin, and Marcy Dudah.

Norman B also performed "Deviations from the Norm," a performance he described as "Rockapella Poetry."

Justin Sawyer, CRC President, opened the event.

"It's ridiculous that people aren't allowed to use this plant in their own home, respectably, responsibly, without hurting anyone," Sawyer said. "No one else needs to go to jail for it. So that's why we're doing this, to raise awareness."

Law currently states that those over 17 years of age caught with a small amount of marijuana could be arrested or given a court summons. If convicted, the maximum sentence is a jail term of up to six months and/or a fine of up to $500.

Senate Bill 1151, introduced to the Massachusetts Legislature, would eliminate criminal charges for possession of two ounces or less of marijuana, reducing the penalty to a maximum fine of $250. Those in possession of more than two ounces would not be arrested, but instead given a court summons.

The CRC encouraged students to contact their state legislators about this bill.

"We also try to get people to sign cards so we can send them to their state rep to support the new decriminalization bill," said Jaimeson Borges, an active CRC member. Such cards were available in a covered area at the festival.

"We've really been pushing to get it through and we're proud that it's gone further than it ever has before," Borges said.

Terry Franklin, a local political activist, said this bill is currently "bottled up in the committee." He encouraged students to fill out the postcards, saying, "Legislators need to hear your voice on this."

While the focus of the day was raising awareness about Senate Bill 1151, Dr. Steven Dunn, an Associate Professor at Tufts University, also discussed marijuana's medicinal benefits and its potential for advances in medical research.

"If we can actually figure out what receptors are where and what drugs target them, we may actually be able to solve some problems, including anxiety," Dunn said.

Marcy Dudah, a local activist for medical marijuana also spoke. "[Marijuana] does wonderful things for my headaches, my nausea, and my weight loss," Dudah said.

Dudah also expressed frustrations on waiting for laws to go through the legislature. "I'm just really sick of waiting for my legislature to make up their minds what goes into my body!"

Overall, the day encouraged students and members of the community to stop waiting and start contacting their legislators about not only Senate Bill 1151, but about any political issues that concern them.

"You can either bow down to authority or speak up to them," Terry Franklin said. "I'm not asking for civil disobedience, all I'm asking you for is to get involved in the political process."

The CRC catchphrase for the event was "spark the revolution," and this years' festival had a sizeable turn out. The mood on the muddy common remained upbeat, and though marijuana smoke occasionally drifted by, there was no police interference.

Three celebrators enjoy the "Extravaganja," an annual Amherst festival. This year, the festival's theme focused on the need for political action to legalize marijuana use.

MassPIRG holds Earth Day celebration

By Megan Daley
Collegian Staff

University of Massachusetts students celebrated Earth Day on Friday at a MassPIRG-sponsored gathering on the library lawn.

Massachusetts State Senator Stan Rosenberg made an appearance at the event to give students some encouraging news. "Environmental issues are happily back on the agenda," said Rosenberg.

Rosenberg said that four Republican governors in a row had caused a "dry spell" in the environmentalist agenda, but this year, several laws regarding the use of mercury in household products, hybrid car initiatives and building on forested land in Massachusetts were all passed.

Rosenberg also encouraged students to get involved with politics to make sure that the environment remains a priority for politicians. He urged them to all work on a political campaign, to vote and know the issues or even to think of running for office.

Several booths lined the walkway between leftover tents from Tent State University to entertain passing students and to provide information about the many campaigns of different MassPIRG divisions.

At one booth, students took a quiz to find out their "ecological footprint." After answering questions about food consumption, transportation and living arrangements, a computer calculated the number of acres required to sustain that one person. For the average American, 24 acres of land are needed to sustain that person's way of life. If everyone in the world used this much land we would need 5.5 planets to sustain our way of life. The program and MassPIRG representatives manning the booth gave advice about how to decrease the size of a "footprint."

For Amherst residents who attended the Earth Day celebration and brought their children, MassPIRG had even set up a Kids Booth to teach the younger generation about the environment. Kids were encouraged to illustrate a story about endangered animals or play games like "Renewable Resource Twister."

Another booth called "Old

See EARTH DAY on page 2

Students play Renewable Resource Twister at MassPIRG's celbration of Earth Day. Other games and booths were open to students who wanted to learn about the environment.

Sig Ep camps out to raise research funds

By Kira Glassman
Collegian Correspondent

Last week, the members of the Sigma Phi Epsilon fraternity at the University of Massachusetts spent their fourth year in a row camping out for a good cause.

From 9:00 a.m. on Monday, April 17 until 5:30 p.m. on Friday, April 21, fraternity members took turns braving the elements and eating and sleeping in tents on the Student Union lawn to help raise money for the American Cancer Society.

"It's something we look forward to every year," said sophomore Sigma Phi Epsilon member Matt O'Connor. "We get to hang out on campus all day, and it's a great way for the pledge classes to bond."

Their cause, the brothers say, is close to home.

The fraternity's camp-out tradition began four years ago when the mother of Brendan Humphries, a Sigma Phi Epsilon member, died of cancer. Since then, there have been two more cancer diagnoses — one of a fraternity member and another of a member's mother.

Students' reactions to the fraternity's solicitations for donations were mixed.

"There were people who walked by with their heads down, and others who came up to us and said, 'This is such a great cause,' and gave us everything they had in their wallet," said O'Connor. "One person gave us $100!"

"This is hands-down our most successful event," said Sean Musselman, a UMass and Sigma Phi Epsilon alumnus who graduated in December. But, he added, "The weather has almost been too nice. People are usually a lot more sympathetic when it's colder."

Fraternity members, who met their goal of $2,000, say they are setting a philanthropic trend.

"Other Greek houses are now interested in doing week-long events," said O'Connor.

Freshman Steven Ward added, "We set the bar high."

Sigma Phi Epsilon was one of the many teams that participated in the Five College Relay for Life, an overnight event that began on the evening of Friday, April 21

See CANCER on page 3

Man arrested for murder in Lawrence

LAWRENCE, Mass. (AP) — Police arrested a man Saturday on charges that he beat a 34-year-old mother to death in front of her two sons in the first homicide in this city in almost 20 months.

Officers found Maria Sastre, 34, with severe head injuries in her home early Saturday morning after her sons called for help from a neighbor's house. Sastre's 15-year-old also suffered head injuries during the attack but is expected to survive.

Paramedics rushed Sastre to a local hospital, where she died at about 8:30 a.m.

Police arrested Levi Omar Alcantara, 30, just before 8 a.m. near Sastre's home. Alcantara knew Sastre and her two sons, police said, but officers declined to describe their relationship.

Alcantara, of Methuen, is being held in the Middleton Jail. He is scheduled to be arraigned Monday in Lawrence District Court on charges of murder, assault with attempt to murder and assault with a dangerous weapon.

Police did not specify what type of weapon was used in the attack. Sastre's 12-year-old son was present but not injured during the assault, police said.

The last homicide in Lawrence was on Aug. 26, 2004. Rafael Castro, 36, was shot in the head in his apartment by a man looking for drugs, police said. A 20-year-old man has been indicted on a first-degree murder charge in the killing.

Lawrence, an old mill town about 28 miles north of Boston, is one of the state's poorest cities. It has long been plagued by gangs, drugs and violence.

Officials credited community policing and focusing on the three driving forces behind most killings in the city — drugs, gangs and domestic violence — for what had been a 20-month run without a murder.

The last time the city of 72,000 went a year without a homicide was in 1972.

Associated Press

Interest on student loans set to increase

By CJ Moore
University Daily Kansan (U. Kansas)

LAWRENCE, Kan. — Andy Curry graduated from the University of Kansas last summer after financing his education using student loans and now owes about $25,000. Curry plans to pay off his loans over the next 10 years. After interest, he is looking at paying more than $35,000.

"I could go out and buy a very nice car with all that money," Curry said.

But Curry may have gotten out at just the right time. As of July 1 this year, the interest rate on Stafford loans, the most common student loan, is increasing to a fixed 6.8 percent.

This increase is up from the current rate of 5.3 percent for loans in repayment and up from 3.37 percent during the 2004-05 school year.

The rate increased because of the Deficit Reduction Act that President George Bush signed last month. The act is meant to reduce government spending. The U.S. government is the lender on Stafford loans, so increasing the interest rate increases revenue for the government. The rate is now fixed at 6.8 percent.

Students have options to avoid the increase, but the deadline to make a change is quickly approaching.

Consolidation is the first option. This allows students to combine all of their loans into one. The consolidation company pays off the lender for all your current loans and you make monthly payments to the consolidator. Under the new act, after July 1, current students will no longer be able to consolidate their Stafford loans. They will be stuck paying the 6.8 percent interest rate.

"We certainly encourage students to look into the consolidation option," said Stephanie Covington, the associate director of KU's office of financial aid. "At this point, since the interest rates have been lower and they're getting ready to go up, it could be a savings to students to go ahead and consolidate those loans."

Curry did just that last August with half of his loans. The interest rate that the consolidation company Curry uses, AES, is 4.5 percent. Curry plans to consolidate the rest of his loans before the July 1 deadline.

Stafford loans are currently the most popular loan for KU students and students nationwide. At the University of Kansas, 14,860 students currently receive a Stafford loan.

Covington suggests another option for students — a Perkins loan, which used to be less appealing when the Stafford loan interest rates were lower. The Perkins loan — lent by schools, not the federal government — has a fixed five-percent interest rate. Currently, only 1,582 students receive Perkins loans at the University.

Like the Stafford loan, the Perkins loan is awarded to students based on financial need, which is determined by the Free Application for Federal Student Aid.

ARTS & LIVING

NOHO PREPARES FOR CONCERT

Reggae legends set to rock Pearl Street.

PAGE 5

EDITORIAL/OPINION

TAKING MONEY FROM EDUCATION

What, what, what would the government do with extra cash?

PAGE 4

WEATHER

TODAY
High 61
Showers

TONIGHT
Low 42
More Showers

TOMORROW
High 68
Low 35
PM Showers

SPORTS

HOYAS WIN LATEST BATTLE

UMass fell 8-6 to I-CAC rival Georgetown on Saturday.

PAGE 8

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Michael A. Busack
MANAGING EDITOR Eric Athas
BUSINESS MANAGER Nathan Chomsky
PRODUCTION MANAGER Nicholas Belanger
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Katie Huston
ADVERTISING MANAGER Kerry O'Grady
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Lauren Egavian
EDITORIAL PRODUCTION Amanda Allen
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Ian Jones
COPIES EDITOR Amanda Allen
EDITORIAL EDITOR Kristen LaCasse
NEWS EDITOR Dan O'Brien
SPORTS EDITOR Jeff Howe
CIRCULATION MANAGER Thomas Hecht
DISTRIBUTION MANAGER Nick Gleason
FINANCE MANAGER Daniel Conti
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Caren Tortorici
ASSISTANT BUSINESS Phil Smoller
AST. ARTS & LIVING Morgan-Ann Rousseau
AST. ARTS & LIVING Alex Butler
ASSISTANT NEWS Megan Dales
ASSISTANT NEWS Matt Belliveau
ASSISTANT SPORTS Dan Duggan
ASSISTANT SPORTS Rob Greenfield
ASSISTANT EDITORIAL Tucker Merrick

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS ALMA LIFE, BECAME THE COLLEGE NEWS IN 1901, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1919 AND THE DAILY COLLEGIAN IN 1956. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967. THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN DISTRIBUTED SINCE JANUARY 1994. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL (413)545-3500. ISSUE PRICE: $.50 A.M. AND $.50 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Katie Huston

COPY EDITOR
Eric Athas

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Amanda Allen

PRODUCTION STAFF
Ginny Nielsen, Michael A. Busack

If you see news happening, call us at 545-1809 and snap a photo with your cell phone, then send it to news@dailycollegian.com

Protesters of Iraq war are still practicing patriotism, says Kerry

KRT

Senator John Kerry, shown here saluting during a presidential campaign speech, said this weekend that dissent among Americans regarding the war in Iraq is a patriotic duty.

By Mark Pratt
Associated Press

BOSTON — Those who disagree with the Bush administration's policies in Iraq face the same scornful charges that they are unpatriotic as Sen. John Kerry did 35 years ago when he spoke out against the Vietnam War, the Massachusetts Democrat said Saturday.

"I have come here today to reaffirm that it was right to dissent in 1971 from a war that was wrong. And to affirm that it is both a right and an obligation for Americans today to disagree with a President who is wrong, a policy that is wrong, and a war in Iraq that weakens the nation," Kerry said to a standing ovation Saturday at Boston's historic Faneuil Hall.

Kerry's speech came 35 years to the day after he testified before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee to call for an end to the Vietnam War.

"How do you ask a man to be the last man to die for a mistake?" Kerry said in 1971, a line that helped propel the decorated Navy combat veteran and Yale graduate onto the national stage.

The same question applies today as Americans wrestle with the mounting death toll in Iraq, Kerry said, speaking before about 500 supporters who punctuated his speech at least 20 times with ovations.

"Lives have been lost to bad decisions," Kerry said. "Not decisions that could have gone either way, but decisions that constitute basic negligence and incompetence. And lives continue to be lost because of stubbornness and pride."

Kristyna Reisberg, 20, a Northeastern University student from Acton who attended the speech with her father, Paul Reisberg, said she was heartened to know some politicians share her values.

"It's nice to know that there are people in power who have the same views, and it's not a lost cause," she said.

Vietnam veteran Rick Hasset said Kerry's words have resonated with him for 35 years.

"He has always had that outspoken voice and vision that could hold politicians accountable," said Hassett, who has worked on some of Kerry's political campaigns.

A few scattered chants of "run" and "2008" were heard both before and after the speech. Kerry, the 2004 Democratic nominee for president, has not announced whether or not he will run in 2008.

"The spirit of intolerance for dissent has risen steadily, and the habit of labeling dissenters as unpatriotic has become the common currency of the politicians currently running our country," Kerry said.

Kerry also blasted those who question the motivation of retired generals who have recently called for the resignation of Defense Secretary Donald Rumsfeld.

"We have even heard accusations that this dissent gives aid and comfort to the enemy," he said. "That is cheap and shameful. How dare those who never wore the uniform in battle attack those who wore it all their lives."

After Rep. John Murtha, D-Pa., a decorated Marine Corps veteran, called for the withdrawal of troops from Iraq last November, he was widely attacked for advocating surrender. But President Bush, while on a trip to China, said, "People should feel comfortable about expressing their opinions about Iraq," and later called Murtha a "fine man and a good man."

In response to Kerry's speech Saturday, a spokeswoman for the Republican National Committee denied the party questioned anyone's patriotism.

"While we have never questioned Democrats' patriotism, we do question John Kerry's motives, considering his eagerness to engage in political theatrics as he ponders a presidential run," Tracey Schmitt said.

Kerry reiterated his position that American troops should be withdrawn by the end of the year, saying that Iraqi politicians only respond to deadlines.

"Iraqi politicians should be told that they have until May 15 to put together an effective unity government or we will immediately withdraw our military," he said.

Kerry said while Iraq is very different from Vietnam, there are some critical parallels.

"We are in the same place as we were when I came home from Vietnam and spoke out against the civilian leaders who were willing to sacrifice America's best in the interest of political self-preservation," he said.

Earth Day speakers call for students to take political action

MEGAN DAVIS/COLLEGIAN

One booth at MassPIRG's Earth Day celebration allowed students to take a quiz and determine the mark they were leaving on the planet.

EARTH DAY from page 1

Growth Ecosystem" explained the plight of a forested area near Sylvan. MassPIRG member Adam Reis showed cores from trees on that area. One tree was nearly 300 years old. UMass had planned to cut down parts of this old growth and pave the area for a parking lot, but after hearing MassPIRG's protests, the planners agreed to move the parking lot to spare part of the forest.

However, Reis said, run-off from the parking lot will still negatively impact the old-growth ecosystem.

The subject of Wal-Mart's proposed expansion onto an existing wetland area was also a topic of concern. Simon Miner, who studies the wetland ecosystem and its creatures, liked the spadefoot turtle and the spotted turtle, discussed the importance of keeping the ecosystem stable.

Vahram Elagoz, a graduate of UMass, also attended the event. He spoke about an environmental issue close to home for UMass students: the state of the campus pond.

"Erosion and sedimentation have become a real problem," he said, adding that the amount of muck made by goose droppings has seriously lowered the level of oxygen in the water.

Elagoz encouraged students to ask their administration to plant more shrubs and trees that compliment the pond's existing ecosystem. This, he said, would greatly improve the soil and water quality of the pond and its surrounding area.

"Let's make the pond a positive and viable center of the campus," said Elagoz.

Other features of the celebration included a petting zoo of goats and sheep under the care of a group of animal science majors and a performance by the UMass a cappella group Vocal Suspects.

Lecturers teach black history of Germany

GERMANY from page 1

the University of California San Diego and Technology University of Berlin came to participate in the conference, as well as many other speakers from Amherst College and UMass.

Saturday's lecturers spoke on a variety of topics, such as "Race and Modernity, Race, Colonialism and Imperial Germany," "The Black Presence in the Weimar Republic and Third Reich," and "Blackness in Two Germanies." At the end of the day there was an artists' roundtable, which allowed attendees to ask Daniel Kojo Schrade, Olumide Popoola and Ibranwen Okpako questions about their works.

Sunday also featured speakers lecturing on a variety of subjects. The focuses of the discussions on Sunday were "Race and the Visual Archive" and "Black Diasporic Thought and Contemporary Germany."

Black men and women have lived in Germany since the Middle Ages. In the modern era, black German history encompasses the movement and settlement of subjects from Germany's African colonies, the occupations of the Rhineland after World War I by French colonial troops, and the traumatic experience of racial terror during National Socialism.

After World War II, black Germans were affected by the division of the nation. Their disparate and fragmented origins long created barriers to the recognition of the commonalities among black Germans as subjects of their own history and historiography.

Beginning in the early 1980's, black Germans have begun forming a new black Germanic cultural movement and rewriting German history from a black perspective. The conference was aimed at discussing the rise and range of new methodological approaches to Black German Studies and new ways of thinking about the process of modern racial formation.

UNIVERSITY BARTENDING.
✓ Get your Bar Code® Certification
✓ Credit Cards Accepted!!!
✓ Professional Bartending Training with "Hands On" Pouring Sessions
✓ Over 10 Years in Business!!!
✓ Access to Job Placement Database!!!
✓ Great Part-time or Summer Job
LEARN TO BARTEND IN A WEEKEND!
April 28th - 30th
Terrace Lounge
Amherst College
CALL NOW! SPACE IS LIMITED!
1-800-U-CAN-MIX
www.universitybartending.com

looking for extra ca$h?
BRING IN CLOTHES TODAY – GET $$$ ON THE SPOT
PLATO'S
191 A University Drive, Amherst MA 01002

OUR TOP 10 GRADUATE MAJORS:
MBA
Physician Assistant
Interactive Communications
Teaching
Biomedical Sciences
Molecular/Cell Biology
Journalism
Nursing
Accounting
Computer Information Systems
MASTERING THE ART OF TEACHING
Sheila Wycinowski, Director of Curriculum and Staff Development at Amity High School, explains, "Basically we look to hire Quinnipiac students. They have a clear understanding of lesson planning and classroom management and the balance between them." She also characterizes Quinnipiac students as articulate, creative, able to encourage higher-level thinking in students, and able to incorporate technology into their teaching
QUINNIPIAC U:
RAVE REVIEWS FOR OUR MBA
The Quinnipiac University School of Business MBA program continues to prepare business professionals for the realities of management in global, technology-driven work environments in specializations such as:
• MBA WITH CONCENTRATIONS IN ACCOUNTING, CIS, FINANCE, INTERNATIONAL BUSINESS, MANAGEMENT, MARKETING
• MBA – CHARTERED FINANCIAL ANALYST® TRACK
• MBA IN HEALTHCARE MANAGEMENT
YOUR NEXT MOVE
Quinnipiac University offers graduate programs in 17 distinct disciplines. Whether you are interested in our AACSB nationally accredited business program, the master of arts in teaching (MAT) program or one of the Northeast's most highly regarded journalism and interactive communications programs, all have been designed to thoroughly prepare you for a professional career. For more information, call 1-800-462-1944 or visit www.quinnipiac.edu
QUINNIPIAC UNIVERSITY
Hamden, Connecticut

Amherst Road Service
•ASE Certified Auto Repair
•Nationwide NAPA Warranty Available
•Conveniently Located on Bus Route
•Only 8 Miles from UMass
•Student Discount
Mention this ad to receive a
$9.99 Oil Change
(on most cars, up to 5 quarts; excluding tax and fees)
Route 116 Sunderland, MA 413.665.3782

Reports show failure to deal with abuser

BURLINGTON, Vt. (AP) — Vermont's Catholic leaders knew the Rev. Edward Paquette had a history of pedophilia in Massachusetts and Indiana when they hired him and assigned him to a parish in Rutland, according to a published report.

Details of Paquette's past were cited in court documents in civil suits by Paquette's alleged victims and internal church documents. They were reported in a story published Sunday in the The Rutland Herald and Barre-Montpelier Times Argus.

The Catholic Diocese of Burlington last week settled one of 17 pending lawsuits against it for $965,000 as a civil suit brought by one plaintiff, Michael Gay of South Burlington, was just going to trial.

Paquette, originally from Westfield, Mass., wrote to Bishop John Marshall in March of 1972 from Indiana, where he had been working as a priest, saying he wanted to move east to be closer to his family.

"I did have problems but received medical treatment, and I am now cured," Paquette's first letter to Marshall said.

The Vermont Diocese also received a letter dated that March 30 from Bishop Leo Pursley of the Diocese of Fort Wayne-South Bend, Ind., warning about Paquette.

"The dossier is large and the history is long," Pursley wrote. "I will try to be brief and to the point." He referred to "three homosexual episodes involving young boys."

Despite the warning, Paquette was assigned as a parish priest at Christ the King Church in Rutland that June.

Paquette, who became a priest at 28 in 1957, was found to have engaged in pedophilia by the early 1960s. Bishop James Connolly of Diocese of Fall River, Mass., sent Paquette a letter on Jan. 18, 1963 firing him from his position in the diocese.

"You must certainly appreciate the fact that you are liable to prosecution, under the laws of the state of Massachusetts," Connolly wrote. "Such a thing, should it happen, could only result in your loss of all possibility for priestly ministry."

No criminal charges were ever brought, and Paquette found a new position in Indiana the next year.

After he was relieved of his duties in Indiana, Paquette sought to bring his "priestly ministry" to Vermont.

During an interview with three Vermont priests on a hiring panel, Paquette "talked quite openly, but not with any specifics, about his lapses into homosexuality," Monsignor Edward Fitzsimons wrote in meeting minutes.

"I would rely heavily on the diagnosis and professional advice of Dr. Hillenbrand (Paquette's psychiatrist) who treated him following his last lapse. He feels that Father Paquette has this trouble only in periods of acute depression and feels that he can function well if these periods of acute depression are avoided."

Rutland Pastor James Engle wrote to Marshall on Oct. 21, 1974 that he had received word that Paquette had "molested two young men while on communion calls in the (Rutland) hospital. ... "As you readily understand, it is imperative that Fr. Paquette be removed from the Rutland area immediately."

Court documents don't contain any abuse reports from Paquette's time in Montpelier. But a Washington County man identified in court papers only as "John Doe" alleges in a lawsuit that Paquette molested him dozens of times at St. Augustine's when the victim was 10 to 12.

"Despite the demands of two sets of irate parents that 'something be done about this,' Father Paquette's pastor and I are determined to take the risk of leaving him in his present assignment," Marshall wrote in a 1976 letter. "Our thinking is that, knowing the awareness of others, concerning his problem, Father Paquette will have reason for 'self-control.'"

—Associated Press

Sig Ep raises money for cancer research at Amherst College's Pratt Field. Groups of students from the five colleges took turns walking around the track to help raise money for the American Cancer Society.

CANCER from page 1

"I think it's extra special that this year we got to donate the money at the Relay for Life," said Musselman. "We've never done that before."

When asked if the frat brothers minded abandoning their beds for a week, sophomore Adam Simon said he didn't.

"It's nice to be able to give up living in a warm dorm for something like this," he said. "It's satisfying."

And it turns out that life away from the dorms wasn't so bad for the members of Sigma Phi Epsilon.

"People came and gave us food," said O'Connor. "Sorority girls brought us cookies."

He added with a smile, "We're not exactly roughing it."

Bin Laden accuses U.S. of war on Islam

By Salah Nasrawi
Associated Press

CAIRO, Egypt — Osama bin Laden issued new threats in an audiotape broadcast on Arab television Sunday and accused the United States and Europe of supporting a "Zionist" war on Islam by cutting off funds to the Hamas-led Palestinian government.

He also urged followers to go to Sudan, his former base, to fight a proposed U.N. peacekeeping force.

His words, the first new message by the al-Qaida leader in three months, seemed designed to justify potential attacks on civilians — something al-Qaida has been criticized for even by its Arab supporters.

He also appeared to be trying to drum up support among Arabs by accusing the West of targeting Hamas, a militant group that fights against Israel and now heads the Palestinian government.

Citing the West's decision to cut off aid to the Hamas-led government because it refuses to renounce violence or recognize Israel, bin Laden said Washington and Europe were waging war on Islam.

"The blockade which the West is imposing on the government of Hamas proves that there is a Zionist, crusaders' war on Islam," bin Laden said.

President Bush was told about the tape Sunday morning. The intelligence community has informed the White House that it believes the tape is authentic, said Bush's spokesman, Scott McClellan.

"The al-Qaida leadership is on the run and under a lot of pressure," McClellan said at a Marine base in Twentynine Palms, Calif., where Bush was having lunch with military families.

"We are on the advance. They are on the run."

Al-Qaida is not believed to have direct links to Hamas, which is an outgrowth of the Muslim Brotherhood. Hamas spokesman Sami Abu Zuhri was quick to distance the group from bin Laden, declaring that "the ideology of Hamas is totally different from the ideology of Sheik bin Laden."

The groups do, however, share an anti-Israel ideology that calls for the destruction of the Jewish state. And recent reports in Middle East media have said al-Qaida is trying to build cells in the Gaza Strip, the West Bank, Lebanon and Sudan. Israel has indicted two West Bank militants for al-Qaida membership.

Israeli government spokesman Raanan Gissin said it appeared bin Laden decided to issue the verbal assault to deflect growing Arab animosity toward al-Qaida.

That criticism peaked in December when the leader of the al-Qaida in Iraq group, Abu Musab al-Zarqawi, claimed responsibility for the bombings of Jordan hotels that killed many Arabs.

"This is something the Arab world can agree upon," Gissin said.

Bin Laden "has been criticized for the destruction and carnage he's causing the Muslim nation. He's looking for another justification," Gissin said. "Criticizing Israel sounds more politically correct."

The U.S. ambassador to Iraq, Zalmay Khalilzad — a former ambassador to Afghanistan — said the tape was another attempt by bin Laden to gain attention for his cause.

"He wants to be relevant to the situation, wants to get attention that he still is a player," Khalilzad said on CNN's "Late Edition."

The voice on the tape sounded strong and resembled that on other recordings attributed to bin Laden, but its authenticity could not be verified independently.

Al-Jazeera television appeared to have had the tape long enough to make significant edits, with its news reader providing background comments. The network broadcast about five minutes of the tape in all.

Bin Laden's remarks touched on the full range of issues that anger militant Arabs and other Muslims. Many of them see a renewal of a Christian- and Jewish-inspired Western "crusade" to dominate the Islamic world and to confiscate Muslim lands and resources — particularly oil.

Bob Ayers, a security expert with the Chatham House think tank in London, said the tape may be bin Laden's way of playing cat-and-mouse with those hunting him.

"It's when people have kind of forgotten about him, when he's not been on the news, that the tapes emerge," Ayers said. "It's kind of his way of thumbing his nose at the U.S. and saying, 'Hey, I'm still out here, and you haven't caught me and you can't.' That's what he's saying."

Concerning Sudan, bin Laden called on "mujahedeen and their supporters, especially, in Sudan and the Arab peninsula, to prepare for long war again the crusader plunderers in Western Sudan. Our goal is not defending the Khartoum government but to defend Islam, its land and its people."

"I urge holy warriors to be acquainted with the land and the tribes in Darfur," he said, adding they should be aware that the rainy season approaches and that will hamper their movement.

Al-Qaida has targeted Western forces in Africa before, including its attacks against U.S. troops trying to bring peace to Somalia in 1993.

The fighting in Darfur began when rebels from black African tribes took up arms in February 2003, complaining of discrimination and oppression by Sudan's Arab-dominated government.

The government has been accused of unleashing Arab tribal militia known as the Janjaweed against civilians in a campaign of murder, rape and arson — a charge it denies. At least 180,000 people have died — many from hunger and disease — and 2 million people have been displaced in the vast, arid region of western Sudan and as refugees in neighboring Chad.

The United Nations has described the conflict as the world's gravest humanitarian crisis. The United States has described it as genocide.

Negotiators are trying to broker a peace deal between warring factions by an April 30 deadline. Members of the African Union have agreed in principle to hand over peacekeeping duties to the United Nations this fall.

The Saudi-born bin Laden set up headquarters in Sudan after he was forced to leave his homeland, but Khartoum expelled him under threats from the United States. He moved to Afghanistan, where he trained fighters and organized the Sept. 11 attacks.

He is believed hiding in the rugged mountains on the Pakistani side of that country's long border with Afghanistan.

In Washington, U.S. intelligence officials said bin Laden was living separately from top deputy Ayman al-Zawahri and, in a sign he has to be careful about whom he trusts, surrounded by fellow Arabs.

The al-Qaida chieftain, who last issued a message broadcast by Al-Jazeera on Jan. 19, also made a point of trying to justify attacks on civilians. He said citizens of Western countries were equally responsible with their governments for what he termed the "war on Islam."

"I say that this war is the joint responsibility of the people and the governments. While the war continues, the people renew their allegiance to their rulers and politicians and continue to send their sons to our countries to fight us," bin Laden said.

In his last message, bin Laden offered the United States a long-term truce but warned that al-Qaida soon would launch a fresh attack on American soil. But no new attacks on the United States have occurred.

In the Sunday broadcast, bin Laden called for a global Muslim boycott of American goods similar to the recent ban on Danish products after the publication of caricatures of Islam's Prophet Muhammad that outraged the Muslim world.

The Al-Jazeera news reader said bin Laden, in a portion of the tape not aired by the Qatar-based broadcaster, also scoffed at Saudi King Abdullah for his calls for a "dialogue among civilizations" and blasted liberal Arab writers for participating in the Western cultural invasion of Muslim lands.

Osama Bin Laden recently released an audiotape on Arab television that accused the United Sates and Europe of waging war against the Muslim faith.

Looking for a GREAT summer job?
♦Work outside
♦Make $8-12/hr
♦Have a cool boss
♦We train you!
Positions available in: Needham, Plymouth/Carver, Westborough, Sturbridge, South Hadley, Long Meadow, Greenfield, Amherst, Holyoke
Give us a call @ 617-642-6895

CAMPUS HEADS TURN NAY
Don't Just Grab Attention; Demand It.
The All New Ford Fusion.
Brought to you by your NEW ENGLAND Ford DEALERS
LIFE IN D
Come see the all new Ford Fusion, Tuesday April 25th at the Campus Center Lawn
FREE Food, Prizes, and Entertainment 10am - 3pm
ITS A CELEBRATION!

BRAGGING RIGHTS TO "NAME THE STATIONS"
FOR THE NEW DINING CONCEPTS AT BERKSHIRE DINING COMMONS
Congratulations to:
Trent Bolte, Electrical Engineering and Maxwell R Guerrieri, Sports Management for being winners in the "Name the Stations at the Berkshire DC Contest"; each will receive a $100 American Express Traveler's Cheque.
Here they are:
CONCEPT — NAME
Traditional station — Chef's Table
Pizza station — Pizzeria
Vegetarian station — Veggilicious
Pasta station — Taste of Italy
Bakery station — Bakery
Deli station — Deli
Grill station — Berkshire Grill
Noodle station — Noodles
Pan Asian station — International Cuisine
Grab-n-go station — Grab-n-Go
Thanks everyone for your participation in the contest!
DINING SERVICES UMass/Amherst
YCMP

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

EDITORIAL OPINION

MONDAY, APRIL 24, 2006

"I may not agree with what you say but I will defend to the death your right to say it." Voltaire

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Our ancestors were once immigrants too

Hinlan Wong

The sun was shining through the stained glass window depicting the apostles, making the dust dance like angels in Saint Gabriel's Church in Brighton, Mass., on the afternoon of Holy Thursday. Going to church every day from Holy Thursday until Easter Sunday is an annual ritual for my family. These religious observances tell the tale of Jesus Christ from the Last Supper to his crucifixion by the Romans and his ascension on Easter Sunday.

I had come late to church on this particular day because I was stuck in traffic coming back from UMass. I was sitting on the cold wooden seats with no cushions, something I never quite understood — why can't church pews have cushions? People would be able to enjoy church a little bit more if they made it a bit more comfortable. But on this particular day the pew was extra uncomfortable, so bad I had to change sitting positions because my tailbone started to throb with pain.

To make it worse, the priest decided to give an extra-long sermon, making me pretty irritated. For those who are not familiar with a Catholic mass, a sermon is like the Heartbreak Hill of the Boston marathon. It's part of the mass that can never be overlooked and at times lasts forever. Once a priest is finished with his sermon, you know mass is will be over in about another 10 to 15 minutes. Once church is over you'll be able to head to breakfast, change out of your church clothes and get ready for the Sunday sports game.

Growing up, no matter how much passion and enthusiasm the priest put into his sermon, it would just come in through one ear and out the other, kind of like opinion columns. But if you asked me how the sermon was at mass today or any other Sunday, I would say it was a good one. Good meaning that I didn't remember what he said but that the priest made me laugh and made me feel a little better about myself that day. Maybe that's why experts say people who go to church frequently live longer — because they feel so good about themselves after leaving mass.

I was sitting on the cold wooden seats with no cushions, something I never quite understood — why can't church pews have cushions?

On this Holy Thursday though, I was tired from class and from the long drive from UMass to Boston, and I realized I hadn't eaten anything because my stomach was growling like a car needing a tune up. The priest finally finished his sermon and sat down. As he did so I rejoiced in my head that church was halfway through. But out of nowhere, a second priest came out from the woodwork. This priest looked like any other priest nowadays — pale, graying hair, and you could sense from his appearance that he had lived through some very important event in history. He took a piece of paper out, unfolded it and he began to speak. But I could not understand a word because it was all in Spanish. I took a long exhale, because I knew I would be staying in my uncomfortable pew a little bit longer. Then I realized, "Wait, where are the Spanish speaking people?"

I come to church every Sunday and this is the first time a priest had come out and began speaking in Spanish. Out of curiosity my eyes shifted through the half-filled church, in search of the Spanish speaking community. I found them a few rows in front of me. A group of young men in front of me raised their heads. Listening attentively to the Spanish-speaking priest. Then I looked to my right and on the other side of the church a large family had filled about four pews; they were nodding their heads up and down.

As I looked back at the Spanish-speaking priest I realized something: we all have one commonality, religion. It is one of the few things that binds people from all over the globe under one roof for a couple of days in the year, if not every week. People come in from all backgrounds to mourn and celebrate the death of one man who died centuries ago. Like these Hispanic and Irish parishioners around me, my parents came from China as immigrants in the 1970s. My father escaped from a Chinese labor camp during the Cultural Revolution and made his way to the United States to find the American Dream. I sympathize with the immigrants, illegal or legal, they, like my father, had to leave to find a better future, to have the dream of not living in fear of being persecuted or not knowing where the next meal may come.

Congress will be back in session today after a week off from spring recess and most likely the debate on immigration will continue to be played out. I am not asking you to choose a side, but just to think about your own heritage, your family past. From one way or another, our families came to find a better future: Italians, Irish, Jewish, Puritans, Chinese, Vietnamese, Hispanics, Jamaicans, the list goes on and on. I then want you to think about a story you heard about an illegal immigrant coming to the United States. Then put yourself in that immigrant's situation. Would you do the same thing? I can sure tell you I would.

Hinlan Wong is a Collegian columnist

Dollars, dreams, and democracy

For a while now, I've been hearing many people angrily state that college education is becoming unaffordable for the average prospective student. Where there's smoke, there's fire. Several studies have recently concluded that since 2001, the price of tuition, fees, and room and board at four-year public institutions has increased by 44 percent. Even gas prices haven't gone up quite that fast.

However, there may be some change on the horizon. On April 13, U.S. Congressman George Miller (D-CA) and U.S. Sen. Dick Durbin (D-IL) proposed the "Reverse the Raid on Student Aid Act of 2006." The act condemns the recent Republican cuts to federal student aid, and suggests remedying the damages by cutting interest rates in half on college loans. Currently, the interest rate is at 6.8 percent for students, and Miller and Durbin would like to see that figure drop to 3.4 percent.

The typical student graduates with $17,500 in debt, and it has been reported by several publications that the "Reverse the Raid" act would make for a cut of $5,600 in interest payments for said student. This savings would no doubt enable thousands of Americans to continue their education.

Miller and Durbin seem to be under the impression that getting an education is essential not only to the individual, but that it is critical to the continued success of America that we all learn our Art History, Biochemistry, and Comparative Politics. Sounds great, right?

Unfortunately, the Republican bloc has shown no signs of signing onto the bill. That got me thinking. If they don't feel that the next generation of American leaders becoming educated is worth government expenditure, towards what, exactly, are they hoping to put that additional $5,600 per student? A few possibilities…

It would definitely cover the cost of several government employees for a golfing weekend in Scotland with Jack Abramoff. Heck, for $5,600, they can probably even afford to use caddies and carts, maybe even have a drink at the nineteenth hole.

It could buy a boatload of songs from iTunes for George W. Bush. According to recent reports, Dubya has been rocking out to the Beatles on his iPod, and considering they have yet to license their catalogue to Apple (please don't sue me for using the word) it seems as though the songs might have been obtained illegitimately, perhaps from ripped CDs. Of course, according to the RIAA, one cannot do what one wants with his/her CDs, so this is illegal. A politician showing disregard for the laws he has sworn to uphold? That, my friends, is shocking. We need to get Bush back on the straight and narrow and sign him up at the iTunes store.

With $5,600, the government could definitely afford to lease the naval base at Guantanamo Bay for another eighteen months or so. With a yearly rent of only $4,000 for a base that encompasses almost 45 square miles, it's a pretty good deal. I mean, living in Pufflon costs about that much per student per year, and Pufflon doesn't offer the golf course, McDonalds, drive-in movie theater, or detention and torture facilities that can be used and enjoyed in Guantanamo Bay.

I mean, living in Puffton costs about that much per student per year, and Puffton doesn't offer the golf course, McDonalds, drive-in movie theater, or detention and torture facilities that can be used and enjoyed in Guantanamo Bay.

Five large would pay for at least two days of Kenneth Starr, at the behest of the Republicans, investigating the sex life of just about anybody in the world. If my vote is worth anything, I'd like to suggest Jessica Simpson. America deserves to know whether or not she cheated on Nick — it's practically a constitutional right. I'd rather hear the verdict than sit in some silly college class, wouldn't you?

It wouldn't be as extravagant as most legislation, but $5,600 could definitely finance some pork barrel projects for officials who are anticipating a tough re-election fight. I'm sure some bridge in Alaska needs bird poop cleaned off the support struts, or that some town in Kentucky needs to erect a museum dedicated to the 1975 World Championships of watermelon seed spitting more than any of us need to be able to afford college, right?

I'll have to double-check with the guys on "Pimp My Ride," but I would think that five stacks would be enough to pay for armor plating in the Humvees that our brave soldiers ride around in each day. It's a ridiculous crime that they have yet to be supplied with the basic equipment in order to survive. After all, if we're going to send people thousands of miles away to fight a war based on terrible intelligence, and perhaps outright fabrication, they at least deserve to be well-protected.

Bush loves iPods. But is he listening to Abbey Road illegally?

In short, it's clear that the level-headed, financially pudent members of government aren't consciously trying to deny us an education, but are merely planning for contingencies that they consider more important.

Those fools Miller and Durbin, just like the stoned kids in Antonio's, want to spend whatever they've got in their pockets. So whatever you do, don't write to your congressional representatives and demand that government officials live up to their campaign promises and make higher education a reality for all. The future of higher education definitely is not in jeopardy. Oh wait — yes it is.

Of course, if you don't, your kids may not be lucky enough to go to college, but they might just be fortunate enough to get that job scraping the bird poop off the bridge.

Chris Eckel is a Collegian columnist

The evil of apathy

Matt Giancola

Our generation is confronted with many problems that we will need to solve. Environmental problems, economic disparities, terrorism and war are all things we will have to find solutions to. There is one evil, however, that is so great that it may render all of our endeavors to solve these troubles useless. That evil is apathy, and the general sense of this generation that the issues that affect the world do not affect them. There are many causes of this apathy, ranging from distrust in the political process and mind-numbing television to the belief that one person can't change the world.

Last week, SCERA (Student Center for Educational Research and Advocacy) coordinator Jamie Jee and I stood in front of the Hampshire Dining Common asking students to sign postcards that were to be sent to state senators and representatives asking them for more funds for UMass. I figured that this would be a fairly easy task — getting students to support a reduction in the bills they have to pay, as well as more money for professors and infrastructure.

To make it even easier, we would look up their senator; all they had to do was sign their name and identify their town. For some reason, though, many of them simply walked on by, even after we explained everything to them. Some said they didn't have time. Others yelled "No!" and laughed with their friends. I understand if they didn't want to sign it because they didn't want to fund UMass, but from all of the complaints I hear about high fees and a lack of teachers, I get the sense that this is something that students care about.

To be fair, we did get many to sign and I had some wonderful conversations with a number of them on what can be done to pressure the state to help education. We all lead busy lives, and we cannot hope to turn our complete attention to every topic out there, but few issues are as intimate to us as UMass funding and few attempts at a solution so easy. If we don't care about our own school, how are we going to care about far-reaching, complicated world issues?

The general feeling of apathy

If we don't care about our own school, how are we going to care about far-reaching, complicated world issues?

is not only present at our school. It has been manifesting itself across the country, causing alarm in many. According to historians, the current government has been more secretive and insular than any in U.S. history. John Dean, former counsel to Richard Nixon, believes that the Bush administration has done more unethical and illegal things than Nixon ever did.

In the 1960s, college campuses were up in arms over the Vietnam War and racial discrimination. The war was being fought against under-equipped guerrillas and yet there was no sign that the war would be won. Eventually, Nixon resigned over the threat of impeachment because of his illegal activities.

Polls today show the Iraq War to be very unpopular with the public. Over fifty percent want troops to be withdrawn within the year, and yet there are few visible signs of public dissent. Where are all these millions who oppose the war?

Neil Young, who composed "Ohio," "Southern Man," and many other important political songs, will release an album in the next few months titled "Living with War." One of the new songs on it is called "Let's Impeach the President." In an interview he said that he was waiting for some 18-22 year old artist to make the record, but when he saw none come forward, he decided he needed to act.

Our generation has so much potential. We are afforded opportunities not given to our parents or grandparents. Technology, education, and communications — we are at the forefront of it all, and if we want, we can use these advancements for good, to solve the many problems that face this planet. If only we could be more outspoken with our beliefs, we might be able to realize more of our dreams. Whether you are pro-Bush, anti-Bush, pro-choice, anti-choice, for free higher education, for private schools, for saving the environment, for factory emissions, communist, capitalist, or something in between, stand up for what you believe in. Politics should not be one of those issues that people are afraid to talk about for fear of making others uncomfortable.

Decisions are made by those who choose to show up. If you decide to stay home instead of voting, or watch television instead of writing a letter to the editor, how are you ever going to get your voice heard? When we declare our willingness to take part in the dialogue, we will finally see change, and these days, change is sorely needed.

Matt Giancola is a Collegian columnist

LETTER TO THE EDITOR

A VIEW TO A BILL

The total anarchy centering on illegal immigration is one of the single most irresponsible acts of our government in the history of America. Both parties are at fault at the national and border state levels of government.

What we have is uncontrolled drug trafficking, unchecked health hazards, a huge and growing criminal problem, and an enormous and growing cost ranging into the hundreds of billions of dollars that is helping to bankrupt our states and the economy of America. In addition, there is a direct inside-our-country threat of terrorism by some who want to kill Americans and destroy America. Yet it is both alarming and disturbing that our governments and elected officials are paralyzed by partisan politics and political correctness from doing anything about it.

Let's clear up one issue first. A great strength of our nation has been the fact that it has been a "melting pot" of people from various national backgrounds, races, religions, and cultures. We can continue to be a "melting pot," not discriminate, have compassion, help other people, provide opportunities, and give dignity to others. Moreover, we can do it with a legal process of immigration. That's right, a legal process of immigration. These two actions are not mutually exclusive. Many of our parents, grandparents, and great grandparents who immigrated to this country over many years came into this country through a legal process of immigration. It is not a mystery, not all that difficult — we did it over many, many years.

The Kennedy/McCain Bill on Immigration would only compound the existing problem. It is estimated that under their plan the level of illegal immigration would swell from 12 million to 40 million people over 10 years. It would be a disaster.

For those in Washington and at the state level, here is a suggestion: Allow people into this country only through a legal process of immigration. Provide a permitting process for temporary workers, with a severe penalty for employers who have workers without a permit. Put in place a tracking system so that we know the status of each and every person who enters this country through our legal process of immigration and legal worker program. With the great power of computers today, this can be done if we keep it simple and logical. Enforce our borders and put in place the resources to accomplish it thoroughly. Put in place severe penalties for violating our legal process of immigration.

The American people are fed up. It is time to act and do what is both right and that which is just plain common sense.

Al DiLascia
Chicopee, Mass.

COMPLAINTS ABOUT COLLEGIAN

In saying, "Mr. Johnston is not lingering in my opinion," was Dr. Feldman indicating that Mr. Johnston was not taking his time or not faking his illness ("malingering")? Is this a misquote on the part of the paper, or is Dr. Feldman not as literate as her credentials imply?

If the former is the case, why doesn't the Daily Collegian have a section to acknowledge and correct errors?

Furthermore, why does this murder trial make the front page day after day? Why do three other stories from the same day, "Alleged murderer commits suicide," "Police find living infant in trash bin," and "Man accused of killing girl in plot to eat flesh" get front page prominence while articles about Iran's enriched uranium and the detainees at Guantanamo Bay are buried on pages four and five? If space is an issue, perhaps the four gruesome stories could have been combined into one — for example, "Murderer eats suicidal infant out of trash bin" or "Infant living in trash bin murders insane flesh eater."

I read this paper every day because I think that it is an important to be connected to the academic community that I am part of, but I wish that "New England's Largest College Daily" would try a little harder to present a less embarrassing portrait of the community.

Nathan Spangler
UMass Student

Your mom called, she said to make your bed, br… your t… t…

editorial@dailycollegian.com

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

ARTS & LIVING

MONDAY, APRIL 24, 2006

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Reggae legends to rock Noho

By Justin Beturney
Collegian Staff

Legend. It's a weighted word that people throw around too lightly these days, but anyone who knows more about reggae music than the name Bob Marley knows that Toots and The Maytals are living legends.

Toots and the Maytals
Pearl Street Nightclub
Northampton
April 25
8:30 p.m.
$22.50 and $25

Toots and The Maytals will be playing the Pearl Street Night Club in Northampton tommorrow for an evening of energetic reggae music. Front man Toots Hibbert's booming, soulful voice gives the band the distinct sound that sets them apart from other reggae groups. Singing in the church choir since age seven, he has cultivated the gospel sound and injected it into his music. Toots and The Maytals' sound is an eclectic mix of reggae, ska, gospel and soul, fused together in a lively repertoire of songs.

Formed in 1962, Toots and The Maytals were at the crest of the reggae wave that was sweeping over the island of Jamaica. After moving to Kingston as a teenager, Toots met Raleigh Gordon and Jerry Matthias, who made up the original Maytals. Kingston, Jamaica was a hotbed of creativity in the early '60s; it was the place to be for the music scene. Toots' presence there had an undeniable influence in crafting the genre.

The band's 1968 single, "Do The Reggay," is credited to giving reggae music its name, according to the bio on band's website, www.tootsandthemaytals.com.

"People tell me that, but when I did it, I didn't know," Toots explained in an interview transcribed on the website. "There was the beat in Jamaica; reggae was played long before I started singing. And there was a slang, like a nickname for someone who don't dress properly. like if you are barefoot, people would call you 'streggae.' They say 'hey, that guy is streggae, don't talk to him.' So one morning, one Tuesday morning, we just said, 'let's go along and do some reggae.' Those days we'd just make stuff up, anything. So we just say 'Do the reggay, do the reggay,' and that's it. A few words, y'know? And nobody paid it any mind until it started to go all over the world. I saw it in the Guinness Book of Records. So I thank God that I did something good, and I didn't even plan it."

Toots and The Maytals latest album "True Love" was honored with a Grammy award last year in the Best Reggae Album category. The album is a collection of classic Toots songs, rerecorded, featuring a variety of artists of all musical backgrounds. Trey Anastasio, Jeff Beck, Eric Clapton, Bonnie Raitt, Keith Richards, Ben Harper, Jerry Hall, The Skatalites, No Doubt, Shaggy, Rahzel, The Roots, U-Roy, Bunny Wailer, Ryan Adams, Ken Boothe, Marcia Griffiths, Bootsy Collins, Rachael Yamagata and Willie Nelson all make an appearance on the album, bringing their respective styles to Toots' music. The number of prolific musicians assembled for the album is testament to just how influential Toots and The Maytals' are in the music community.

More than four decades since the band assembled, Toots and the Maytals are still rocking their signature sound of soulful reggae music with the same live energy. The band has gotten better with age, and Toots' voice is just as powerful and moving as ever before.

The show starts at 8:30 p.m. Tickets are $22.50 in advance or $25 at the door. Opening up the show is The Fear Nuttin' Band, a musical group that brings their own unique brand of reggae, fusing Jamaican dancehall, hip-hop and hardcore rock riffs, a blend that makes for a blazing live performance.

Comprised of leader Frederick "Toots" Hibbert, Nathaniel Mathias and Raleigh Gordon, all natives of Kingston, Jamaica, the Maytals are said to have coined the term "reggae."

'Silent Hill' filled with mediocre acting and pointless plot

By Jake Monte
Collegian Staff

"Silent Hill," based on the popular video game, is a horror film with no shortage of bizarre creatures. There's an armless tottering sac of filth, a few swarms of creepy crawlers, blue men with fire burning inside them, and figurines that look like they are made of latex. We can see creatures like these — and a lot more — on the Sci-Fi Channel. What we go to the movies for is to watch competent actors, writers, and directors strut their stuff. The creatures themselves can't carry the entire film, and "Silent Hill" would do much better if they could.

'Silent Hill'
Directed by Christophe Gans
Starring Radha Mitchell Sean Bean
Sony Studios
Rated R
127 mins
Grade C-

In the first scene of the film, Sharon, a young girl played by Jodelle Ferland ("Mermaid") goes sleepwalking. When her mother Rose Da Silva, played by Radha Mitchell ("Melinda and Melinda"), finds her, Sharon whines "Silent hill, silent hill" in an annoying child-actor voice. Fortunately, we don't have to hear her acting past the first fifteen minutes. The film has other bad actors in store for us. Rose takes Sharon to Silent Hill, an old ghost town. On the way there a cop pulls her over. She floors it, and drives the car through a fence and towards Silent Hill. As she crosses the bridge into the town, a figure appears in front of the car. Rose swerves and crashes. When she becomes conscious, Sharon is gone.

The screenwriter, Roger Avary, then fills up pages with Rose wandering around the ghost town calling out "Sharon" over and over again. Rose meets up with some of those blue fire-filled men, and the cop finds her and arrests her. The cop is Cybil Bennett, played by Laurie Holden ("Fantastic Four"), another terrible actress. Rose runs away from the cop and towards an abandoned school where she thinks she will find her daughter. Rose's husband, Christopher, played by Sean Bean ("Highlplan"), goes in search of his wife and daughter. When he arrives in the town, there's more calling out "Sharon." All of this calling of the name Sharon makes the film feel flaccid and empty.

Rose says, "Sharon's lost but I think I know where she is. So I'm going to the school to look for her." There's no reason for Rose to think Sharon is there, but there is a reason for the screenwriter to want to get Rose in the school. Then she can find a desk that belongs to Alessa Gillespi who looks just like Sharon. You get the picture.

Later in the film she finds a block of stone with the name of a hotel written on it. "I found this," she explains to Cybil, the cop. "It's from a hotel. I don't know where it is, but she's in this hotel." Rose is better than Sherlock Holmes in this film. Except where Sherlock Holmes uses logic, Rose stumbles around like Forrest Gump and seems to have no idea what's going on but a very firm sense of what she's supposed to do next.

Cybil is attacked by multiple creatures, but has no reaction until the third or fourth time. "You saw that, right?" She says to Rose. As audience members we feel like saying, "Yes and we saw the last three or four, too. Did you?" Rose delivers dialogue consistently such as "Okay. Dear God. Help me. Help me." But her terror isn't genuine. It's more like she's waiting for her lunch break. The stilted dialogue, the lack of character motivation and the bad acting combine to make multiple parts of "Silent Hill" laughable. Its Christian references — lake of fire, wolves in the skin of sheep, cast out evil — are interesting but the film has nothing to say. The last scene is an altogether pointless attempt at bewildering us. The explanation the film offers for the events of the last two hours could fill an encyclopedia, but listening to the screenwriter think that hard was the most fun part of watching this dreadful monster-fest.

Woody Allen's 2004 "Melinda and Melinda" star Radha Mitchell plays Rose Da Silva in Christophe Gans' new thriller "Silent Hill."

UM downed by Hoyas

LACROSSE from page 8

Minutemen at bay.

UMass had numerous opportunities late to tie the game, but Morris and sophomore midfielder Rory Pedrick were each denied by D'Andrea as they attempted to net the equalizer.

A goal by Georgetown's Dave Paolisso with 2:25 to play sealed the victory for the Hoyas.

UMass was uncharacteristically ineffective on face-offs, as Georgetown won 11-of-18 draws. Senior midfielder and face-off specialist Jake Deane was coming off of a dominant performance against Hobart last Saturday during which he won 17-of-21 face-offs, but Georgetown's Christian Trunz was able to control possession consistently.

One area that the Minutemen showed improvement was in the turnover department. In the Hobart game UMass won despite committing 27 turnovers, but limited its giveaways to just 11 against Georgetown. UMass held the turnover advantage, as the Hoyas had 16, but was unable to capitalize.

Another strong point for the Minutemen was the continued strong play of senior defenseman Jack Reid. The All-American held Cannon, Georgetown's leading scorer, without a goal while he was covering him, the second time in as many weeks that Reid has kept his man off the scoreboard. Reid has only surrendered two goals to the man he was guarding in the last four games.

Junior midfielder Brett Garber had a goal and an assist in an 8-6 loss to Georgetown on Saturday.

Mixed results for Minutewomen

SOFTBALL from page 8

Molinari and Kelley.

Amanda Morin accounted for the one run of the second inning — a double down the right field line, which scored Lesley Ferrara. While the Minutewomen did not score any runs in the third inning, it was in the fourth that their bats really began connecting. It began with a double by Ferrara to right field, and then a bunt-single by Kristi Stefanoni. Morin then added two more RBIs to her total with a shot to centerfield. With Proctor and Cullington on base later in the inning, Samantha Salato pinch-hit for Amanda Acampora. Salato then closed out the scoring with a two-RBI double to centerfield.

Freshman Whitney Mollica collected her first and only RBI of the day in the fifth inning off of a double to right field, which drove in Morin.

Although the Billikens began to play catch-up in the bottom of the fifth, mustering three runs, senior pitcher Jenna Busa kept their offense at bay in Game 2, allowing just six hits, three runs, and striking out six batters. Busa's ERA has improved lately after a rocky start, with it now being 5.39. The senior has a record of 7-6, while recording 44 strikeouts.

Kastor, Limo win Marathon

By Krystyna Rudzki
Associated Press

LONDON — Deena Kastor worried her London Marathon was going too well.

The 33-year-old American, a native of Waltham, Mass., was alone in the lead after 15 1/2 miles, hadn't slipped on the slick, rainy roads and was on target to break her U.S. record with a sub-2 hour, 20 minute marathon.

"I had the fear of Chicago creeping back as the miles ticked on," Kastor said, referring to her first marathon win last year. "My last three miles being horrendously slow."

There was no need for Kastor to worry. She finished in 2:19:35 to beat Lyudmila Petrova of Russia and Susan Chepkemei of Kenya in cool, drizzly conditions yesterday. Felix Limo out-sprinted defending champion Martin Lel to take the men's race in 2:06:39.

Kastor set the old American mark of 2:21:16 in her only other London Marathon in 2003, when she finished third. She also became the eighth woman to run under 2:20.

At the 20-mile mark, where Kastor says she gauges "if it's a good or bad day, I just felt really great."

Kastor needed 1:09:48 to complete each half of the 26.2-mile marathon. Her quick pace helped the five women who finished after her run personal bests.

"I knew the last 10K would be successful," she said. "I kept doing the math, I kept looking at my watch at every mark and making sure I was going to get under it."

Kastor, who won Olympic bronze in the marathon in Athens, is the fourth woman to hold the Chicago and London titles at the same time — along with Ingrid Kristiansen, Paula Radcliffe and Joyce Chepchumba.

Petrova caught Chepkemei in the final miles, finishing in 2:21:29. Chepkemei followed in 2:21:46.

In the early going, Kastor, Chepkemei and Salina Kosgei broke away with two male pacemakers in the first 1.8 miles. The three opened a 17-second gap after 3.1 miles and extended it to 36 seconds after 6.2 miles, where Kosgei slipped and fell.

Kosgei dropped out of the lead pack an hour into the race. Kastor broke away after 15 1/2 miles, taking the two pacemakers with her, and wasn't challenged for the rest of the race.

She hit her left hand on a table while trying to get her water bottle at the 21.7-mile mark, but wasn't hurt.

"My coach thought I was feeling so good that I was just going to forgo my water bottle, but I actually didn't see it until the last minute," Kastor said.

In the men's race, Limo and Lel ran side by side for the final 1.2 miles before Limo made a break with the finish line in sight. Lel was 2 seconds back and Hendrick Ramaala of South Africa was third in 2:06:55.

Seven men ran under 2:08 — the most of any marathon ever raced.

"I had to use my brain to win that race," said Limo, who had an egg thrown near his feet midway through the race. "I felt good, although the conditions were not great. But when the conditions are not perfect, you have to use your brain as well as your legs."

Limo, Lel, Ramaala, Haile Gebreselassie, Khalid Khannouchi, Evans Rutto and Rodgers Rop were in the main bunch for most of the race.

Lel, Limo, Rop and Ramaala made a break at 23.6 miles. At the 24.8-mile mark, Lel and Limo were running alone in the lead to set up the sprint finish. Gebreslassie, who has made his name on the track but set the world half-marathon record in January, finished ninth in 2:09:05.

Limo won the Berlin and Rotterdam marathons in 2004 and last year's Chicago Marathon. This was his first London Marathon.

The men's and women's record holders — Paul Tergat and Radcliffe — didn't run because of injury.

Minutewomen fall to Temple

WOMEN'S LAX from page 8

said. "We talked about it, knew it, but unfortunately things didn't go our way."

Temple jumped out to a 4-0 lead early in the first half — their biggest lead of the game — on goals by Cech, Nicole Caniglia and Corey Leader (game-high five goals), who took 43 percent of the Owls' 30 shots. UMass closed the lead to one on three goals from Jeanette Villapiano (her only goals of the game) and a Kerri Connerty goal from Kristina Twichell with 29 seconds left in the half.

The Minutewomen tied it up at four different times in the second half. The first came on a free position shot by freshman Kayt McCormick to make it a 7-7 affair with 23 minutes to go. Leader responded with her fourth goal of the game six seconds later to put Temple back on top, but back-to-back goals by Typadis — her only two of the game — gave UMass its only lead of the game.

That lead only lasted 44 seconds however, as Allison Frengs found the back of the net on the ensuing possession, followed by Leader's final goal 70 seconds later to make it 10-9.

"They're fighters, they're winners," Bolduc said of Temple. "They don't give up, like us. The minute we put the ball in the net, they're going to put one right back."

Villapiano's hat trick led the Minutewomen in scoring. McCarthy had five saves while allowing six goals in 40 minutes of action between the pipes.

Duke facing uncertain future

By Aaron Beard
Associated Press

DURHAM, N.C. — The Duke men's lacrosse team lost by a goal in last year's NCAA title game, falling to a school that's won eight national championships. The Blue Devils were a favorite to get back to this year's title game, and appeared ready to become one of the sport's elite programs.

Now, a month after a stripper told police she was raped at a team party, a promising season is over, the team's veteran coach is out of a job and two players face criminal indictments. Meanwhile, in the background of intense media scrutiny, a university law professor is leading an investigation that some fear will end with Duke shelving men's lacrosse.

"It has seemed premature to announce, and especially while indictments are still not only out but where there might be more coming, ... what the fate of the team will be," Duke President Richard Brodhead said. "Of course, this is a matter that will be given the gravest consideration at the appropriate time."

The Blue Devils went 21-22 from 2002-04, but reached the title game last year by winning an NCAA-record 17 games. Many expected the success to continue under 16th-year coach Mike Pressler, and an impressive recruiting haul for next season had the program looking like one that reloads instead of rebuilds.

Robert Carpenter, who played for the Blue Devils under Pressler and started "Inside Lacrosse" magazine after graduating in 1996, said the sudden rise made Duke a hot program.

"A lacrosse coach can spend a lifetime trying to get to this seat that [Pressler] had been sitting in when this happened," Carpenter said.

The Blue Devils were 6-2 when the team held a March 13 party at the off-campus house of three team captains. Two exotic dancers were hired to perform, and one, a 27-year-old student at a nearby university, told police she was pulled into a bathroom at the house by three men and raped.

Duke initially suspended the team from play, and later canceled the season and accepted Pressler's resignation. Last week, a grand jury indicted players Reade Seligmann, a sophomore from Essex Fells, N.J., and Collin Finnerty, a sophomore from Garden City, N.Y., with rape, kidnapping and sexual assault.

Defense attorneys have strongly proclaimed the players' innocence. District Attorney Mike Nifong said there is a third suspect, one he hopes to soon identify with certainty and charge.

Duke is hardly the first college sports program to deal with this kind of controversy. St. John's disbanded its men's lacrosse team from 1996-2005, a decision that came five years after three players were acquitted of sexual assault charges.

At Colorado, a recruiting scandal helped lead to the December resignation of football coach Gary Barnett, as well as the departure of the university's president and athletic director. An investigation concluded drugs, alcohol and sex were used to entice recruits, while two women filed a lawsuit claiming they were sexually assaulted by football players at an off-campus party in December 2001. Police investigated, but no charges were filed.

"What Duke will find out is when your name gets dispersed, rightly or wrongly, it has the potential to affect everybody with a degree from that school," said David Plati, Colorado's sports information director for 22 years. "That's what we've kind of been digging out from here."

In Durham, lacrosse assistant coaches Jon Lantzy and Kevin Cassese are meeting with the team and maintaining contact with recruits in an effort to keep the program together. Both declined to speak with The Associated Press, as did Pressler and members of the 47-man team.

The school's investigation into the lacrosse program will focus on team members' behavior outside of the rape allegations. A third of the team's players have been cited for public intoxication and public urination, and Finnerty was charged last year with simple assault in Washington, D.C.

In an interview with The Herald-Sun of Durham, athletic director Joe Alleva said he told Pressler the team was under the microscope and "he had to do everything he could to get them in line." When the AP asked to speak Alleva for this story, Duke officials referred questions to other members of the athletic department.

Duke has yet to start searching for a new coach, and it's unclear how many current players and incoming recruits will remain. Duke spokesman Art Chase said the school is allowing players and recruits to contact other schools.

"I don't get the sense that people are thinking we're not going to have a team next year," Chase said. "But at the end of the day, we don't know what will happen."

Johns Hopkins has already received inquiries from a few Duke players and a recruit, spokesman Ernie Larossa said. Syracuse coach John Desko told The Syracuse Post Standard that Duke sophomore Zack Greer — who led the country with 57 goals last season — is seeking a release from Duke. But he won't be joining the Orange.

"I wouldn't be interested in our coaches recruiting players from Duke, given the situation," Syracuse athletic director Daryl Gross told the newspaper. "I think it would be inappropriate."

Under NCAA rules, lacrosse players can transfer once without having to sit out a season. But Atlantic Coast Conference rules require players to sit a year and lose a year of eligibility if they transfer within the league.

"I've advised them that it's a good idea to at least see what their options are, although they all would prefer to stay here as far as I know," said Chris Kennedy, Duke's senior associate athletics director.

Hofstra coach John Danowski said he has received no inquiries from Duke players seeking a transfer. That would include his son, Matt, a Duke junior.

"They love the place," Danowski said. "They feel strongly about who they are. They love each other. Why would they want to leave? The kids want to be there.

"The kids went to Duke because they wanted to get the best education they could get... That's what Duke is and why they went there. The fact they were successful on the field was a bonus."

Sox get back on winning track

TORONTO — David Ortiz homered and had a rare bunt single to help the Boston Red Sox end a three-game losing streak with a 6-3 victory over the Toronto Blue Jays yesterday.

Ortiz hit a two-run shot off Josh Towers (0-4) in the first for his eighth home run. He has 10 homers in his last 13 games against Toronto.

When Toronto's defense shaded toward right field in a defensive shift in the sixth, Ortiz executed a perfect bunt between the mound and third base. Third baseman Troy Glaus, playing short, didn't even get a throw off.

It was Ortiz's second career bunt, after one August 21, 2005 versus Anaheim.

Boston starter Matt Clement (2-1) allowed three runs and seven hits, while striking out four and walking two in 5 1/3 innings.

Keith Foulke and Mike Timlin followed with 2 2/3 scoreless innings before Jonathan Papelbon pitched the ninth for his eighth save in eight chances.

Boston's new closer has pitched 11 1/3 scoreless innings.

Gregg Zaun hit a three-run homer for the Blue Jays, who had won their previous five games against Boston.

Towers struggled again, allowing four runs and seven hits in 5 2/3 innings. He's allowed at least four runs in each of his four starts this season.

Towers hit the first batter of the game, Kevin Youkilis, before Ortiz homered to left.

Manny Ramirez and Trot Nixon followed with singles before Mike Lowell hit an RBI single to make it 3-0.

After Towers hit Willie Harris with a pitch in the fourth, Harris stole second and later scored on Youkilis' RBI single.

Third baseman Lowell's throwing error in the fourth allowed Vernon Wells to reach before Lyle Overbay walked and Zaun homered to cut Boston's lead to 4-3.

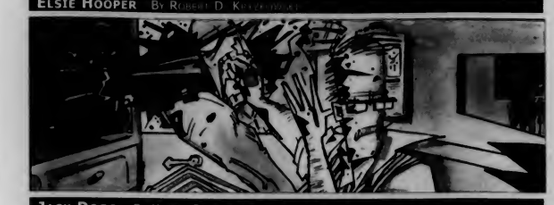
Toronto loaded the bases in the fifth before Zaun hit a fly ball to right, but Trot Nixon made a running catch at the wall to end the threat.

Mark Loretta's RBI single off Vinnie Chulk in the eighth, and Lowell's RBI double in the ninth made it 6-3.

NOTES: Ortiz is 5-for-11 with three home runs and eight RBI in his career against Towers. ... Charlie Villanueva of the NBA Toronto Raptors threw out the ceremonial first pitch. ... Toronto ace Roy Halladay will receive an extra days rest before he makes his start on Thursday. Halladay won in his return to the rotation on Saturday. He missed a scheduled start because of a stiff arm.

—Associated Press

Dance Stuff
Spring Sale
50% off
All Skatewear
20% off
All Leotards,
Dance Pants & Tops
April 18 – 29
220 North Pleasant St. (Rear) Amherst, MA
Tues, Wed, Fri 10-5 • Thursday 10-7 • Sat 10-2
(413) 253-5201



If You've Got a Plan We've Got a Van!
Insurance Replacement Rates
FREE PICK-UP
POTTERS
AUTO & TRUCK RENTAL
• Direct Billing to Insurance Company
• Locally Owned & Operated
• 7 & 15 Passenger Vans
• UMass Purchase Orders, MHEC Rates
North Amherst Motors
Collision Repairs & Glass Replacement
78 Sunderland Rd., North Amherst, MA
(413) 549-RENT (7368)
www.northamherstmotors.com
(One mile North of UMass - on bus route)

FUN, FUN, FUN!
BARTEND
BOSTON BARTENDERS SCHOOL
Student Discount!
1-800-357-3210
218 Memorial Ave, West Springfield, MA
www.bostonbartender.com

Living in a Cloud By John Corbett

Elsie Hooper By Robert D. Kirby-Wright

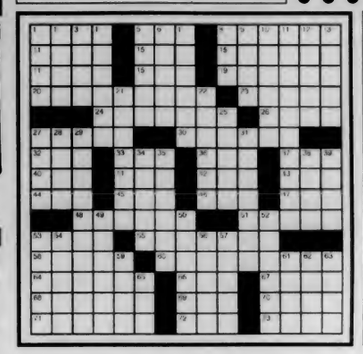
Jack Dogg By Xavier Rhodes

The Family Monster By Josh Shalek

The Zoo By Gabe Strine

Quote of the Day

"Dumb is just not knowing. Ditzy is having the courage to ask!"



—Jessica Simpson

ACROSS
1 "... Don't Preach"
5 Notable time
8 Child's injury
14 Beige shade
15 Omega's cousin
16 Consternate
17 Give forth
18 Took off
19 Trade unions
20 Members in order
23 "Miss Thompson"
24 Tile creations
26 Twist 12 and 21
27 "... and Nothingness"
30 "Tiny ..." Elton John song
32 Vase with a loc
33 "... Gotta Be Me"
36 Lion's name
37 Part of DJIA
40 Top
41 Fira
42 "Al Seventeen" singer
43 Dart player's joint
44 Kauai souvenir
45 __ of the above
46 Tack on
47 Use a sofa
48 Wooded
51 Mores
53 Plan division
55 Thriftiness
58 Dylanesque singer John
60 Declaring
64 Temporary car
66 Trifling amount
67 Cookie snack
68 As a precaution
69 Silver-grey
70 Share of liens
71 Prepare
72 Asian holiday
73 Neck part

DOWN
1 Look intently
2 Topmost spot
3 Morally smug person
4 Fell
5 Pound and Cornell
6 Spanish lariat
7 Epic by Virgil
8 Cadoie's carry
9 Artistic work
10 Addictive matter
11 Nonsense!
12 Classic track
13 Actor Merlin
21 Reasonable
22 Cohort of Bouter and O'Connor
25 Slammin' Sammy
27 Cow's mate
28 Sandusky's lake
29 Far from clear
31 Sentence
34 Trumpet part
35 Wind about
38 Miscellany
39 Drenches
49 Meddlesome women
50 Dieting adjective
52 Magnate
53 Bit of parsley
54 Rich or Castle
56 Conflicting sounds
57 Relative of should
59 Leisure
61 "... le Douce"
62 Certain tide
63 2000 presidential candidate
65 Permit to

Find today's answers online
www.dailycollegian.com

Applications for COMICS EDITOR for the 2006-2007 school year are now OPEN
Pick up an application in the Collegian offices (located in the Campus Center basement) or e-mail: collegiancomics@yahoo.com for more information
Applications are Due By Monday, May 1

Best Bar Around
Seven O's
KARAOKE
EVERY WEDNESDAY
Friday 4/28
Mark Snow
Saturday 4/29
Hit and Run
at 9:00 p.m.
Route 116, 330 Amherst Road
Sunderland, MA 01375
(413) 665-8588
2pm to 1am M-F
12pm to 1am SAT & SUN
Next To Cliffside Apts.

HOROSCOPES

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
Nice sweater vest, if you're going for that 80-year-old grandpa look.

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
Keep taking cold medicine. Eventually you will feel pretty good.

aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
All of your Tupperware is moldy. Throw it away immediately.

taurus Apr. 20-May 20
You giggle like a little pigtailed schoolgirl.

gemini May 21-Jun. 21
Your left arm will fall asleep in class today. Shortly afterwards, so will you.

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
You will eat a slice of vegetarian pizza today, which is crazy, because you are carnivorous.

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
You are all up in that boy's Koolaid and you don't even know his flavor.

virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
You are my sunshine after the rain. You are the cure against my fear and my pain.

libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22
No one will ask you for a ride anywhere all week.

scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
You will get a really cool stamp on your hand tomorrow.

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
If you go fishing today, don't forget the worms.

capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
You need to drink more milk before you get osteoporosis.

Chicago Pizzaria
Yes, We Deliver!
PIZZA - CALZONES - SUBS
SALADS - PASTA - DINNERS
RIBS - SEAFOOD - SLICES
PARTY PLATTERS NOW AVAILABLE!!
CALZONE SLICES...LIKE NO OTHER!
HOURS
Sun-Wed 3pm 2am
Thurs-Sat 3pm 3am
Order For DELIVERY or PICK-UP
(413) 549-6073
150 Fearing Street
Next to Patterson Dorm
Amherst, MA 01002

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

Announcements

Saturday, April 22nd, the Hadley Farm, located just off campus, is hosting the Annual Bay State Livestock Classic from 8am-3pm. Come enjoy the refreshments, festivities, and of course the animals.

Like to play games? You can play games with me all day on April 25th. Meet me, the Ford Fusion, outside the Campus Center between 10 AM and 3 PM. Brought to you by your New England Ford Dealers.

Apartment for Rent

Amherst Spacious 2 BR Bus Laundry Near Center 6/1 $1025 413-335-5226

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing 1& 2 bedroom apts. Leases begin June, July, Aug or Sep. First come, first serve. Get them while they last. www.brandywine-apts.com stop by or call 549-0600

Apartment for Rent

2 bedroom $1100 3 bedroom $1400 4 bedroom $2150 Now Accepting Applications 253-7377 millvalleyestates@wlmnco.com

Hobart Condos 3 bedroom, hardwood floors, study area in basement. Cable, telephone (internet access) in all bedrooms and study. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER . NO FEES. www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

Auto for Sale

88 Toyota Camry DLX, automatic, 128K. Well maintained, clean, air, radio cassette, power locks/ windows. Ask $1,500. Call 253-8106 or daphne@econs.umass.edu

Childcare

Amherst Center family looking for parents helper in exchange for housing everything included. Call 413-687-2710

Employment

The best summer of your life! Live, work, and play outdoors at one of New England's best Summer Camps. Seeking staff to work as Cabin Leaders at overnight Boys Camp, 6/18 – 7/22. Teach three daily skills classes, supervise a Cabin Group, and role model YMCA values for boys 7-17. Room, Board, paid staff training and $800 -1200 salary. Download application packet at www.camptakodahorg/staff/positionshtml or contact Camp Director William Therrien at (603) 352-0447 / willv@camptakodahorg

Furniture porter and maintenance person needed for busy auction gallery on Nantucket Island this summer. (508) 228-3942

Rent us your Ears! Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu Voicemail: 545-6837

Employment

PAINTERS NEEDED! Hundreds of positions available throughout New England. Work outside with your friends and family in your hometown. No experience needed, training provided. Join large student painting company this summer. Hiring now! 888-277-9787, www.collegepro.com

Bartending $300/Day potential. No experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 x162

For Sale

"Tiktaalik roseae... Time is Running Out for Intelligent Design." Celebrate the discovery of the missing link between fish and land animals with fishapod clothing and gifts at http://www.cafepress.com/tiktaalikroseae

House for Rent

Northampton- 4 bedroom, double living room, open and enclosed porches, June,

House for Rent

$1300 plus utilities, near park Skibiski, Realtors 586-1827.

Room for Rent

1 Bedroom In 4 Bedroom House- 379 Strong St. for June, July, and Aug. Sharing with 3 women at $402.00 a month. Call Sera at 1-339-440-0234

Female to share with another friendly Sublet June 1 – August 31 $430 with everything included. Call Sandra 774-826-9597

CAPE COD Summer rooms Hyannis area. Private pond $150 a week Includes ... (508) 428-3456

Services

Purchasing a used car? Having your car repaired? Did you know your legal rights? Contact the Student Legal Services Office. 922 Campus Center or Call 545-1995.

Services

Legal questions? We have answers at the Student Legal Services Office. 922 Campus Center or Call 545-1995

PREGNANCY TESTING, HIV TESTING, Birth control, and Emergency Contraception, STI Screening and Treatment. Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-0092

Pentium Color laptops $99 We type term papers, resumes, cover letters. 413-584-8857.

Travel

Disney/Beach Area 7/6 nights stay. Pd $600.00 Sacrifice $199.00 Good for one year 978-444-0261

ONLINE CLASSIFIEDS! Interested? www.dailycollegian.com Questions? Call (413) 545-3500.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTSMONDAY

MONDAY, APRIL 24, 2006 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Georgetown wins latest battle

By Dan Duggan
Collegian Staff

What was expected to be an explosive matchup between the Massachusetts men's lacrosse team and Georgetown didn't quite live up to its high-scoring billing, but the battle of ECAC frontrunners still produced a tight contest, which the Hoyas won 8-6 on Saturday.

The UMass offense was stymied by Georgetown goalie Rich D'Andrea, who made 15 saves on the day. Senior attacker Sean Morris led the way for the Maroon and White, registering a hat trick and an assist to boost his nation-leading point total to 49.

UMass got single goals from senior attacker Clay Stabert and junior midfielders Brett Garber and Pat Larmon.

The No. 8 Minutemen (8-3, 3-2 ECAC) will look to bounce back tomorrow when they face ECAC foe Fairfield at home at 4 p.m.

In the clash with No. 7 Georgetown (9-2, 4-1 ECAC), the Minutemen fell behind early and were never able to recover. Georgetown scored three goals in the first quarter and was able to limit the potent UMass offensive attack.

UMass pulled to within a goal in the second quarter on scores by Stabert and Garber, but Georgetown responded with three goals to take a 6-2 lead into the locker room. The four-goal deficit was the largest halftime deficit the Minutemen have faced all season.

In the third quarter, Morris single-handedly brought UMass back. The All-American, who was held without a shot in the first half, scored three times in an eight-minute span to close the gap to 7-6, as Larmon and Georgetown's Brendan Cannon each added a goal during the run.

Trailing by only a goal entering the final period, it appeared that UMass was in position to pull off the comeback, but D'Andrea stood tall in the cage for the Hoyas, making seven saves in the fourth quarter to keep the

See LACROSSE on page 6

KAREN WOOD/COLLEGIAN

Senior attacker Sean Morris had three goals and an assist in an 8-6 loss at Georgetown on Saturday. The Minutemen return to action tomorrow at 4 p.m. against Fairfield at home.

Assistant Middleton arrested for assault

By Rob Greenfield
Collegian Staff

Massachusetts men's basketball assistant coach Steve Middleton was arrested for domestic assault and battery last Wednesday night, according to a report in the Daily Hampshire Gazette.

Middleton will not receive disciplinary action from the UMass athletic department.

According to the report, Middleton was arrested at 11:42 p.m. when police were called to his house on High Street in Amherst after a "physical altercation with a woman" who was not identified by the authorities. The woman sustained minor physical injuries.

Middleton pleaded innocent to charges of assault and battery on Thursday at Eastern Hampshire District Court. The court pushed Middleton's case back to May 24.

In UMass Athletic Director John McCutcheon's original statement, released by Assistant UMass Athletic Director Jason Yellin, he claimed that the charges against Middleton had been dropped.

However, upon receiving the correct information, McCutcheon added that the "conflict between Steve and his wife had been resolved," and "we don't anticipate any further action at this time."

UMass coach Travis Ford and Middleton had no comment on the situation.

Before his arrival at UMass, Middleton coached high school basketball, played minor league basketball and coached for three years with Ford during his tenure at Eastern Kentucky. Middleton hails from Samuel J. Tilden High School in Brooklyn, N.Y.

Ford commented on Middleton's presence in his program when they first took the UMass coaching job together.

"Steve [Middleton] is well respected by our players, and brings a lot of credibility as a former player and high school head coach to our staff," Ford said.

Middleton's arrest was the second for the UMass basketball program in the last two months. The first came days before the Minutemen left for Cincinnati to face first-round opponent Xavier — a game that UMass lost 65-56.

Junior Stephane Lasme was arrested on March 5 for disorderly conduct and resisting arrest outside of a bar in downtown Amherst. The junior forward was fined $200 and was convicted on a "non-criminal charge of resisting arrest."

Lasme confessed to enough facts for a conviction on the disorderly conduct charge. The hearing was postponed until Sep. 26. Lasme's criminal record will be cleared if he steers clear of trouble until then.

Information from the Daily Hampshire Gazette was used in this report.

Minutemen break out brooms

By Rob Greenfield
Collegian Staff

The first 25 games of the Massachusetts men's baseball team's season were tumultuous and taxing for all parties.

The Minutemen (10-18, 7-8 Atlantic 10) were bruised and beaten by average teams. The young UMass hurlers — Mike Dicato, Al Jardine and Tom Cote, who are all freshman and have all received significant innings — have shown their inexperience.

However, in this weekend's three-game series with the newest A-10 member, the Saint Louis Billikens, the Minutemen took the broom out of the closet and — for the first time in the 2006 season — swept a series.

The Minutemen return to the Northeast for two games in the Boston area. The first will be played at Fenway Park tomorrow at 1 p.m. against Northeastern, and the second is at Boston College on Wednesday.

UMass took Sunday's game, 6-3, behind the veteran arm of Rory McDonald, who threw a gem — nine innings pitched, two earned runs, six hits and four strikeouts — to close out the Billikens. The win pushed McDonald's season record to 2-2.

Junior first baseman Bryan Adamski, the Minutemen's all-around standout, went 1-for-5 with four RBIs, courtesy of a three-run homer in the top of the 10th inning which gave the Minutemen a comfortable three-run lead to take into the bottom of the frame.

The Minutemen got significant contributions from freshman second baseman Adam Tempesta — 3-for-5, also the team leader in batting average — and sophomore third baseman Ryan Franczek, who went 2-for-4.

Down 3-1 in the eighth inning, luck fell on the Minutemen in the form of back-to-back Saint Louis errors which led to two runs, tying the game with UMass runners on second and third. Adamski hit a grounder to the shortstop, which he bobbled, allowing both Minutemen to score.

Adamski switched gears and took the hill in the bottom of 10th, replacing McDonald after the Billikens began the inning with a single, and mowed down Saint Louis, taking just two batters (a fly ball and a double play) to finish off the series and begin the trip home. It was Adamski's fifth save of the season.

Saturday's contest displayed the Minuteman bats. All nine UMass starters either hit safely, scored a run or had an RBI. After the Minuteman hurlers turned in quality relief innings to hold off the late Billiken charge, UMass took the contest 8-5, the second win in the three-game stretch.

The Minutemen greeted Saint Louis on Friday with a similar pitching performance to the one McDonald dealt the Billikens yesterday. Starter David Sullivan limited Saint Louis to just three earned runs in eight innings of work to pick up his second win of the season.

UMass hitters were in rare form, scattering an impressive 15 hits on the Billikens pitching staff. Sophomore third baseman Ryan Franczek led all hitters with three hits, an RBI and a run scored.

Tempesta, Adamski and Franczek lead UMass in hitting with .351, .337 and .330 batting averages, respectively.

Temple topples UM

By Brendan Hall
Collegian Staff

At the conclusion of yesterday afternoon's women's lacrosse duel, Massachusetts head coach Carrie Bolduc was calling it "the best game we've played against Temple in six years."

She will also be calling it a loss.

After trading goal-for-goal with the Temple Owls (8-6, 4-1 Atlantic 10) all game long, the Minutewomen (5-10, 2-3 A-10) surrendered the final fatal one and never got the chance to return the favor. They fell to the possession-heavy Owls, 11-10.

Holly Drown's free position shot with 12 minutes to go in the second half, her only goal of the game, tied it up at 10 apiece to keep the Minutewomen at pace with Temple. The Owls did not let them score again, however, as they slowed down the pace of the game and held onto the ball for most of the last seven minutes of play.

After tossing the ball around the perimeter of the UMass goal, Casey Kech (three points) cut through the middle at the four-minute mark and took a feed from Whitney Richards (three assists), which she tipped high past goalie Lauren McCarthy's left side for her hat trick and the game-winning goal.

The Owls then won the ensuing draw control, pushing the Minutewomen into desperation mode as they struggled to get the ball back, registering a few fouls in the process. UMass's final chance came with less than 30 seconds left, when they were awarded a free position near midfield following a Temple foul. When play started up again, however, an Owls defender intercepted an off-target UMass pass to effectively seal the game. Kathleen Typadis was issued a red card with 16 seconds remaining.

"There are few teams that can control the ball like that for that amount of time," Bolduc said of Temple's shut-down style of play. "This team is one of them. I give credit to that entire team. Possession is the name of the game, and we've learned that in the last couple of games. It was better today, but there were a couple of issues here and there that [the Owls] fortunately did not capitalize off of."

Part of that possession dominance on Temple's behalf was with draw controls. Playing against a UMass team that considers itself strong on draw controls, the Owls held a 17-6 advantage, including 10-3 in the second half.

"We knew that they were a good draw control team," Bolduc

See WOMEN'S LAX on page 6

KAREN WOOD/COLLEGIAN

Sophomore attacker Kathleen Typadis had two goals in an 11-10 loss to Temple yesterday afternoon at Garber Field.

UMass splits with Saint Louis

By Eric Athas
Collegian Staff

Freshman pitcher Brandice Balshmiter faced 26 batters in the Massachusetts softball team's Game 1 contest against Saint Louis yesterday afternoon. Balshmiter allowed just one hit and zero runs. Regardless, she walked into the dugout following Game 1 with a loss as the Minutewomen allowed one unearned run, losing to the Billikens 1-0.

Game 2 was a different story, however, as UMass blew out Saint Louis 13-3.

The Minutewomen (27-13, 12-2 Atlantic-10) have a break from the A-10 tomorrow when they take on the Blue Devils of Central Connecticut at 3:30 p.m. in New Britain, Conn.

The loss against Saint Louis in Game 1 was just the second for UMass since April 9, when it fell to Charlotte 2-1 in a doubleheader at the UMass Softball Complex. The loss also snapped a nine-game winning streak for the Minutewomen.

Billiken pitcher Lorena Floccari dominated Game 1, not giving the Minutewoman offense anything at all. Senior K.J. Kelley and junior Candice Molinari were the only Minutewomen who were able to register hits in the game, combining for a total of three.

In the very first outing for the Saint Louis offense in the first inning of the afternoon, Jill Pursell was hit by one of Balshmiter's pitches on a 2-2 count. A sacrifice bunt by Ashlee Heady advanced Pursell to second base, and after a passed ball, Pursell moved to third. The first and only run of the game came on yet another passed ball, which Pursell took full advantage of, advancing to home plate and recording the eventual game-winning run.

The next six innings were scoreless for both sides, and although Balshmiter fanned nine batters and allowed just one hit, UMass was handed its 13th loss of the season.

Regardless of the loss, Balshmiter still holds an A-10-high ERA of 0.68, a personal record of 20-7 with one save, and is now fourth on the school's single-season strikeout list with 209.

While Game 1 was a defensive struggle on both ends, the second half of the doubleheader was all offense, as the Minutewomen recorded their first runs of the day in the first inning of Game 2.

After Molinari reached on a single to right field, both Kelley and Stacy Cullington were walked, loading the bases for Lauren Proctor. The sophomore from La Jolla, Calif. then knocked a single into centerfield, driving in both

See SOFTBALL on page 6

KAREN WOOD/COLLEGIAN

Junior center fielder Candice Molinari and UMass split a doubleheader at Saint Louis on Saturday. Molinari is batting .336 this season.

Another A-10 title for crew

By Joey White
Collegian Staff

Eleven. That is the number of consecutive Atlantic 10 Championships that the Massachusetts women's crew team have won.

On the Cooper River in Camden, N.J. Saturday, the Minutewomen rowed to their 11th A-10 title with 45 points. This is the longest active championship streak among all A-10 teams in any sport. Saint Joseph's had its best finish ever in second place with 33 points, followed by Dayton with 30 points and Rhode Island in fourth with 29 points.

"It's kind of bittersweet," UMass coach Jim Dietz said. "I'm happy we won the team tournament and I'm happy that the novices contributed, [but] on the varsity side, it was kind of disappointing to me."

The Maroon and White won four out of the nine events, but the heavily favored varsity eight boat finished a disappointing fourth place with a time of 6:11.2.

George Washington, the only A-10 foe UMass didn't face this season, won the varsity eight race against the odds and against strong head winds and rain. The wind slowed times down considerably, but the Colonials finished in 8:03.0 for their only win in the 2006 championships. Temple was second and Dayton finished third.

"I think they're upset with themselves," Dietz said of the varsity eight squad. "It has to be a team effort. If one person lies down then you don't win." The most surprising victories on the day for UMass were the lightweight four and second varsity eight races.

"We were most happy with the lightweight four and JV (second varsity) eight," Dietz said. "You could tell they wanted the race, and they deserved it." The lightweight four boat was comprised of coxswain Amber Monson, and rowers Annie Malinkevich, Michelle Woodford, Abby Lively and Melissa Kelly. They crossed the line in 9:58.0 for the win.

The second varsity eight, which rowed a time of 8:43.8, was comprised of senior coxswain Natalie Salerno, and rowers Elizabeth Hayashida, Farrell Klein, Faith Miller, Amanda Mawn, Kate Grogan, Allison Bahn, Kristen Boyce and Jaime Dicke.

The quad team for the Minutewomen was all rowers from the fourth-place varsity eight boat, but crossed the line first with a time of 8:49.9. Seniors Catherine Ganepy, Ellen Maskrey, Stephanie Hopf and junior Hannah Brewster won by over 25 seconds. UMass's other victory came in the second novice eight race. The Maroon and White only needed to beat Fordham, which they did by nearly one minute.

Another satisfying performance for the Minutewomen was their varsity four boat, which placed third in a time of 9:45.6 for the tightest final in this year's A-10 championships. "The varsity four had an incredibly good race," Dietz said. "It was a loss, but they were racing [hard] today."

The Minutewomen had another third-place finish, in the novice four race, which added four points to their total.

"I think it's always nice to win the Atlantic 10 Championships," Dietz said. "The competition is getting harder and harder, but I expect UMass to win.

"UMass has a lot going for it. We should win this championship every year. We've got a better program than most other programs."

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY · EST. 1890

The Daily Collegian

TUESDAY, APRIL 25, 2006 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM VOLUME CXVI ISSUE 121

UMass fraternity works to help the disabled

KRISTI FLAPPAN

Brothers of Pi Kappa Phi dig the foundation for an accessibility ramp at the home of Charles and Sally Palmer.

KRISTI FLAPPAN

Members of the Pi Kappa Phi fraternity work the partially completed ramp they built for a physically disabled couple.

By Matt Belliveau
Collegian Staff

A local University of Massachusetts fraternity is doing their part in helping out disabled local residents.

Members of the newly-formed fraternity Pi Kappa Phi spent last weekend constructing a 20-foot accessibility ramp at the home of Charles and Sally Palmer of Amherst.

The construction was part of Pi Kappa Phi's effort to raise funds and awareness to support programs within Push America, their philanthropy group that aims to help people with disabilities.

"John and Sally were brought to our attention by low-income family that was in need of access to their home and couldn't afford a $5,000 ramp," said Pi Kappa Phi member Matt Pearlson. "We had nine guys working on the ramp throughout the day. And the rest of the guys who were participating in the 'Relay for Life' at Pratt Field in Amherst College came later."

Pearlson said that participating in community service was a vital aspect of improving the Greek life image throughout campus.

"The community service aspect is a major selling point to applicants, and a major reason why a lot of the guys joined," said Pearlson. "We like to say there are more fraternity guys that wear ties than togas. There are plenty of fraternity members that believe in the community service ideals, not just in our organization but also fraternities throughout campus."

Pi Kappa Phi is also holding a pasta dinner on Friday, April 28 in the Oak Room in preparation for their first annual 5K road race to benefit Push America.

The race titled "Eric's race", which is expected to have over 200 participants is named after the cousin of Matthew Sloan, the executive officer for Push America. Eric is autistic and is currently living in community housing.

The dinner renamed an "empathy dinner" will include a student speaker talking about her experience living with her disability.

We're also going to give guests the opportunity to experience a 'mock disability'," said Pearlson. "We might tape up someone's finger, give them earplugs or a blindfold, to have them rely on the people around them. This is aimed to show that we take a lot of our senses and abilities for granted.

Push America began in 1977 when Thomas Sayre designed the first accessible play unit for people with disabilities. Pi Kappa Phi and Push America have now raised more than $10 million on behalf of people with disabilities.

Defendant's mother testifies at murder trial

By Dan O'Brien
Collegian Staff

NORTHAMPTON — A stunning development unfolded during the murder trial of Bryan Johnston yesterday, when his mother told the court that her son did not admit to her over the phone that he shot his childhood friend David Sullivan as was previously reported.

Amherst police said in their report two days after the Dec. 7, 2004 homicide at 105 Meadow St. that Johnston, a former Westfield State College student, now 24, told his parents over the phone about four hours after Sullivan's death that he had just shot someone. Johnston has admitted to shooting Sullivan, a University of Massachusetts student, but claims he was suffering from delusions related to paranoid schizophrenia in the time leading up to the killing.

Joan Johnston, Bryan Johnston's mother, said in court that her son phoned her at approximately 4:45 a.m. on the morning Sullivan died, claiming that "the generals gave him orders" to save the lives of his family. Bryan Johnston also claimed to have a gun to his head during the phone call, according to Joan Johnston.

Joan Johnston testified that her son never said he had shot someone nor that he had to leave the country, which is the contrary to what was originally reported by police and the news media.

Joan Johnston's testimony was done during voirdir, which means the jury was not present during this proceeding.

Bryan's parents, Joan and Bruce Johnston could take the stand again tomorrow. Bruce Johnston originally testified on Thursday, but could testify again under a rebuttal by the prosecution.

Psychiatrist Dr. Michael Welner took the stand for most of the day, and sometimes got into heated exchanges with defense attorney Alexander Nappan.

Welner said that he could not conclude that Johnston was suffering from delusions when he assaulted two prison inmates on Jan. 29 and March 2, 2005 at the Hampshire County House of Correction.

Calling the events before and after the fights "uneventful," Welner said Johnston had "no delusional ideas regarding these

See TRIAL on page 2

Event threatened by new construction

By Megan Daley
Collegian Staff

The Northeast Spring Fling may need to be relocated since construction workers have begun digging up the planned location of the event a few weeks earlier than planned.

According to Northeast Area Government (NEAG) treasurer Marisa Kanof, the plans for the Spring Fling event have been in the works since December and nearly $6,000 has already been used to book bands for the concert and games for the festival day.

However, the placement of a new steam line for the University of Massachusetts is ahead of schedule, and plans are being made to dig up the Northeast Quad, the planned location of the Spring Fling, sometime tomorrow.

Kanof and her fellow members of NEAG are upset that they were not informed ahead of time about the pending construction work. Kanof claims that Aida Claudio, the operations manager of Northeast, with whom NEAG has been in contact with regarding the Spring Fling had never been involved with the decision to begin construction early.

Tom Shaw, a worker from the University Physical Plant and one of the heads of the Facilities and Campus Services, the group which is heading Project New Dirt, assured Kanof that he and his workers would do their best to accommodate the Spring Fling.

The New Dirt Web site now asks event coordinators to contact Jim Hunt, communications manager of the Physical Plant to inform him of any plans or upcoming events that may require additional detours of the new construction. Hunt can be reached at 413-577-4767 or by email at jhunt@umass.edu and asks to be contacted about schedules at least two weeks prior to the planned event.

Students walk to raise cancer research funds

By Ryan Richardson
Collegian Staff

Hundreds of people came together at Amherst College's Pratt Field this weekend to participate in the annual Relay for Life by walking and raising money to fund cancer research.

Each Relay team is supposed to have one of their members walking on the track at all times during the 24-hour walk. Towns all over the country have sponsored their own Relays as well.

The Relay for Life was not about the grim face of cancer, and while the Relay included a moving opening ceremony that encouraged people to remember those who lost their lives to cancer, the event was really about hope. The opening ceremony included a lap around the track done in silence to memorialize those who died from cancer. There were also candles lit around the edge of the track to honor those who have survived or are still living with the disease.

"Events like this rekindle hope where it falters," said Sally Brzozowski, a Mount Holyoke Sophomore and cancer survivor.

Throughout the night, participants stayed off the cold with pizza, Red Bull and a host of pick-up games and activities hosted by Relay coordinators. During the night, Pratt Field even had a visit from Pac Man and his nemesis Blinky.

The Relay also helps to raise awareness about how pervasive cancer is and how much there is left to learn about the disease. Surrounding the track were dozens of signs with information about cancer statistics and ways to prevent the disease.

As of the closing ceremony, the event coordinators announced that the walk had reached its fundraising goal with a total of $108,216 being donated to cancer research. The Relay organization is also still collecting donations online at acsevents.org/relay/mafivecollege. Last year, Relay participants raised $72,000.

Participation in the event has also doubled since previous years with nearly 800 participants from the University of Massachusetts alone and more than 200 more walkers from the Five Colleges and the town of Amherst.

"It was a positive experience, and a good feeling," said Rachel Boritz, a UMass student whose mother survived cancer. "It was a really fun way to help a good cause that touches and awful lot of people."

KRISTI FLAPPAN

Survivors of cancer take their lap at the Relay for Life at Amherst College Friday. This year, the college hosted more than 1,000 walkers.

Professor given grant to continue research

By Derrick Perkins
Collegian Staff

A University of Massachusetts professor has received a National Science Foundation (NSF) CAREER grant for $400,000 over the next five years to continue his research on the stability of viscoelastic solutions in extensional flows.

Jonathan Rothstein, a professor in the Mechanical and Industrial Engineering Department, has been studying viscoelastic fluids since 1996. His research began at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology where he received his PhD in 2001 before continuing his research as a member of the faculty at UMass Amherst. His current research is carried out in the Non-Newtonian Fluid Dynamics Lab, of which Rothstein is the director, in Gunness Laboratory.

"What we've proposed to do," Rothstein said of the NSF grant, "is to look at a whole new class of materials. There has been very little research in looking at how these materials behave in strong stretching or extensional flows."

Many of the materials Rothstein is planning to study already have practical applications, but are used without a fundamental understanding of how these materials work. Paints, shampoos and hair gel are all examples, according to Rothstein, of consumer products that have been mixed with these materials, which act as "viscosity modifiers."

"Trying to understand how these materials behave in these various complex flows is important both from an industrial-commercial aspect and also from a basic fundamental science viewpoint," Rothstein said.

Much of the funding from the NSF CAREER grant is going towards bringing in more graduate students and funding their research on the project, according to Rothstein. Funds from the grant have also been allocated to develop an outreach program to encourage participation in the sciences by local students, kindergarten through high school, and to expand undergraduate research opportunities within the university. To this end Rothstein plans on bringing the results

See GRANT on page 2

UMass nanotechnology advances with grant

By Glen Johnson
Associated Press

BOSTON — The University of Massachusetts at Amherst has been awarded a $16 million grant to establish a center for research in nanotechnology, an emerging field that develops atomic-level materials for data storage, drug delivery and energy-saving technologies.

Gov. Mitt Romney, Sen. Edward Kennedy and other political and academic figures said Monday the grant — made by the National Science Foundation — recognizes the research capabilities of a state university that often is overshadowed by the likes of Harvard University and MIT.

"This was a tough competition, this was a tough challenge and to know — and to have the nation know — that the University of Massachusetts at Amherst is selected ... is an extraordinary tribute," Kennedy, D-Mass., said during a Statehouse ceremony called to celebrate the grant.

Romney said: "I'm hopeful that nanotechnology will offer the same kinds of benefits and economic potential for the commonwealth that we saw with biotech."

More than 50 UMass faculty across eight departments currently conduct research in nanotechnology, which involves rearranging atoms with a specific goal. In theory, rearranging atoms in coal could produce diamonds.

Currently, most manufacturing is done at the molecular level, crudely rearranging substances by relatively imprecise methods such as grinding and milling.

UMass has already attracted $54 million in nanotechnology research funds from government and industry sources since 1997. The new grant will allow the Center for Hierarchical Manufacturing at UMass to begin new work in nano-scale manufacturing, biomanotechnology, and nano-materials.

To receive the money, the state must match the federal grant from the science foundation with $5 million of its own. Romney filed a bill Monday as the House began its budget debate.

Romney, who was brought into run the 2002 Olympic Winter Games after a bid-rigging scandal, also offered an unprompted reassurance that Massachusetts won the grant fairly.

"We didn't win this by virtue of doing something untoward or by offering special deals," the Republican chief executive said. "We instead put forth the quality of the research and the minds that would come together to support this nanotechnology effort, and on the basis of merit, this application was rewarded."

ARTS & LIVING

'THE SENTINEL' DISAPPOINTMENT

Kiefer Sutherland flick offers predictable action.

PAGE 6

EDITORIAL/OPINION

TIMES THEY ARE A-CHANGING

UMass's 'rats' are becoming fraternities.

PAGE 5

WEATHER

TODAY
High 67
Cloudy

TONIGHT
Low 33
Showers

TOMORROW
High 61
Low 39
Mostly sunny

SPORTS

UMASS LAX BACK AT IT

Minutemen to play this afternoon at Garber Field.

PAGE 12

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3499 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief Michael Busack
Managing Editor Eric Athas
Business Manager Nathan Chomsky
Production Manager Nicholas Belanger
Night Supervisor Katie Huston
Advertising Manager Kerry O'Grady
Advertising Production Lauren Egavian
Editorial Production Amanda Allen
Arts & Living Editor Ian Jones
Comics Editor Amanda Allen
Editorial Editor Kristen LaCasse
News Editor Dan O'Brien
Sports Editor Jeff Howe
Circulation Manager Thomas Hecht
Distribution Manager Nick Gleason
Finance Manager Daniel Conti
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Assistant Advertising Caren Tortorici
Assistant Business Phil Smoller
Asst. Arts & Living Morgan-Ann Rousseau
Asst. Arts & Living Alex Butler
Assistant News Megan Daley
Assistant News Matt Bellveau
Assistant Sports Dan Duggan
Assistant Sports Rob Greenfield
Assistant Editorial Tucker Merrick

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is independently funded, operating on advertising revenue. Founded in 1890, the paper began as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1900, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1936. Published daily since 1967. The Collegian has been broadsheet since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 3:30 p.m.

Production Crew
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Dan O'Brien

COPY EDITOR
Erika Lovley

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Ginny Nielsen

PRODUCTION STAFF
Tiffany Van Langen, Jesse Sussman

If you see news happening, call us at 545-1809 and snap a photo with your cell phone, then send it to news@dailycollegian.com

Amherst police log

Police search for suspects accused of robbery

Friday April 21

All four tires of a blue 1998 Chevrolet Lumina were slashed Friday at 340 Riverglade Dr. Police responded to the call at 1:57 p.m. and believe the vandalism is the work of the reporting party's ex-boyfriend.

Elmy M. Perez, 27, of 109 Powell Ave, Springfield, was pulled over by police at 6:59 p.m. for a crosswalk violation. Police then arrested Perez for driving with a suspended license.

A motor vehicle crash occurred at 9:28 p.m. near the Hampshire College entrance on Rt. 116. The accident involved one car and no injuries were reported. The operator of the vehicle stated that the breaks engaged while the car was driving, causing her to lose control of the steering wheel. The car then struck a guardrail on the west side of Rt. 116 before coming to a rest in the south bound lane breakdown area. The red 2000 Subaru Forester sustained damage to the front right bumper light and was subsequently towed.

Police arrested David C. Greene, 20, of 280 Broadway, Hanover, after he was observed allegedly urinating near 63 South Pleasant St. Greene was stopped by police, identified, and arrested for being a person under 21 years of age in possession of alcohol. The beer was seized, tagged, and secured as evidence.

Two men were arrested on the corner of North Pleasant St. and Massachusetts Ave at 11:13 p.m. for alcohol related offenses. Michael Ambrose, 21, of 38 Hawthorne Ave, Pittsfield, was arrested for having an open container of alcohol. Ryan Robert Hynes, who is now 21 but was 20 at the time, was arrested for having an open container of alcohol and being a person under 21 in possession of alcohol.

Police arrested two individuals on 49 Fearing St. at 11:28 p.m. for multiple charges. Annemarie Jean Ilacqua, 18, of 232 Cedar Ave, Arlington, was arrested for being a person under 21 in possession of alcohol, and having an open container of the alcohol. David Harrington Owen, 20, of 52 Hemlock St. 52, Arlington, was arrested for the same charges as Ilacqua, as well as possession of a class D drug.

Robert Perez, 29, of 299 Newberry St. Floor 2, Springfield, was arrested at 11:48 p.m. at the Boulders 142c on two charges of assault and battery and violating an abuse prevention order.

Five individuals, including one juvenile at Townehouse 43 on 50 Meadow St. were arrested for being under 21 years of age in possession of alcohol. Police first responded to the call at 11:54 p.m. and arrested Michael Forrest, 19, of 45 Handy St., Attleboro, Abby Shafner, 20, of 38 Bennett St., Gloucester, Colin Foley, 20, of 4 Woodlawn Ave, Holbrook and Steven Joseph Rollery, 20, of 2 Mocking Bird Rd., Hackettstown, New Jersey at 12:32 a.m.

Saturday April 22

Reports of loud music and voices from an outdoor party drew police to Townehouse 88 of 50 Meadow St. at 12:36 a.m. Brian T. Barrell, 21, of West Boylston and Matthew R. Quigley, 23, of 25 ½ Front St., Marblehead were arrested for violating town noise ordinances.

Police reported to 294 Potwine Ln. after receiving reports of illegally parked vehicles, loud noise and a bonfire at 1:06 a.m. and arrested two residing individuals, one Benjamin P. Tauber, 24, and Julien J. O'Reily, 20, for unlawful noise violations.

Suspicious activity at the Verizon Store at 233 North Pleasant St. sparked a call to police at 12:29 p.m. A man reportedly drove up to the store, took a picture and drove away. Afterwards, an unspecified number of subjects entered the store looking "scared and serious" according to one witness. These people then took photographs of people shopping inside the store. Police believe the activity was due to a scavenger hunt.

Matthew Jessop, 19, of 95 Menotomy Rd., Plymouth, was arrested on 47 South Prospect St. at 1:12 p.m. for being a person under 21 years of age in possession of alcohol and having an open container.

Benjamin Joseph Potter, 19, of 622 Roaring Brook Rd., Conway, was arrested on 47 South Prospect St. at 2:14 p.m. for having an open container of alcohol and being a person under 21 years of age in possession of alcohol.

After receiving a tip roughly 18 months ago from Yahoo.com, police arrested an Amherst man at 2:50 p.m. on child pornography charges. After conducting a warranted search of the owner's computer, multiple images of child pornography were found.

A missing person call was made to police at 10:33 p.m. from the Rolling Green apartment complex reporting a runaway child. The individual was later found in Northampton and returned to the parents' custody.

Laura Krauss, 20, of 13 Havelock Rd., Worcester, was arrested after police observed Krauss walking along the Puffton parking lot with an opened beer bottle. After submitting identification to police, Krauss was arrested for being a person under 21 years of age in possession of alcohol.

Daniel Patrick Cauley, 20, of 8 Wistena Dr., Leominster, was arrested on 144 Fearing St at 11:27 p.m. on charges of possession of an open container of alcohol and being a person under 21 in possession of alcohol.

Sunday April 23

After five police officers cleared a party at 50 Railroad St. two individuals were arrested and their six kegs were confiscated. Andrew W. Russ, 20, of 50 Railroad St. and Edward Schleyer, 22, of 20 South Rd., Rye Beach, NH, were arrested for unlawful noise and unlawful possession of a keg.

The owner of a 2003 Honda Civic reported that a cinder block had been thrown through her car's passenger side window. Police reported to 14 East Pleasant St. where the owner reported a bag had been stolen from the vehicle. She reported that the bag had contained an iPod Nano as well as 100 shoes.

Complaints of loud noise drew police to 61 Main St. at 12:27 a.m. Police were met with "uncooperative" individuals when they asked residents to clear the party. Jonathan P. Korhonen, 23, of 136 Chapel St., Gardner, and Nicholas Lapete, 20, of 7 Pinewood Dr, Webster, were arrested for unlawful noise and unlawful possession of a keg.

Two women were reportedly assaulted and robbed of their bags on 284 North Pleasant St. at 4:29 a.m. The women reported that the robbers were two men driving a green Mercury. The victims claimed the vehicle had passed them several times before it parked. A suspect then allegedly got out of the vehicle, ran at the women, caught one of the victims and said "give me your purse" before throwing her to the ground. The first suspect is described as a 6-foot-tall Black male wearing a dark hooded sweatshirt. Anyone with information in the case is asked to call the Amherst Police Department at 413-259-3000.

—Compiled by John Fenuccio

Psychiatrist discusses possible motives for Sullivan's homicide

TRIAL from page 1

...results."

After his arrest, Johnston told psychiatrists that he believed Sullivan had been visiting him on the Westfield State College campus and threatening him. Johnston also claimed to be harassed by the mafia and anally raped while he was studying at Hawaii Pacific University, where he went to school in 2002.

Welner said in court that Johnston was probably suffering from extreme stress leading up to Sullivan's death. Welner testified that Johnston told him in an interview that he had not had a sexual relationship with a woman in over two years and his relationship with his friends had been fading away for some time.

In addition, Welner said that while most of Johnston's friends were having romantic relationships, including Sullivan, Johnston probably felt left out of the group.

"His friends never saw him with a member of the opposite sex," Welner said. "Not being in any type of relationship can [lead to] self-consciousness and [feeling] like failure."

Welner said Johnston phoned three women the night of Sullivan's death, and two of them were women he had pursued.

One woman Johnston claimed to have had interest Kimberly Arasimowicz, who was dating Sullivan when he was killed.

Toward the end of Welner's testimony, Northwestern District Attorney Renee Steese pointed out that Johnston had allegedly lied about his cocaine use to psychiatrists after his arrest. He also refused to take a blood test at Noble Hospital in Westfield, which would detect any drugs or alcohol in his system, a few hours after he shot Sullivan. Johnston told Feldman he drank between eight and 10 cans of beer the night of Dec. 6, 2004.

The 15-member jury could begin deliberations in this case as early as Wednesday.

Former ALANA director dies at 56

The former Director of the University of Massachusetts Office of ALANA Affairs passed away on Friday.

Anthony Crayton, who was the second Director of ALANA, then called the Office of Third World Affairs, died of liver failure at the age of 56. Crayton was also a member of the Boston city council, elected in 1991, as well as the president of the Black Political Task Force.

Nelson Acosta, the current ALANA director, sent out an e-mail yesterday, which informed members of ALANA and the UMass faculty of Crayton's passing. In it, he said, "I had the privilege to have work for 'Tony' as an OAA student employee and student leader. He was a great mentor to many, including myself. I would not be doing the work I am currently doing at the University with him. He was a great servant of the underdog and all those marginalized in our society."

—Collegian Staff

First lady plans visit to Berkshire Hills

By Adam Gorlick
Associated Press

LENOX — The home of one of America's best-known authors finally has its library back, and one of the country's best-known librarians is helping to show it off.

First lady Laura Bush, a former librarian and public school teacher in Texas, visited this bucolic town in the Berkshire hills Monday to mark the homecoming of Edith Wharton's personal book collection to the author's estate known as The Mount.

"As a librarian and a lover of literature I believe it's important for Americans to visit the homes of our most loved and renowned writers," Bush said.

Before the first lady delivered her remarks she took a brief tour of the mansion and stopped in Wharton's library to admire the recently returned volumes.

The books on the shelves reflect Wharton's range in interests and taste. One wall of shelves is filled with prayer books and bibles. Others are packed with volumes of poetry, philosophy and gardening.

Caretakers of The Mount — a 35-room mansion Wharton built in the early 1900s — purchased the author's library in December for $2.6 million from a British bookseller. The bookseller, George Ramsden, has cared for the collection since 1984. When Wharton died, she willed the books to her godson through a trust. He later sold the library to a rare book collector, who in turn sold it to Ramsden.

"Books that Edith Wharton said were the core of her being came home," said Stephanie Copeland, the president of The Mount. The Mount was able to purchase the library thanks to a gift from Robert Wilmers, chairman of the M&T Bank Corp., and his wife, Elisabeth Wilmers.

The 2,600-volume library includes a first edition of "Alice in Wonderland" and works with personal inscriptions from the author Henry James and Theodore Roosevelt.

The Mount plans to use the library acquisition as a fundraising tool by encouraging admirers to "adopt a book" for fees ranging from $1,000 to $1 million. Proceeds will help restore Wharton's home.

Professor plans to use grant to recruit new student researchers of his research into his classrooms at the undergraduate level through demonstrations and experimentation.

GRANT from page 1

Rothstein also plans to increase undergraduate research opportunities in his lab. At any given time, Rothstein has about four undergraduate students working for him. The new budget allows him to bring undergraduate students in to work during the summer in addition to those students who would already be working on independent studies pertaining to Rothstein's research throughout the school year.

Integral to Rothstein's research is a machine, one of only four or five in the world according to Rothstein, called a filament stretching rheometer. It was constructed in Rothstein's laboratory by his research team and is used to stretch the wormlike micelles, the agents which impart viscoelasticity to a given material, and measures their response to extensional flows. The filament stretching rheometer also determines exactly how far these micelles can be extended before they break.

According to the NSF program Web site, the NSF funds about 11,000 proposals each year, out of a submitted 40,000. The NSF makes up one-fourth of all federal funding for basic scientific research at academic institutions in the United States. The CAREER Program is designed to assist faculty members who 'most effectively integrate research and education within the context of the mission of their organization' early in their careers.

Apply to the Daily Collegian!

How could you say no to this face?

Results you can feel...
for neck pain & headaches.
Dr. Lee Kane
Chiropractic Physican
Participating provider of HMO's student insurance, Blue Cross, GIC, car insurance & most others.
www.AmherstFamilyChiro.com
Amherst Family Chiropractic
Center for Natural Health
228 Triangle Street
Amherst, MA
Most insurance accepted
549-1500

FRUSTRATED?
PUZZLED?
DO YOU HAVE:
A grade dispute?
Teacher, roomate or job concerns?
Billing problems?
...or any other University related problems?
THE OMBUDS OFFICE CAN HELP
(confidentially, of course)
students, faculty, and staff are all welcome
823 Campus Center
Office Hours: 8:00 a.m. - 5:00 p.m.
Telephone: 413 - 545 - 0867
fax: 413 - 545 - 9720
e-mail: ombuds@ombuds.umass.edu

STUDENT LEGAL SERVICES OFFICE
UMASS, AMHERST
CALL 545-1995
or stop in at 922 Campus Center

Lawsuit about 'don't ask' policy is dismissed

By Denise Lavoie
Associated Press

BOSTON — A federal judge on Monday dismissed a lawsuit filed by 12 service members challenging the military's "don't ask, don't tell" policy.

"Don't ask, don't tell," established in 1993 under the Clinton administration, prohibits the military from asking about the sexual orientation of service members but requires discharge of those who acknowledge being gay or engaging in homosexual activity.

The service members had argued the policy violates their constitutional rights to privacy, free speech and equal protection under the law.

However, the Bush administration in court documents argued that Congress, in approving "don't ask, don't tell," recognized that the military is characterized by its own rules and traditions, including some restrictions that would not be accepted in civilian society.

The policy "rationally furthers the government's interest in maintaining unit cohesion, reducing sexual tensions and promoting personal privacy," the government argued.

U.S. District Judge George A. O'Toole Jr. on Monday dismissed the suit filed by the Servicemembers Legal Defense Network.

"Don't ask, don't tell" has been upheld by appeals courts in several other jurisdictions.

One of the reasons the service members filed the lawsuit in Boston is because the appeals court here — the 1st Circuit — has never been asked to rule in a case involving the policy.

In their lawsuit, the service members claimed that the policy violates their First Amendment rights because it forces them to remain silent about their true sexual identity.

O'Toole rejected that argument in his ruling.

"The policy .... is, by its terms, directed at homosexual conduct or the propensity or intention to engage in such conduct. The fact that one might speak about one's conduct, or one's propensity or intention to engage in certain conduct, does not mean that a governmental regulation pertaining to the conduct is also an impermissible restriction on speaking about it," O'Toole said.

A spokesman for the Servicemembers Legal Defense Network said they would likely appeal the ruling to the 1st Circuit, although a final decision has not yet been made.

"We're obviously disappointed in the court's decision," said the spokesman, Steven Ralls.

"We continue to believe the military's ban is unconstitutional, and there is no reason lesbian, gay and bisexual Americans should be prohibited form serving our country. The men and women in this lawsuit represent the best of our Armed forces. They are patriotic veterans and we should welcome their contributions and honor their commitment to our country."

Final arguments given in Moussaoui trial

By Michael J. Sniffen
Associated Press

ALEXANDRIA, Va. — Prosecutors showed the most gruesome and heart-rending photos of Sept. 11 again on Monday and told jurors that only Zacarias Moussaoui's death could give the victims justice. The defense asked his jury to spurn retribution and not let a delusional and inept terrorist bait them into making him a martyr.

With those final arguments, the life of the 37-year-old Frenchman was placed in the hands of the same nine men and three women who early this month found him responsible for at least one death on 9/11 even though he was in jail at the time.

Now they must weigh the suffering and the glee the confessed al-Qaida conspirator took in it on the witness stand against his role, his mental health and background to decide whether he deserves the death penalty or life in prison without possibility of release.

The jurors deliberated three hours and went home for the day. They will resume Tuesday morning.

Prosecutor David Novak showed photos of a charred body in a Pentagon office, of body parts at the base of the World Trade Center, and of young children who lost a parent.

"No one can give them justice but you," Novak said. "You are the voice of this nation."

He told jurors a death penalty would say: "We are the United States of America, and we are not going to put up with a bunch of thugs who invoke God's name to kill nearly 3,000 Americans."

Displaying a photo of the youngest 9/11 victim — 2 1/2-year-old Christine Hansen holding an American flag — who died on her way to Disneyland, Novak recalled Moussaoui's "utter lack of remorse" when he took the witness stand and asked: "How can any human being rejoice in her death?"

Moussaoui "is nothing but a mass murderer," Novak said. "This defendant is pure evil."

With such arguments, defense attorney Gerald Zerkin said, "the government opts for retribution." But "this is about history," he said. "It is about how our justice system responded to the worst terrorist attack on our soil."

He said even the Nuremberg trials of Nazis after World War II handed out only 11 death sentences for "the worst atrocities in the history of man" and paved the way for reconciliation.

Moussaoui is a "a veritable caricature of an al-Qaida terrorist," "the operative who couldn't shoot straight" and "the only al-Qaida operative inept enough to be captured before 9/11," Zerkin said.

"He is offered as a sacrificial lamb" while no charges are brought against 9/11 mastermind Khalid Shaikh Mohammed, coordinator Ramzi Binalshibh and other captured al-Qaida leaders, Zerkin said.

He said the government "has held out the prospect of Moussaoui's execution as the cure" for the pain of the victims. But because their pain is so severe, "his death cannot and will not make them better."

Zerkin recalled other relatives of victims who testified on Moussaoui's behalf that they began to recover when they found ways to do something positive.

Moussaoui's testimony about how he relished the pain of the victims "is proof that he wants you to sentence him to death," Zerkin said. "He is baiting you into it. He came to America to die in jihad and you are his last chance."

Instead, Zerkin said, the jury can "confine him to a miserable existence until he dies and give him not the death of a jihadist he wants, but the long slow death of a common criminal."

Once Judge Leonie Brinkema had sent the jury to deliberate, rejected another defense motion to throw out the death penalty and recessed the court, Moussaoui, who calls the trial a charade and a circus, raised his hands above his head and left court smiling and applauding.

He had been defiant when leaving for the day's earlier breaks, calling out: "Never get me, America," "Our children will carry on the fight," and "There's more than one way to skin the American pigs."

This is the fourth death penalty case in which Zerkin and Novak have faced off; Zerkin's clients in the three earlier ones all got life sentences. Some rancor surfaced as each used their closings to criticize the other by name for an argument or line of questioning during the trial.

Both may have misstepped somewhat in their closings, and on the same issue: Moussaoui's sanity. Zerkin briefly lost track of his outline and had to go back, almost as an afterthought, to the importance of testimony from defense psychiatrists that Moussaoui was a delusional schizophrenic. Mental illness "affects your judgment," he said.

Later, Novak may have forgotten that one female juror is a mental health researcher when he said that testimony "is a bunch of psycho-hogwash." He ridiculed the diagnosis as a "magical schizophrenia" that Moussaoui could turn on or off and that "didn't appear in front of you all."

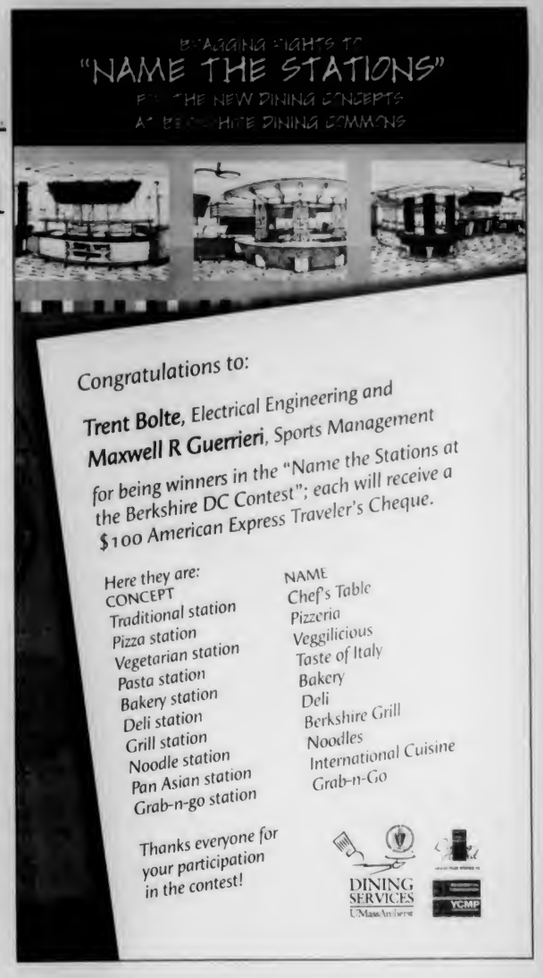
Moussaoui himself nodded vigorously up and down when Zerkin said he truly believes President Bush will release him before leaving office in 2009. Zerkin called that a delusion; Novak said it was a religious belief.

Raskin told the jurors: "Your decision ... is not a close call." Zerkin told them their ruling would be "the legacy for our children." The jurors left to make their way through a verdict form that runs 42 pages and requires them to disclose what factors influenced their decision.

This artist's rendering shows court appointed physician Dr. Raymond Patterson being questioned by U.S. Attorney David Novak as Zacarias Moussaoui and Judge Leonie Brinkema listen in U.S. District Court in Alexandria, Va.

The Daily Collegian

New England's Largest College Daily • Est. 1890
The Daily Collegian
Friday, March 3, 2006 www.dailycollegian.com Volume CXVI, Issue



We Want You

Assistant News and Sports Editors

Advertising Representatives

Night and Day Graphics Staffers

Get the experience you need by working for one of the largest daily college papers in the country.

THE JEWISH STUDENT UNION PRESENTS:

ב"ה

CAMP OUT- FOR A CAUSE

HELP STOP GENOCIDE

TODAY!

HOLOCAUST MEMORIAL DAY

BYOT: Bring your own tent
No tent? Talk to Chad.
chad@student.umass.edu

STUDENT UNION LAWN

Tuesday APRIL 25, 2006 @People's Market Lawn

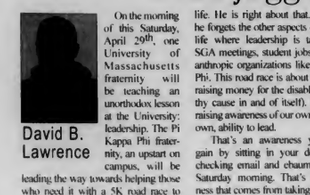
4:00 p.m. Speakers on Genocide
5:30 p.m. Holocaust Memorial Vigil
6:00 Camp out for a cause

Remember the atrocities of the past; help stop the genocide of the present.

Join with other students to help raise awareness of the current genocide in Darfur, Sudan

Sponsored in part by:
The Cambodian Student Association, Students for a Free Tibet. Chabad. Pride Alliance. African Student Association. Hillel.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian



EDITORIAL OPINION

Tuesday, April 25, 2006

"I may not agree with what you say but I will defend to the death your right to say it." Voltaire

Editorial@dailycollegian.com

Not jogging through life

David B. Lawrence

On the morning of this Saturday, April 29th, one University of Massachusetts fraternity will be teaching an unorthodox lesson at the University: leadership. The Pi Kappa Phi fraternity, an upstart on campus, will be leading the way towards helping those who need it with a 5K road race to benefit those living with disabilities. Leadership, philanthropy, – these are qualities not often associated with a public education, these are qualities that are too often lost amid large lectures, larger readings, and yet larger weekend parties.

However leadership and philanthropy, – teamwork, these are among the most important skills required for living the good, happy, productive, helpful lives that we aspire to. Out in the world it will matter less that we can memorize thirty pages of Kierkegaard than that we can act decisively and wisely to push ourselves and our colleagues forward. Sam Allis's column in this Sunday's Boston Globe was inspiring and telling, he writes: "Leadership is rather like pornography. You know it when you see it. How you acquire it is a mystery. They don't teach it in college."

But Mr. Allis missed an important point. Leadership may not be taught by the college directly. The majority of classes and discussions aren't going to teach you a fick about how to lead yourselves and others in a successful life. He is right about that. However he forgets the other aspects of campus life where leadership is taught: the SGA meetings, student jobs and philanthropic organizations like Pi Kappa Phi. This road race is about more than raising money for the disabled (a worthy cause in and of itself). It is about raising awareness of our own, students' own, ability to lead.

That's an awareness you won't gain by sitting in your dorm room checking email and ebaumsworld on Saturday morning. That's an awareness that comes from taking a personal first step, brushing off that hangover, and getting out to do some good with the other students at your college.

The road race this Saturday is a good start. It's a charitable race/walk for disabilities. The 5K track is a simple loop around campus, beginning at Rohsham Visitors Center and ending at the FAC. Registration opens at 9 a.m. The race is part of Pi Kappa Phi's greater 'Push America' philanthropy campaign. The fraternity has set up this national campaign to raise awareness and assist those living with disabilities. While PKP is new to this campus and this area, the fraternity has a far-reaching national network. To raise awareness here in New England they are sponsoring a range of events, including the road race, an accessibility ramp construction project, and a "No Boundaries Week" of awareness and fundraising projects.

This road race is about more than raising money for the disabled (a worthy cause in and of itself). It is about raising awareness of our own, students' own, ability to lead.

I have personally been very critical of fraternities on campus. Often their image has more to do with parties and violence than it does to with leadership and service. However this is certainly not always the case. Pi Kappa Phi is looking to change the fraternity image on campus. Sigma Phi Epsilon camped out for cancer last week, raising awareness and funds for the disease. All of the fraternities on campus, however, should follow this lead.

That is what this is all about, after all—leadership. Leadership on campus can be as simple as a road race: see a problem, and help to fix it. Leadership in life is more about the small events than it is the big ones; it is about taking personal responsibility for your life and your world. It is never too late to start. All it takes is that first step, first activity or first donation to admit your responsibility and take hold of it. The fraternities on campus have a responsibility for their reputation, and lately it hasn't been good. They each need to take it upon themselves, as PKP and Sig-Ep have, to get the good word out—to practice the commitment to service that they claim in their charters. Playing Beirut on the lawn isn't leadership or service.

The road race is being run this Saturday morning. It is the kind of event that teaches what we don't usually learn in the classroom. It is the kind of event that can lead to a lifetime of similar service. On a smaller scale, it is an event that will benefit those living with disabilities. Get your running shoes on.

David B. Lawrence is a Collegian columnist

Tom Reidy/Image Consultants

A fraternity that is using levelers to build an accessibility ramp, not a Beirut Table.

Mo money mo bastardization of style

Cameron MacPherson

It has been said throughout the ages that society is inherently flawed; that within its fabric exists an eternal vice which threatens the ethical choices of its citizens. Countless things at countless times have all stared down an accusing finger blaming them for any failures that might plague a society, and the present is no exception.

Yet while the variety of subjects that one might call to blame is indeed large, I feel that one thing in particular is worthy of nearly all the contempt that we have as individuals: superficial class.

I am by no means an elitist, nor do I like to judge. However, the status quo applicable to what we as a society, and as a university, consider "classy," is so pathetically ridiculous that if it wasn't gnawing away at the individualism which makes us human, it would sit atop the highest echelons of comedic value.

You've all seen the music videos. People that are paid more money than they know what do with flout their Bentley cars, their diamond-encrusted PSP's, their parties with Cristal, satisfying an eager audience which only seeks to emulate those individuals by being "a pimp," or "gangster." If people only knew the truth behind where these words were rooted, this social trend would appear as what it really is: an insult to your intelligence.

People buy fine clothing or might attempt to understand fine liquor and lifestyles, but the fruits derived from those lifestyles come with a sense of class and dignity that is totally ignored in contemporary times. I'd like to ask any one of those rap stars if they really knew what it means to be "gangsta." Because what I see on television and reflected on interviews is not representative of the truth. Have you ever been to a neighborhood run by the Mafia? If you have, then you'll know you can practically eat off the streets, and that people take care of each other.

The people who truly enjoy class, in that they are truly "classy," are not defined by their possessions but rather by their actions, and that is the great discrepancy of our time.

There are no pimps on street corners, and there isn't drive by shootings every day. Is the Mafia violent? Absolutely, but only when they have to be and they never flaunted violence, it was, to them, a necessary function of business.

But when you look at trends from the Mafia, the number one thing they did was take care of the neighborhood and the family. Go to Sicily, and find me a guy selling crack or H to kids on the streets of Palermo. I'll give my firstborn child to someone who succeeds in this task – but the agreement is only valid if you find a dealer that isn't dead. It's not the cops that keep their kind away, that's for sure.

Is the situation the same in the hood? Highly unlikely. Being gangster," has many of the qualities that we see beamed through our televisions, such as violence, expensive living, and loose women. But there was an alternate side to that, the side which is completely ignored: the responsibility factor. Class has it too. The people who truly enjoy class, in that they are truly "classy," are not defined by their possessions but rather by their actions, and that is the great discrepancy of our time. They enjoy a $1,000 bottle of wine because they know the type of grape that goes into it and the care and expertise that sets that wine apart from the others. Not because by showing it off it makes them look rich.

A classy person buys art worth millions not because they want to show it off on their wall, but because they are fascinated with the way the artist expresses themselves. Classy people all have personality traits that pop culture perpetually passes on: respect and chivalry. To have "class" means that you have manners, that you are articulate and eloquent and mature, that you understand the finer points of life because you understand them, not simply desire to flaunt them for superficial social gain in the eyes of your cohorts through jealousy. These things are considered "fine" because of what went into them, and by purchasing that product you're signifying that you are sophisticated and appreciate what it is that you have, that you are a gentlemen and have manners and respect.

If you are buying things just to make yourself look better than others... than that just makes you a fake and a fraud. All you've done is whore out your individualism for an ass-backward trend that completely defaces what it means to be classy. Real class doesn't come from money or 20 "bitches" to throw themselves at you; it comes from being true to yourself and treating others like you'd like to be treated. It means doing what's right, instead of what's popular. It means standing up for what you believe in, and what you believe is right — even against those who might haze you for it.

Honor, discipline, courage, politeness, personal constitution – these are things that make someone classy. Someone with these traits drinking a Budweiser in sweatpants at McMurphy's has more class in one day than some jackass in an Armani suit drinking a 1981 Chateau Margaux Cabernet Sauvignon at Aujourd'hui will have in ten lifetimes. So the next time you see some joker on TV who thinks he's better than you because of his $100,000 ring created by a jeweler whose name he can't even pronounce, remember this: A fool and his money are soon parted, but in the long run fate always smiles upon those who are true to themselves and to others. That my friends is class that can't be bought, only earned.

Cameron MacPherson is a UMass Student

We camp, Colorado fasts

Luke Bloomfield

Fourteen University of Colorado Boulder students went on hunger strikes last week in protest against sweatshop conditions in the factories that supply the school with its licensed collegiate apparel.

The strike was spurred by the school's refusal to adopt the Designated Suppliers Program (DSP), a model that ensures worker rights and recognizes international labor standards. The DSP was proposed by United Students Against Sweatshops (USAS), a national organization based in Washington, D.C., with the Worker's Rights Coalition (WRC) a global human rights organization that has been working to see the DSP issue resolved.

Last Friday, a few members of the Coalition Against Sweatshop Apparel (CASA), the CU Boulder organization that started the hunger strike, traveled to Washington to participate in a working group with administrators from institutions of higher education. They were accompanied by Professor William Wei, chair of the CU Boulder Licensing Advisory Committee, who delivered an official statement from CU Boulder that outlined the school's position on the DSP. According to Guy Petit, one of the CASA hunger strikers who traveled to Washington, the statement was "dry and concise," encouraging a resolution of the situation, but not offering any concrete solutions.

The CASA representatives attended the working group with Jessica Rudder, USAS spokesperson who said that, although there was positive dialogue that brought together the students with the administrators, there was "no specific progress."

Ms. Rudder said there are currently 16 schools, between which "there is a lot of unity," that have already adopted the DSP, the University of Colorado schools not among them. In the working group they discussed implementing the DSP at CU Boulder, but nothing definite had been achieved.

The spokesperson for CU Boulder Chancellor Phil Distefano, Barrie Hartman, said the reason the school will not yet adopt the proposed DSP is because it would potentially cause thousands of workers to lose their jobs. There are currently 3,500 factories around the world that produce licensed collegiate apparel. If the DSP was adopted at CU Boulder, the number of factories that could produce the apparel under this model could be cut to less than one hundred.

There are currently 3,500 factories around the world that produce licensed collegiate apparel. If the Designated Suppliers Program (DSP) was adopted at CU Boulder, the number of factories that could produce the apparel under this model could be cut to less than one hundred.

When asked whether the factories where the licensed apparel is sourced are sweatshops, Mr. Hartman replied that, "the factories that use our logo must subscribe to the CU code of conduct. There is neither child-labor nor abuse. The workers are treated fairly and humanely."

However, Mr. Petit said only five to 10 percent of these factories' total production is for the university market. The problem is that the licensees, such as Nike and Reebok, would pull out of the contract with the University if the cost of labor became too high, i.e. if it met the livable wage standard. This seems to suggest that, given the location of these factories in developing countries around the globe, the conditions under which these workers produce apparel are, in fact, probably run at "sweatshop" levels. So what does that say about the CU code of conduct to which the licensees must subscribe?

Mr. Petit also pointed out that the official statement of CU Boulder is "two-faced." In it, Vice Chancellor of Administration Paul Talbot writes, "the Licensing Advisory Committee's chief recommendation is that the University express qualified support for the DSP."

Reading between the lines, Mr. Petit said that "qualified support" is in essence saying the University will not adopt the DSP outright. When asked why, he answered that the University is under too much political pressure by the state of Colorado. This pressure dates back to the Labor Peace Act of 1943 which makes it impossible for Colorado workers to bargain in the public sector. Because of this labor law, "the state of Colorado has been traditionally anti-worker." Implementing the DSP would in principle give workers bargaining ground to which they should be entitled.

A part from the general human rights issue at hand, certain readers may be wondering how this is relevant to UMass. Bearing in mind the Tent State events and other demonstrations against various administrative inequities, the efforts by the hunger strikers should not go overlooked. I am not suggesting that starvation is the only recourse, though there are some who feel passionately enough about certain issues to do so, rather I am offering awareness. Further, I think it is pertinent to add that, although UMass requires its licensees to sign a code of conduct, it is not one of the sixteen schools that have adopted the DSP.

Luke Bloomfield is a Collegian columnist

Ponderance, poetry, and poop

Mike Deehan

So form of written self-expression is quite as distinctive as bathroom graffiti. The intriguing balance of wit, insight and vulgarity yield hasty but thoughtful messages meant for the world to read and embrace. I myself have been an avid fan (and sometimes practitioner) of this kind of artistic endeavor for a long time. Since coming to UMass and being surrounded by the bright minds of academia, I've noticed that whether it's displayed in calligraphy near some of the finest academic minds on a university campus, or scrawled illegibly inside a musty bus terminal stall, restroom graffiti doesn't change much.

The significance of this most personal of writing comes from the public nature of its display. There is no specific audience for restroom wall literature, since, as one of the most famous bathroom-related books tells us in no uncertain terms, Everyone Poops. The writings are to be read and understood by everyone that may walk into that stall at any given moment. This gives the slogans, poems and other messages a kind of every-man quality that is to be admired.

But UMass is a menagerie of different academic interests, each with its own mindset and sense of humor. Shouldn't graffiti in these specialized areas differ according to these distinctions?

To find out, I began a small and informal study of this campus' bathroom walls. My research was limited to men's rooms for obvious reasons (my apologies to any journalism professors I have shamed by not going that extra undercover mile) and took place mostly around the south side of campus. My results yielded some interesting quotations and vast amounts of typical toilet humor. Here are some of the highlights.

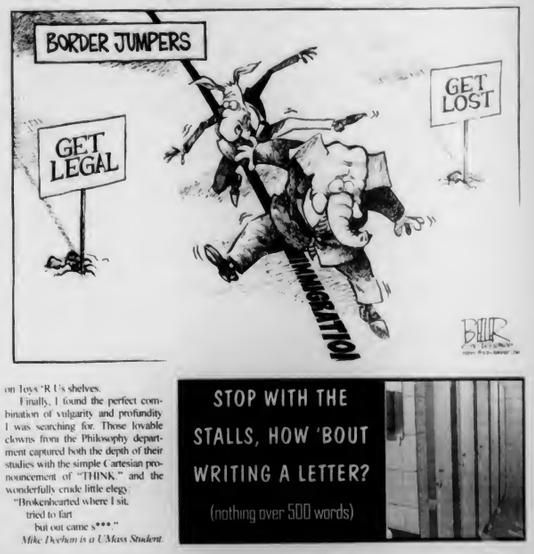
The men's rooms of Herter Hall, home to the Foreign Language, Classics, Comp. Literature and History departments, didn't have nearly as much fine-tuned wit as I've come to expect from the humanities hub of campus. The third floor (nearest to Comp. Lit.), however, holds a bevy of tasteless, unprintable limericks I hope you all seek out and enjoy for yourselves.

Bartlett Hall's first floor bathroom (nearest the Journalism office) had some excellent and remarkably long-winded graffiti. One s*-stall Shakespeare must have spent a very long time concocting the novel-length epic on the right-side wall.

Isenberg School of Management, the sparkling jewel in UMass' crown of alumni gratuity, offered some commendably vulgar, but nonetheless uninspired dirty messages. I had expected such a fine building (which never fails to remind me of a junior high school for some reason) to have freshly painted stalls with gold-plated toilet seats, but the restrooms were just as well-kept as the rest of campus.

The Fine Arts Center provided some decent quotes from our more introspective and theatrical friends. After wading through the declaration "College is a wasteland" and various sexually-confused name-calling in one stall (what the hell are you doing in the theater department if you think theater is gay?) I came across this gem:

"Theater is Life. Cinema is Art. TV is furniture." Could have used some more naughty words, but still-full all the same.



Bartlett Hall's first floor bathroom (nearest the Journalism office) had some excellent and remarkably long-winded graffiti. One s-stall Shakespeare must have spent a very long time concocting the novel-length epic on the right-side wall. I won't reproduce it here, but rest assured it's the kind of depressing and monotonous prattle you can expect from someone who just realized that the degree they've spent four years working on will land them a wonderful job editing obituaries in a city they've never heard of. There is also a wonderful little rhetorical question concerning one billion dollars, a three-way and your parents.

The third floor of lovely Bartlett Hall features the finest piece of visual art I came across, a piece entitled "Autobot Bong" showing the famous product logo transformed into a configuration we're not likely to ever see on Toys 'R Us shelves.

Finally, I found the perfect combination of vulgarity and profundity I was searching for. Those lovable clowns from the Philosophy department captured both the depth of their studies with the simple Cartesian pronouncement of "THINK." and the wonderfully crude little elegy:

"Brokenhearted where I sit,
tried to fart
but out came s."

Mike Deehan is a UMass Student.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

ARTS & LIVING

TUESDAY, APRIL 25, 2006 ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

'The Sentinel' offers predictable action

By Peter Frisman
Collegian Staff

When far too many vibrant colors are applied to a canvas, the painting is derided as crowded, too busy, overdone. Perhaps such a criticism can be translated to cinema, as well. Clark Johnson's "The Sentinel" is a nonstop barrage of takes seemingly lasting less than five seconds on average, all under the assignment of delivering a hackneyed story.

Michael Douglas stars as Peter Garrison, a Secret Service agent who took a bullet for Reagan. He went unrewarded for his efforts, however. He maintains a low-profile job status in the present day, and he can apparently only find solace in his affair with the first lady (Kim Basinger). Garrison gets wind of a traitor within the Secret Service's ranks, is blackmailed with photos of him and the first lady, and is framed as the traitor himself, set up by the blackmailer. He manages to escape the Service's clutches, and is hunted down by his own protégé, a cunning and no-nonsense federal agent played by ... Kiefer Sutherland. (One must wonder whether Sutherland has given up his battle with being typecast before it truly started.) Meanwhile, the real traitor hones in on the President.

Piled onto the film are unnecessary flourishes that distract and annoy. Peppered throughout the film are several-second montages of Secret Service-related items set to jarring music, representative of — Well, they certainly must be representative of something. The entire film, of course, is steeped in excessively David Finchery jump cuts and camera sweeps that the average music video director would reject as too showy. Audiences may find it hard to shake off the feeling that the movie is insulting their intelligence, suggesting its gimmicks were necessary to adapt to their attention spans.

But perhaps those aforementioned montages did indeed serve a purpose, or at least were designed to by the filmmakers. Assuming they are meant to portray a glimpse into Garrison's tortured subconscious, such scenes were the deepest the viewer can get to understand the main character. And since such scenes are indecipherable, the viewer never develops any sympathy for Douglas's character, or any other characters. The film speeds through the viewer's consciousness like water on a (heavily greased) duck, leaving no traces of its presence after it ends.

"The Sentinel"
Directed by Clark Johnson
Starring Michael Douglas, Kiefer Sutherland, Eva Longoria
20th Century Fox
Rated PG-13
108 mins.
Grade D+

Perhaps "The Sentinel" functions best not as entertainment, but as an illustrative example of Hollywood's strained efforts to adapt to the levels of entertainment it feels the need to strive for. In an attempt to lure audiences back to the box office, they have attempted to create the most thrilling movie possible, implementing every available gimmick. As a result, they have overcompensated and produced "The Sentinel," a film that hastily assembles a gaggle of characters in danger with stock motivations and weaknesses — and, displaying its arrogance, expects people to care.

George Carlin makes his comeback from illness at the Calvin

By Nick Romanow
Collegian Staff

NORTHAMPTON — Longtime fans of George Carlin were no doubt thrilled the moment the 68-year-old comedian took the stage Saturday night at the Calvin Theatre. Never mind the usual excitement that accompanies a performer taking a stage, this was something special. Last fall's HBO special "Life Is Worth Losing," Carlin's 13th stand-up hour for the network, found the legendary comic tackling extremely dark subjects; all while appearing to be very sick himself.

However, Saturday night Carlin was in great shape, form and spirits when he performed two sets of material to almost sold-out crowds. Carlin began with the verbose, playful, tongue-twisting monologue that opened "Life Is Worth Losing" before explaining that he was incredibly sick — suffering from heart failure — when he taped that special. Carlin shared a brief anecdote about being hospitalized from Christmas Eve until New Years Day which, he said, was fine with him.

Had Carlin not mentioned his recent problems the audience probably would not have noticed that there was anything wrong with him; he was as dynamic, elastic and sharp as ever, mixing material from "Life Is Worth Losing" with some new bits that found the crowd in hysterics. As always, Carlin displayed great talent in mixing the absurd with the serious; never coming off as self-important but ready to confront real world issues head on.

Most of Carlin's material is, of course, unprintable. But the man who popularized the "seven words you can never say on television" does not rely on profanity as a comedic crutch. In fact, it is the way that Carlin twists words and phrases around that has made him such an endurably brilliant comic. Of course sometimes the master of the spoken word was content to let pure filth run rampant. Carlin told a series of "family" jokes — that is, jokes about families — that he noted were perhaps the dirtiest he's ever told. When some of the audience groaned at the X-rated punch lines, Carlin confidently replied that they would be telling the jokes to all their friends next week.

A running theme of the show was ideas that he thinks about but probably only interest him. An extended riff on suicide found Carlin ruminating over the idea of an all-suicide network where people would compete to off themselves in the most fantastic ways. Following a few reflections on similarly dark ideas Carlin noted that it is his interest in these things that "limit my circle of friends."

Carlin also continued his track record of including insightful social commentary. While he serves primarily as an entertainer, he is unafraid to get serious for periods of time. A lengthy speech about how the selfish, abusive corporate executives who run the country only had a few jokes within it; rather Carlin dropped his comedian shtick and delivered straight social commentary.

Ending with an epic account of how the world would, or perhaps should, end Carlin satisfied his desire for all disasters to get worse and worse much to the crowd's delight; the performance was no doubt a success of massive proportions. Carlin's energy, intelligence, and infamous sense of humor were in full force and, best of all, he doesn't show any signs of slowing down.

KRT

George Carlin, who was suffering from heart failure during his last television performance, appeared to be his old self, and in much better health, at the Calvin Theater on Saturday night.

New Music Tuesdays

"I don't think the critics could understand what we're doing." - Jimmy Page

Week of 4/25 to 5/1

Rob Zombie

8/10

Educated Horses
Geffen Records

"Educated Horses," Rob Zombie's third solo studio album and first in five years, finds the ex-White Zombie frontman bringing thrills, chills and rock the way that only he can. One look at the cover of the album says a lot about what Zombie is bringing to the table this time around. Unlike every other one of his solo efforts, Zombie adorns this record make-up free. After making two fantastic, if entirely bizarre and oft-surreal, films, Zombie has returned to his first love and he has returned with a (relatively) no-frills attitude. Where his two prior records, especially 1999's "The Sinister Urge," suffered from what seemed like creative exhaust – cue horror film sample here, chugging guitar riff there, spooky noise now – "Educated Horses" has Zombie sounding revitalized, recalling White Zombie while never repeating himself.

Sure, all the Zombie trademarks are here, from the moaning woman in "American Witch," the anathematic choruses and the bizarre atmosphere that Zombie could sell as his personal cologne line, if there was some way to box it, but Zombie is still pushing himself. The first handful of tracks, including the first single "Foxy, Foxy" are enjoyable but not entirely impressive, but the electric Sitar noise that kicks off and drifts through – "Seventeen Year Locust" is a slice of Zombie heaven. "100 Ways" sounds like nothing Zombie has ever done before, and "Let It All Bleed Out," which begins with a creepy spoken word intro before giving way to a frenetic, adrenaline-filled ride, is practically the definition of an album highlight. "Death Of It All" features acoustic guitar and some studio wizardry that makes a unique entry that can stand amongst the best of his whole catalogue. It seems that track after track has something new to offer, and each new trick Zombie pulls out seems better than the last.

If it seemed, no matter how briefly, that Zombie was just going through the motions of releasing records, "Educated Horses" will erase any doubt about the man. White Zombie is still a chronically underrated band and, while Zombie's knack for stage and visual theatrics is just another one of his talents, it seemed as though recently he had been all too willing to push the music aside. "Educated Horses" proves that Zombie still has it, that he hasn't forgotten what it takes to much truly vital, exciting music. And while there is no doubt he will always be misunderstood by the masses and the pretentious – after all, going under the name "Rob Zombie" in and of itself will turn off many "serious" music listeners – "Educated Horses," and Zombie himself, is very much the real deal. When hard rock has become so stale and boring it seemed inescapable and unbearable, Zombie has rode into town on his "Horse" to save the day yet again.

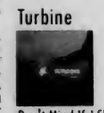
Taylor Hawkins & The Coattail Riders

4/10

Taylor Hawkins & The Coattail Riders
Thrive Records

Over 10 years ago, the drummer of one of the most popular rock bands of the time stepped out with a solo album. The man then known to almost everyone simply as "the drummer from Nirvana" released the self-titled debut album by the Foo Fighters, the band which he fronted. Few could have predicted that, in the wake of Nirvana, Dave Grohl and his band would go on to become modern-rock institutions.

Now Grohl's Foo Fighters drummer, Taylor Hawkins, has come out with an album of his own songs. However, where Grohl branched with an impressive and unexpected knack for writing songs, Hawkins seems comfortable within familiar confines. "Taylor Hawkins & The Coattail Riders," the self-titled album by Hawkins, is paint-by-numbers modern "alternative" rock. While Hawkins is an impressive drummer, his songwriting leaves a whole lot to be desired, especially in the wake of all that Grohl has done with the Foo Fighters.



"Louise," the opening song, is an energetic, muscular, poppy tune that starts the album off right. As a concise – under three minutes – rocker it balances angst and fun, toning down and brightening up the Foo Fighters' trademark sound. However, from there things go downhill. Where "Louise" should have been the album's rave up, it serves more as the watermark. Hawkins has plenty of riffs and hooks to go around but none of them are particularly impressive, original or catchy. Hawkins's scratchy voice seems made for the post-grunge revolution but, over 10 years since the cash in began, it tends to just sound tired; even if Hawkins himself seems 100 percent committed. And though it can feel like a vanity project at times it certainly doesn't feel cynical.

Throughout the album Hawkins experiments a little, be it with the brief interlude "NOA" or the country-influenced "Wasting Energy," one of the best tracks on the record. However, it often just seems that Hawkins is stuck treading water in '90s rock clichés. The ballads of the record, especially "Pitiful," which recalls Rod Stewart, just feel tired and worn-out.

Hawkins has spent the better part of a decade in Grohl's shadow and it is admirable to see him stepping out on his own. Of course, it is almost impossible to live up to the standards that the Foo Fighters frontman has set, but it's not unfair to expect a bit more out of Hawkins then what he offers up on his first solo effort.

By Nick Romanow
Collegian Staff

Turbine

7/10

Don't Mind If I Should
Self-released

There aren't too many rock duos; sure, you've got the White Stripes, but beyond that, it gets a bit harder to keep naming them. Perhaps it's just something about that fabled combination of guitar, drums and bass, but it seems three or more is the standard, which is where Turbine are different — not only are they a duo, but there are no drums or bass, just two guitars, a harmonica and vocals (although, to be fair, there is added instrument since the release of the album).

Somewhat [illegible] Turbine can make [illegible] Hank Argey briefly summed up [illegible] in between folk rock and [illegible] Attimes, Rear Window [illegible] guitar, and especially [illegible] ca. recall Bob Dylan [illegible] does not, which could be good or bad depending on [illegible] about Bob [illegible] Jeremy Hefner [illegible] they're not [illegible] other times, [illegible] to soulful [illegible] make an [illegible] happy and [illegible] appropriately.

Often, Rear Window and Hefner seem content [illegible] another [illegible] fact that [illegible] fives in the [illegible] but the [illegible] of purpose [illegible] They never fall [illegible] trap of [illegible] Of course, [illegible] repetitive, but [illegible] what relevant anyway.

They do attempt [illegible] rather [illegible] opener "[illegible] in at four [illegible] gest [illegible] Nothing [illegible] "In A Golden Era Years," [illegible] take a long [illegible] it all the way [illegible] listen.

All in all, [illegible] Should [illegible] ten. Turbine [illegible] folk tars, [illegible] the typical [illegible] manage to make [illegible] as full as [illegible] happened to [illegible] good [illegible]

By Ian Jones
Collegian Staff

Visit Hofstra University's Graduate Open House.

SUNDAY, MARCH 12, 2006, 1-4 PM
C.V. Starr Hall, South Campus

Learn about Hofstra's challenging, competitive and exciting programs. With 150 unique programs in four schools, Hofstra has a program for you in:

Frank G. Zarb School of Business: M.B.A., M.S., Executive M.B.A. and advanced certificate programs

School of Education and Allied Human Services: M.A., M.H.A., M.S.Ed., Ed.D., Ph.D., P.D. and advanced certificate programs

Hofstra College of Liberal Arts and Sciences: M.A., M.S., Au.D., Ph.D., Psy.D. and advanced certificate programs

School of Communication: M.A. in speech communication and rhetorical studies

For further details, call 1-800-HOFSTRA, ext. 657, or e-mail graddean@hofstra.edu
You may RSVP online at www.hofstra.edu/gradevent

HOFSTRA UNIVERSITY.
HEMPSTEAD, NEW YORK 11549 • WWW.HOFSTRA.EDU

Classic rockers offer revelations

By Ben Wener
The Orange County Register

Wednesday evening, driving out to Hollywood's Kodak Theatre, I had a revelation. Wednesday night, inside the Kodak, I had another.

Both instances centered on what I suppose could cheaply be described as old-timers, though neither performance — one from Bruce Springsteen and a boogieanny horde on record, the other from David Gilmour and the closest approximation of Pink Floyd you're apt to witness anytime soon on stage — showed any wear and tear from aging. Nor was either one musty, even though both focused on music that's been around a long while — the better part of a century in Bruce's case.

But Gilmour's tremendous gig first, simply because the experience means more to me, and likely won't come again — although I suspect there'll be a DVD memento of his first tour in forever sooner than later.

I should start with my story, lest wizened Floyd fans with recall of the real thing brand me an exaggerator.

Being a wee lad of 36, I was too young to catch a performance of "The Wall" in the flesh in ... uh, was it 1980? That primo incarnation never toured again. And because I still believe Pink Floyd died after Roger Waters split — while admitting that "A Momentary Lapse of Reason" (1987) and "The Division Bell" (1994) have bits worth remembering — I never bothered with the remaining Floyd's mondo appearances.

Have you heard 1995's five opus "Pulse"? Featuring "Dark Side of the Moon" in its entirety? That was almost as pointless then as Waters doing likewise while touring Europe is now.

Really, how do you do all of "Dark Side" without Gilmour, whose solos not only help define its sound but who sang the majority of the songs?

My only brush with Floyd, by the way, was Waters' rather disappointing show six years ago at what was then called Universal Amphitheatre. Yes, some parts left me awestruck, the same way Roxanne got at Robert Plant's Greek gig last year when she realized that, holy Moses, that's really Robert Plant singing "That's the Way."

But I still came away from Waters' journey through the past convinced that, just as Floyd was a dreary facsimile without him, so was his modern revival a mess without the grandeur of Rick Wright's organ, the oomph of Nick Mason's drums and, especially, the searing, soaring, singular guitar work of Gilmour.

So imagine my surprise Wednesday night to discover that not only can a Gilmour solo show come closer than anything else to recapturing that rare real thing but that it raised my estimation of his new album, "On an Island," which Gilmour and his band performed all of (in reordered form) in their first of two sets, after opening with most of Side 1 of "Dark Side."

What is merely assured and professional on disc here came across enveloping, enriched, conceptually sensible and at times transcendent, whether the mood was heavenly lulling (during the opening third, culminating in a dive into "The Blue") or thunderous ("Take a Breath" is surpassed by few tracks — "Dogs of War," say — in the Waters-less catalog). I initially figured "On an Island" to be the most Floyd-sounding album since "The Final Cut." Now I'm certain it's the best work since then. Period.

Granted, at the Kodak (his penultimate U.S. date), Gilmour had first-rate help in convincing doubters like me. Assisting on guitar: Phil Manzanera of Roxy Music. On saxes: Dick Parry, the same solid blower featured on "Dark Side" and "Wish You Were Here." On keys: Rick Wright. Contributing backing vocals on two "Island" pieces, the second-set opener "Shine on You Crazy Diamond" and an encore of "Find the Cost of Freedom": David Crosby and a barefoot Graham Nash.

"Yeah," you say, "but all they'd need to be the late-'80s Floyd would be Mason. What was so special about this?"

Passion and song selection. Gilmour is such a resolutely unique guitarist, his style so lyrical — as operatic as rock, prog or otherwise, gets — that his solos are never anything less than striking. Yet on the post-Waters sets I've heard he often sounded as if he were going through the motions, restoring past glories note-for-note. Here, he appeared revitalized, unafraid to stumble on a lick or two if it meant he'd cull some new life out of those all-too-familiar parts.

And what he chose to revive was startling: "Fat Old Sun," one of his earliest songs, from "Atom Heart Mother"; the Syd Barrett-penned "Arnold Layne," Floyd's first single, from '67, when Gilmour wasn't even in the band; a thoroughly awesome reading of all 20-odd minutes of "Echoes," also known as Side 2 of "Meddle," with attendant laser display.

Old-schooler that I am, I'd have traded "Coming Back to Life" and "High Hopes" for, oh, "Us & Them," and I'd take an instrumental ("One of These Days"?) over hearing Wright warble through "Wearing the Inside Out."

But no matter. Halfway into the first set, I realized that for once the cliche I hate so much (you know, "She could have sung the phone book ") had come true: I really would listen to David Gilmour noodle for three hours on anything. Thankfully, he gave us fanatics three often thrilling hours of utter brilliance instead.

Now, about that Springsteen revelation: "We Shall Overcome: The Seeger Sessions," a salute to the celebratory spirit of Pete Seeger's folk tradition that is in stores Tuesday, is to these ears the most fun the Boss has had on record since the liveliest parts of "Born in the U.S.A."

It reminds of the duality of "Workin' on a Highway" or "Glory Days" — ridiculously playful material that masks more profound sentiments. In rowdy remakes of standards like "John Henry" and "Jesse James" and "Jacob's Ladder," Springsteen achieves a similar feat, only by replacing the E Street Band's patented rock 'n' roll with the spontaneity of an 18-member Americana outfit to whom banjo and fiddle and horns are more crucial than any guitar.

"Spontaneity" is the key here. As Springsteen explains in the liner notes (and the half-hour studio glimpse on the flip side of this DualDisc), these performances were captured live, as is, with Bruce often shouting out arrangements or indicating who should solo when, and with endearingly sloppy endings and flubbed cues and codas kept intact.

I'm sure there's something meaningful to be said about why one of America's greatest troubadours chose to put out a sampler of Dust Bowl classics and Irish-tinged laments and murder ballads and such at this particular time in our history. I honestly don't know what that is just now, and I'm not sure it matters. This may be merely what it (and his coming tour) purports to be: a good-time excavation.

Frankly, I take it as a fitting capper to a re-examination of past and present eras that began with the hope and despair of "The Rising," shifted to the neo-"Nebraska" of "Devils and Dust," and now comes full circle (and then some) with this storytelling jubilation.

All I can hope is that next he either gets deeply personal again, or at least enlists the E Streeters once more — either of which is a possibility. Pink Floyd reuniting for anything other than Live 8? Never gonna happen, my friend.

UMass Fine Arts Center's
CENTER SERIES 2005-2006
Celebrating 30 Years of WOWS and CHEERS!
E=FAC²
UMass Fine Arts Center 30th Anniversary Celebration
In Collaboration with the UMass Physics Department
Art and science come together in a celebration that includes technology, sculpture, music, dance, yoga, physics demos, juggling and everything else touched by the laws of physics. Come help us celebrate our 30th birthday and the joy of physics. Bring your friends, bring your appetites, and bring your best Einstein impersonation.

Community Day: Sunday, April 30 11am – 3pm
Happenings at the UMass Fine Arts Center, Plaza and Student Union Gallery. Installation of Giant Earth Harp. Amazing Physics Demos. UMass Jugglers. Art of Science Gallery Exhibit. Grillin' and Chillin' with UMass Catering Barbeque and Herrel's Magnificent Cream Bus. Cosmos Pathway. Einstein look-alike contests. Music. Physics-based dance. Hands-on Science Activities from Mad Science. Minuteman Band Concert. And more!
Free parking

Sound and Yoga Workshop: Monday, May 1 at 4pm
Fine Arts Center Plaza (lobby if rain)
Experience the healing practice of yoga accompanied by the giant Earth Harp.
Open to the Public, Free

Einstein's Big Idea: PBS NOVA Presentation Monday, May 1 at 7pm
Flavin Hall, Isenberg School of Management Rm 137
A dramatization of the remarkable story behind the equation E=mc². Open to the Public, Free

Arts in Business: Tuesday, May 2 at 4pm Campus Center Rm 168
Join Mass Ensemble's Bill Close for a multi-media lecture on how major corporations integrate the arts into their business practice.
Open to the Public, Free

Art of Science Exhibit Opening Tuesday, May 2 at 5pm
See the mergence of art and science presented by the UMass Physics Department.
Student Union Gallery 5pm – 7pm Open to the Public, Free

Einstein Made (Relatively) Simple: Wednesday, May 3 at 4pm
Flavin Hall, Isenberg School of Management Rm 137
Lecture by UMass Physics Professor Guy Blaylock Open to the Public, Free

3rd Annual Festival of the Arts Thursday, May 4, 12 – 4pm
Fine Arts Center Lobby and Plaza
Rain or shine. An afternoon celebration of student artists, student performances, interactive art, free food, and great atmosphere of artistic expression. Open to the Public, Free

World Premiere Mass Ensemble in Critical Mass Thursday, May 4 at 7:30, Fine Arts Center Concert Hall
Mass Ensemble will string the chamber of the Fine Arts center Concert Hall putting the audience inside the instrument providing an amazing and interactive experience. Critical Mass is high concept, high impact entertainment that fuses the concepts of science with MASS Ensemble's power to create emotion through performances that stir the soul. "Looks like sculpture, sounds like Zappa, kicks like Jackie Chan." -Alaska Design Forum

Five College Students: $15, $10, $7
Tickets: 545-2511 or www.fineartscenter.com/tickets

E=FAC² is presented in collaboration with the UMass Physics Department and Office of Student Affairs and Campus Life. Sponsored by MassMutual Financial Group, Bank of America, the Valley Advocate, 93.9 The River, the UMass Alumni Association and the Campus Center Hotel.

For a complete list of events visit:
www.fineartscenter.com/criticalmass
www.fineartscenter.com

Williams returns to comedy

By Joe Neumaier
New York Daily News

NEW YORK — Robin Williams is staring silently out a hotel window on a rainy day. When asked if he's going to jump, he turns, the eyes crinkle with a smile, and the hair-trigger mind leaps into action.

"Ah, it's always difficult to go through a closed window, isn't it?" he says. "You have to go for the running leap, and then ..."

And then it's the window that gets you, and not the fall?

"Exactly."

The immensely popular actor knows a thing or two about hitting windows. In "RV," opening Friday, Williams does his most physical work in ages: He slams into windshields, scampers atop a speeding motor home and pedals a bike out of a lake. As Bob Munro, an ad executive who tries to reconnect with his family — and save his job — while driving from L.A. to Colorado in a recreational vehicle, Williams steers the wild horseplay and goofy wordplay. Joanna (JoJo) Levesque and Josh Hutcherson play his 15-year-old daughter and 12-year-old son; Cheryl Hines ("Curb Your Enthusiasm") takes on the role of his wife.

"RV" also is, amazingly, Williams's first full-blown live-action comedy in almost a decade. The last time he was seen in this mode, in 1997's "Flubber," he was with a magical piece of green goo in a flying car. Since then, he has won a 1997 Best Supporting Actor Oscar (for "Good Will Hunting"), garnered attention for playing quiet psychos in "One Hour Photo" and "Insomnia" (both 2002), and appeared in dramas like "Jakob the Liar" and "House of D."

Not all of those were well-received, but Williams, after hitting career highs with the '90s blockbusters "Mrs. Doubtfire," "The Birdcage" and "Patch Adams," couldn't find any scripts that delivered the wacky package. And so the comic, who had always tried to smash through the comedy window into drama, set his Juilliard-trained jaw for what became an extended run of unfunny guys.

His movie debut, 1980's "Popeye," was a flop, but he followed it with the 1982 adaptation of "The World According to Garp," then, between comedies, he did "Moscow on the Hudson" (1984), a cable TV movie of "Seize the Day" (1986), and "Good Morning, Vietnam" (1987), which brought him his first Oscar nomination.

His second came for 1989's "Dead Poets Society," and suddenly, Williams was tagged as a "clown who cried," something that more nuanced films like "Awakenings" (1990) or "The Fisher King" (1991) — which got him a third Oscar nomination — ought to have erased. His big '90s comedies were still to come, but Williams, an admitted bicycling fanatic, was shifting into a new gear.

"Mrs. Doubtfire" director Chris Columbus says that Williams "treated 'Doubtfire' as a real character piece, working from within. He's quiet and reserved normally, and takes his work that seriously."

Williams says that "to be funny and believable is difficult, and then the issue becomes, how far can you push it? ... Today, comedy comes from a dark place. It's a tougher time now."

Robin Williams stars in "RV", his first physical comedy since 1997's "Flubber," after a number of more serious, darker dramatic roles.

'Opal' very similar to 'Firsts'

By Andrew Ryan
Associated Press

BOSTON (AP) — The publisher of a 19-year-old Harvard University sophomore's debut novel is investigating the work because it includes several passages that are similar to a book published in 2001.

Kaavya Viswanathan's "How Opal Mehta Got Kissed, Got Wild, and Got a Life" was published in March by Little, Brown and Co., which signed her to a hefty two-book deal when she was just 17.

On Sunday, the Harvard Crimson reported the similarities on its Web site, citing seven passages in Viswanathan's book that parallel the style and language of "Sloppy Firsts," a novel by Megan McCafferty that Random House published.

Viswanathan, whose book hit 32nd on The New York Times' hardcover fiction best seller list this week, did not return a phone message seeking comment. On Saturday, she told the Crimson: "No comment. I have no idea what you are talking about."

Michael Pietsch, the publisher of Little, Brown, said Sunday that the company will investigate the similarities.

"I can't believe that these are anything but unintentional," Pietsch said. "She is a wonderful young woman."

McCafferty told The Associated Press in an e-mail Sunday that some of her readers pointed out the likenesses.

"After reading the book in question, and finding passages, characters, and plot points in common, I hope this can be resolved in a manner that is fair to all of the parties involved," McCafferty said.

She didn't elaborate on what kind of resolution she was seeking.

Stuart Applebaum, a spokesman for Random House, told The Boston Globe that lawyers are examining the books for similarities. He would not comment on the extent of those similarities or what action the company might take.

"I'm sure everyone will take these concerns very seriously," he said. "And more to come."

Viswanathan's book tells the story of Opal, a hard-driving teen who earns all A's in high school but gets rejected from Harvard because she forgot to have a social life. Opal's father concocts a plan code-named HOWGAL (How Opal Will Get A Life) to get her past the admission's office.

McCafferty's book follows a heroine named Jessica, a New Jersey 16-year-old who excels in high school but struggles with her identity and longs for a boyfriend.

On page 213 of McCafferty's book, "He was invading my personal space, as I had learned in Psych. class, and I instinctively sunk back into the seat. That just made him move in closer. I was practically one with the leather at this point, and unless I hopped into the backseat, there was nowhere else for me to go."

On page 175 of Viswanathan's book, "He was definitely invading my personal space, as I had learned in Human Evolution class last summer, and I instinctively backed up till my legs hit the chair I had been sitting in. That just made him move in closer, until the grommets in the leather embossed the backs of my knees, and he finally tilted the book toward me."

Viswanathan told The Associated Press in an interview last month that the heroine bears similarities to herself; Indian heritage, New Jersey upbringing, Harvard and both she and Opal's father drive Range Rovers.

There's also a teenage boy in the book who has a striking resemblance to a classmate for whom Viswanathan had an unrequited crush. But the author said last month that those were just superficial details and the book is invented fiction.

Viswanathan is the youngest author signed by Little, Brown and Co. in decades, and the movie rights for the novel have already been sold to DreamWorks.

McCafferty is a former editor at Cosmopolitan who has written three novels.

GREAT Reasons to use UHS Eye Care Services

1. Savings on routine eye exams for students at UMass
2. A great place to get contact lenses
3. FREE sample start-up contact lens solutions
4. Same day replacement of disposable contact lenses, in many cases
5. Contact lenses mailed directly to your home or office
6. FREE eyeglass adjustments and one year warranty on frames

SPECIAL OFFER: 10 PERCENT STUDENT DISCOUNT ON ALL FRAMES AND EYEGLASS LENSES!*

Frederick H. Bloom, O.D.
Director, UHS Eye Care Services

"I invite you to use the Eye Care Services"

* Cannot be combined with other insurance discounts.

For appointments or questions, call 577-5383
UHS EYE CARE SERVICES

Write for Arts!
arts@dailycollegian.com

Updates from Durham

By Aaron Beard
Associated Press

DURHAM, N.C. — When Greg Gosnell talks about attending Duke University as a freshman next fall, the kids at his high school outside Washington make jokes about lacrosse. Even his dentist gave him a hard time about the college he chose.

But the 18-year-old from Potomac, Md., said he is not concerned about allegations that members of Duke's lacrosse team raped a stripper at a team party.

Like many of the 200 of so prospective students visiting the campus Monday, he said he and his parents have decided it is not something to worry about.

"Of course, they had opinions about how it was handled," said Gosnell, who won early admission to Duke. "But at no point were they seriously doubting my application to the school. It was only a few people who may have done this. You can't judge the entire school."

More than 19,000 high school students applied to Duke for next fall, and the highly selective university offered only about 3,800 a spot in the freshman class. At 19 percent, it was the lowest acceptance rate since Duke began keeping track in the 1950s.

The university expects 1,665 to enroll this fall. About 900 prospective students visited the campus during four Blue Devil Days held this month. The final such day was Monday.

Of the 470 students who won early admission to Duke, only one asked to take "another look," said Christoph Guttentag, dean of undergraduate admissions. But Guttentag said has not heard anything else from that student, and about 200 other high school seniors have already given Duke a yes-or-no answer. The deadline is May 1.

"When I look at all the responses we've received, there is nothing that's dramatically different from last year," Guttentag said.

School officials mentioned the allegations briefly during the Blue Devil Days welcome sessions, said Susan Coen, Duke assistant director of admissions. She said few have asked directly about the issue during the question-and-answer sessions with the university's vice president of student affairs that end the day.

Judy Hingle, director of professional development at the National Association for College Admission Counseling, said prospective students should judge the school primarily on academics.

"Something like this could happen at any campus at any time, in reality," Hingle said. "This one just got a lot of press."

Collin Finnerty, one of two Duke lacrosse players charged after rape allegations stemming from a March 18 party, stands in court last week.

Lincoln Foran, an 18-year-old visiting from New York, said his college choice has come down to Duke and the University of Virginia.

"I've seen the articles about it," Foran said. "My impression is it shows the relationship between Duke and Durham is not the best, but at least the university is taking it seriously and trying to fix it."

Rachel Winchester, 18, of Lexington, Ky., said the rape allegations did not affect her desire to enroll at Duke. Her father, Tim, said they decided before Rachel was accepted that the issue was irrelevant. He said lots of school have athletic scandals, and he does not believe this one reflects on the safety of Duke's campus.

"I don't for a minute think there are roving bands of rabid lacrosse players," Tim Winchester said. "We just decided if this was where she wanted to come, this shouldn't hold her back."

Questioning the Credibility

The attorney for one of two Duke lacrosse players charged with raping a stripper demanded on Monday that prosecutors turn over the accuser's medical, legal and education records for use in attacking her credibility.

Kirk Osborn, who represents player Reade Seligmann, said the material will provide "rich sources of information for impeaching the complaining witnesses."

Osborn also asked a judge to hold a pretrial hearing to "determine if the complaining witness is even credible enough to provide reliable testimony."

"This request is based on the fact that the complaining witness has a history of criminal activity and behavior, which includes alcohol abuse, drug abuse, and dishonesty, all conduct which indicate mental, emotional and/or physical problems, which affect her credibility as a witness," the defense said in court papers.

District Attorney Mike Nifong, who has not granted an interview about the case in weeks, refused to comment.

Last week, Seligmann, of Essex Fells, N.J., was indicted on rape charges along with teammate Collin Finnerty of Garden City, N.Y.

Authorities believe they were two of the three white men who the 27-year-old black woman says raped her in a bathroom of a house March 13.

Minutemen gearing up to play at Fenway Park

Baseball from page 12

UMass enters Tuesday's contest off of arguably their most successful series of the spring. The Minutemen are fresh off a three-game sweep of the St. Louis Billikens after a weekend trip to Missouri.

For the first time this season the Maroon and White put together a balance of pitching, defense and offense for an entire weekend series. UMass starting pitchers went a combined 21.2 innings and gave up just 10 earned runs.

"We really did everything pretty well," Stone said. "We did a lot of things offensively and played solid defense. We played with a lot of unity. We were inspired and made a lot of things happen."

During practice last week, there was speculation as to whether or not Game 3 starter, Rory McDonald, was even going to be able to play due to illness. Instead, all he did was pitch nine innings, toss four strikeouts and allow just two earned runs.

"Friday, [McDonald] pitched a bullpen [session] and was not 100 percent. He felt better on Saturday and was ready to go on Sunday," Stone said of his ace. "I was surprised that he was able to go as long as he did but he pitched very well."

More important than anything, the sweep of the Billikens allowed the Minutemen to gain some much needed confidence going into their matchup with NU today. All-time against the Huskies, the two teams have been evenly matched, with UMass holding the 38-35 edge. Stone expects nothing to change when the two take the field at Fenway Park today.

Boston University
School of Public Health Summer Course
Antiretroviral Program Management Issues in Low Resource Settings

August 7 – August 18, 2006
Boston University

Until recently, medicines for HIV/AIDS were unavailable to people living in Africa, Asia, and most developing countries. While donors provide funding for purchase of medicines, there is limited capacity to distribute, prescribe, and dispense AIDS medicines in these countries.

This course brings together policy makers and program managers from around the world to discuss issues related to ensuring successful HIV/AIDS treatment programs; consistent uninterrupted supplies of ARV's, appropriate ARV prescribing, and adherence by consumers.

Boston University School of Public Health

To request an application
e-mail spetty@bu.edu
www.bu.edu/sph/siih

An equal opportunity, affirmative action institution

UMass looks to avoid the trap

Lacrosse from page 12

side of the won/loss column, the Minutemen can't slip up anymore if they wish to impress the NCAA Tournament selection committee, which is a hard group to earn a sparkling eye from if your team plays north of Maryland and doesn't wear blue and orange.

Fairfield is in its first year in the ECAC after making the switch from the Great Western Lacrosse League, a move that was driven by the luxury of cutting down travel costs for the team located on the east coast.

And by adding an eighth team to the conference, the ECAC added some insurance to protect its automatic qualifier into the NCAA Tournament, which it will regain next year after losing the AQ following the 2003 season when Navy and Maryland-Baltimore County bolted, leaving the league hanging out to dry.

The marriage between Fairfield and the ECAC appears to be one that works, and the Stags proved they belong in the tough conference by upsetting No. 16 Loyola, 13-12, just three days ago. For Fairfield to follow up their first great win in their new digs with another one today, the Stags will need to come back down to earth quickly. Likewise, the Minutemen will need to regroup after their crushing loss to the Hoyas.

"Whoever is a little bit more focused on the mental part of the game [will benefit] because guys are going to be tired on both teams," Cannella said. "We're both coming off of emotional games. Theirs was an emotional victory, and ours was an emotional loss. That takes a lot out of you, and it usually takes a couple days before you get back to 100 percent. That will be the challenge for both teams."

A vital challenge for the Minutemen once again lies in the hands of senior captain and face-off specialist Jake Deane, who had an uncharacteristic performance against Georgetown's Christiaan Trunz, losing 11-of-17 draws. Fairfield's Charlie Keinath won 15-of-25 in the Stags' victory over the Greyhounds over the weekend.

"[Keinath] is tough," Cannella said. "He is a relentless player. Whether he wins it or not, he is going to chase you down or lead the break. He has done a really good job, and it's a challenge for our face-off guys."

Another inconsistency for the Minutemen has been their first stride out of the starting blocks. They jumped out to a 5-0 lead in their win over Hobart on April 16, but also turned the ball over seven times in the first seven minutes. And in Washington D.C. on Saturday, they fell behind 3-0 to the Hoyas and never recovered.

"We need to play a little bit better early," Cannella acknowledged. "We weren't very good early in that game. We turned the ball over on the clear twice and threw the ball away on offense twice. When you're playing good teams in big games, you can't do that early in the game, especially on the road. Now that we're at home, we want to get off to a great start."

So what's in a name? Juliet sure didn't care.

And while the average fan in attendance at Garber Field today may think that Fairfield lacks that desirable Broadway appeal, Cannella and the Gorillas will still try to produce an Academy Award winning performance.

UMass freshman attackman Jim Connolly has scored 12 goals and helped out with four assists in the first 11 games of the season. His 16 points have him tied for the fourth-most on the team and most among rookies.

SENIORS,
all upcoming graduates
Don't wait any longer.
Start your JOB SEARCH.

LOOK INTO: Job Searching Online Workshops
Check out the workshop calendar ONLINE @ www.umass.edu/careers

Career Services
511 Goodell
M-F, 9-4:30pm
545-2224

Monday's @ 7pm in Calipari Rm/library
Tuesdays's @ 2:30pm in 508 Goodell

UMassAmherst
University of Massachusetts Amherst Student Affairs and Campus Life

Texans still looking at Bush for top pick

By Dave Goldberg
Associated Press

USC halfback Reggie Bush has gotten used to breaking away from the defense, as he did here against Texas in the Rose Bowl back in January. Bush has also appeared to have given himself enough distance between the rest of the field for this weekend's NFL Draft, and should be the first overall pick when the Texans are officially on the clock.

NEW YORK – A week ago, there were rumors out of Houston that had the Texans leaning away from taking Reggie Bush with the No. 1 pick and toward Mario Williams, the North Carolina State defensive end who is supposed to be a cross between Julius Peppers and Lawrence Taylor.

Indeed, they even began talking with Williams. Disinformation, perhaps, but standard.

More than any other, this draft has been full of that kind of thing.

On the Web. On talk radio. Everywhere. The NFL draft, which will take place Saturday and Sunday at Radio City Music Hall, has become football's most overanalyzed event, even by the people in charge. What prospective draftees did on the field last fall has been forgotten in the tempest from January through April.

Consider Vince Young's Wonderlic score. Lenl Jale White's weight gain and hamstring injury. Jimmy Williams' supposedly lackadaisical attitude. And the endless debate over whether Jay Cutler, the Vanderbilt quarterback, belongs with Matt Leinart and Young at the top of the quarterback pool.

Remember that the draft is really a crapshoot. First-rounders often fail, second-rounders and lower succeed, as did linebacker Lofa Tatupu, who as a second-round rookie last season led a defense that helped Seattle to an NFC championship.

Remember also that everyone lies. Or says nothing. "You know this is a time when nobody really ever really kind of tells the truth about what they plan to do," Miami coach Nick Saban said last week. "I certainly would never deceive you in anything that I told you, so rather than deceive you, I would just rather not tell you certain things."

"Certain things" almost surely start with Bush, described by some as the next Gale Sayers. Or the next Barry Sanders. He's a unique talent who can turn a game on one play.

So when Paul Tagliabue calls to order his final NFL draft as commissioner, Houston will use it on Reggie Bush, RB, Southern Cal.

2. New Orleans: After signing Drew Brees, the Saints brought in Leinart for a workout. Is that because Brees is coming off shoulder surgery? Or is it to suggest to the Titans and Jets that they have to trade up to get him? Linebacker A.J. Hawk, but more likely: D'Brickashaw Ferguson, OT, Virginia.

3. Tennessee: Norm Chow, the offensive coordinator, had the same job at Southern Cal and tutored Leinart. The Titans might like Vince Young, but Matt Leinart, QB, Southern Cal, is the safer pick.

4. New York Jets: They have a sore shouldered Chad Pennington and the newly obtained Patrick Ramsey. Both are ifs, so they could move up to second for Leinart – with the 29th and 35th picks as bait. If not, Mario Williams, DE, North Carolina State.

5. Green Bay: One reason Brett Favre keeps putting off his decision on retirement is the sorry state of the Packers. A.J. Hawk, LB, Ohio State, won't turn them around for Favre's last season, but eventually should be an impact player.

6. San Francisco: Another team that needs everything, and could move up using the newly acquired 22nd pick for Williams or Hawk. If not, Vernon Davis, TE, Maryland, seems to be a special athlete at a position that's in vogue.

7. Oakland: The Raiders have Aaron Brooks, who finally wore out the Saints' patience Vince Young, QB, Texas, is an Al Davis type pick who might be something special.

8. Buffalo: One mistake a year ago was letting Pat Williams go to the Vikings. Williams is listed at 320 pounds. Maybe 420? Whatever, Brodrick Bunkley, DT, Florida State is a svelte 306 – or so they say. He fits the purpose.

9. Detroit: The Lions have taken Charles Rogers, Roy Williams and Mike Williams the last three years and for a variety of reasons still don't have a healthy No. 1 wide receiver. Roy is from Texas, as is Mike Huff, DB, Texas.

10. Arizona: No matter how good Larry Fitzgerald is (he's very good), the Cardinals might have been better off with Ben Roethlisberger or Philip Rivers two years ago. Kurt Warner was Eli Manning's caddie in New York, so he can do the same for Jay Cutler, QB, Vanderbilt. Dennis Green has actually said he'll take him here if he falls; see above for untruths.

11. St. Louis: The Rams replaced coach Mike Martz with Scott Linehan, another offensive guy. But they need defense, especially at tackle. Haloti Ngata, DT, Oregon, even though the Rams have used three first-round picks at that position since 2001.

12. Cleveland: The Browns were aggressive during the offseason, signing LB Willie McGinest from New England to help Romeo Crennel's young charges learn the 3-4 defense. Willie can be especially useful with Kamerion Wimbley, DE/LB, Florida State, who Crennel hopes will stay healthier than the last two No. 1s, Kellen Winslow and Braylon Edwards.

13. Baltimore: Would take Young or Cutler. Instead, a bookend for Jonathan Ogden – Winston Justice, OT, the third Southern Cal player chosen.

14. Philadelphia: The Eagles like aggressive defenders, a description that fits Erne Sims, LB, Florida State. The reservation is five concussions in college.

15. Denver: Tatum Bell is a part-timer and so is Ron Dayne. The Bengals always seem to get productive running backs late, but why not the explosive DeAngelo Williams, RB, Memphis.

16. Miami: Sam Madison was a salary cap casualty. Jimmy Williams, DB, Virginia Tech, has been falling for a variety of reasons. Not past this spot.

17. Minnesota: One of a bunch of teams that could use linebackers in a draft with a lot of good ones. Chad Greenway, LB, Iowa.

18. Dallas: Roy Williams is a ferocious hitter who caused the NFL's changed rules to keep him from using the "horse-collar" tackle. He can use a partner who can cover. Jason Allen, S, Tennessee.

19. San Diego: When your best receiver is 36-year-old Keenan McCardell, you need young speed. Santonio Holmes, WR, Ohio State.

20. Kansas City: Fresh blood for the annual defensive overhaul. Tye Hill, CB, Clemson.

21. New England: Bill Belichick was a young assistant in the Meadowlands when Rob Carpenter was a Giants running back. Rob's son, Bobby Carpenter, LB, Ohio State.

22. San Francisco: The 49ers got this pick in a deal with Denver and might try to package it to move up for Hawk or Williams. If not, Manny Lawson, DE/LB, North Carolina State, a much-needed pass rusher.

23. Tampa Bay: Brian Kelly and Ronde Barber are 31 and 30, respectively, but old enough to start breaking in Antonio Cromartie, CB, Florida State, who can take his time recovering from a knee injury.

24. Cincinnati: No one in Cincinnati remembers when the Bengals drafted this low. Defense is still a need. Donte Whitner, S, Ohio State.

25. New York Giants: They were set to take a linebacker. Now they have LaVar Arrington, making the need more pressing. Ashton Youboty, CB, Ohio State, although they could trade down for needed defensive tackle help or even a running back.

26. Chicago: Plenty of defense. Desperate for offense. Chad Jackson, WR, Florida.

27. Carolina: The Panthers played the NFC title game with third- and fourth-string running backs. Laurence Maroney, RB, Minnesota.

28. Jacksonville: First-round centers are rare. But ... Nick Mangold, C, Ohio State, the sixth guy from a team that didn't even win the Big Ten title.

29. New York Jets: This pick could be in New Orleans if the Jets make a deal. If not, Marcus McNeill, OT, Auburn.

30. Indianapolis: Maybe Joseph Addai, RB, LSU, is Edgerrin James.

31. Seattle: The Seahawks had no dominant outside pass rusher last season. Mathias Kiwanuka, DE, Boston College.

32. Pittsburgh: Troy Polamalu is a stud safety from Southern Cal. How about another one: Darnell Bing, S, Southern Cal.

Draft experts don't always get it right, despite what they say

By Jerome Minerva
Associated Press

NEW YORK – Who says NFL scouts know everything?

They missed on Antonio Gates, now considered the best tight end in football.

They missed on Kurt Warner, who merely became a two-time NFL Most Valuable Player and an MVP of the Super Bowl. And on Rod Smith, who's fourth on the career yards receiving list among active players.

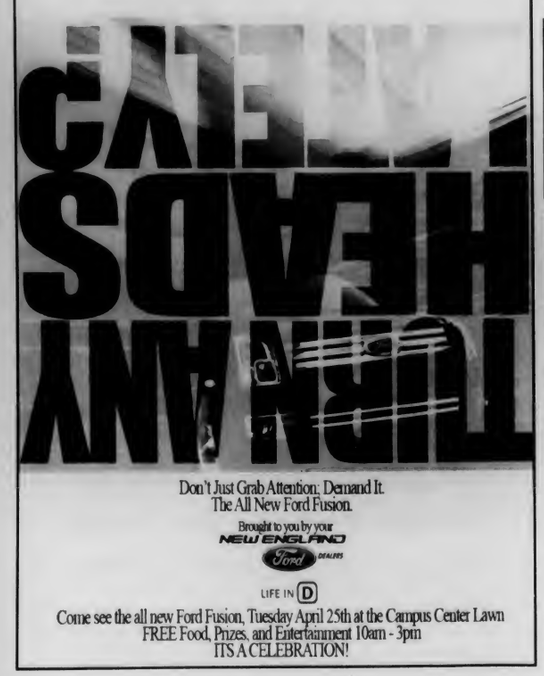
All those players didn't go in the first round of the draft. In fact, they didn't go in any rounds.

Despite all the poking and prodding at the NFL Combine each year, players deemed too small, too slow or too injured invariably go on to become stars in the NFL after being passed over by personnel directors and general managers.

So who will be this year's Priest Holmes? Dick Vermeil, for one, doesn't pretend to have the answer.

"You'd like to believe that we're all smart enough to draft them anyway, but none of us are, obviously," the former Chiefs coach said.

Holmes went undrafted in 1997 after an injury-filled career at Texas, but latched on with the Ravens as a free agent. After showing a glimmer of his potential, he signed with the Chiefs in 2001. Holmes went on to rush for a league-record 27 touchdowns in 2003, a mark broken last season by NFL MVP Shaun Alexander.



Vermeil, who won a Super Bowl with the Rams in 1999, said teams don't take it lightly when they miss on evaluating a player.

"I think every time someone misses on somebody that glaringly, they go back and evaluate their reports, evaluate the scouts that wrote the reports. They deeply evaluate the whole situation better and see where they made a mistake, or if they did," Vermeil told The Associated Press in a telephone interview.

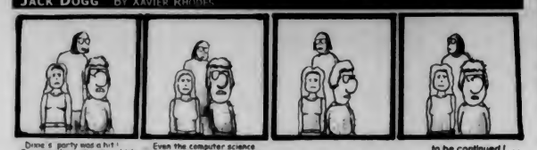
"Many times there's little, mitigating circumstances that just prevented ... you didn't think a guy would drop from a first-round pick [to] out of the draft. Maybe he drops to a sixth- or seventh-round pick. So, I think people do go and re-evaluate everything."

Warner may have the most improbable success story. Undrafted out of Northern Iowa, he played in the Arena Football League and then NFL Europe.

He finally got his shot in St. Louis when starting quarterback Trent Green went down with a knee injury in the 1999 preseason. Vermeil stuck Warner in the lineup, leading to a storybook career he's still writing in Arizona.

Looking for a GREAT summer job?
♦Work outside
♦Make $8-12/hr
♦Have a cool boss
♦We train you!
Positions available in: Needham, Plymouth/Carver, Weatherough, Sturbridge, South Hadley, Long Meadow, Greenfield, Amherst, Holyoke
Give us a call @ 617-642-6495

LABRAT By Richard Martell

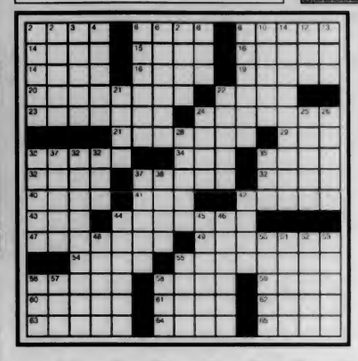


ELSIE HOOPER By Robert D. Kerbaugh

PAUL By Bill O'Keefe

JACK DOGG By Xavier Rhodes

THE FAMILY MONSTER By Josh Shaler



ACROSS
1 Goes one better than
5 Back talk
9 Huge
14 Spirited vigor
15 Opposed to 16 Girder
17 Pinta's sister ship
18 MPH word
19 Works hard
20 Excessively compensated
22 Shoos
23 Brush up on
24 Cowboy hat
27 Florida A&M player
29 Even the score
30 Trunk lira
34 Regret bitterly
35 Churns
36 Bear in the air
37 Ice-cream flavor word
39 Editor's notation
40 Greatest amount
41 Resistance unit
42 Marina structures
43 Blvd crosser
44 Cartilage
47 State of ease
49 Metal cutter
54 Sound like an ass
55 Casual appellation
56 Rent anew
58 Cry of a goose
59 Isle of exile
60 Mountain ridge
61 Advise strongly
62 Declare positively
63 Billiards shot
64 Kind of chair
65 Hunky-

DOWN
1 Caruso or Pavarotti
2 Martini garnish
3 Type of discussion
4 Trap
5 Largest desert
6 Consecrate with oil
7 Cuff fastener
8 Knight's title
9 Carelessly discarded rubbish
10 Approximately
11 Put back to use
12 Four qts
13 Printer's measures
21 Peel
22 Alloy of iron and carbon
24 Disparaging remark
25 Edmonton skater
26 Aeries
28 Removes fat
30 Poisonous plant
31 Utah city
32 Gathers
33 Squealer
35 Greek letter
37 Regretful
38 Least possible amount
42 Light hasty kiss
44 Chin beard
45 Personal belongings
46 Servile follower
48 Worries
50 Work dough
51 Actress Anderson
52 Brownish yellow
53 Very tired
55 Aida's mistress
56 St. Louis pro
57 Period
58 Shade of color

Find today's answers online
www.dailycollegian.com

THE HARP
NEW!! Wireless Internet
OCMP & All Credit Cards accepted
Irish Pub
APRIL SPECIAL!
Honey Brown, Molson
$2.00 a pint / $6.50 a pitcher
TONIGHT: • Trivia Night!
Trivia Night!
Trivia Night!
WED: • Cold Duck Complex
"Come Party Like You're Irish!"
413-548-6900 www.theharp.net
163 Sunderland Rd. - N. Amherst
just north of the apartments

Submit your comic!
e-mail collegiancomics@yahoo.com

HOROSCOPES

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
You will see a form of Abraham Lincoln in your significant other. Prepare.

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
You will never be sick again after your current illness and subsequent death.

aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
Everytime you use the word "like" inappropriately, you lose a minute of life.

taurus Apr. 20-May 20
When fate comes knocking, don't turn it down because it has love handles.

gemini May 21-Jun. 21
When you look someone in the eye, you steal a bit of their soul.

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
If ever you get stranded in a dessert, don't try to eat your way out.

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
Don't eat the pickles today. They will make you violently ill.

virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
When the man gets you down, don't fight it. That's called resisting arrest.

libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22
You will be given free alcohol next time you go home. Too bad it's Listerine.

scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
At night, the cricket chirps whilst the drunk yells annoyingly. Don't do that.

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Financial prosperity will benefit you today.

capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
By siphoning gas, you are being quite economical.

QUOTE OF THE DAY

"Don't do drugs, don't have unprotected sex, don't be violent. Leave that to me." —Eminem

Applications for COMICS EDITOR for the 2006-2007 school year are now OPEN
Pick up an application in the Collegian offices (located in the Campus Center basement) or e-mail: collegiancomics@yahoo.com
APPLICATIONS ARE DUE BY MONDAY, MAY 1

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Like to party? I handle every curve with perfection and have a soft interior. Meet me, the Ford Fusion, outside the Campus Center on April 25th between 10 AM and 3 PM. Brought to you by your New England Ford Dealers.

Be and do something bigger than yourself in college Learn, Lead, and Suceed Army ROTC www.umass.edu/armyrotc

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing, 1& 2 bedroom apts. Leases begin June, July, Aug or Sep. First come, first serve. Get them while they last. www.brandywine-apts.com stop by or call 549-0600

APARTMENT FOR RENT

2 bedroom $1100 3 bedroom $1400 4 bedroom $2150 Now Accepting Applications 253-7377 millvalleyestates@winn-co.com

Amherst Spacious 2 BR Bus Laundry Near Center 6/1 $1025 413-335-5226

Center of Town 1, 2, 3 bedrooms; hardwood floors. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

AUTO FOR SALE

88 Toyota Camry DLX, automatic, 128K. Well maintained, clean, air, radio cassette, power locks/ windows. Ask $1,500. Call 253-8106 or daphne@econs.umass.edu

CHILDCARE

Amherst Center family looking for parents helper in exchange for housing everything included. Call 413-687-2710

EMPLOYMENT

Full time summer employment at the Housing Assignment Office, $8.50/hour. Visit the HAO at 235 Whitmore to pick up application.

PAINTERS NEEDED! Hundreds of positions available throughout New England. Work outside with your friends and family in your hometown. No experience needed, training provided. Join large student painting company this summer. Hiring now! 888-277-9787, www.collegepro.com

EMPLOYMENT

Painters Part-Fulltime 3-5 yrs Exp. Vehicle Nesc. Call Mike 413-367-9810

Furniture porter and maintenance person needed for busy auction gallery on Nantucket Island this summer. (508) 228-3942

Rent us your Ears! Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu Voicemail: 545-6837

Bartending $300/Day potential. No experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 x162

FOR SALE

"Tiktaalik roseae... Time is Running Out for Intelligent Design."

FOR SALE

Celebrate the discovery of the missing link between fish and land animals with fishapod clothing and gifts at http://www.cafepress.com/tiktaalikroseae

ROOM FOR RENT

1 Bedroom in 4 Bedroom House- 379 Strong St for June, July, and Aug Sharing with 3 women at $402.00 a month. Call Sera at 1-339-440-0234

Female to share with another friendly Sublet June 1 – August 31. $430 with everything included. Call Sandra 774-826-9597

CAPE COD Summer rooms. Hyannis area. Private pond. $150 a week includes ... (508) 428-3456

SERVICES

Legal questions? We have answers at the Student Legal Services Office, 922 Campus Center or Call 545-1995

PREGNANCY TESTING, HIV TESTING, Birth control, and Emergency Contraception. STI Screening and Treatment. Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992.

Pentium Color laptops $99 We type term papers, resumes, cover letters. 413-584-8857

COLLEGIAN ADVERTISING: Now Offering Online Classifieds! Check out: www.dailycollegian.com

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS TUESDAY

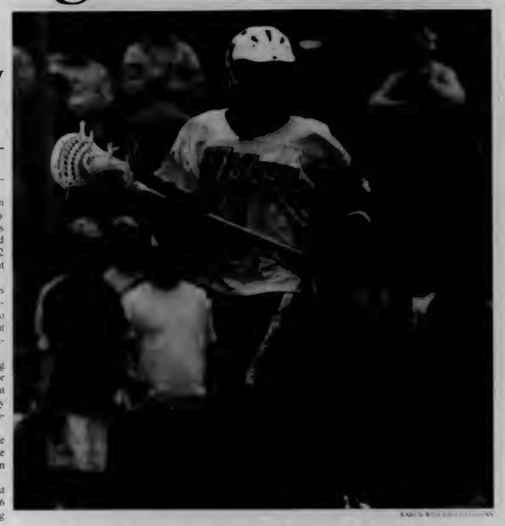
TUESDAY, APRIL 25, 2006 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

UMass gets back at it

Fairfield on tap today at Garber

By Jeff Howe
Collegian Staff

What's in a name?



It's a question that came from the pen of William Shakespeare, and it's the story of today's game between the Massachusetts men's lacrosse team (8-3, 3-2 ECAC) and first-time conference foe Fairfield (5-6, 3-2 ECAC), which is set to start at 4 p.m. at Garber Field.

Following a weekend loss to the hands of the heralded Georgetown Hoyas and preceding this Saturday's ultra-hyped trip to Syracuse's Carrier Dome, UMass' opponent this afternoon lacks that aura of having box-office-celebrity name recognition.

But don't tell that to UMass coach Greg Cannella, or anyone who plays for him or even anyone on the Fairfield roster for that matter. The Stags sure won't be impressed by being sandwiched in the middle of the toughest week of UMass' year.

And at the same time, Cannella and the Minutemen aren't ones to care about the name on their opposition's chest. Nor can they afford to.

With just three games to play – against Fairfield, Syracuse and Rutgers on May 6 – and three tallies already on the wrong

UMass junior midfielder Brian Jacovina has been solid throughout the season for the Minutemen, scoring five goals and dumping off eight assists. He will look to guide the Gorillas past Fairfield today.

See LACROSSE on page 9

Minutemen looking for success at Fenway

By Jon Pelland
Collegian Staff

For some, it is a baseball chapel. For others, it's a shrine and more than likely someday it will be a national historical site. The place is Fenway Park, home of the Boston Red Sox. For a few hours today, however, it will be home to the Massachusetts baseball team.

The Minutemen (9-18, 7-8 Atlantic 10) travel to The Fens today to take on Northeastern (18-15, 12-6 CAA) in the consolation game of the Beanpot Tournament. The first pitch is scheduled for 1 p.m.

Fenway Park is a place nearly every Massachusetts-born kid dreams of playing a baseball game. Beginning with the first time they lay eyes on the 94-year-old stadium, they imagine themselves hitting a walk-off home run over the Green Monster or making a diving catch to save a game in right field in front Pesky's Pole.

This year marks the 17th annual Beanpot Tournament held at Fenway. The final of the 2006 edition will be decided between the Boston College Eagles and the Harvard Crimson. That game will begin at 5 p.m.

In the opening round of the tournament last Tuesday, the Eagles downed UMass by a score of 11-3 to reach the championship game. BC jumped out to an early lead in the game at Fraser Field in Lynn. The Minutemen never got to within five runs as the Eagles posted four-spot in the first inning, three in the third and added four more in the eighth the seal the win.

Without a doubt, playing in a major league ballpark like Fenway will he a little bit different than what the Minutemen are normally used to. UMass coach Mike Stone commented on how his team will not be taking batting practice before the game in favor of more repetitions of infield practice because the Fenway surface is different than what the team is used to.

Stone also commented on how, from a motivational stand point, a coach doesn't have to do much to get his team ready to play.

"It's always special that our guys are able to play at Fenway Park, especially for the kids that we have on our ball club," he said. "Most of our team is from Massachusetts, and they're all Red Sox fans. Any opportunity to play at Fenway is a special day."

Some may wonder if playing on such a stage may pose as a distraction for a team, but Stone said he doesn't think that kind of thing will affect his club.

"It's a positive thing," he said. "You get a chance to play [at Fenway]."

See BASEBALL on page 9

UMass baseball coach Mike Stone (center) is looking for a strong showing out of his Minutemen in the Beanpot consolation game at Fenway Park today.

Maroon and White track teams successful

By Domenic Poli
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts track and field teams took a trip to Storrs, Conn. for the UConn Invitational on Saturday. Despite the miserable weather conditions that made competition even more difficult, the men managed to place third out of five teams, while the Minutewomen finished fifth out of seven.

The weather at UConn was like that of the rest of the east coast on Saturday. UMass men's coach Ken O'Brien said the temperature was in the mid-40s, with a cold, steady rain making every event a challenge.

"There are three tough condition in track to work with. One is cold, one is rain and one is wind," O'Brien said. "We had two [cold and rain] out of the three."

O'Brien complimented all of his athletes for persevering through the elements.

Junior Erik Hoagland continued his reign of success in the jumping events. He is now a perfect 4-0 in the long jump after claiming another victory, this one with a mark of 23 feet, 8.25 inches. The leap, the second-longest in school history, automatically qualifies him for the IC4A Championships at the season's end.

Hoagland also recorded a season-best mark of 46 feet, 3.5 inches, to take second place in the triple-jump.

"[His performance] was really outstanding," O'Brien said.

Freshman Jesse Regnier captured another second-place finish for the Maroon and White. He ran a time of 15:20.19 to finish runner-up to UConn sophomore William Melofchik, who won in dominating fashion in 14:59.25.

O'Brien mentioned that sophomore Nathan Barksdale provided two solid performances for his team. With a time of 22.99, Barksdale took fourth in the 200-meter dash and later finished seventh in the 400-meters, crossing the finish line in 50.72.

Freshman Kevin Ianetta, junior Jonathon Morse and freshman Steve Gerome finished in fourth, fifth and sixth place, respectively, in the 110-meter hurdles. With individual times of 15.93, 16.91 and 17.02, all three Minutemen finished in point-scoring range.

Ianetta also racked up points in the 400-meter hurdles, which he ran in 56.33.

The dreadful weather conditions made itself known to the Minutewomen as well.

"It's never fun to compete in cold, rainy weather," UMass women's coach Julie LaFreniere said. "But, I think we had some good performances overall."

For the first time in three meets, freshman Jordan Veney did not win the shot put, finishing second with chuck of 42 feet, 5.5 inches. She did, however, place first in the discus event with a season-best distance of 144 feet, 10 inches, passing her old mark by over 8.5 feet. She also improved her distance in the hammer throw to 131 feet, 7 inches, claiming ninth place.

Veney was named the Atlantic 10 Co-Rookie of the Week for her solid performances.

LaFreniere mentioned other contributors like sophomore Christina DeRosa, junior Katelyn O'Toole and senior Ashley Creel.

DeRosa finished second in the 5,000-meters in 17:33.06 and sixth in the 1,500 meters with a personal record of 4:48.29.

O'Toole picked up 1.5 points by finishing fifth in the high jump with a height of 5 feet, 1 inch. She finished two spots behind Creel, who jumped 5 feet, 3 inches, winning six points.

Sophomore Kristen Bakanowski finished third in the pole vault, clearing a height of 11 feet, 0.25 inches. It was evident, however, that something was missing.

According to LaFreniere, in order to heal Bakanowski's ailing take-off foot, the intensity of her practices was significantly reduced. Though her foot is feeling better, the decreased workload at practice lost her a little quickness that she would normally use to gain more speed and thus higher leaps.

UM cruises to third in A-10 tennis tourney

By Eli Rosenwaike
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts tennis team (11-9, 3-1 Atlantic 10) traveled down to Monroeville, Pa to compete in the 24th annual Atlantic 10 Women's Tennis Championship over the weekend. While the Minutewomen did not advance quite as far as they did last year when they lost in the championship match to Richmond, they performed very impressively en route to a third-place finish.

In the opening round, the fourth-seeded UMass squad easily dismantled a La Salle team in which they've never fallen to. The Maroon and White took the doubles point without any problem, combining to win 22 out of 23 games in the three doubles matches.

Singles play went just as well for UMass, as it won in straight sets at Nos. 1, 5 and 6 singles. The other three matches weren't finished since the outcome of the first-round match had already been decided in their favor.

The second-round match against fifth-seeded Duquesne went very much like the first-round match for the Minutewomen. They started out strong, capturing the doubles point with strong performances in each of the three doubles matches.

In the singles matches, Duquesne dropped Nos. 1, 4 and 6 singles to succumb to the UMass team 4-0. Just like in the first round, the other three matches were not completed, as they wouldn't have affected the outcome.

With its second-round win, UMass advanced to the conference semifinals against the feared No. 1 seeded Richmond Spiders. In last year's A-10 Championship match, the Spiders took down the Minutewomen to capture their second straight conference title.

UMass was looking to exact revenge against its conference foes and get back to the championship match once again. By doing so, the Minutewomen would have to not only beat a team that was heavily favored to win the tournament, but also beat a team that they lost to earlier on in the spring season.

After beating Duquesne earlier in the day, the Minutewomen simply didn't have enough left in the tank to take down the top-seeded Spiders. Richmond took the match 4-0, but UMass kept many of the matches close. Despite losing the match, the Maroon and White still had something to play for as it was pit against Xavier for the third-place match on Sunday afternoon.

In what may have been the most exciting match in the whole tournament, the Minutewomen showed how mentally tough they were in completing a massive comeback against the third-seeded Xavier team. Leading the match 3-0, Xavier just needed to take one more match to secure the third-place crown in the tournament.

UMass fell behind early as Xavier took the doubles point after a thrilling match at No. 3 doubles. After that, Xavier won matches at Nos. 3 and 6 singles, both in straight sets, to jump out to a commanding 3-0 lead.

UMass coach Judy Dixon and her team were backed into a serious corner. To capture the match and a third-place finish, they had to win each of the four remaining singles matches and that is exactly what they did. Senior Dorothy Iwanowicz won her match in straight sets, as did freshman Stephanie Gimenez.

Sophomore Masha Pozar won in a long three-set match, and junior Michelle Spiess won at No. 1 singles in a hard-fought straight-set win.

Game against CCSU postponed

By Eric Athas
Collegian Staff

After a back-and-forth weekend, the Massachusetts softball team will look to rebound when it takes on Central Connecticut (5-29) tomorrow at 3:30 p.m. in New Britain, Conn. The contest was originally scheduled to take place this afternoon, but it was bumped back a day due to a rainy forecast.

The Minutewomen (27-13, 12-2) are coming off of a whirlwind of a doubleheader against the Billikens, in which they were not able to muster a single run in Game 1, but followed with a 13-run extravaganza in Game 2. The 1-0 loss in Game 1 was the first defeat since April 9, and only the second since March 19. And although the Billikens are an A-10 foe, UMass still remains in the top slot of the conference standings as it takes on CCSU tomorrow.

Despite holding a record below the .500 mark, and only five wins, the Blue Devils are coming off of their best outing of the 2006 season. Before the start of last week, CCSU was literally at the bottom of the barrel. The Blue Devils had only two victories to show for out of 31 total contests. After a doubleheader split against Fairleigh Dickinson on April 15, the Blue Devils went on to sweep St. Francis in a doubleheader on April 18 by a total margin of 22-5.

One member of the CCSU squad that has been a major factor in the team's recent success has been Townsend, Mass. native Pam Shifrin. The junior leads the Blue Devils in RBIs with 20, as well as home runs with five. Her .500 slugging percentage is also a team-high.

Although CCSU has three pitchers to choose from, it has been a rookie who has collected most of the wins for the team. Freshman Brittany Salvatore has a record of 4-6, while posting a team-high 47 strikeouts and compiling an ERA of 6.63.

For UMass, a mix of veteran stability and freshman surprises has been the trend all season long. Rookie pitcher Brandice Balshmiter picked up her eighth A-10 honor yesterday. Balshmiter was named the A-10 co-Rookie of the Week for her performances last week.

Balshmiter also is the top defensive leader for the Minutewomen, with an ERA of 0.68, a record of 20-7, and a strikeout total of 209. While she was handed her seventh loss of the season in Game 1 on Sunday, she only allowed one hit, and surrendered no earned runs.

The other freshman who has fans wide-eyed is Whitney Mollica, whose .407 batting average, 50 hits, 13 doubles, three triples, nine home runs, 48 RBIs, and a slugging percentage of .780 are all team-highs. As a team, the Minutewomen have racked up a whopping season total of 28 homers and 200 RBIs, as six players have a batting average over the .300 mark.

Wednesday's single game against the Blue Devils will be a break from conference play, before the Minutewomen return home on Friday to face Dayton at the UMass Softball Complex.

UMass senior outfielder Lesley Ferrara has batted .270 this season with 12 RBI and 12 runs scored while appearing in all 40 games.

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY · EST. 1890

The Daily Collegian

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 26, 2006 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM VOLUME CXVI ISSUE 122

Amherst police teach "Road Respect"

By Chanel Figueiredo
Collegian Correspondent

The Amherst Police Department recently conducted a "Road Respect" campaign in an effort to reduce distracted and aggressive driving on town roads.

The three-week project, which began on March 27, is the third of four installments funded by a $12,000 grant from the Governor's Highway Safety Bureau as part of a statewide effort to create safer roadways through education by enforcement of traffic laws.

Police departments across the state simultaneously participate in each safety campaign with the hope that "saturated patrols will get the message across," said Lieutenant Jennifer Gundersen of the Amherst Police.

"Traffic enforcement details were set up in areas identified as high-liability for dangerous driving," said Lt. Gundersen, citing areas along Route 9 and Lincoln Avenue.

Off-duty officers were hired by the police department to respond solely to traffic violations such as speeding, red light and stop sign violations, seatbelt violations, and following too closely.

"Amherst has a higher-than-normal rate of accidents, especially during September and May. We attribute this to the fact that many of our drivers are out-of-state students who are not familiar with the traffic laws in Massachusetts," said Lt. Gundersen.

Gundersen is hopeful that the campaign will affect both targeted areas and areas where new traffic postings have been erected.

"The first priority is education," said Lt. Gundersen. "We have been doing these types of grant-funded educational programs for several years and have found that the wearing of seatbelts is rising, so we feel that our efforts are paying off."

University of Massachusetts student response to the campaign has been mixed.

"I would think it would be an area for a lot of dangerous driving because of the college area," said Shikamana Makalani, a senior biology major.

Makalani is concerned that the intent of the campaign has the potential to be in the wrong place.

"I like the idea of making roads safer, I'm just afraid that they might start pulling people over just to produce or fill a quota because the state has given them money," said Makalani.

Tiffany Hammil, a senior legal studies major, also likes the idea, but said there are bigger problems with driving than "right on red" violations.

"I feel like their resources would be put to better use in another area," said Hammil.

According to a recent press release, in the fiscal year 2005, the Amherst Police Department responded to approximately 1,000 motor vehicle crashes and complaints. Over 10 percent of those involved injuries. Distracted driving (the presence of anything that can distract a driver's physical and mental attention from driving) is estimated to be a factor in between 25 percent to 50 percent of all national crashes — between 4,000 and 8,000 crashes every day.

Other campaigns required as part of the grant include "U Drink, U Drive, U Lose" and "Click It or Ticket."

Psychiatrist testifies Johnston not insane

By Dan O'Brien
Collegian Staff

NORTHAMPTON – Day 15 of the trial for accused killer Bryan Johnston took several twists and turns yesterday in Hampshire Superior Court, as the Dalton man's former friends and doctors testified to his oftentimes erratic behavior.

As Johnston's defense lawyers tried to prove he was insane when he shot to death his longtime friend David E. Sullivan, a forensic psychologist told jurors that Johnston did not meet the criteria for psychiatric hospitalization when he was examined after his arrest for Sullivan's homicide.

Johnston, who admitted to gunning down Sullivan, a University of Massachusetts student, pleaded not guilty by reason of insanity and claims to have suffered from psychotic delusions, according to defense attorney Alexander Nappan.

Bridgewater State Hospital forensic psychologist Dr. John Leonard Peebles testified that Johnston's thoughts were both "organized and directed" during his examination in late December 2004 and showed no signs of mental illness.

"[Johnston] never said he experienced hallucinations," Peebles said.

Johnston was not administered anti-psychotic medication, but was prescribed an anti-depressant drug during his stay at Bridgewater.

Dr. David B. Peterson, a medical doctor who worked in the emergency room of Noble Hospital in Westfield when Johnston was admitted in the hours after he killed Sullivan, testified yesterday that Johnston was a danger to himself and others when he arrived.

"He tipped the stretcher around ... [and] bounced it all over the room," Peterson said. "He said he was going to shoot us and kill us."

After being placed in four-point restraints, Johnston was injected with a chemical cocktail of drugs to sedate him.

Throughout the day, several of Johnston's old friends testified about his behavior leading up to Dec. 7, 2004, the day Johnston shot Sullivan several times in Sullivan's apartment at 105 Meadow St. in Amherst.

Jeff Rose, an acquaintance of Johnston, testified that while the two were studying criminal justice at Westfield State College in November 2003, he accompanied Johnston to hang out with some friends from Dalton and UMass at Sullivan's apartment in Amherst. Rose and Johnston both attended Waconah Regional High School and had some of the same friends, but the pair did not have a close friendship, according to Rose.

Rose testified that after a night of drinking at Sullivan's apartment, Johnston drove himself, Rose and another friend back to Westfield — an approximately 45-minute car ride down Interstate 91 — while intoxicated and acting recklessly.

"We got onto 91 and that's when he pulled out a gun and asked me to fire the gun," Rose said. When he declined, "[Johnston] then fired two shots into the northbound lanes."

Bruce Reardon, a Dalton resident who said Johnston and Sullivan were two of his "best friends," testified that Johnston made allegations that members of organized crime were trying to cause him harm.

Johnston studied during the 2002-2003 school year at Hawaii Pacific University until he suddenly moved back to Massachusetts without packing his personal belongings.

When offering an explanation to Reardon for his sudden departure, Johnston said he got involved in drug dealing with the "Korean mafia" and they were going to kill him because they thought he was "a snitch," Reardon said.

Reardon claimed he brushed off his friend's numerous allegations, including one that members of the Korean mafia were waiting to kill him outside a Hawaii restaurant one day. However, he would have a few threatening encounters with Johnston leading up to December 2004.

One such experience between Reardon and Johnston happened at Sullivan's apartment when the three and their other friends were hanging around outside, drinking beer.

Reardon said Johnston asked him to talk about something, so the two went inside Sullivan's apartment.

It was here where Johnston "pulled a gun out on me and said I was a snitch," Reardon said.

When Reardon pushed the gun away from Johnston, "he put the gun on me again and made me walk down the stairs," he said.

After going outside, Reardon said he got Sullivan, and brought him into the apartment to tell him what had just happened with Johnston.

According to Reardon, that's when "we heard a shot go off."

"Then Bryan came running up and said he shot a squirrel," Reardon said. "He was laughing like crazy."

Judge Bertha Josephson announced at the end of yesterday's proceedings that witness testimony would end today. Closing arguments from the prosecution and defense are expected to begin on Thursday.

Spellings summons SAT execs over errors

By Justin Pope
Associated Press

Education Secretary Margaret Spellings summoned executives from testing companies and the College Board to a meeting Tuesday that focused on industry practices in the wake of a high-profile scoring error on the SAT college entrance exam.

Deputy Education Secretary Ray Simon said Spellings called the hour-long meeting in Washington to discuss the SAT error and try to evaluate whether the testing industry can accurately handle the growing number of high-stakes, state-level tests under the No Child Left Behind law.

"From the very beginning we had concerns about the capacity of the companies to handle NCLB testing," Simon said in a telephone briefing for reporters. "These things were brought to a head with some of the recent scoring errors that have been reported. Obviously we're concerned about that. Is that going to be a trend? Is it an aberration?"

Simon said the testing companies insisted they were not overburdened. One company said it could handle three times its current volume, Simon said.

Last month, the College Board revealed a scoring error by Pearson Educational Measurement had resulted in more than 4,000 high school students receiving incorrectly low scores on the SAT exam they took in October. Pearson said the problem may have been caused by excessive moisture on answer sheets due to wet weather.

That error focused wider attention on the testing industry. A recent report by Thomas Toch of the Washington-based group Education Sector argued that a shortage of testing experts and pressure on the companies to return scores to the states quickly could compromise accuracy.

Simon said additional meetings with the industry are planned, and will include state officials.

Death by chocolate

Food allergies on the rise

United States Secretary of Education, Margaret Spellings, during an interview Thursday, April 20 in Washington.

By Teresa Chobot
Collegian Correspondent

The Diner Restaurant in Amherst has some of the most savory, delicate, mouth-watering desserts in the area. Visitors can't miss the dessert carousel as they walk in the front door. It has numerous desserts to choose from, including moist carrot cake, original New York style cheesecake, nutty chocolate brownies, whoopie pies, apple pie, french silk pie, apple crisp and chocolate chip cookies. If the guest wants it, they've got it.

The most appealing of all is the chocolate napoleon. Layer after layer of chocolate mousse and a buttery cream cheese rests between a soft, nutty and flaky pastry shell. This sounds delicious, doesn't it? Not to those who can't eat it.

"After only a few bites, my mouth began to tingle and my tongue became itchy in the back of my mouth. My throat began to close slowly. I chewed on ice and breadsticks to try and reverse the reaction. I lost the ability to speak with a clear voice, barely having one ... and proceeded to get blisters on the inside of my lips and cheeks," said senior Erica Lopez about her food allergies.

Food allergies are growing among Americans, and scientists can't figure out why. The Food Allergy and Anaphylaxis Network estimated that the number of people with food allergies has increased from 6 million to 11 million in the past five years. Having a food allergy isn't only dangerous, but it makes social situations difficult.

University of Massachusetts dietitian Dianne Sutherland thinks it is important for students with allergies to contact her before coming to UMass, but dining services finds out mostly only after a student has a reaction. Sutherland also emphasizes that it is the student's responsibility with a food allergy.

Sutherland said, "I also work with students with food allergies as I can send them weekly detailed menus and also introduce them to the managers/chefs at the DCs they are working in so the student can communicate with the staff regarding the allergies to ensure there is no cross contamination."

Students with allergies need to be careful in a college environment. Lopez has a list of many food allergies; she is severely allergic to walnuts and peanuts, soy and wheat. As a student, she found it difficult to eat at the Dining Commons.

"I would find it very scary when I would see meals prepared by the kitchens at the DC that had nut products in them that were not clearly labeled. These ranging from pasta dishes to desserts that would contain nuts," said Lopez. "Pesto sauce especially because the main ingredient is pine nuts. These would sometimes be labeled and sometimes not."

For Lopez, when eating at the DC she had to be more aware than eating at restaurants. Lopez said that restaurants usually do a good job of labeling ingredients in the menu.

Some of the most common food allergies are milk, peanuts, tree nuts, fish, shellfish, soy and wheat. These eight foods cause 90 percent of all food allergies, according to the Food Allergy and Anaphylaxis Network.

If someone with an allergy consumes their allergen, certain reactions could occur. The person with the allergy could become dizzy, stop breathing, get hives, body parts could swell, and even death is possible. This is called anaphylaxis — a sudden and severe allergic reaction.

When dining out, a person with a food allergy needs to be aware if certain products are used in the preparation of the meals. Bertucci's Brick Oven Restaurant Kitchen and Food Manager Russ Wells said that all of their dishes are peanut-free and that they work with people with food allergies to specifically make dishes suitable to their needs.

"Some of our pizzas have scallops and shrimp on them, so we have utensils specifically for cutting the seafood pizzas and utensils for the non-seafood pizzas to ensure that there is no cross contamination," said Wells.

Bertucci's uses 100 percent pure olive oil, so diners don't need to worry that their dishes are cooked in peanut oil.

See CHOCOLATE on page 2

ARTS & LIVING
ISLANDS SURFACE IN NORTHAMPTON
Canadian Indie rock band brings their antics to Northampton.
PAGE 8

EDITORIAL/OPINION
ENVIRONMENTAL ISSUES
Whether local issues or nationals, the only solution is compromise.
PAGE 6

WEATHER

TODAY	TONIGHT	TOMORROW
High 64	Low 38	High 65
Sunny	Partly Cloudy	Low 34
		Mostly Sunny

SPORTS
A GORILLA THRILLA'
UM mounts comeback to take 7-6 win over Fairfield.
PAGE 12

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Michael A. Busack
MANAGING EDITOR Eric Atha
BUSINESS MANAGER Nathan Chomsky
PRODUCTION MANAGER Nicholas Belanger
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Katie Huston
ADVERTISING MANAGER Kerrs O'Grady
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Lauren Egerian
EDITORIAL PRODUCTION Amanda Allen
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Ian Jones
COPIES EDITOR Amanda Allen
EDITORIAL EDITOR Kristen LaCasse
NEWS EDITOR Dan O'Brien
SPORTS EDITOR Jeff Howe
CIRCULATION MANAGER Thomas Hecht
DISTRIBUTION MANAGER Nick Gleason
FINANCE MANAGER Daniel Conti
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Caren Tortorici
ASSISTANT BUSINESS Phil Smoller
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Morgan-Ann Rousseau
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Alex Butler
ASSISTANT NEWS Megan Daley
ASSISTANT NEWS Matt Belliveau
ASSISTANT SPORTS Dan Duggan
ASSISTANT SPORTS Rob Greenfield
ASSISTANT EDITORIAL Tucker Merrick

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS AGGIE LIFE, BECAME THE COLLEGE NEWS IN 1907, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914 AND THE DAILY WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1956. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967. THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN BROADSHEET SINCE JANUARY 1994. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL 413-545-3500 BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 3:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Ian Jones

COPY EDITOR
Meghan Murphy

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Amanda Allen

PRODUCTION STAFF
Chris Martin, Sean Duram

If you see news happening, call us at 545-1809 and snap a photo with your cell phone, then send it to news@dailycollegian.com

Amherst police log

Homeless man arrested for trespassing on campus

Friday

7:20 a.m.

Gary P. Banelli, 63, who is homeless in Amherst, was arrested on charges of trespassing. Banelli's presence on campus had come to the police's attention earlier in the day, when he was spotted outside of the W.E.B. DuBois Library and was issued a two-year trespass. When officers came in contact with him again, after another call from the library was made, it was discovered the trespass was in effect, and he was arrested for violating the trespass. It was later identified that Banelli has gone by 13 different aliases, including this current one. Banelli is not a student or an employee of the University.

Saturday

3:05 a.m.

Eric S. McCabe, 18, of 51 Washington Street in Westfield, was arrested on charges of an unlicensed operation of a motor vehicle, learner's permit violation, marked lanes violation and failing to signal. McCabe was stopped in Lot 33 (Southwest) on University Drive after he failed to use a turn signal and crossed into the other lane for a short period of time. It was then discovered that he was operating his vehicle outside of the restrictions on his learner's permit, specifically that he was driving between the hours of 12 a.m. and 5 a.m. and was not accompanied by an adult of at least 21 years of age. It is not known if there was a passenger in McCabe's vehicle, or whether he was driving by himself. McCabe is not a student or employee of the University.

4:40 p.m.

Andrew T. Gasselle, 18, of 39 Lilly Street in Florence, was arrested for possession of a Class D drug. Three police units in plain clothes, two in an unmarked vehicle and one on foot, in Lot 49 (Dickinson Hall) noticed a vehicle come into the lot with four people in it. Officers observed that none of the four exited the vehicle once parked. Upon further observation, at least one of the occupants of the vehicle appeared to be smoking out of a pipe similar to a pipe used to smoke marijuana. The officers approached the car, and the four were asked to step out of the vehicle. Gasselle, the driver of the vehicle, admitted that the marijuana was his. The other three were allowed to leave, but were identified. Gasselle was bailed by the clerk for Monday morning, and was issued a two-year trespass. Gasselle is not a student or employee of the University.

7:46 p.m.

Patrick Murphy, 20, of 14 Statler Avenue in Somerset, was arrested for possession of a Class D drug and with intent to distribute a Class D drug, and Shawn L. Fang, 21, of 58 Branch Turnpike 5 in Concord, was arrested for possession of a Class D drug. Members of the uniformed division and detective bureau worked together to attempt to serve a warrant in Kennedy Tower. After entering the room, Murphy and Fang were identified as occupants of the room and a significant amount of marijuana and paraphernalia were found. Police confiscated an eighth-ounce amount of marijuana, an orange glass pipe, a blue glass pipe, digital scale, plastic Ziploc bags, marijuana crusher, manual scale and another glass pipe.

Sunday April 23

3:25 a.m.

Brennan Martin, 23, of 29752 Melinda Road 1933 in Rancho Santa Margarita, Calif., was arrested for possession of a Class D drug. Police obtained a search warrant for Martin's room after being approved by the clerk magistrate, based on reports of marijuana use from the room in the past. A number of officers entered the room, where they found Martin inside and located paraphernalia as well as both burned and fresh marijuana. The officers confiscated the marijuana and a glass pipe. Martin was bailed for court the next morning.

—Compiled by Brendan Hall

Allergies may set off with social drinking

CHOCOLATE from page 1

"When a dining commons recipe calls for oil, we use canola oil. Peanut oil is sometimes used in Asian recipes," Sutherland said. People with allergies tend to avoid Asian food because much of it is cooked in peanut oil.

Many pizza parlors use peanut oil as a thickening product for the pizza sauce, so when eating pizza, people with food allergies need to be careful.

Social drinking can also present problems for those with food allergies.

"Going out on the weekends to parties where pre-mixed drinks are available, I either have to bring my own or ask what is in the drink. Amaretto is made with almonds. As well as any coconut rum," said Lopez.

Food allergies can be very dangerous. People with friends and loved ones with food allergies should know what to do in case of a reaction. If a reaction does occur, an immediate EpiPen shot needs to be used and then either call 911 or be taken to the emergency room.

"Most of my close friends know about the EpiPen and would know how to inject it if I ever needed it. It was my responsibility to inform and teach them," said Lopez.

"I also wear an allergy bracelet that has my worst allergies listed on the back, as well as a phone number to a company that EMS or anyone could call to get all of my information using my ID number that is listed on the bracelet," she said.

Restaurants and UMass Dining Services are willing to accommodate people with food allergies the best that they can.

For more information, go the food allergies category at www.umass.edu/diningservices/nutrition

Study finds high cancer rate linked to former industrial site

By Mark Jewell
Associated Press

BOSTON — State health officials trying to resolve a decades-old mystery about a cluster of cancer cases in Ashland concluded on Tuesday that the illnesses are linked to a former textile dye-making plant with waste ponds that some children used as swimming holes.

People who grew up in the town in Boston's western suburbs from 1965 to 1985 and swam in contaminated ponds were two to three times more likely to develop cancer than those who didn't have contact with the water, the seven-year study found.

The incidence of cancer was nearly four times greater among those who had a family history of cancer and also swam or waded in waste lagoons and contaminated natural wetlands near the Nyanza Dye plant, the Department of Public Health said.

Investigators interviewed 1,387 people who were aged 10 to 18 years old during the period 1965 to 1985 and lived in Ashland.

The study found 73 cases of cancer in the group surveyed, and eight cancer-related deaths. About two-thirds of the cancers were diagnosed before the patient reached age 35, and many of involved rare forms of cancer.

"We feel vindicated," said Marie Kane, who lost her 26-year-old son, Kevin, to a rare form of lung cancer in 1998 — years after he played Little League and high school sports near the contamination, and on one occasion fell into a lagoon while ice skating.

Earlier state studies from the 1990s found no link between Nyanza and high rates of cancer.

State officials said Tuesday that the earlier reports reached a different conclusion because the studies were more limited, and were conducted before many of the people who swam in contaminated water during their childhoods developed cancer decades later.

The latest study was begun after Kevin Kane and four of his childhood friends developed rare cancers as young men in the 1990s. Before his death, Kane spoke publicly about his belief that his illness was linked to the contaminated site. Two of his boyhood friends died before he did.

"Nothing is going to change what happened to our son and those boys," said Marie Kane, who pressed for health studies and cleanup of the contamination. "I guess we feel that through Kevin's proactive work, and ours that followed, that we were at least able to raise the consciousness level about the contamination, and the importance of protecting Mother Earth."

Marie Kane, who has lived in the same home on Ashland's north side for five decades, has eight surviving grown children. None of them has developed cancer, she said.

Local factories produced dye for several decades before the Nyanza Co. plant operated from 1965 to 1978 in Ashland, a town of nearly 15,000 people about 22 miles west of Boston.

While state officials said it's possible some cancer cases in Ashland may have been linked to dye operations that predated Nyanza's, the study focused on the years when the now-defunct company was in business.

UMass Fine Arts Center's
CENTER SERIES 2005-2006
Celebrating 30 Years of WOWS and CHEERS!
E=FAC²

UMass Fine Arts Center 30th Anniversary Celebration
In Collaboration with the UMass Physics Department
Art and science come together in a celebration that includes technology, sculpture, music, dance, yoga, physics demos, juggling and everything else touched by the laws of physics. Come help us celebrate our 30th birthday and the joy of physics. Bring your friends, bring your appetites, and bring your best Einstein impersonation.

Community Day: Sunday, April 30 11am – 3pm
Happenings at the UMass Fine Arts Center, Plaza and Student Union Gallery. Installation of Giant Earth Harp. Amazing Physics Demos. UMass Jugglers. Art of Science Gallery Exhibit. Grillin' and Chillin' with UMass Catering Barbeque and Herrel's Magic Ice Cream Bus. Cosmos Pathway. Einstein look-alike contests. Music. Physics-based dance. Hands-on Science Activities from Mad Science. Minuteman Band Concert
And more!
Free parking

Sound and Yoga Workshop: Monday, May 1 at 4pm
Fine Arts Center Plaza (lobby if rain)
Experience the healing practice of yoga accompanied by the giant Earth Harp.
Open to the Public, Free

Einstein's Big Idea: PBS NOVA Presentation Monday, May 1 at 7pm
Flavin Hall, Isenberg School of Management Rm 137
A dramatization of the remarkable story behind the equation E=mc². Open to the Public, Free

Arts in Business: Tuesday, May 2 at 4pm Campus Center Rm 168
Join Mass Ensemble's Bill Close for a multi-media lecture on how major corporations integrate the arts into their business practice.
Open to the Public, Free

Art of Science Exhibit Opening Tuesday, May 2 at 5pm
See the mergence of art and science presented by the UMass Physics Department.
Student Union Gallery 5pm – 7pm Open to the Public, Free

Einstein Made (Relatively) Simple: Wednesday, May 3 at 4pm
Flavin Hall, Isenberg School of Management Rm 137
Lecture by UMass Physics Professor Guy Blaylock Open to the Public, Free

3rd Annual Festival of the Arts Thursday, May 4, 12 – 4pm
Fine Arts Center Lobby and Plaza
Rain or shine. An afternoon celebration of student artists, student performances, interactive art, free food, and great atmosphere of artistic expression. Open to the Public, Free

World Premiere Mass Ensemble in Critical Mass Thursday, May 4 at 7:30, Fine Arts Center Concert Hall
Mass Ensemble will string the chamber of the Fine Arts center Concert Hall putting the audience inside the instrument providing an amazing and interactive experience. Critical Mass is high concept, high impact entertainment that fuses the concepts of science with MASS Ensemble's power to create emotion through performance that stir the soul. "Looks like sculpture, sounds like Zappa, kicks like Jackie Chan." -Alaska Design Forum

Five College Students: $15, $10, $7
Tickets: 545-2511 or www.fineartscenter.com/tickets

E=FAC² is presented in collaboration with the UMass Physics Department and Office of Student Affairs and Campus Life. Sponsored by MassMutual Financial Group, Bank of America, the Valley Advocate, 93.9 The River, the UMass Alumni Association and the Campus Center Hotel

For a complete list of events visit:
www.fineartscenter.com/criticalmass
www.fineartscenter.com

Congratulations Graduates
ALUMNI ASSOCIATION
from your Alumni Association!
Enter to win $1,000 CASH and receive your FREE Young Alumni Guide when you stop by Memorial Hall
Join the Alumni Association for only $20 (1/2 price) and take advantage of:
• Alumni Career Services • Networking Opportunities
• Student Loan Consolidation • Short Term Medical Insurance
• Kaplan Test Prep Discount • Moving/Relocation Discounts
Join and get a 2nd entry into the drawing!
www.UMassAlumni.com You were. You are. UMASS.

TAVERN
On The Hill
NOW ACCEPTING RESERVATIONS FOR GRADUATION
Open for Dinner 7 Nights a Week
Reservations Recommended
413 493 1700
100 Mountain Road Hadley MA

House begins overrides of Romney's health care vetoes

UMass President Jack Wilson, right, looks at Massachusetts Gov. Mitt Romney at the podium at the Statehouse in Boston April 24, 2006.

By Steve LeBlanc
Associated Press

BOSTON — Sending a sharp rebuke to Gov. Mitt Romney, House lawmakers voted overwhelmingly Tuesday to overturn some of his vetoes to the state's landmark health care law, including the controversial $295 fee on businesses who don't offer insurance.

The predominantly Democratic House broke from debate of the state budget to begin the override process, first voting to restore a portion of the law guaranteeing dental benefits to Medicaid recipients.

Debate lasted only a few minutes before the House voted 136-20 in the override of the $295 annual, per-worker fee on businesses with more than 11 workers that don't offer insurance. Romney said the fee is unnecessary and wouldn't raise that much money.

Democratic leaders said it was important because the law already asks individuals and the state to take some responsibility to expand health care, and businesses should be required to chip in, too.

"This assessment forces everyone to contribute equally. This forces everyone to participate," said Ronald Mariano, D-Quincy.

Rep. Vinny deMacedo, R-Plymouth, called on lawmakers to sustain Romney's veto of the assessment, saying it unfairly targets some struggling, smaller businesses.

"These are the small mom and pops that can't afford insurance for themselves, let alone their employees," he said.

Romney had vetoed the dental benefit saying 60 percent of employers in Massachusetts don't offer the benefit to their workers. He also said the provision was unsustainable because it would cost $75 million a year.

Rep. Patricia Walrath, D-Stow, said the price tag for the dental benefit is closer to $42 million. She said lawmakers reluctantly cut the dental benefit in 2002 during the state's fiscal plunge. She said people on Medicaid deserve access to health care for their teeth and eyes.

"They can't get jobs without teeth," Walrath said.

Rep. Mary Rogeness, R-Longmeadow, defended Romney's veto, saying the cost could jeopardize the success of the new law.

The override came as Romney was defending the new health care initiative to the U.S. Chamber of Commerce in Washington. The law is intended to require coverage for nearly all of Massachusetts' estimated 550,000 uninsured.

The law would require everyone in Massachusetts be insured by July 2007, providing subsidies and sliding-scale premiums to get poor and low-income residents into health plans. Those deemed able to afford insurance but who still refuse will face increasing tax penalties.

In Washington, Romney fended off criticism of the new law.

"Most impressions at this point are inaccurate and partially baked," Romney told reporters after his chamber of commerce speech.

Foes have labeled the plan a big-government solution that does little to curb the state's high health care costs.

A Wall Street Journal editorial this week entitled "Mitt's Market Mishire" rapped the measure for failing to reform state regulations that drive up costs.

Moussaoui jurors end day of deliberations without verdict

By Matthew Barakat
Associated Press

ALEXANDRIA, Va. — Jurors in the trial of Zacarias Moussaoui asked for but were denied a dictionary Tuesday for use during their deliberations on whether the Sept. 11 conspirator should receive a death sentence or life in prison.

Before their lunch break, the jurors — and Moussaoui — filed into the courtroom to hear the response of Judge Leonie Brinkema to the request to have a dictionary in the jury room.

Brinkema told them that sending a dictionary in would be like adding additional evidence in the case, but she invited them to come back if they had questions about specific definitions. And she warned them against doing their own research, including looking up definitions.

After she and the jury left, Moussaoui said, "747 fly to London" — an apparent reference to his dream that President Bush will release him and he will fly to London.

The jury deliberated for three hours Monday after hearing closing arguments in the six-week trial.

Prosecutors told jurors that the decision to sentence Moussaoui to death ought to be relatively easy given the horror inflicted on 9/11 and Moussaoui's glee — evident throughout the trial — at the destruction he helped wreak. Nearly 3,000 people died in the Sept. 11, 2001, attacks.

"If not this case, then when is a death sentence appropriate?" Prosecutor David Novak said. "How many people have to die?"

Moussaoui's court-appointed defense lawyers, who have been at odds with their client for years, said a death sentence would be giving Moussaoui exactly what he wants — an execution at the hands of his enemies and martyrdom.

Moussaoui has said at various times that he believes being executed by the Americans may grant him a path to paradise in the afterlife.

A courtroom drawing shows Zacarias Moussaoui. A U.S. jury debated the fate of Moussaoui all day, but went home without reaching a verdict.

Defense lawyer Gerald Zerkin said Moussaoui has twice testified in his own defense and obviously done harm to his own case, first by claiming a direct role in 9/11 after years of denials and then by mocking the testimony of 9/11 victims and their families who tearfully told of their suffering.

Moussaoui's transparent contempt for his victims "is proof that he wants you to sentence him to death," Zerkin told the jury. "He is baiting you into it. He came to America to die in jihad and you are his last chance."

The jury has only two choices: death or life in prison. Brinkema instructed jurors to balance all the factors that argue for death or life in making their decision. If the jury cannot reach a unanimous decision, Brinkema will automatically sentence him to life.

Before boarding a flight from Paris to the Washington area Tuesday to be with her son, Moussaoui's mother, Aicha El Wafi, told AP Television News, "My life is hell."

"This has been going on for four years, but now my life is hell. It's hell and that's all," she said. "I feel too much pain to speak." She has complained that her son was being made a scapegoat for the Sept. 11 attacks.

Moussaoui is the only person in this country charged in the Sept. 11, 2001, attacks. The jury earlier found him eligible for execution by determining that his actions caused at least one death that day. Although Moussaoui was in jail on Sept. 11, the jury ruled that lies he told federal agents when he was arrested in August 2001 on immigration violations allowed the plot to go forward.

LOOKING FOR A PLACE TO LIVE?
KAMINS
SPECIALIZING IN HOUSE AND APARTMENT RENTALS
■ PRESIDENTIAL APTS ■ COLLEGE INN APTS
■ COLONIAL VILLAGE APTS ■ LANTERN COURT APTS
■ PERRY APTS ■ MILL HOLLOW
■ 177 N. PLEASANT ST. ■ CRESTVIEW APTS.
55 S. PLEASANT ST. 253-2515 AMHERST
LARGEST SELECTION OF APARTMENTS IN TOWN

Summer
• Graduate • Undergraduate • Days • Evenings • Weekends • Online • at Southern.
Make your plans now for Summer Session at Southern Connecticut State University.
three convenient sessions
600 undergraduate and graduate classes earn up to 15 credits
earn transfer credits study abroad
SESSION A May 30 - June 30, 2006
SESSION B July 3 - August 4, 2006
SESSION C August 7 - August 25, 2006
Southern Connecticut State University
New Haven, Connecticut • 203-392-5CSU • 1-888-300-5CSU
For information and a Summer Session catalog, call or visit our Web site
Register online at www.SouthernCT.edu

Enjoy A Frothy Fruit Smoothie!
Another Healthy Option at Your Favorite DC
Thursday, April 27, 2006
in all DCs from 5-8 pm
Choose from:
BERRY FRUIT
blueberries, raspberries, strawberries & apple juice
PINA COLADA
banana, pineapple and coconut milk
DINING SERVICES UMass Amherst

Harvard student promises to change passages in debut novel

By Hillel Italie
Associated Press

NEW YORK — A Harvard University sophomore promised to change her debut novel in future editions after acknowledging that she had unintentionally borrowed material from an author she deeply admired.

Kaavya Viswanathan's "How Opal Mehta Got Kissed, Got Wild, and Got a Life," published in March by Little, Brown and Company, was the first of a two-book deal reportedly worth six figures. But on Sunday, the Harvard Crimson cited seven passages that closely resemble the style and language of the novels of Megan McCafferty.

"When I was in high school, I read and loved two wonderful novels by Megan McCafferty, 'Sloppy Firsts' and 'Second Helpings,' which spoke to me in a way few other books did. Recently, I was very surprised and upset to learn that there are similarities between some passages in my novel ... and passages in these books," Viswanathan, 19, said in a statement issued by her publisher.

She also apologized to McCafferty and "to any who feel they have been misled by these unintentional errors on my part."

"While the central stories of my book and hers are completely different, I wasn't aware of how much I may have internalized Ms. McCafferty's words. I am a huge fan of her work and can honestly say that any phrasing similarities between her works and mine were completely unintentional and unconscious," she said.

Little, Brown publisher Michael Pietsch told The Associated Press that he did not think Viswanathan's borrowings were caused by the pressures of being both a student and an author.

Pietsch also declined to blame Viswanathan's collaboration with 17th Street Productions Inc., a book packager that specializes in teen narratives and helped her develop the story.

"Every word in that book was written by her, for better or for worse," he said, adding that work on a new edition would begin "tomorrow."

The book had a first printing of 100,000 copies.

Pietsch acknowledged that several passages beyond those cited by the Harvard Crimson would have to be revised because of similarities to McCafferty's writings. The current edition will not be withdrawn from stores, he said.

Viswanathan, who was 17 when she signed her contract with Little, Brown, is the youngest author signed by the publisher in decades. DreamWorks has already acquired the movie rights to her first book.

Bush, under pressure on gas prices, halts deposits to reserves

By Nendra Pickler
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — President Bush on Tuesday ordered a temporary suspension of environmental rules for gasoline, making it easier for refiners to meet demand and possibly dampen prices at the pump. He also halted for the summer the purchase of crude oil for the government's emergency reserve.

The moves came as political pressure intensified on Bush to do something about gasoline prices that are expected to stay high throughout the summer.

Bush said the nation's strategic petroleum reserve had enough fuel to guard against any major supply disruption over the next few months.

"So, by deferring deposits until the fall, we'll leave a little more oil on the market. Every little bit helps," he said.

Wholesale gasoline futures prices for June delivery dropped 8 cents a gallon to $2.10 on the New York Mercantile Exchange immediately upon Bush's remarks.

Easing the environmental rules will allow refiners greater flexibility in providing oil supplies since they will not have to use certain additives such as ethanol to meet clean air standards. The suspension of oil purchases for the federal emergency oil reserve is likely to have only modest impact since relatively little extra oil will be involved.

The high cost at the pump has turned into a major political issue, with Democrats and Republicans blaming each other for a problem that is largely out of Congress' control. Republicans are worried that voters paying more than $3 per gallon would punish the party in power. Democrats want to make that happen.

Democrats sought to turn gas prices — like Hurricane Katrina and the Iraq war — into an issue that hurts Bush's standing with voters. "What happened to Iraq oil, Mr. President? You said Iraqi oil would pay for the war. Ain't seen no money. Ain't seen no oil," Sen. Barbara Mikulski of Maryland said.

"Families are gripped by the fear of rising gas prices," she added.

At the same news conference, New Jersey Sen. Bob Menendez proposed a 60-day suspension of the gasoline tax, saying the money could be recovered by repealing tax breaks for energy companies. He scoffed at Bush's call to curb tax breaks for the oil companies.

"What we're left wondering today is why it took five years" for Bush to support tax increases on the energy industry, Menendez said.

Bush, in his speech, urged Congress to revoke about $2 billion in tax breaks over 10 years that Congress approved and he signed into law to encourage exploration.

"Taxpayers don't need to be paying for certain of these expenses on behalf of the energy companies," Bush said.

He also urged lawmakers to expand tax breaks for the purchase of fuel-efficient hybrid automobiles.

The president said Democrats in the past have urged higher taxes on fuel and price caps to control fuel expenses, but he said neither approach works. Instead, he called for increased conservation, an expansion of domestic production and increased use of alternative fuels like ethanol.

Bush said high energy prices are disturbing.

"Our addiction to oil is a matter of national security concerns," the president said in a speech to the Renewable Fuels Association, which advocates alternate energy sources. "After all, today we get about 60 percent of our oil from foreign countries. That's up from 20 years ago, where about 25 percent of our oil came from foreign countries."

Bush said gasoline prices are expected to remain high throughout the summer and "that's going to be a continued strain on the American people."

Bush said the Federal Trade Commission, the Justice Department and the Energy Department were investigating whether the price of gasoline has been unfairly manipulated. The administration also contacted all 50 state attorneys general to offer technical assistance to urge them to investigate possible illegal price manipulation within their jurisdictions.

During the last few days, Bush asked his Energy and Justice departments to open inquiries into whether the price of gasoline has been illegally manipulated.

